Preface

Though many people believe in God, few understand what faith in God means, and what they must do to conform to God's will. This is because, though people are familiar with the word "God" and phrases such as "the work of God," they do not know God, and still less do they know His work. No wonder, then, that all those who do not know God are muddled in their belief of Him. People do not take belief in God seriously, and this is entirely because believing in God is too unfamiliar, too strange for them. In this way, they fall short of God's demands. In other words, if people do not know God, and do not know His work, then they are not fit for God's use, and still less are they able to satisfy His will. "Belief in God" means believing that there is a God; this is the simplest concept as regards believing in God. What's more, believing that there is a God is not the same as truly believing in God; rather, it is a kind of simple faith with strong religious overtones. True faith in God means the following: On the basis of the belief that God holds sovereignty over all things, one experiences His words and His work, purges one's corrupt disposition, satisfies the will of God, and comes to know God. Only a journey of this kind may be called "faith in God." Yet people often see belief in God as a simple and frivolous matter. People who believe in God in this way have lost what it means to believe in God, and though they may continue to believe until the very end, they shall never gain God's approval, because they tread upon the wrong path. There are still those today who believe in God according to letters and in hollow doctrine. They do not know that they lack the essence of belief in God, and they cannot receive God's approval. Still they pray to God for blessings of safety and sufficient grace. Let us stop, quiet our hearts, and ask ourselves: Can it be that believing in God really is the easiest thing on earth? Can it be that believing in God means nothing more than receiving much grace from God? Are people who believe in God without knowing Him or who believe in God and yet oppose Him really able to satisfy the will of God?

God and man cannot be spoken of on equal terms. His essence and His work are most unfathomable and incomprehensible to man. If God does not personally do His work and speak His words in the world of man, then man would never be able to understand the will of God. And so, even those who have devoted their entire lives to God would not be able to receive His approval. If God does not set to work, then however well man does, it will all be for naught, because God's thoughts will always be higher than the thoughts of man, and God's wisdom is beyond man's comprehension. And so I say that those who claim to "fully understand" God and His work are an inept lot; they are all overweening and ignorant. Man should not define the work of God; moreover, man cannot define the work of God. In the eyes of God, man is as insignificant as an ant; so how can man fathom God's work? Those who like to spout, "God does not work in this or that way," or "God is like this or that"—are they not speaking arrogantly? We should all know that man, who is of the flesh, has been corrupted by Satan. Mankind's very nature is to oppose God. Mankind cannot be on par with God, much less can mankind hope to advise the work of God. As for how God guides man, this is the work of God Himself. It is fitting that man should submit, without professing this or that view, for man is but dust. Since it is our intent to seek God, we should not superimpose our notions onto His work for God's consideration, still less should we employ our corrupt disposition to its utmost to deliberately oppose the work of God. Would that not make us antichrists? How could such people believe in God? Since we believe that there is a God, and since we wish to satisfy Him and to see Him, we should seek the way of truth, and should look for a way to be compatible with God. We should not stand in stiff-necked opposition to Him. What good could possibly come of such actions?

Today, God has done new work. You may not be able to accept these words, and they may seem odd to you, but I would advise you not to expose your naturalness, for only those who truly hunger and thirst for righteousness before God can obtain the truth, and only those who are truly devout can be enlightened and guided by Him. Results are obtained by seeking the truth with sober tranquility, not with quarrel and contention. When I say that "today, God has done new work," I am referring to the matter of God's returning to the flesh. Perhaps these words do not bother you; perhaps you despise them; or even perhaps they are of great interest to you. Whatever the case, I hope that all those who truly yearn for God to appear can face this fact and give it their careful scrutiny, rather than jump to conclusions about it; that is what a wise person should do.

It is not difficult to inquire into such a thing, but it requires each of us to know this one truth: He who is God incarnate shall possess the essence of God, and He who is God incarnate shall possess the expression of God. Since God becomes flesh, He shall bring forth the work He intends to do, and since God becomes flesh, He shall express what He is, and shall be able to bring the truth to man, bestow life upon him, and point the way for him. Flesh that does not have the essence of God is decidedly not the incarnate God; of this there is no doubt. If man intends to inquire into whether it is God's incarnate flesh, then he must corroborate this from the disposition He expresses and the words He speaks. Which is to say, to corroborate whether or not it is God's incarnate flesh, and whether or not it is the true way, one must discriminate on the basis of His essence. And so, in determining whether it is the flesh of God incarnate, the key lies in His essence (His work, His utterances, His disposition, and many other aspects), rather than external appearance. If man scrutinizes only His external appearance, and as a result overlooks His essence, this shows that man is benighted and ignorant. External appearance cannot determine essence; what's more, the work of God can never conform to the notions of man. Did not Jesus' outward appearance run counter to the notions of man? Were not His countenance and dress unable to provide any clues as to His true identity? Did not the earliest Pharisees oppose Jesus precisely because they merely looked at His external appearance, and did not take to heart the words in His mouth? It is My hope that each and every brother and sister who seeks the appearance of God will not repeat the tragedy of history. You must not become the Pharisees of modern times and nail God to the cross again. You should carefully consider how to welcome the return of God, and you should have a clear mind regarding how to be someone who submits to the truth. This is the responsibility of everyone who is waiting for Jesus to return riding upon a cloud. We should rub our spiritual eyes to make them clear, and not become mired in words of exaggerated fantasy. We should think about the practical work of God, and take a look at the practical aspect of God. Do not get carried away or lose yourselves in daydreams, always longing for the day when the Lord Jesus, riding upon a cloud, suddenly descends among you, and takes you who have never known or seen Him, and who do not know how to do His will. It is better to think upon more practical matters!

You may have opened this book for the purpose of research, or with the intention of accepting; whatever your attitude, I hope that you will read it to the end, and will not put it aside easily. Perhaps, after reading these words, your attitude will change, but that depends on your motivation and the degree of your understanding. There is, however, one thing that you should know: The word of God cannot be made out to be the word of man, and still less can one make the word of man to be the word of God. A man used by God is not the incarnate God, and the incarnate God is not a man used by God. In this, there is an essential difference. Perhaps, after reading these words, you do not acknowledge them to be the words of God, but only as the enlightenment that man has gained. In that case, you are blinded by ignorance. How can the words of God be the same as the enlightenment that man has gained? The words of God incarnate open up a new age, guide all of mankind, reveal mysteries, and show man the direction he is to take in the new age. The enlightenment obtained by man is but simple instructions for practice or knowledge. It cannot guide all of mankind into a new age or reveal the mysteries of God Himself. When all is said and done, God is God, and man is man. God has the essence of God, and man has the essence of man. If man views the words spoken by God as simple enlightenment by the Holy Spirit, and takes the words of the apostles and prophets as words personally spoken by God, that would be man's mistake. No matter what, you should never mix up right and wrong, or make high out to be low, or mistake the profound for the shallow; no matter what, you should never deliberately refute what you know to be the truth. Everyone who believes there is a God should inquire into problems from the correct standpoint, and accept God's new work and His new words from the perspective of His created being; otherwise, they will be cast out by God.

After the work of Jehovah, Jesus became flesh to do His work amongst man. His work was not carried out in isolation, but was built upon the work of Jehovah. It was work for a new age that God did after He had concluded the Age of Law. Similarly, after the work of Jesus ended, God went on with His work for the next age, because the entire management of God is always progressing forward. When the old age passes, it will be replaced by a new age, and once the old work has been completed, there will be new work to continue God's management. This incarnation is God's second incarnation, which follows upon Jesus' work. Of course, this incarnation does not occur independently; it is the third stage of work after the Age of Law and the Age of Grace. Every time God initiates a new stage of work, there must always be a new beginning and it must always bring a new age. So too are there corresponding changes in the disposition of God, in the manner of His working, in the location of His work, and in His name. No wonder, then, that it is difficult for man to accept the work of God in the new age. But regardless of how He is opposed by man, God is always doing His work, and is always leading the whole of mankind forward. When Jesus came into the world of man, He ushered in the Age of Grace and ended the Age of Law. During the last days, God once more became flesh, and with this incarnation He ended the Age of Grace and ushered in the Age of Kingdom. All those who are able to accept the second incarnation of God will be led into the Age of Kingdom, and will moreover become able to personally accept the guidance of God. Though Jesus did much work among man, He only completed the redemption of all mankind and became man's sin offering; He did not rid man of all his corrupt disposition. Fully saving man from the influence of Satan not only required Jesus to become the sin offering and bear the sins of man, but it also required God to do even greater work to rid man completely of his satanically corrupted disposition. And so, now that man has been forgiven of his sins, God has returned to the flesh to lead man into the new age, and begun the work of chastisement and judgment. This work has brought man into a higher realm. All those who submit under His dominion shall enjoy higher truth and receive greater blessings. They shall truly live in the light, and they shall gain the truth, the way, and the life.

If people remain stuck in the Age of Grace, then they shall never be rid of their corrupt disposition, let alone know the inherent disposition of God. If people always live in the midst of an abundance of grace, but do not have the way of life that allows them to know God or to satisfy Him, then they will never truly gain Him in their belief in Him. This type of belief is pitiful indeed. When you have finished reading this book, when you have experienced each step of the work of God incarnate in the Age of Kingdom, you will feel that desires you have had for many years have finally been realized. You will feel that only now have you truly seen God face to face; only now have you gazed upon His countenance, heard His personal utterances, appreciated the wisdom of His work, and truly sensed how real and almighty He is. You will feel that you have gained many things that people in times past had never seen nor possessed. At this time, you will clearly know what it is to believe in God, and what it is to conform to God's will. Of course, if you cling to views of the past, and reject or deny the fact of the second incarnation of God, then you will remain empty-handed, acquiring nothing, and ultimately you will be pronounced guilty of opposing God. Those who are able to obey the truth and submit to the work of God shall be claimed under the name of the second incarnate God—the Almighty. They will be able to accept God's personal guidance, gaining more and higher truths, as well as real life. They shall behold the vision never seen before by people of the past: “And I turned to see the voice that spoke with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; And in the middle of the seven candlesticks one like to the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the breasts with a golden girdle. His head and His hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and His eyes were as a flame of fire; And His feet like to fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and His voice as the sound of many waters. And He had in His right hand seven stars: and out of His mouth went a sharp two edged sword: and His countenance was as the sun shines in its strength” (Revelation 1:12–16). This vision is the expression of God’s entire disposition, and the expression of His entire disposition is also the expression of the work of God in His present incarnation. In the torrents of chastisements and judgments, the Son of man expresses His inherent disposition by means of utterances, allowing all those who accept His chastisement and judgment to see the true face of the Son of man, which is a faithful depiction of the face of the Son of man seen by John. (Of course, all of this will be invisible to those who do not accept the work of God in the Age of Kingdom.) The true face of God cannot be fully articulated using human language, and so God uses the means by which He expresses His inherent disposition to show His true face to man. Which is to say that all those who have appreciated the inherent disposition of the Son of man have seen the true face of the Son of man, for God is too great and cannot be fully articulated using human language. Once man has experienced each step of God’s work in the Age of Kingdom, then he shall know the true meaning of John’s words when he spoke of the Son of man among the lampstands: “His head and His hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and His eyes were as a flame of fire; And His feet like to fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and His voice as the sound of many waters. And He had in His right hand seven stars: and out of His mouth went a sharp two edged sword: and His countenance was as the sun shines in its strength.” At that time, you shall know beyond all doubt that this ordinary flesh that has said so much is undeniably the second incarnate God. Moreover, you shall truly sense how blessed you are, and feel yourself to be the most fortunate. Are you not willing to accept this blessing?

The first part of this book is “Utterances of Christ in the Beginning.” These words represent the transition from the end of the Age of Grace to the beginning of the Age of Kingdom, and they are the Holy Spirit’s public testimony of the Son of man to the churches. They are also the fulfillment of these words in Revelation: “He that has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches.” These words represent the initial stage of the work that God began in the Age of Kingdom. The second part of this book is made up of the words personally spoken by the Son of man after He formally revealed Himself. It includes several types of utterances and words, such as prophecy, the revelation of mysteries, and the way of life, the content of which is quite rich—there are predictions for the future of the kingdom, revelations of the mysteries of God’s management plan, analysis of human nature, exhortations and warnings, stern judgments, heartfelt words of consolation, discussion of life, discourse on entry, and so on. In short, what God has and what He is, as well as the disposition of God, are all expressed in His work and His words. Of course, God's work in the present incarnation is to express His disposition primarily through chastisement and judgment. Building on this foundation, He brings more truth to man and points out to him more ways of practice, thereby achieving His objective of conquering man and saving him from his own corrupt disposition. This is what lies behind the work of God in the Age of Kingdom. Do you wish to enter the new age? Do you wish to rid yourself of your corrupt disposition? Do you wish to gain higher truth? Do you wish to see the true face of the Son of man? Do you wish to make this life count? Do you wish to be made perfect by God? Then how are you going to welcome the return of Jesus?

IN THE BEGINNING
THE WORDS OF THE HOLY SPIRIT
TO THE CHURCHES

(FEBRUARY 11, 1991 TO NOVEMBER 20, 1991)

Introduction

On February 11, 1991, God made His first utterance in the church, and this utterance had an extraordinary effect upon every single person living in the stream of the Holy Spirit at that time. This utterance mentioned that “God’s dwelling place has appeared” and that “The Head of the universe, Christ of the last days—He is the shining Sun.” With these deeply significant words, all people were brought into a new realm. All those who read this utterance felt an intimation of the new work, the great work that God was about to initiate. It was this beautiful, mellifluous, and concise utterance that brought all humanity into God’s new work and into a new age, and that laid the foundation and set the stage for God’s work in this incarnation. One could say that the utterance God made at this time is one that bridges the ages, that it is the first time since the beginning of the Age of Grace that God has publicly spoken to the human race, that it is the first time He has spoken after remaining hidden for two thousand years and, moreover, that it is a lead-in, a crucial starting point, for the work God is about to undertake in the Age of Kingdom.

The first time God made an utterance, He did so in the form of praise from a third-person perspective, in language that was at once elegant and plain, as well as a provision of life that was readily and easily grasped. With this, He took this little group of people, who knew only how to enjoy His grace while eagerly anticipating the Lord Jesus’ return, and brought them silently into another stage of work in God’s management plan. Under these circumstances, humanity did not know, and still less dared to imagine, what kind of work God was ultimately going to do, or what lay in store on the road ahead. Thereafter, God continued to make more utterances to bring mankind step by step into the new age. Astonishingly, God’s every utterance is different in content and moreover uses different forms of praise and modes of expression. These utterances, similar in tone but diverse in content, are invariably filled with God’s feelings of care and concern, and almost each one contains provisions of life with different content, as well as words of reminder, exhortation, and comfort from God to man. In these utterances, passages like this appear repeatedly: “The one true God has become flesh, and He is the Head of the universe, who commands all things”; “The triumphant King sits upon His glorious throne”; “He holds the universe in His hands”; and so forth. A message is conveyed in these passages, or one could say that these passages transmit a message to the human race: God has already come into the human world, God is going to initiate an even greater work, God’s kingdom has already descended amongst a certain group of people, and God has already gained glory and defeated the multitudes of His enemies. Each of God’s utterances catches hold of the heart of every single human being. All humanity waits eagerly for God to give voice to even more new words, because every time God speaks, He shakes man’s heart to its roots, and what is more He administers and sustains man’s every movement and every emotion, so that humanity begins to rely upon and, even more, to admire God’s words.... In this way, unwittingly, a great many people had essentially forgotten the Bible, and gave even shorter shrift to old-fashioned sermons and the writings of spiritual persons, because they were unable to find in the writings of the past any basis for these words of God, nor were they able to discover anywhere God's purpose in making these utterances. This being so, how much more did it behoove humanity to admit that these utterances are God's voice neither seen nor heard since the beginning of time, that they lie beyond the reach of any person who believes in God, and that they surpass anything said by any spiritual person in ages past or God's past utterances. Spurred on by each of these utterances, humanity entered unawares into the aura of the work of the Holy Spirit, into life on the front ranks of the new age. Spurred on by God's words, humanity, filled with anticipation, tasted the sweetness of being led in person by God's words. I believe this fleeting period to be a time that every human being will look back on with enduring remembrance, when in fact what humankind enjoyed during this period was no more than an aura of the work of the Holy Spirit, or one could call it the sweet taste of the sugar that coats the tablet beneath. This is because, from this point onward, still under the guidance of God's words, still in the aura of the work of the Holy Spirit, humanity was unwittingly led into another phase of God's words, which was the first step of the work and utterances of God in the Age of Kingdom—the trial of the service-doers.

The words uttered before the trial of the service-doers were mostly in the form of instruction, exhortation, reproof, and discipline, and in some places they made use of the old form of address employed in the Age of Grace—using "My sons" for those who followed God in order to make it easier for humanity to draw close to God, or so that humanity might regard their relationship with God to be close. In this way, whatever judgment God rendered on mankind's self-conceit, arrogance, and other corrupt dispositions, man would be able to deal with and accept it in his identity of "son," without bearing antagonism toward the utterances of "God the Father," on top of which the promise that "God the Father" made to His "sons" was never in doubt. During this period, all humanity enjoyed an existence as free from trouble as that of an infant, and this achieved God's purpose, which is, when they entered into "adulthood," He would begin to render judgment on them. This also laid the foundation for the work of judging the human race that God formally launches in the Age of Kingdom. Because the work of God in this incarnation is chiefly to judge and conquer the whole human race, as soon as man planted his feet firmly on the ground, God forthwith entered into the mode of His work—the work in which He judges man and chastises him. Manifestly, all the utterances before the trial of the service-doers were made for the sake of getting through the transition, the true aim being other than what it appeared to be. God's eager intention was that He might, as soon as possible, be able to formally launch His work in the Age of Kingdom. By no means did He wish to continue to coax mankind forward by feeding it the sugar-coated tablets; rather, He was eager to see the true countenance of every human being before His judgment seat, and even more eagerly He wished to see the real attitude that the whole of humanity would bear toward Him after losing His grace. He wished only to see results, not the process. But at that time there was no one who understood God's eager intention, because the human heart was concerned only with its destination and with its future prospects. Small wonder that God's judgment had been directed, time and time again, at the entire human race. It was only when humanity, under God's guidance, started living the normal life of human beings that God's attitude toward mankind changed.

1991 was an unusual year; let us call this year a "golden year." God launched the new work of the Age of Kingdom and directed His utterance at the whole of the human race. At the same time, humanity enjoyed unprecedented warmth and, even more, experienced the pain that follows on from God's unprecedented judgment of man. The human race tasted a sweetness hitherto unknown and felt, also hitherto unknown, judgment and abandonment, as if it had gained God, and again as if it had lost God. Suffering in possession and suffering in privation—these feelings are known only by those who personally experienced them; they are something that man has neither the ability nor the means to describe. Wounds of this kind are what God bestowed on every human being as a form of intangible experience and asset. The content of the utterances God made in this year actually falls into two major divisions: The first is where God descended into the world of men to invite humanity to come before His throne as guests; the second is where mankind, having eaten and drunk its fill, was employed by God as service-doers. Of course, it goes without saying that the first part is humanity's dearest and most earnest wish, all the more so since human beings have long been habituated to making the enjoyment of God's everything into the object of their belief in Him. This is why, as soon as God began to give voice to His utterances, humanity was all ready to enter the kingdom and wait there for God to bestow different rewards upon them. People in these circumstances simply did not pay the proper price by transforming their dispositions, seeking to satisfy God, showing consideration for God's will, and so forth. At a superficial glance, human beings seemed to be constantly bustling about as they expended themselves and worked for God, during which time they were in fact reckoning, in the secret recesses of their inmost hearts, the next step they should take to win blessings or to reign as kings. One could say that, as the human heart was enjoying God, it was at the same time being calculated toward God. Humanity in this condition meets with God's deepest abhorrence and detestation; God's disposition does not tolerate any human being deceiving or using Him. But God's wisdom is unreachable to any human being. It was in the midst of enduring all these sufferings that He spoke the first portion of His utterances. How much suffering God endured, and how much care and thought He expended at this time, no human being is capable of imagining. The aim of the first portion of these utterances is to expose all the different forms of ugliness that man shows when faced with position and profit, and to expose man's greed and contemptibility. Even though, in speaking, God couches His words in the sincere and earnest tone of a loving mother, the wrath in His inmost heart burns like the noonday sun, as if it is directed against His enemies. God is unwilling under any circumstances to speak to a group of people who are lacking the normal likeness of the human race, and so, whenever He speaks, He is repressing the wrath inside His heart while at the same time constraining Himself to give expression to His utterances. What is more, He is speaking to a human race devoid of normal humanity, bereft of reason, corrupt to the extreme, with greed ingrained as its second nature, and disobedient and rebellious against God to the bitter end. The depths to which the race of man has fallen and the extent of God's loathing and disgust for the race of man can easily be imagined; what is difficult for the human race to imagine is the hurt they have inflicted on God—that is impossible to describe in words. But it was precisely against this background—where no one was able to discover how God's heart suffered, and moreover, no one discovered how unreasonable and incorrigible the human race was—that every single person, without an ounce of shame or a single scruple, took it for granted that they had a right as God's sons to receive all the rewards He had prepared for man, even to the point of vying one with another, with no one wishing to fall behind and all being deeply afraid of losing out. You should know by now what kind of position the people at that time occupied in God's eyes. How can such a race as this attain God's rewards? But that which man receives from God is at all times the most precious treasure, and conversely that which God receives from man is supreme pain. Ever since the beginning of the relationship between God and man, this is what man has always received from God, and this is what he has always given God in return.

As much as God burned with anxiety, when He saw this race of human beings, corrupt to the very core, He had no choice but to throw it into the lake of fire so that it might be refined. This is the second portion of God's utterances, in which God employed mankind as His service-doers. In this portion, God went from soft to harsh, and from few to many, in terms of both method and length, using the position of "God's person" as bait to expose man's corrupt nature while at the same time putting forward the different categories of<sup>a</sup> service-doers, God's people, and God's sons for humanity to choose from. Sure enough, just as God had predicted, no one chose to become a service-doer for God, and instead all strived to become God's person. Even though, during this period, the severity with which God spoke was something that human beings had never anticipated, and still less ever heard of, nevertheless, being excessively concerned with status and, on top of this, being feverishly preoccupied with winning blessings, they had no time to form a notion about God's tone of speaking and His mode of speaking, but instead their own status and what the future might hold in store weighed always on their minds. In this way, mankind was brought, unawares, by God's utterances into the "labyrinth" He had laid out for them. Enticed, willy-nilly, by the lure of the future and their destiny, human beings knew themselves inadequate to become God's person, and yet were reluctant to act as His service-doers. Torn between these contradictory mentalities, they unconsciously accepted an unprecedented judgment and chastisement that God had meted out to humanity. Naturally, this form of judgment and refinement was something that humanity was by no means willing to accept. Nonetheless, only God has the wisdom, and only He has the power, to exact meek submission from this corrupt race of human beings, so that, willingly or unwillingly, they all yielded in the end. Mankind had no alternatives to choose from. Only God has the final say, and only God is able to use a method like this to bestow the truth and life on man and show him direction. This method is the inevitability of God's work upon man, and it is also, beyond doubt or dispute, man's indispensable necessity. God speaks and works in such a method to convey this fact to humanity: In saving mankind, God does so out of His love and mercy and for the sake of His management; in receiving God's salvation, the human race does so because it has fallen to the point where God cannot but speak personally. When man receives God's salvation, this is the greatest grace, and it is also a special favor; that is to say, if not for God giving voice to His utterances in person, the fate of the human race would be extinction. At the same time that He abominates the human race, God is still ready and willing to pay any price for man's salvation. Meanwhile, as man harps upon his love for God and how he consecrates all to God, he is rebelling against God and extorting every kind of grace from God, while also even hurting God and inflicting unspeakable pain upon His heart. Such is the sharp contrast of the selfless and the selfish between God and man!

In working and speaking, God is not constrained to follow any particular method, but makes achieving results His goal. For this reason, in this part of His utterances, God made it a point not to lay bare His own identity clearly, but only to disclose a few terms such as "Christ of the last days," "the Head of the universe," and so forth. This by no means affects either Christ's ministry or humanity's knowledge of God, especially since mankind in those early days was completely ignorant of the concepts of "Christ" and "the incarnation," so that God had to humble Himself to be a person with a "special function" to express His utterances. This was God's painstaking care and thought, because people at that time could only accept this form of address. Whatever form of address God uses, the results of His work are not affected, because in all that He does God purposes to enable man to change, to enable man to attain God's salvation. No matter what He does, God always has man's needs in mind. This is the intention behind God's working and speaking. Even though God is so thoroughly attentive in considering all aspects of humanity, and is so consummately wise in all that He does, I could say this: If God did not bear witness to Himself, there would not be one among the race of created human beings who is capable of recognizing God Himself or of standing up to bear witness to God Himself. If God had kept on using "a person with a special function" as the form of address in His work, there would not have been one single human being who could regard God as God—this is mankind’s sorrow. That is to say, among the race of created human beings there is no one who is able to know God, much less is there anyone to love God, to care about God, and draw near to God. Man’s faith is solely for the sake of winning blessings. God’s identity as a person with a special function has given a hint to every single human: Mankind finds it easy to take God for one among the race of created human beings; the greatest pain and humiliation that mankind inflicts on God is precisely that, when He openly appears or works, God is still rejected by man and even forgotten by him. God endures the greatest humiliation in order to save the human race; in giving everything, His purpose is to save mankind, to obtain mankind’s recognition. The price God has paid for all of this is something that everyone with a conscience should be able to appreciate. The human race has gained God’s utterances and work, and has gained God’s salvation. At the same time, it has not occurred to anyone to ask this: What is it that God has gained from mankind? From God’s each and every utterance, humanity has gained the truth, has succeeded in changing, has found direction in life; but what God has gained is no more than the words that humanity uses to express their indebtedness to God and a few faint whispers of praise. Surely this is not the recompense that God demands of man?

Although many of God’s utterances have now been expressed, the great majority of people are still paused at the stage represented by the words of God in the beginning within their knowledge and understanding of God, from which they have not gone forward—this is truly a painful subject. This part of “Utterances of Christ in the Beginning” is merely a key for opening up the human heart; to pause here is to fall far short of fulfilling God’s intention. God’s aim in speaking this portion of His utterances is only to bring humanity from the Age of Grace into the Age of Kingdom; by no means does He wish for humanity to remain at a standstill at this portion of His utterances or even take this portion of His utterances as a guideline, otherwise God’s future utterances would be neither necessary nor meaningful. If there be any who is as yet unable to enter into what God demands that man attain in this portion of His utterances, then that person’s entry remains an unknown. This portion of God’s utterances constitutes the most basic requirement that God makes of man in the Age of Kingdom, and it is the only way by which mankind will enter on the right track. If you are a person who understands nothing, then you had best begin by reading the words in this part!

Chapter 1

Praise has come to Zion and God’s dwelling place has appeared. The glorious holy name, extolled by all peoples, spreads. Ah, Almighty God! The Head of the universe, Christ of the last days—He is the shining Sun that has risen upon Mount Zion, which towers in majesty and grandeur over all the universe ...

Almighty God! We call out to You in jubilation; we dance and sing. You are truly our Redeemer, the great King of the universe! You have made a group of overcomers and fulfilled God's management plan. All peoples shall flow to this mountain. All peoples shall kneel before the throne! You are the one and only true God and You deserve glory and honor. All glory, praise, and authority be to the throne! The spring of life flows out from the throne, watering and feeding the multitudes of God's people. The life changes with each day; new light and revelations follow us, constantly affording new insights about God. Amidst experiences, we arrive at complete certainty about God. His words are constantly made manifest, made manifest within those who are right. We are indeed so blessed! Meeting God face to face each day, communicating with God in all things, and giving God sovereignty over everything. Carefully do we ponder God's word, our hearts rest quiet in God, and thus do we come before God, where we receive His light. Every day, in our lives, actions, words, thoughts, and ideas, we live within God's word, able to discriminate at all times. God's word guides the thread through the needle; unexpectedly, the things hidden inside us come to light, one after another. Fellowship with God brooks no delay; our thoughts and ideas are laid bare by God. At every moment we are living before the seat of Christ where we undergo judgment. Every place within our bodies remains occupied by Satan. Today, in order to recover God's sovereignty, His temple must be cleansed. To be completely possessed by God, we must engage in a life-and-death struggle. Only when our old selves have been crucified can the resurrected life of Christ reign supreme.

Now the Holy Spirit mounts a charge into our every corner to do battle for our reclamation! So long as we are ready to deny ourselves and to be willing to cooperate with God, God will surely illuminate and purify us from within at all times, and reclaim anew that which Satan has occupied, so that we may become completed by God as quickly as possible. Do not waste time—live every moment within God's word. Be built up with the saints, be brought into the kingdom, and enter into glory together with God.

Chapter 2

The church of Philadelphia has taken shape, which is entirely due to the grace and mercy of God. Love for God arises in the hearts of the myriad saints, who do not waver on their spiritual journey. They hold fast to their belief that the one true God has become flesh, that He is the Head of the universe, who commands all things: This is confirmed by the Holy Spirit, it is as immovable as the mountains! And it shall never change!

Oh, Almighty God! Today it is You who have opened our spiritual eyes, allowing the blind to see, the lame to walk, and lepers to be healed. It is You who have opened the window to heaven, allowing us to perceive the mysteries of the spiritual realm. Being permeated by Your holy words and saved from our humanity, which was corrupted by Satan—such is Your inestimably great work and Your inestimably great mercy. We are Your witnesses!

Long have You remained hidden, humbly and silently. You have undergone resurrection from death, the suffering of crucifixion, the joys and sorrows of human life, and persecution and adversity; You have experienced and tasted the pain of the human world, and You have been forsaken by the age. God incarnate is God Himself. For the sake of God's will, You have saved us from the dunghill, holding us up with Your right hand, and freely giving us Your grace. Sparing no pains, You have wrought Your life into us; the price You have paid with Your blood, sweat, and tears is crystallized upon the saints. We are the product of<sup>a</sup> Your painstaking efforts; we are the price You have paid.

Oh, Almighty God! It is because of Your lovingkindness and mercy, Your righteousness and majesty, Your holiness and humility that all peoples shall bow down before You and worship You for all eternity.

Today You have made complete all churches—the church of Philadelphia—and thus fulfilled Your 6,000-year management plan. The saints can humbly submit themselves before You, connected in spirit and following along in love, joined to the source of the fountain. The living water of life runs without cease, washing away and purging all the mud and filthy water in the church, once again purifying Your temple. We have come to know the practical true God, walked within His words, recognized our own functions and duties, and done everything that we can to expend ourselves for the sake of the church. Ever quiet before You, we must heed the work of the Holy Spirit, lest Your will be obstructed in us. Among the saints there is mutual love, and the strengths of some will compensate for the failings of others. They are able to walk in the spirit at all times, enlightened and illuminated by the Holy Spirit. They put the truth into practice immediately upon understanding it. They keep pace with the new light, and follow God's footsteps.

Actively cooperate with God; letting Him take control is to walk with Him. All of our own ideas, notions, opinions, and secular entanglements vanish into thin air like smoke. We let God reign supreme in our spirits, walk with Him and so gain transcendence, overcoming the world, and our spirits fly free and attain release: This is the outcome when Almighty God becomes King. How can we not dance and sing in praise, offering up our praises, offering up new hymns?

There truly are many ways to praise God: calling out His name, drawing near to Him, thinking of Him, pray-reading, engaging in fellowship, contemplating and pondering, prayer, and songs of praise. In these kinds of praise there is enjoyment, and there is anointment; there is power in praise, and there is also a burden. There is faith in praise, and there is new insight.

Actively cooperate with God, coordinate in service and become one, fulfill Almighty God's intentions, hasten to become a holy spiritual body, trample over Satan, and put an end to Satan's fate. The church of Philadelphia has been raptured into God's presence and is made manifest in His glory.

Chapter 3

The triumphant King sits upon His glorious throne. He has accomplished redemption and led all His people to appear in glory. He holds the universe in His hands and with His divine wisdom and might He has built and made firm Zion. With His majesty He judges the sinful world; He has passed judgment on all nations and all peoples, the earth and the seas and all the living things in them, as well as those who are drunk on the wine of promiscuity. God shall surely judge them, and He shall surely be angry with them and therein will be revealed the majesty of God, whose judgment is instantaneous and delivered without delay. The fire of His wrath shall surely incinerate their heinous crimes and calamity befall them at any moment; they shall know no avenue of escape and have no place to hide, they shall weep and gnash their teeth, and they shall bring destruction upon themselves.

The triumphant sons, beloved of God will surely stay in Zion, never to depart from it. The multitudinous peoples shall listen closely to His voice, they will carefully heed His actions, and the sounds of their praise shall never cease. The one true God has appeared! We shall be certain about Him in spirit and follow Him closely; we shall rush forward with all our might and hesitate no more. The end of the world is unfolding before us; a proper church life as well as the people, affairs, and things that surround us are even now intensifying our training. Let us make haste to take back our hearts that so love the world! Let us make haste to take back our vision that is so obscured! Let us stay our steps, that we may not exceed the boundaries. Let us stop our mouths so that we may walk in God's word, and no longer contest our own gains and losses. Ah, let go of it—your greedy fondness for the secular world and for wealth! Ah, free yourselves from it—your clinging attachment to husbands and daughters and sons! Ah, turn your back on them—your viewpoints and prejudices! Ah, wake up; time is short! Look up, look up, from within the spirit, and let God take control. Whatever happens, do not become another Lot's wife. How pitiful it is to be cast aside! How pitiful indeed! Ah, wake up!

Chapter 4

From moment to moment, we shall be watching and waiting, quiet in spirit and seeking with a pure heart. Whatever befalls us, we must not blindly engage in fellowship. We only need to be quiet before God and stay in constant fellowship with Him, and then His intentions will surely be revealed to us. Within the spirit, we must be ready to differentiate at all times, and we must have a spirit that is keen and unyielding. We must draw from the living water before God, the water that nourishes and replenishes our parched spirit. We must be ready at any time to cleanse ourselves of our satanic disposition, which is self-righteous, arrogant, conceited, and self-satisfied. We must open our hearts to receive the word of God, and take action based on His word. We must experience and be certain about His word and achieve an understanding of His word, allowing His word to become our life. This is our heaven-sent calling! Only when we live by God's word can we be victorious!

Now our notions are too ponderous, and we speak glibly and act rashly, unable to act in accordance with the Spirit. Today is not as it used to be in the past. The work of the Holy Spirit moves forward at great speed. We must experience in detail God's word; every idea and thought, every movement and reaction, we must be able to distinguish clearly in our hearts. Nothing we do to someone's face or behind their backs can escape judgment before the seat of Christ. The Holy Spirit is in the process of guiding us into the realm of deeper experience, where we will come closer to being certain about the Almighty.

The God of the universe has opened our spiritual eyes, and the mysteries in the spirit are continually being revealed to us. Seek with a pure heart! Be willing to pay the price, move forward in unity, be ready to deny yourselves, be covetous no longer, follow the Holy Spirit and enjoy the word of God, and then the whole universal new man shall appear. The moment is at hand, when Satan shall meet its end, God's will shall be completed, all nations of the world shall become the kingdom of Christ, and Christ shall reign as King on earth, forever and ever!

Chapter 5

Mountains and rivers change, waters flow along their course, and man's life does not endure as do the earth and the sky. Only Almighty God is life eternal and resurrected, which continues, generation after generation, forever! All things and all events are in His hands, and Satan is under His foot.

Today, it is by God's predetermined selection that He delivers us from Satan's grip. He is truly our Redeemer. The eternal, resurrected life of Christ has indeed been wrought inside us, destining us to connect with God's life, that we may indeed be able to come face to face with Him, eat Him, drink Him, and enjoy Him. This is the selfless offering that God has made at the price of His heart's blood.

The seasons come and go, passing through wind and frost, meeting with so many of life's sufferings, persecutions, and tribulations, so many of the world's repudiations and calumnies, so many of the government's false accusations, yet neither God's faith nor His resolve is diminished in the least. Wholeheartedly dedicated to God's will, and to God's management and plan, that they may be accomplished, He sets His own life aside. For all the multitudes of His people, He spares no pains, carefully feeding and watering them. No matter how benighted we are, or how difficult we are, we must only submit before Him, and the resurrected life of Christ will change our old nature... For all these firstborn sons, He labors tirelessly, forgoing food and rest. How many days and nights, through how much scorching heat and freezing cold, He watches wholeheartedly in Zion.

The world, home, work and all, totally forgone, gladly, willingly, and worldly enjoyments have nothing to do with Him.... The words from His mouth strike into us, exposing things hidden deep in our hearts. How can we not be convinced? Every sentence that comes from His mouth may come true in us at any time. Whatever we do, in His presence or hidden away from Him, there is nothing He does not know, nothing He does not understand. All will indeed be revealed before Him, despite our own plans and arrangements.

Sitting before Him, feeling joy within our spirit, at ease and calm, yet feeling always empty and truly indebted to God: This is a wonder unimaginable and impossible to achieve. The Holy Spirit is sufficient to prove that Almighty God is the one true God! It is proof incontrovertible! We of this group are indescribably blessed! If not for God's grace and mercy, we could only go to perdition and follow Satan. Only Almighty God can save us!

Ah! Almighty God, the practical God! It is You who have opened our spiritual eyes, allowing us to behold the mysteries of the spiritual world. The prospects of the kingdom are boundless. Let us be watchful as we wait. The day cannot be too far off.

The flames of war swirl, cannon smoke fills the air, the weather turns warm, the climate shifts, a plague will spread, and people can only die, with no hope of survival.

Ah! Almighty God, the practical God! You are our impregnable fortress. You are our refuge. We huddle under Your wings, and calamity cannot reach us. Such is Your divine protection and care.

We all raise our voices in song; we sing in praise, and the sound of our praise rings throughout Zion! Almighty God, the practical God, has prepared for us that glorious destination. Be watchful—oh, be on the watch! As yet, the hour is not too late.

Chapter 6

Almighty God, the Head of all things, wields His kingly power from His throne. He rules over the universe and all things, and He is in the act of guiding us on the whole earth. We shall at every moment be close to Him, and come before Him in quietness, never missing a single moment, and with lessons for us to learn at all times. Everything, from the surrounding environment to people, affairs, and things, all exist by permission of His throne. Do not on any account let grievances arise in your heart, or God will not bestow His grace upon you. When sickness befalls, this is God's love, and surely His kind intentions are harbored within. Though your body may undergo a bit of suffering, entertain no ideas from Satan. Praise God in the midst of illness and enjoy God in the midst of your praise. Do not lose heart in the face of illness, keep seeking again and again and do not give up, and God will illuminate you with His light. How was Job's faith? Almighty God is an all-powerful physician! To dwell in sickness is to be sick, but to dwell in the spirit is to be well. So long as you still have one breath, God will not let you die.

We have within us the resurrected life of Christ. Undeniably, we lack faith in the presence of God: Would that God would put true faith within us. Sweet indeed is the word of God! God's word is potent medicine! It puts to shame the devils and Satan! Grasping God's word gives us support. His word acts fast to save our hearts! It dispels all things and sets all at peace. Faith is like a single log bridge: Those who cling abjectly to life will have difficulty in crossing it, but those who are ready to sacrifice themselves can pass over, sure of foot and worry-free. If man harbors timid and fearful thoughts, it is because Satan has fooled them, afraid that we will cross the bridge of faith to enter into God. Satan is trying in every way possible to send us its thoughts. We should at every moment pray for God to illuminate us with His light, at every moment rely on God to purge Satan's poison from within us, practice within our spirit at every moment how to come close to God, and let God have dominion over our whole being.

Chapter 7

The rise of environments around us hastens our retreat into the spirit. Do not act with a hardened heart, ignoring whether or not the Holy Spirit is worried, and do not try to be smart. Do not be complacent and self-satisfied or make too much of your own hardships. The only thing to do is to worship God in spirit and in truth. You cannot leave God's words behind or turn a deaf ear to them; you must figure them out carefully, repeat your prayer-readings, and grasp the life within the words. Do not engage in futility by wolfing them down without giving yourself time to digest them. Do you rely on God's words in everything you do? Do not talk boastfully like a child and then get all in a muddle whenever a problem crops up. You must exercise your spirit every hour of every day; do not relax for even a moment. You must have a keen spirit. No matter what person, event, or thing you might encounter, if you come before God, you will have a path to follow. You must eat and drink of God's words every day, figure out their meaning without being negligent, put forth more effort, get things right down to the very last detail, and equip yourself with the complete truth so as to avoid misunderstanding God's will. You must broaden your range of experience and focus on experiencing God's words. Through experience, you will be able to be more certain about God; without experience, claiming to be certain about Him is just a pack of empty words. We must be clear-headed! Awaken! Do not be slack any longer; if you deal with things in a slipshod way, not striving for progress, then you really are very blind. You must focus on the work of the Holy Spirit, listen carefully to the Holy Spirit's voice, open your ears to God's words, cherish what time you have left, and pay the cost, whatever it may be. When you have steel, use it where it counts—to make a strong blade; get a good hold on what is crucial, and focus on putting God's words into practice. If you have left God's words, then no matter how well you might do on the outside, it will all be to no avail. Practicing by merely paying lip service is unacceptable to God; change must come through your behavior, disposition, faith, courage and insight.

The time is nigh! Even the best things of this world must be cast aside. No amount of difficulties or dangers can daunt us, nor can we be overwhelmed, even if the sky were to fall. Without this kind of resolution, it will simply be too hard for you to become anyone of significance. Those who are faint-hearted and who cravenly cling to life are not worthy of standing before God.

Almighty God is a practical God. No matter how ignorant we may be, He will still take pity on us, His hands will surely save us, and He will still make us complete. As long as we possess hearts that truly want God, as long as we follow closely and do not become discouraged, and as long as we seek with a sense of urgency, He absolutely will not treat any of us unfairly; He will surely make up for us that which we lack, and He will satisfy us. All of this is the kindness of Almighty God.

If someone is gluttonous and lazy, leads a life of keeping their belly always full, and is indifferent to everything, they will find it hard to avoid suffering loss. Almighty God dominates all things and occurrences! As long as we look up to Him in our hearts at all times and enter the spirit and fellowship with Him, He will show us all the things we seek, and His will is sure to be revealed to us. Our hearts will then be in joy and peace, steady with perfect clarity. It is crucial to be capable of acting in accordance with His words. Only being capable of grasping His will and of living in dependence on His words counts as true experience.

Only if we understand God's words will the truth of God's words be able to enter into us and become our life. Without any practical experience, how can you enter the reality of God's words? If you cannot receive God's words as your life, then your disposition will not be able to change.

The work of the Holy Spirit is progressing in leaps and bounds! If you do not follow closely and receive training, it will be hard for you to keep up with the Holy Spirit's pace as He forges forward. Hurry and bring about radical change, lest you be trampled underfoot by Satan and enter the lake of fire and brimstone from which there is no escape. Go now, and seek as well as you can, so that you are not cast aside.

Chapter 8

Since the time when Almighty God—the King of the kingdom—has been witnessed, the scope of God's management has unfolded in its entirety throughout the whole universe. Not only has God's appearance been witnessed in China, but the name of Almighty God has been witnessed in all nations and all places. They are all calling out this holy name, seeking to fellowship with God by any means possible, grasping the will of Almighty God and serving Him cooperatively in the church. This is the wondrous way in which the Holy Spirit works.

The languages of various nations are different from each other, but there is only one Spirit. This Spirit conjoins churches throughout the universe and is absolutely one with God, without the slightest difference. This is something that is beyond doubt. The Holy Spirit now calls to them, and His voice awakens them. It is the voice of God's mercy. They are all calling out the holy name of Almighty God! They also give praise and they sing. There can never be any deviation in the work of the Holy Spirit; these people go to any length to advance along the right path, they do not back out—wonders heap upon wonders. This is something that people find hard to imagine and impossible to speculate on.

Almighty God is the King of life in the universe! He sits upon the glorious throne and judges the world, dominates all, and rules all nations; all peoples bend their knee to Him, pray to Him, get close to Him and communicate with Him. Regardless of how long you have believed in God, how high your status or how great your seniority, if you go against God in your hearts then you must be judged and must prostrate yourselves before Him, issuing sounds of painful entreaty; this is indeed reaping the fruits of your own actions. This wailing sound is the sound of being tormented in the lake of fire and brimstone, and it is the cry of being chastened by God's iron rod; this is judgment before the seat of Christ.

Some people fear, some harbor guilty consciences, some are alert, some take care to listen attentively, some repent and start anew, feeling the utmost remorse, some weep bitterly in pain, some relinquish everything and search desperately, some people examine themselves and do not dare act wildly any longer, some seek urgently to get close to God, some examine their own consciences, asking why their lives cannot progress. Some remain in a muddle, some unshackle their feet and advance courageously, grasping the key and losing no time in attending to their lives. Some still hesitate and are unclear about visions—the burden they bear and carry in their hearts is heavy indeed.

If your mind is not clear, then the Holy Spirit has no way to work within you. All that you focus on, the way you walk and all that your heart yearns for are filled with your notions and your self-righteousness! I burn with impatience—how I wish I could make you all complete right away so that you may soon be made fit to be used by Me, and so that My heavy burden can be lightened. But seeing you this way, I see that it will not do to seek fast results. I can only wait patiently, walk slowly and slowly support and lead you. Ah, you should clear your heads! What should be forsaken, what are your treasures, what are your fatal weaknesses, what are your obstacles? Ponder these questions more in your spirit and fellowship with Me. What I want is for your hearts to look up to Me in silence; I do not want your lip service. To those of you who truly seek before Me, I will reveal all to you. My pace quickens; so long as your heart looks up to Me and you follow at all times, then at any time My will can be given to you by inspiration and revealed to you. Those who take care to wait will obtain nourishment and will have a way forward. Those who are thoughtless will find it hard to understand My heart, and they will walk into a dead end.

I desire for you all to rise up quickly and cooperate with Me, and to be close to Me at all times, not just for a day and a night. My hand must always pull you along and spur you on, push you on, persuade you to go on and appeal to you to advance! You just do not understand My will. The hindrances of your own notions and the hindrances of worldly entanglements are too severe, and you are unable to have a deeper closeness with Me. To be frank, you come to Me when you have an issue, but when you do not have any issue, your hearts become troubled. Your hearts become like a free market, and are filled with satanic dispositions; they are occupied with worldly things and you do not know how to fellowship with Me. How could I not feel anxious about you? But it will not do to be anxious. Time is too pressing and the task is too strenuous. My steps fly onward; you must hold fast to all that you have, look up to Me at every moment, and fellowship intimately with Me. Then, My will shall surely be revealed to you at any moment. When you understand My heart, then you have a way forward. You must hesitate no longer. Hold true fellowship with Me, and do not resort to deceit or try to be too clever; that would only be deceiving yourselves and would be revealed at any moment before the seat of Christ. True gold does not fear being tried by fire—this is the truth! Have no scruples, and do not be disheartened or weak. Directly fellowship more with Me in your spirit, wait patiently, and I will surely reveal to you in My own time. You absolutely must take care and not let My effort be wasted on you; do not lose a moment. When your heart is in constant fellowship with Me, when your heart lives constantly before Me, then no one, no occurrence, no thing, no husband, no son or daughter, can disturb your fellowship with Me within your heart. When your heart is constantly restricted by the Holy Spirit and when you are fellowshiping with Me at every moment, My will shall then surely be revealed to you. When you are constantly drawing close to Me in this way, regardless of your surroundings or what person, event or thing you encounter, you will not become muddled but will have a way forward.

If, ordinarily, you do not let anything slide in matters great or small, if your every thought and idea is purified, and if you are quiet in your spirit, then whenever you encounter some issue, My words will immediately be inspired within you, like a bright mirror for you to check yourself against, and you will then have a way forward. This is called suiting the medicine to the illness! And the condition will surely be cured—such is the omnipotence of God. I will surely illuminate and enlighten all those who hunger and thirst for righteousness and who search with sincerity. I will show to all of you the mysteries of the spiritual world and the way forward, cause you to cast off your old corrupt dispositions as soon as possible, so that you may achieve life maturity and be fit for My use, and so that the work of the gospel may soon proceed without hindrance. Only then will My will be satisfied, only then will God's six-thousand-year management plan be accomplished in the shortest possible time. God will gain the kingdom and will come down to earth, and together we will enter into glory!

Chapter 9

I want to remind you that even a little ambiguity or carelessness about My word is unacceptable; you must heed and obey, and practice in accordance with My intentions. You must always be alert, and never show an arrogant or self-righteous disposition; at all times, you must rely on Me to cast away that old, natural disposition that has dwelt within you. You should always be able to maintain a normal state before Me, and possess a stable disposition. Your thinking must be sober and clear, and should not be controlled or swayed by any person, event, or thing. You should always be capable of quietness in My presence, and maintain continuous closeness and fellowship with Me. You must show strength and backbone, and stand firm in your testimony to Me; rise up and speak on My behalf, and fear not what other people might say. Just fulfill My intentions, and do not let anyone control you. What I reveal to you must be followed in accordance with My intentions, and cannot be delayed. How do you feel deep down? You are uncomfortable, are you not? You will understand. Why are you unable to stand up and speak on My behalf, while taking My burden into consideration? You insist on engaging in petty scheming, but I see everything clearly. I am your support and your shield, and all is in My hands. What, then, are you afraid of? Are you not being overly emotional? You must cast aside your emotions as soon as you can; I do not act out of emotion, but exercise righteousness instead. If your parents do anything that is of no benefit to the church, they cannot escape. My intentions have been revealed to you, and you may not ignore them. Rather, you must focus all of your attention on them, and cast everything else aside to follow wholeheartedly. I will always keep you in My hands. Do not always be timid and under the control of your husband or wife; you must allow My will to be carried out.

Have faith! Have faith! I am your almighty. Perhaps you have some insight into this, but you still must be vigilant. For the sake of the church, My will, and My management, you must be fully devoted, and you will be made to see clearly all mysteries and outcomes. There will be no further delay; the days are coming to an end. What should you do? How should you seek to grow up and mature in your life? How can you make yourself useful to Me sooner? How will you enable My will to be carried out? These questions necessitate much thought and deeper fellowship with Me. Rely on Me, believe in Me, never be careless, and be able to go about things in accordance with My guidance. You must be well-equipped with the truth, and you must eat and drink of it more often. Every truth must be put into practice before it can be clearly understood.

Do you now feel that you do not have enough time? Do you also sense that inside, you are different from before, and that your burden now seems very heavy? My intentions are on you; you must be clear-headed, not break away from them, and always remain connected with Me. Remain close to Me, commune with Me, be considerate of My heart, and be able to serve in coordination with others, so that My intentions will always be revealed to you. Pay close attention at all times! Close attention! Do not slacken even a little bit; that is your duty, and My work dwells within it.

At this point, you may have gained a little understanding, and feel this is quite wonderful. You may have had doubts in the past, feeling that it differs entirely from human concepts, ideas, and thoughts, but now you basically comprehend it. This is My wondrous work, and it is the wondrous work of God as well; you absolutely must be wide awake and wait as you walk in it. Time is in My hands; do not waste it, and never slacken for even a moment; wasting time delays My work and it causes My will to be obstructed in you. You must ponder and fellowship with Me frequently. You also must bring all your actions, movements, thoughts, ideas—your family, your husband, your sons and your daughters before Me. Do not rely on the self in your practice, or I shall grow furious, and your losses shall then be dear.

Restrain your own steps at all times, and constantly walk within My words. You must have My wisdom. Come before Me if you encounter any difficulties, and I shall give you guidance. Do not make trouble or commune chaotically. If your life receives no benefit, it is because you lack knowledge and cannot differentiate between good words and bad. You will not realize this until you have been harmed, are in a bad state, and are without the presence of the Holy Spirit, but by then, it will be too late. Time is so pressing now, so you must not lag even a little in the race of life; you must follow My footsteps very closely. When any difficulties arise, engage in frequent contemplation by staying close to Me, and fellowship with Me directly. If you can grasp this path, this will ease the entry ahead of you.

My words are not only directed at you; everyone in the church is lacking in various aspects. You must fellowship more, be able to eat and drink independently during your own spiritual devotions, and be able to grasp the key truths and put them into practice immediately. You must get a feel for the reality of My word: Grasp its very core and its principles, and do not slacken your grip. Always ponder, and always fellowship with Me, and gradually things will be revealed. You cannot come close to God for a little while and, then, without waiting for your heart to grow quiet before Him, be disturbed when something else happens to you. You are always confused and unclear about things, and unable to see My face; as such, you cannot gain a clear understanding of My heart—and even if you can understand it a bit, you are uncertain and still doubt. Only when I possess your heart in full, and your mind is no longer disturbed by any worldly things and you can wait with a clear and quiet mind, shall I make revelations to you, one by one, in accordance with My intentions. You must understand this path of closeness to Me. Whoever strikes or curses you, or however nice the things people offer you might be, it is unacceptable if they keep you from being close to God. Let your heart be in My grasp, and never leave My side. With this kind of closeness and fellowship, your parents, husband, children, other familial contact, and worldly entanglements will all float away. You will enjoy an almost indescribable sweetness in your heart, and you will experience a fragrant and delicious taste; moreover, you will truly be inseparable from Me. If you continue in this manner, you will understand what is in My heart. You will never lose your way as you continue to progress, for I am your way, and everything exists because of Me. How mature your life is, when you will be able to break away from worldliness, when you will be able to cast off your emotions, when you will be able to leave behind your husband and children, when your life will mature ... all these things will happen in accordance with My time. There is no need to be anxious.

You must attain entry from the side of positivity. If you wait passively, then you are still being negative. You must be proactive in cooperating with Me; be diligent, and never be lazy. Always fellowship with Me and attain an even deeper intimacy with Me. If you do not understand, do not be impatient for quick results. It is not that I will not tell you; it is that I want to see whether you rely on Me when you are in My presence, and whether you are confident in your dependence on Me. You must always remain close to Me, and place all matters in My hands. Do not go back in vain. After you have been unconsciously close to Me for a period of time, My intentions shall be revealed to you. If you grasp them, then you will truly come face to face with Me, and you will truly have found My face. You will have much clarity and steadfastness within, and you will have something to rely on. You will then also possess power, as well as confidence, and you will have a path forward. Everything will come easily to you.

Chapter 10

You should not be afraid of this and that; no matter how many difficulties and dangers you might face, you are capable of remaining steady before Me, unobstructed by any hindrance, so that My will may be carried out unimpeded. This is your duty; otherwise, I shall bring My wrath upon you, and with My hand I shall... You will then endure endless mental suffering. You must endure all; for Me, you must be ready to relinquish everything you possess and do everything you can to follow Me, and be ready to expend your all. Now is the time that I shall test you: Will you offer your loyalty to Me? Can you loyally follow Me to the end of the road? Be not afraid; with My support, who could ever block this road? Remember this! Do not forget! All that occurs is by My good intention, and everything is under My observation. Can you follow My word in all that you say and do? When the trials of fire come upon you, will you kneel down and call out? Or will you cower, incapable of moving forward?

You must possess My courage within you, and you must have principles when it comes to facing relatives who do not believe. For My sake, however, you also must not yield to any dark forces. Rely on My wisdom to walk the perfect way; do not allow any of Satan's conspiracies to take hold. Put all your efforts into placing your heart before Me, and I shall comfort you and bring you peace and happiness. Do not strive to be a certain way in front of other people; does making Me satisfied not carry more value and weight? In satisfying Me, will you not be even further filled with eternal and lifelong peace and happiness? Your current suffering indicates just how great your future blessings will be; they are indescribable. You know not the greatness of the blessings that you shall have; you could not even dream of it. Today it has become real; so very real! This is not so far away—can you see it? Every last bit of this is within Me; how bright is the road ahead! Wipe away your tears, and feel no more pain or sorrow. All things are arranged by My hands, and My goal is to soon make you the overcomers and to bring you into glory alongside Me. For all that happens to you, you should be correspondingly grateful and full of praise; that will bring Me deep satisfaction.

The transcendent life of Christ has already appeared; there is nothing for you to be afraid of. Satans are under our feet, and their time will not last much longer. Awaken! Cast away the world of licentiousness; free yourself from the abyss of death! Be loyal to Me no matter what, and bravely advance; I am your rock of strength, so rely on Me!

Chapter 11

Am I your God? Am I your King? Have you truly allowed Me to reign as King within you? You should reflect upon yourself thoroughly: Did you not research and reject the new light when it came, even going so far as to stop without following it? For this, you shall undergo judgment and fall to your doom; you will be judged and flogged by the iron rod, and you will not feel the work of the Holy Spirit. You will, before long, cry and bend your knees in worship, wailing out loud. I have always told you and I have always spoken to you; I have never withheld My words from you. Think back: When have I ever failed to tell you something? Nevertheless, there are some people who persist in doing things the wrong way. They are lost in a haze of doubts that obscures the sun, and they never see the light. Is this not because their sense of “self” is too strong and their own notions are too great? Since when do you have any regard for Me? Since when have you had room for Me in your heart? When you have failed, when you have found yourself to be incapable, and when you are completely out of options, only then do you pray to Me. Well then: Why not do things on your own now? You humans! It is the old self that has ruined you!

Some people cannot find the path, and they cannot keep up with the new light. They fellowship only about those things that they have seen before; there is nothing new for them. Why is that? You live inside yourselves and have shut the door on Me. Seeing the methods of the work of the Holy Spirit change, in your heart, you are always cautious about being wrong. Where is your reverence for God? Have you sought it in the quiet of God’s presence? You just wonder, “Does the Holy Spirit really work like that?” What some people have seen is the work of the Holy Spirit, yet they still have things to say about it; others admit that it is the word of God, yet they do not accept it. Various notions surge up within each of them, and they do not understand the work of the Holy Spirit. They are remiss and careless, and unwilling to pay the cost and be earnest in My presence. The Holy Spirit has enlightened them, but they will not come before Me to commune or seek. Instead, they follow their own desires, doing whatever they please. What sort of intention is this?

If you have an unstable disposition, blowing this way or that like the wind and rain, and if you are unable to constantly press forward with all your might, then My rod will never be far from you. When you are being dealt with, the more adverse the environment is and the more you are persecuted, the greater your love for God will become, and you will stop clinging to the world. Without an alternate way forward, you will come to Me and regain your strength and confidence. However, in easier environments, you will muddle along. You must enter from the side of positivity; be active and not passive. You must be unshaken by anyone or anything, in all situations, and you must not be influenced by anyone's words. You must have a stable disposition; no matter what people say, you must immediately put into practice what you know to be the truth. You must always have My words at work inside of you, regardless of whom you might be facing; you must be able to stand firm in your testimony to Me and show consideration for My burdens. You must not blindly agree with others without having your own ideas; rather, you must have the courage to stand up and object to those things that do not conform with the truth. If you know clearly that something is wrong, yet lack the courage to expose it, then you are not a person who practices the truth. You want to say something, but dare not come right out with it, so you beat around the bush and then change the topic; Satan is inside you holding you back, causing you to speak without any effect and to be unable to persevere until the end. You still carry fear in your heart, and is this not because your heart is still filled with Satan's ideas?

What is an overcomer? The good soldiers of Christ must be brave and rely on Me to be spiritually strong; they must fight to become warriors and battle Satan to the death. You must always stay awake, and this is why I ask you to actively cooperate with Me at every moment and learn to get closer to Me. If, at any time and in any situation, you are able to remain quiet before Me, listening to My speech and focusing on My words and actions, then you shall not be swayed and lose your ground. Anything you receive from within Me can be practiced. Every one of My words is directed at your state, and they pierce your heart. Even if you might deny them vocally, you cannot deny them in your heart. Moreover, if you analyze My words, you shall be judged. That is, My words are the truth, the life, and the way; they are a sharp, double-edged sword, and they can defeat Satan. Those who understand and have a path to practice My words are blessed, and those who do not practice them will indubitably be judged; this is so very practical. Nowadays, the range of those whom I judge has broadened: Not only will those who know Me be judged before Me, but those who do not believe in Me and who try their utmost to resist and hinder the work of the Holy Spirit will be judged too. All those before Me who are following My footsteps shall see that God is a raging fire! God is majesty! He is executing His judgments, and sentencing them to death. Those in the church who pay no heed to following the work of the Holy Spirit, who interrupt that work, who show off, who have incorrect intentions and goals, who do not put forth effort into eating and drinking of the words of God, who are muddle-headed and suspicious, who scrutinize the work of the Holy Spirit—the words of judgment will come to these people at any time. All of people's actions shall be revealed. The Holy Spirit searches people's innermost hearts, so do not be mindless; be careful and cautious. Do not blindly act by yourself. If your actions are not in line with My words, then you shall be judged. It will not do to imitate, to be specious, or to not truly understand; you must come before Me and communicate with Me often.

Whatever you take from within Me will give you a path to practice. You will also be accompanied by My powers, have My presence, and always walk in My words; you will transcend all worldly things and possess the power of resurrection. If you do not have My words and My presence in your words, behavior, and actions, and if you distance yourself from Me and live within yourself, dwelling in notions of the mind and in doctrines and rules, then that is proof that you have set your mind on sins. In other words, you keep holding onto your old self, not allowing others to harm your self or damage your soul in the slightest. People who do this are of extremely poor caliber and are quite absurd, and they cannot see the grace of God or recognize His blessings. If you continue to behave so evasively, then when will you be able to let Me work within you? After I finish speaking, you have listened but have not retained anything, and you become especially weak whenever your problems are actually pointed out. What kind of stature is that? When can I make you complete if you always need to be coaxed? If you are afraid of bumps and scrapes, then you should rush out to warn others, "I won't let anyone deal with me; I can get rid of my natural, old disposition all by myself." Thus, nobody will criticize you or touch you, and you will be free to believe in whatever way you wish without anybody caring about you. Can you follow My footsteps like this? Claiming that you are certain that I am your God and your Lord is nothing but empty words. If you were truly without doubt, these things would not be a problem, and you would believe that it is God's love and blessings that have come upon you. When I speak, it is to My sons, and My words should be met with thanks and praise.

Chapter 13

In your current condition, you adhere excessively to the notions of the self, and there are quite grave religious disruptions within you. You are unable to act in spirit, you cannot grasp the work of the Holy Spirit, and you reject the new light. You cannot see the daytime sun because you are blind, you do not know people, you can never leave your “parents,” you lack spiritual discernment, you do not recognize the work of the Holy Spirit, and you have no idea how to eat and drink of My word. It is a problem that you do not know how to eat and drink of it on your own. The work of the Holy Spirit moves forward at an astounding speed day by day; there is new light every day, and there are also new and fresh things every day. However, you do not understand. Instead, you like to do research, you look at things through the lens of your personal preferences without carefully considering them, and you listen in a daze. You do not pray diligently in spirit, nor do you look to Me or ponder My words more. Thus, all that you have are letters, rules, and doctrines. You must have a clear idea of how to eat and drink of My word, and you must bring My word before Me more frequently.

People these days are unable to let go of themselves; they always think they are right. They are stuck in their own little worlds, and they are not the right kind of person. They have wrong intentions and purposes, and if they persist in these things, then they will surely be judged, and, in serious cases, they will be cast out. You must put more effort into maintaining continuous fellowship with Me, and not just fellowship with whomever you want. You must have an understanding of the people with whom you fellowship, and you must fellowship about spiritual matters in life; only then can you supply life to others and make up for their inadequacies. You should not talk to them in a lecturing tone; that is fundamentally the wrong position to have. In fellowship, you must have an understanding of spiritual matters, you must possess wisdom, and you must be able to understand what is in people’s hearts. If you are to serve others, then you must be the right kind of person, and you must fellowship with all that you have.

The crucial thing now is for you to be able to fellowship with Me, to communicate closely with Me, to eat and drink on your own, and to become close to God. You must come to understand spiritual matters as quickly as possible, and you must be able to clearly fathom your environment and what has been arranged in your surroundings. Are you capable of understanding what I am? It is crucial that you eat and drink based on what you lack, and live by My word! Recognize My hands, and do not complain. If you complain and break away, you may lose the opportunity to receive God’s grace. Start with drawing close to Me: What are you lacking, and how should you come close to Me and understand My heart? It is difficult for people to come close to Me, because they cannot let go of the self. Their dispositions are always unstable, constantly blowing hot and cold, and these people become conceited and self-satisfied the moment they get a little taste of sweetness. Some people have not yet awakened; how much of what you say embodies what you are? How much of it is self-defense, how much of it is mimicking others, and how much of it is following the rules? The reason you cannot grasp or understand the work of the Holy Spirit is that you do not know how to get close to Me. On the outside, you are always pondering things over, relying on the notions of the self and of your mind; you secretly research and engage in petty schemes, and you cannot even bring them out into the open. This shows that you do not truly understand the work of the Holy Spirit. If you genuinely know that something does not come from God, then why are you afraid to stand up and reject it? How many could stand up and speak for Me? You lack even the smallest part of strength of character possessed by the male child.

The purpose of everything that is arranged at present is to train you so that you may grow in your lives, to make your spirits keen and sharp, and to open your spiritual eyes so that you will recognize what things come from God. What comes from God enables you to serve with capability and burden, and to be steadfast in spirit. All things that do not come from Me are empty; they give you nothing, they cause a void in your spirit and make you lose your faith, and put distance between you and Me, trapping you in your own mind. You can now transcend everything in the secular world when you live in the spirit, but to live in your mind is to be taken in by Satan; this is a dead end. It is very simple now: Look upon Me with your heart, and your spirit will immediately grow strong. You will have a path to practice, and I will guide your every step. My word shall be revealed to you at all times and in all places. No matter where or when, or how adverse the environment is, I will make you see clearly, and My heart shall be revealed to you if you look to Me with yours; in this manner, you will run down the road ahead and never lose your way. Some people try to feel their way externally, yet never do so from within their spirits. They often cannot grasp the work of the Holy Spirit. When they fellowship with others, they just become more confused, having no path to follow and not knowing what to do. These people do not know what ails them; they may possess many things and be richly filled inside, but is that of any use? Do you really have a path to follow? Do you possess any illumination or enlightenment? Do you have any new insights? Have you made progress, or have you regressed? Can you keep up with the new light? You have no submission; the submission you often mention is nothing but talk. Have you lived out an obedient life?

How big is the obstacle posed by people's self-righteousness, complacency, self-satisfaction, and arrogance? Who is to blame when you cannot enter reality? You should examine yourself carefully to see whether you are a correct person. Are your goals and intentions made with Me in mind? Are all your words and actions said and done in My presence? I examine all of your thoughts and ideas. Do you not feel guilty? You put on a false front for others to see and you calmly assume an air of self-righteousness; you do this to shield yourself. You do this to conceal your evil, and you even think up ways to push that evil onto someone else. What treachery dwells in your heart! Think of everything you have said. Was it not for your own benefit that, afraid your soul would come to harm, you concealed Satan and then forcibly robbed your brothers and sisters of their eating and drinking? What do you have to say for yourself? Do you think that next time you will be able to make up for the eating and drinking that Satan has taken away this time? Thus, you now see it clearly; is this something for which you can compensate? Can you make up for the time lost? You must diligently examine yourselves to see why no eating and drinking was done in the past few meetings, and who caused this trouble. You must fellowship one by one until it is clear. If such a person is not strongly constrained, then your brothers and sisters will not understand, and then it will just happen again. Your spiritual eyes are closed; too many of you are blind! Moreover, those who do see are careless about it. They do not stand and speak up, and they, too, are blind. Those who see but do not speak up are mute. There are many here with handicaps.

Some people do not comprehend what the truth is, what the life is, and what the way is, and they do not understand the spirit. They consider My word as mere formula. This is much too rigid. They do not understand what genuine gratitude and praise are. Some people are unable to grasp the crucial and primary things; instead, they only grasp the secondary. What does it mean to interrupt God's management? What does it mean to demolish the construction of the church? What does it mean to interrupt the work of the Holy Spirit? What is a lackey of Satan? These truths must be clearly understood, and not just vaguely glossed over. What caused there to be no eating and drinking this time? Some people feel that they should praise God out loud today, but how should they praise Him? Should they do so by singing hymns and dancing? Do other methods not count as praise? Some people come to meetings with the notion that jubilant praise is the way to praise God. People have these notions, and they do not pay attention to the work of the Holy Spirit; the end result of this is that interruptions still occur. There was no eating and drinking in this meeting; all of you say you are considerate of God's burden and will defend the testimony of the church, but who among you has really been considerate of God's burden? Ask yourself: Are you someone who has shown consideration for His burden? Can you practice righteousness for Him? Can you stand up and speak for Me? Can you steadfastly put the truth into practice? Are you bold enough to fight against all of Satan's deeds? Would you be able to set your emotions aside and expose Satan for the sake of My truth? Can you allow My intentions to be fulfilled in you? Have you offered up your heart in the most crucial of moments? Are you someone who does My will? Ask yourself these questions, and think about them often. Satan's gifts are inside of you, and you are to blame for that—for you do not understand people, and you fail to recognize Satan's poison; you are leading yourself toward death. Satan has thoroughly deceived you, to the point that you are completely bewildered; you are drunk on the wine of promiscuity, and you sway back and forth, unable to hold a firm viewpoint, and have no path for your practice. You do not eat and drink properly, you engage in wild fighting and quarreling, you do not know right from wrong, and you follow whoever leads. Do you possess any truth at all? Some people defend themselves and even engage in deception. They fellowship with others, but that just leads them to a dead end. Is it from Me that these people obtain their intentions, goals, motivations, and source? Do you think you can compensate your brothers and sisters for the fact that their eating and drinking was taken away? Find a few people to fellowship with, and ask them; let them speak for themselves: Have they been provided with anything? Or have their bellies been filled with dirty water and trash, leaving them without a path to follow? Would that not demolish the church? Where is the love among brothers and sisters? You secretly research who is right and who is wrong, but why do you not bear a burden for the church? Normally, you are good at yelling out catchphrases, but when things actually happen, you are uncertain about them. Some people understand but only murmur quietly, while others speak up what they understand but no one else says a word. They do not know what comes from God and what is the work of Satan. Where are your internal feelings about life? You simply cannot grasp the work of the Holy Spirit, nor do you recognize it, and you have a difficult time accepting new things. You only accept religious and secular things that conform to people's notions. As a result, you fight wantonly. How many people can grasp the work of the Holy Spirit? How many have truly carried a burden for the church? Do you grasp it? Singing hymns is one way to praise God, but you do not clearly understand the truth of praising God. Moreover, you are rigid in the way you go about praising Him. Is that not a notion that you have? You always cling unrelentingly to your own notions, and you are unable to focus on what the Holy Spirit is going to do today, unable to feel what your brothers and sisters are feeling, and unable to quietly seek God's will. You do things blindly; you may sing the songs well, but the result is a complete mess. Is that truly eating and drinking? Do you see who is actually causing the interruptions? You absolutely do not live in the spirit; rather, you hold on to various notions. How is that any way to carry a burden for the church? You must see that the work of the Holy Spirit is progressing even faster now. Are you not therefore blind if you are clutching tightly to your own notions and resisting the Holy Spirit's work? Is that not akin to a fly's banging into walls and buzzing around? If you persist in this manner, you will be cast aside.

Those who are made complete before the disaster are submissive to God. They live reliant on Christ, they bear witness to Him, and they exalt Him. They are the victorious male children and good soldiers of Christ. It is crucial now that you calm yourself, come close to God, and fellowship with Him. If you are unable to come close to God, you run the risk of being captured by Satan. If you can come close to Me and fellowship with Me, then all truths will be revealed to you, and you will have a standard by which to live and act. Because you are one who is close to Me, My word will never leave your side, nor will you ever stray from My word throughout your life; Satan will have no way to take advantage of you, and will instead be shamed and flee in defeat. If you look externally for what is missing inside you, you may at times find some of it, but much of what you find will be rules and things that you do not need. You must let go of yourself, eat and drink more of My words, and know how to ponder them. If you do not understand something, come close to Me and fellowship with Me frequently; in this way, the things you understand will be real and true. You must start by being close to Me. This is crucial! Otherwise, you will not know how to eat and drink. You cannot eat and drink by yourself; truly, your stature is too small.

Chapter 14

Right now, time is indeed pressing. The Holy Spirit uses many different methods to lead us into God's words. You should be equipped with all truths, be sanctified, and genuinely be close with Me and have association with Me, and you will not be permitted any room to pick and choose. The work of the Holy Spirit is without emotion, and does not care what kind of person you are. As long as you are willing to search and follow—not giving excuses, and not arguing over your own gains and losses—but to search with a hunger and a thirst for righteousness, then I will enlighten you. Regardless of how foolish and ignorant you are, I do not focus on these things. I look to see how hard you work in the positive aspect. If you still hold fast to the notion of self, turning circles in your own little world, then I think you are in danger.... What is rapture? What does it mean to be forsaken? How should you live before God today? How should you actively cooperate with Me? Discard your own notions, dissect yourself, take off your mask, see your own true colors clearly, loathe yourself, have a heart that hungrily and thirstily seeks righteousness, believe that you yourself genuinely amount to nothing, be willing to relinquish yourself, be able to stop all your ways of doing things, quiet yourself before Me, offer up more prayers, lean on Me in earnest, look up to Me, and never stop drawing close to Me and communicating with Me—in these things, the key is found. People often stay within themselves, and are therefore not before God.

The current work of the Holy Spirit is indeed difficult for people to imagine, and all enters into reality; it really will not do to be thoughtless about it. If your heart and mind are in the wrong place, then you will have no way forward. From start to finish, you must be watchful at all times, and be sure to stay vigilant against negligence. Blessed are those who are constantly watchful and waiting and who are quiet before Me! Blessed are those who are always looking up to Me in their hearts, who take care to listen closely to My voice, who pay attention to My actions, and who put My words into practice! The time really can brook no further delay; all manner of plagues will run rampant, opening their ferocious, bloody mouths to devour you all like a flood. My sons! The time has come! There is no more room for pondering. The only way out that will bring you under My protection is to come back before Me. You must possess the male child's strength of character; do not be weak or disheartened. You must keep up with My steps, not refuse the new light, and, as I tell you how to eat and drink of My words, you should submit and eat and drink of them properly. Is there still time to arbitrarily fight or contend with each other? Can you make war if you do not eat your fill and are not fully equipped with the truth? If you want to overcome religion, you must be fully equipped with the truth. Eat and drink of My words more, and ponder over them further. You must eat and drink of My words independently, and start by drawing close to God. Let this be a warning to you! You must take heed! Those who are smart should quickly wake up to the truth! Relinquish anything you are unwilling to part with. I tell you once again that such things really are harmful to your life, and they are of no benefit! I hope you can rely on Me in your actions; otherwise, the only path forward is the path of death—where, then, will you go to seek the path of life? Withdraw your heart that loves to busy itself with external things! Withdraw your heart that disobeys other people! If your life cannot mature and if you are forsaken, will you not then be someone who has tripped yourself up? The current work of the Holy Spirit is not what you imagine. If you are unable to relinquish your notions, then you will suffer a great loss. If the work were in keeping with man's notions, would your old nature and notions be able to come to light? Would you be able to know yourself? Maybe you still think that you are free of notions, but this time all your various ugly facets will clearly come to light. Carefully ask yourself:

Are you someone who submits to Me?

Are you willing and ready to relinquish your self and follow Me?

Are you someone who seeks My face with a pure heart?

Do you know how to draw close to Me and communicate with Me?

Can you quiet yourself before Me and seek My will?

Do you put into practice the words I reveal to you?

Can you maintain a normal condition before Me?

Are you able to see through Satan's cunning schemes? Do you dare to expose them?

How are you considerate of God's burden?

Are you someone who is considerate of God's burden?

How do you grasp the work of the Holy Spirit?

How do you serve in coordination within God's family?

How do you bear strong witness for Me?

How do you fight the good fight for the truth?

You must take the time to ponder these truths thoroughly. The facts are sufficient to prove that the day is extremely near at hand. You must be made complete before the disasters come—this is an important matter, a matter of great urgency that must be resolved! I desire to make you complete, but I see that you are indeed somewhat unbridled. You have mettle, yet you do not put it to the best use, and you have not grasped the most important things; instead, all you grasp are trivial matters. What use is there in deliberating over these things? Is it not a waste of time? I show you kindness in this way, but you fail to show any appreciation; you merely fight amongst each other—so have all My painstaking efforts not been wasted? If you carry on in this way, I will not take the time to coax you along! I say to you that unless you wake up to the truth, the work of the Holy Spirit will be withdrawn from you! You will be given no more to eat, and you may believe as you see fit. I have spoken My words exhaustively; it is up to you whether you listen or not. When the time comes that you are confused, have no way forward, and cannot see the true light, will you blame Me? Such ignorance! What should the consequence be if you cling so tightly to your self, if you refuse to let go? Will your work not merely have been an exercise in futility? How pitiful it is to be cast aside when disasters befall!

Now is the crucial phase of the building of the church. If you are unable to cooperate with Me proactively and offer yourself up to Me wholeheartedly, and if you cannot forsake everything, then you will suffer loss. Can you still harbor other intentions? I showed you leniency in this way, waiting for you to repent and start anew. However, time really does not permit this anymore, and I must consider the big picture. For the sake of the purpose of God's management plan, all is moving forward, and My steps march onward day by day, hour by hour, and moment by moment—those who cannot keep up will be forsaken. Every day there is new light; every day new deeds are done. Every day there arise new things, and those who cannot see the light are blind! Those who do not follow will be cast out....

Chapter 15

God's appearance has already arisen in all churches. It is the Spirit that speaks; He is a raging fire, bears majesty, and is judging. He is the Son of man, clothed with a garment that hangs down to His feet, and a golden belt is tied around His chest. His head and hair are white like wool, and His eyes are like flames; His feet are akin to fine brass, as if they had been wrought in a furnace, and His voice is like the sound of many waters. He holds in His right hand seven stars and in His mouth, a sharp double-edged sword, and His countenance shines fiercely like the burning sun!

The Son of man has been witnessed, and God Himself has been openly revealed. God's glory has issued forth, shining fiercely like the burning sun! His glorious countenance blazes with dazzling light; whose eyes dare treat Him with resistance? Resistance leads to death! Not the slightest bit of mercy is shown for anything you think in your heart, any word you utter, or anything you do. You will all come to understand and come to see what it is you have obtained—nothing but My judgment! Can I abide it when you do not put your effort into eating and drinking of My words, and instead interrupt arbitrarily and destroy My construction? I will not treat this kind of person gently! If your behavior degenerates more seriously, you will be consumed in flames! The almighty God manifests in a spiritual body, without the slightest bit of flesh or blood connecting head to toe. He transcends the universe world, seated on the glorious throne in the third heaven, administering all things! The universe and all things are within My hands. If I speak it, it will be so. If I ordain it, thus it shall be. Satan is beneath My feet; it is in the bottomless pit! When My voice issues forth, heaven and earth will pass away and come to nothing! All things will be renewed; this is an unalterable truth that is absolutely right. I have overcome the world, as well as all evil ones. I sit here talking to you, and all who have ears should listen and all who are living should accept.

The days will come to an end; all things in this world will come to nothing, and all things will be born anew. Remember this! Do not forget! There can be no ambiguity! Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall remain! Let Me exhort you once again: Do not run in vain! Wake up! Repent, and salvation is at hand! I have already appeared amongst you, and My voice has arisen. My voice has arisen before you; every day it confronts you, face-to-face, and each day it is fresh and new. You see Me and I see you; I speak to you constantly, and am face-to-face with you. Nevertheless, you reject Me and do not know Me. My sheep can hear My voice, yet still you hesitate! You hesitate! Your heart is waxed gross, your eyes have been blinded by Satan, and you cannot see My glorious countenance—how pitiful you are! How pitiful!

The seven Spirits before My throne have been sent to all corners of the earth and I will send My Messenger to speak to the churches. I am righteous and faithful; I am the God that examines the deepest parts of man's heart. The Holy Spirit speaks to the churches, and it is My words that issue forth from inside My Son; all those who have ears should listen! All those who are living should accept! Simply eat and drink of them, and do not doubt. All those who submit and heed My words will receive great blessings! All those who seek My countenance in earnest will surely have new light, new enlightenment, and new insights; all will be fresh and new. My words will appear to you at any time, and they will open the eyes of your spirit so that you can see all the mysteries of the spiritual realm and see that the kingdom is among man. Enter the refuge, and all grace and blessings will be upon you; famine and plague will not be able to touch you, and wolves, serpents, tigers, and leopards will be unable to harm you. You will go with Me, walk with Me, and enter glory with Me!

Almighty God! His glorious body appears in the open, the holy spiritual body arises, and He is the complete God Himself! The world and the flesh are both changed, and His transfiguration on the mount is the person of God. He wears the golden crown atop His head, His clothing is pure white, across the chest is a golden belt, and the world and all things are His footstool. His eyes are like flames, He holds a sharp double-edged sword in His mouth, and He has the seven stars in His right hand. The way to the kingdom is boundlessly bright, and His glory arises and shines; the mountains are joyful and the waters laugh, and the sun, moon, and stars all revolve in their orderly arrangement, welcoming the unique, true God whose triumphant return heralds the completion of His six-thousand-year management plan. All leap and dance with joy! Cheer! The almighty God sits upon His glorious throne! Sing! The victorious banner of the Almighty is raised high upon the majestic, magnificent Mount Zion! All nations are cheering, all peoples are singing, Mount Zion is laughing joyfully, and the glory of God has arisen! I never even dreamed that I would see God's countenance, yet today I have seen it. Face-to-face with Him every day, I lay bare my heart to Him. He bountifully provides food and drink. Life, words, actions, thoughts, ideas—His glorious light illuminates them all. He leads every step of the way, and His judgment immediately befalls any rebellious heart.

Eating, residing together, and living together with God, being together with Him, walking together, enjoying together, gaining glory and blessings together, sharing the kingship with Him, and existing together in the kingdom—oh, what a pleasure it is! Oh, how sweet it is! We are face-to-face with Him every day, speaking with Him every day and talking constantly, and being granted new enlightenment and new insights every day. Our spiritual eyes are opened, and we see everything; all the mysteries of the spirit are revealed to us. The holy life really is carefree; run fast and do not stop, and forge onward continuously—there is a more wondrous life ahead. Do not be satisfied with mere sweet taste; seek continuously to enter into God. He is all-encompassing and bountiful, and has all kinds of things that we lack. Cooperate proactively and enter into Him, and nothing will ever be the same again. Our lives will be transcendent, and no person, matter, or thing will be able to disturb us.

Transcendence! Transcendence! True transcendence! God's transcendent life is within, and all things have become truly relaxed! We transcend the world and worldly things, feeling no attachment to husbands or children. We transcend the control of sickness and environments. Satan dare not disturb us. We completely transcend all disasters. This is allowing God to take the kingship! We trample Satan underfoot, stand witness for the church, and thoroughly expose the ugly face of Satan. The construction of the church is in Christ, and the glorious body has arisen—this is living in rapture!

Chapter 16

After the witnessing of the Son of man, Almighty God revealed Himself publicly to us as the Sun of righteousness. This is the transfiguration on the mountain! It is now becoming increasingly real, more of a reality. We have seen how the Holy Spirit works, and God Himself has emerged from the flesh. He is under the control of neither man, nor space, nor geography; He transcends the boundaries of earth and sea, He extends throughout the whole universe and to the ends of the earth, and all nations and all peoples are listening quietly to His voice. As we open our spiritual eyes, we see that the word of God has emanated from His glorious body; this is God Himself, emerging from the flesh. He is the real and complete God Himself. He speaks to us publicly, He is face-to-face with us, He advises us, He pities us, He waits for us, He comforts us, He disciplines us, and He judges us. He leads us by the hand, and His concern for us burns like a flame within Him; with an eager heart, He urges us to awaken and enter into Him. His transcendent life has been wrought into all of us, and all who enter into Him shall achieve transcendence and overcome the world and all the evil ones, and rule as kings together with Him. Almighty God is the spiritual body of God. If He ordains it, then it will be so; if He speaks it, then it will be so, and if He commands it, then it is so. He is the one true God! Satan is beneath His feet, in the bottomless pit. The universe and all things are in His hands; the time has come, and all shall return to nothingness and be born anew.

Chapter 17

The church is under construction, and Satan is trying its utmost to demolish it. It wants to demolish My construction by any means possible; for this reason, the church must be purified quickly. Not the slightest dregs of evil must remain; the church must be purified such that it becomes flawless and continues to be as pure as in the past. You must be awake and waiting at all times, and you must pray before Me more. You must recognize the various plots and cunning schemes of Satan, recognize the spirits, know people, and be able to discern all kinds of people, events, and things; you must also eat and drink more of My words and, more importantly, you must be able to eat and drink of them by yourselves. Equip yourselves with all of the truth, and come before Me so that I may open your spiritual eyes and allow you to see all the mysteries that lie within the spirit.... When the church enters its construction phase, the saints march to battle. Satan's various hideous features are set before you: Do you stop and edge backward, or do you stand up and, relying upon Me, continue to move forward? Thoroughly expose Satan's corrupt and ugly features, spare no feelings, and show no mercy! Fight Satan to the death! I am your backup, and you must have the spirit of the male child! Satan is lashing out in its final death throes, but it will still be unable to escape My judgment. Satan is beneath My feet and it is also being trodden under your own feet—this is a fact!

All those religious disruptors, and those who tear down the church's construction, cannot be shown the smallest bit of tolerance but will be judged immediately; Satan will be exposed, trampled, destroyed utterly, and left with nowhere to hide. All manner of demons and ghosts will surely reveal their true forms before Me, and I will cast them all into the bottomless pit from which they will never be free; they will all be beneath our feet. If you want to fight the good fight for the truth, then first of all, you must not give Satan any chance to work—to this end, you will need to be of one mind and able to serve in coordination, relinquish all your own notions, opinions, views, and ways of doing things, quiet your heart within Me, focus on the voice of the Holy Spirit, be attentive to the work of the Holy Spirit, and experience God's words in detail. You must have only one intention, which is that My will be done. You should have no other intention apart from this. You must look to Me with all your heart, watch closely My actions and the way I do things, and not be negligent at all. Your spirit must be sharp, your eyes open. Ordinarily, when it comes to those whose intentions and objectives are not right, as well as those who love to be seen by others, who are eager to do things, who are prone to causing disruptions, who are good at spouting religious doctrine, who are Satan's lackeys, and so on—when these people stand up, they become difficulties for the church, and this causes their brothers' and sisters' eating and drinking of God's words to come to nothing. When you encounter such people play-acting, ban them immediately. If, despite repeated admonitions, they do not change, then they will suffer loss. If those who stubbornly persist in their ways attempt to defend themselves and try to cover up their sins, the church should cut them out immediately and leave them no room to maneuver. Do not lose a lot by trying to save a little; keep your eye on the big picture.

Your spiritual eyes must now be opened, and able to recognize several kinds of people in the church:

What kind of people understand spiritual matters and know the spirit?

What kind of people do not understand spiritual matters?

What kind of people have an evil spirit?

What kind of people have the work of Satan in them?

What kind of people are prone to causing disruptions?

What kind of people have the work of the Holy Spirit in them?

What kind of people show consideration for God's burden?

What kind of people can do My will?

Who are My loyal witnesses?

Know that the highest vision of today is the enlightenment that the Holy Spirit brings to the churches. Do not be muddle-headed about these things; rather, take the time to figure them out thoroughly—this is extremely crucial for your life progression! If you do not understand these things that are before your very eyes, then you will be unable to walk the path ahead; you will constantly be in danger of falling to temptation and into captivity, and you may be devoured. The main things to do now are to focus on becoming capable of drawing close to Me in your heart and communicate with Me more. Anything you lack or seek will be made whole in you by such closeness and communication. Your life will surely be provided for, and you will have new enlightenment. I never look at how ignorant you were in the past, nor do I linger in My mind over your past transgressions. I look at how you love Me: Can you love Me more than you love anything else? I look to see whether or not you can turn back and rely on Me to cast off your ignorance. Some people oppose Me, defy Me openly, and judge others; they do not know My words, and are even less likely to find My countenance. All those before Me who sincerely search for Me, who have hearts that hunger and thirst for righteousness—I will enlighten you, reveal to you, allow you to see Me with your own eyes and grasp My will in person; My heart will surely be revealed to you, that you may understand. You must practice that which I enlighten within you according to My words; otherwise, you will be judged. Follow My will, and you will not lose your way.

To all those who seek to enter My words, grace and blessings will be doubled upon them, they will gain new enlightenment and insights every day, and they will feel fresher in eating and drinking of My words on a daily basis. They will taste it with their own mouths: How sweet it is! ... You must be cautious, and not be satisfied when you have gained some insight and a taste of the sweetness; the key is to continue seeking onward! Some people think that the work of the Holy Spirit is truly wondrous and real—this is indeed the person of Almighty God being revealed openly, and greater signs and wonders lie ahead. Be careful and awake at all times, keep your eyes fixed on the source, be quiet before Me, take heed and listen carefully, and be certain about My words. There can be no ambiguity; if you doubt at all, then I fear you will be discarded outside of the gate. Have clear visions, stand on solid ground, follow this stream of life, and follow closely wherever it may flow; you absolutely must not internalize any human hesitation. Just eat, drink, and give praise; seek with a pure heart, and never give up. Bring whatever you do not understand before Me often, and be sure not to harbor any doubts, so that you may avoid suffering great losses. Keep up! Keep up! Stay close! Rid yourself of your hindrances, and do not be dissolute. Go forth and pursue wholeheartedly, and do not recoil. You must offer up your heart at all times and never miss a single moment. The Holy Spirit constantly has new work to do, does new things every day, and has new enlightenments every day, too; the transfiguration on the mountain, God's holy spiritual body has appeared! The Sun of righteousness gives forth light and shines forth; all nations and all peoples have seen Your glorious countenance. My light will shine upon all those who come before Me. My words are light, leading you forward. You will not veer left or right as you walk, but will walk within My light, and your running will not be fruitless labor. You must see the work of the Holy Spirit clearly; My will is there within it. All mysteries are concealed, but they will gradually be revealed to you. Keep My words in mind at all times, and come before Me to communicate more with Me. The work of the Holy Spirit advances. Walk in My footsteps; great wonders are ahead, and these will be revealed to you one by one. Only those who take care, who wait, and who are awake will see them. Be sure not to slack off. God's management plan is approaching its final stage; the construction of the church will succeed, the number of the victorious is already set, the victorious male child will be made, and they will enter the kingdom with Me, take up the kingship with Me, rule all nations with the iron rod, and be in glory together!

Chapter 18

Building the church is really not an easy thing to do! I put My whole heart into its construction, and Satan would do everything in its power to tear it down. If you want to be built, you must be a person who has a vision; you must live in reliance upon Me, bear witness to Christ, hold Him up on high, and be loyal to Me. You should not give excuses; rather, you should obey unconditionally. You must endure any trials and accept all that comes from Me. You must follow the Holy Spirit no matter how He leads you. You must have a keen spirit and the ability to distinguish things. You must understand people, and not blindly follow them; keep your spiritual eyes bright, and possess a thorough knowledge of all things. People who are of the same mind as I must stand witness to Me and fight the deciding battle against Satan. You must both be built and take part in the battle. I am amongst you; I support you, and I am your refuge.

The first things you must do are to purify yourself, become a changed person, and have a stable temperament. You must rely on Me in your life whether your environment is good or bad; whether you are at home or in any other setting, you must not falter because of someone else or because of some occurrence or issue. Moreover, you must stand firm and, as usual, live out Christ and manifest God Himself. You must perform your function and fulfill your duties as normal; this cannot be done just once, but must be sustained in the long term. You must take My heart as yours, My intentions must become your thoughts, you must take the bigger picture into consideration, you must allow Christ to emanate from you, and you must serve in coordination with others. You must keep pace with the work of the Holy Spirit and throw yourself into the method of His salvation. You must empty yourself, and become an innocent and open person. You must fellowship and engage normally with your brothers and sisters, be capable of doing things in spirit, love each other, allow their strengths to balance out your weaknesses, and seek to be built up within the church. Only then will you truly have a share in the kingdom.

Chapter 19

As the work of the Holy Spirit continues forward, God has once again ushered us into a new way in which the Holy Spirit works. As a result, some people have inevitably misunderstood Me and made complaints to Me. Some have resisted and opposed Me, and have scrutinized Me. However, I still mercifully wait for you to repent and reform yourselves. The change in the method of the Holy Spirit's work is that God Himself has openly appeared. My word will remain unchanged! Since it is you whom I am saving, I do not at all wish to forsake you halfway down the road. It is just that you harbor doubts and want to turn back empty-handed. Some of you have stopped moving forward, while others are just waiting and watching. Still others are passively dealing with the situation, while some are simply engaging in mimicry. You have really hardened your hearts! You have taken what I have said to you and turned it into something you are proud of, or something you boast about. Contemplate this further: This is nothing other than words of mercy and judgment descending upon you. The Holy Spirit, seeing that you are indeed rebellious, directly goes about speaking and dissecting. You should be afraid. Do not act recklessly or do anything rash, and do not be vain, arrogant, or opinionated! You should focus more on putting My words into practice, and live them out wherever you go so that they may truly transform you from the inside and so that you may have My disposition. Only results such as these are genuine.

In order for the church to be built, you must be of a particular stature and seek wholeheartedly and unceasingly. Furthermore, you must accept the burning and cleansing of the Holy Spirit to become a transformed person. It is only under such conditions that the church can be built. The work of the Holy Spirit has now led you to embark upon the building of the church. If you continue to behave in the same addled and sluggish way as you did in the past, then there is no hope for you. You must equip yourselves with all of the truth, you must possess spiritual discernment, and you must walk the perfect way in accordance with My wisdom. For the church to be built, you must be inside the spirit of life, and not just imitate superficially. The process of growth in your life is the same process in which you are built up. However, note that those who rely on gifts or those who are unable to understand spiritual matters or who lack reality cannot be built up, nor can those who are incapable of always being close to Me and communicating with Me be built up. People who preoccupy their minds with notions or who live by doctrines cannot be built up, nor can those who are led by their emotions be built up. No matter how God treats you, you must submit to Him absolutely; otherwise, you cannot be built up. Those who are absorbed in their own self-importance, self-righteousness, pride, and contentment, and who love to be condescending and to show off, cannot be built up. Those who cannot serve in coordination with others cannot be built up, either, and the same is true of people who have no spiritual discernment and blindly follow whoever is leading them. Likewise, those who fail to understand My intentions and who live life in an outdated condition cannot be built up, nor can people who are too slow to catch up to new light and who do not have any vision as their foundation be built up.

The church should be built without delay; this is a matter of pressing concern for Me. You should begin by focusing on the positive, and join the stream of the construction by offering yourself with all your strength. Otherwise, you will be rejected. You should forsake completely that which should be forsaken, and eat and drink properly of that which should be eaten and drunk. You should live out the reality of My word, and you should stop focusing on superficial and inconsequential matters. Ask yourself this: How much have you taken in My word? How much do you live it out? You should maintain clear-headedness, and abstain from doing anything rash; otherwise, such behavior will not help you in achieving growth in life, but will actually harm your growth. You should comprehend the truth, know how to put it into practice, and allow My word to truly become your life. This is the crux of the matter!

As the building of the church has now reached a critical moment, Satan is devising plans and doing its utmost to demolish it. You should not be careless, but proceed with caution and exercise spiritual discernment. Without such discernment, you will suffer great losses. This is no trivial matter; you should consider it as an issue of great importance. Satan, too, is capable of making false appearances and peddling counterfeits, but the intrinsic quality of these things is different. People are so foolish and careless, and cannot see the difference. This also shows that they are incapable of maintaining clear-headedness and serenity at all times. Your hearts are nowhere to be found. Service is, on the one hand, an honor, while on the other hand, it can be a loss. It can lead to either blessings or misfortune. Remain quiet in My presence and live according to My word, and spiritually, you will indeed maintain watchfulness and exercise discernment. When Satan arrives, you will immediately be able to guard against it and sense its coming; you will feel genuine uneasiness within your spirit. The current work of Satan adjusts as trends change. When people behave in an addled way and lack watchfulness, they will remain in captivity. You should be watchful at all times, and keep your eyes peeled. Do not wrangle over your own gains and losses or calculate for the sake of your own benefit; instead, seek to make My will be done.

Objects might appear identical, but they may differ in quality. For this reason, you should recognize individuals as well as spirits. You should exercise discernment and maintain spiritual clear-headedness. When Satan's venom appears, you should be able to recognize it at once; it cannot escape the light of God's judgment. You should pay more attention to listening closely to the voice of the Holy Spirit in your spirit; do not follow others blindly or mistake what is false for something true. Do not simply follow whoever takes the lead, lest you suffer great losses. What sort of taste does all this leave in your mouths? Have you felt the consequences? You should not randomly interfere with service or insert your own opinions into it, or else I will strike you down. Worse yet, if you refuse to submit, and continue to say and do as you wish, then I will cut you off! The church does not need to scrape together any more people; it only wants those who sincerely love God and actually live in accordance with My word. You should be aware of your own actual situation. Is it not self-deception when the poor consider themselves to be wealthy? For the church to be built, you must follow the Spirit; do not proceed by acting blindly. Rather, stay in your places, and fulfill your own functions. You should not step outside of your roles; you should do your utmost to fulfill whatever function you can perform, and then My heart will be satisfied. It is not that all of you will serve the same function. Rather, each of you should play your own role, and dedicate your service in coordination with others in the church. Your service should not deviate in either direction.

Chapter 20

The work of the Holy Spirit is speeding ahead, bringing you into a completely new realm, which is to say that the reality of the life of the kingdom has appeared before you. The words spoken by the Holy Spirit have directly revealed the profundity within your heart, and one image after another is appearing before you. All those who have a hunger and a thirst for righteousness, and who have the intention to submit, will surely remain in Zion and stay in New Jerusalem; they will certainly gain glory and honor and share beautiful blessings while together with Me. There are currently some mysteries of the spiritual world that you have not yet seen, for your spiritual eyes are not open. All things are absolutely wonderful; miracles and wonders, and things people have never even thought of, will gradually come to be. The almighty God will show His greatest miracles so that the universe and the ends of the earth and all nations and all peoples can see them with their own eyes, and also see wherein My majesty, righteousness, and almightiness lie. The day is coming closer! This is an extremely critical moment: Will you withdraw, or will you persevere to the end, never turning back? Do not look to any person, event, or thing; do not look to the world, to your husbands, to your children, or to your misgivings about life. Just look to My love and mercy, and see what price I have paid to gain you, as well as what it is that I am. These things will be enough to encourage you.

The time is so very close at hand, and My will must be achieved in all haste. I will not forsake those who are in My name; I will bring you all into glory. However, looking at it now, this is a crucial moment; all those unable to take that next step will lament for the rest of their lives and feel regret, though it will already be too late for such sentiment. Right now, your statures are being put to a practical test to see whether the church can be built and whether or not you can obey each other. Viewed from this perspective, your obedience is indeed one in which you pick and choose; though you may be able to obey one person, you still find it hard to obey another. There is indeed no way you can be obedient when you rely on human notions. However, the thoughts of God always surpass those of man! Christ submitted until death, and died on the cross. He said nothing about any conditions or reasons; as long as it was His Father's will, He obeyed willingly. Your current level of obedience is far too limited. I say to you all, obedience is not obeying people; rather, it means obeying the work of the Holy Spirit, and obeying God Himself. My words are renewing and changing you from within; if they were not, then who would obey whom? You are all disobedient toward other people. You must take the time to figure this out—what obedience is and how you can live out a life of obedience. You must come before Me more, and fellowship this matter, and gradually you will come to understand it, thereby relinquishing the notions and choices that are inside of you. This way in which I do things is hard for people to understand thoroughly. It is not about in what ways people are good or capable; I use even the most ignorant and the most insignificant to reveal God's almightiness, whilst at the same time reversing some of people's notions, opinions, and choices. God's deeds are so wondrous; they are beyond the ability of the human mind to fathom!

If you really want to become one who bears witness for Me, then you must receive the truth purely and not erroneously. You must focus more on putting My words into practice, and seek to make your life mature quickly. Do not search for things that are without value; those are of no benefit to your life progression. You can only be built once your lives have matured; only then can you be brought into the kingdom—this is incontrovertible. I still wish to speak some more to you; I have given you much, but how much do you actually understand? How much of what I say has become the reality of your life? How much of what I say are you living out? Do not try to draw water with a bamboo basket; you will attain nothing in the end, only emptiness. Others have gained real benefits very easily; what about you? Can you defeat Satan if you are unarmed and carry no weapons? You must depend more on My words in your life, as they are the best weapons for self-defense. You should take note: Do not take My words as your possessions; if you do not understand them, if you do not seek them, and if you do not try to figure them out or communicate with Me about them, but are instead self-satisfied and self-contented, then you will suffer loss. Right now you should learn from this lesson, and you must put yourself aside and draw upon the strengths of others to make up for your own shortcomings; do not simply do whatever you want. Time waits for no man. The lives of your brothers and sisters are growing day by day; they are all experiencing change and being renewed on a daily basis. The strength of your brothers and sisters is rising up, and this is a great thing! Sprint to the finish line; no one will be able to attend to anyone else. Just make your own subjective efforts to cooperate with Me. Those who have visions, who have a way forward, who are not disheartened, and who always look forward, are guaranteed beyond doubt to be victorious. This is a crucial moment. Be sure not to be disheartened or discouraged; you must look forward in everything, and do not turn back. You must sacrifice everything, abandon all entanglements, and pursue with all your might. As long as a single breath remains in you, you must persevere to the very end; this is the only way you will become worthy of praise.

Chapter 21

The work of the Holy Spirit has now brought you into a new heaven and a new earth. Everything is being renewed, everything is in My hands, everything is beginning anew! With their notions, people are unable to understand it, and it makes no sense to them, but it is I who am at work, and My wisdom is within. You should therefore concern yourselves only with laying down all of your notions and opinions, and with eating and drinking the word of God in submission; have no misgivings whatsoever. Since I am working in this way, I shall shoulder a sacred responsibility. In fact, people do not need to be a particular way. Rather, it is God doing miraculous things, making manifest His omnipotence. People may not brag unless they brag about God. Otherwise you will suffer loss. God lifts the needy from the dust; the humble must be made high. I will use My wisdom in all its forms to govern the universal church, to govern all nations and all peoples, so that they are all within Me, and so that all of you in the church might submit to Me. Those who did not obey before must now be obedient before Me, must submit to each other, forbear each other; your lives must be interconnected, and you must love one another, all drawing on each other's strong points to offset your own weaknesses, and serving in coordination. In this way will the church be built, and Satan will have no opportunity to exploit. Only then will My management plan not have failed. Let Me give you another reminder here. Do not allow misunderstandings to arise in you because such-and-such person is a certain way, or acted in such-and-such a way, with the result that you become degenerate within your spiritual condition. As I see it, this is not appropriate, and it is a worthless thing. Is the One you believe in not God? It is not some person. The functions are not the same. There is one body. Each does his duty, each in his place and doing his very best—for each spark there is one flash of light—and seeking maturity in life. Thus will I be satisfied.

You must concern yourselves only with being peaceful before Me. Keep in close communion with Me, seek more where you do not understand, offer up prayers, and wait for My time. See everything clearly from the spirit. Do not act recklessly, so as to prevent yourself from walking astray. Only in this way will your eating and drinking of My words truly bear fruit. Eat and drink My words often, ponder what I have said, pay attention to practicing My words, and live out the reality of My words; this is the key issue. The process of building the church is also the process of the growth of life. If your life stops growing, you cannot be built. Relying on naturalness, on the flesh, on zealotry, on contributions, on qualifications; however good you may be, if you rely on these things you will not be built. You must live within the words of life, live within the enlightenment and illumination from the Holy Spirit, know your actual situation, and be a changed person. You must have the same insight in the spirit, have new enlightenment, and be able to keep up with new light. You must be able to ceaselessly draw close to Me and communicate with Me, be able to base your actions in daily life on My words, be able to handle properly all sorts of people, events, and things based on My words, and have My words as your standard and live out My disposition in all activities in your life.

If you desire to fathom and care for My will, you must pay attention to My words. Do not do things rashly. All that I do not approve of will meet a bad end. Blessing comes only in that which I have commended. If I speak, it will be. If I command, it will stand firm. To avoid enraging Me, you absolutely must not do what I have not permitted. If you do this, there will be no time for you to feel regret!

Chapter 22

Believing in God is not an easy thing to do. You muddle along, eating everything and thinking it all so interesting, so tasty! There are some still applauding—they have no discernment in their spirit. This is an experience worth your thorough explication. In the last days, all kinds of spirits emerge to play their roles, openly opposing the progress of God's children and taking part in sabotaging the construction of the church. If you take this lightly and give Satan opportunities to work, it will make a mess of the church, people will panic and feel desperate, and in serious cases people's visions will vanish. Thus, the painstaking price I have paid over many years will have been for naught.

The time when the church is to be constructed is also the time when Satan reaches the highest pitch of its frenzy. Satan frequently causes disturbances and interruptions through a few people, and it is those who do not know the spirit and those who are new believers who can play the role of Satan most easily. Often, because people do not understand the work of the Holy Spirit, they act arbitrarily, completely according to their own preferences, their own ways of doing things, and their own notions. Hold your tongue—this is for your own protection. Listen and obey well. The church is different from society. You cannot simply say what you please; you cannot say whatever you think. That will not do here, as this is the house of God. God does not accept the way people do things. You must do things by following the Spirit; you must live out God's words, and then others will admire you. You must first resolve all the difficulties within yourself by relying on God. Put an end to your degenerate disposition and become able to truly understand your own condition and know how you should act; continue to fellowship about anything you do not understand. It is unacceptable for a person not to know themselves. Heal your own sickness first, and, by eating and drinking My words more often and contemplating them, live your life and do your deeds on the basis of My words; whether you are at home or elsewhere, you should allow God to wield power within you. Cast off the flesh and naturalness. Always let God's words have dominion within you. There is no need to worry that your life is not changing; with time, you will come to feel your disposition has changed a great deal. Before, you were eager to be in the limelight, you either obeyed no one or were ambitious, self-righteous, or prideful—these are things you will gradually be rid of. If you wish to cast them off right now, that is not possible! This is because your old self will not allow others to touch it, so deep are its roots. So, you must make a subjective effort, positively and actively obey the work of the Holy Spirit, use your will to cooperate with God, and be willing to put My words into practice. If you commit a sin, God will discipline you. When you turn back and come to understanding, then all will at once be well within you. If you speak indulgently, then you will be disciplined immediately within yourself. You see that God takes no delight in such things, so if you stop right away, you will experience inner peace. There are some new believers who do not understand what the feelings of life are or how to live within those feelings. Sometimes you wonder, though you have said nothing, why do you feel so restless within? At such times, it is your thoughts and your mind that are amiss. Sometimes you have your own choices, your own notions and opinions; sometimes you regard others as being less than you; sometimes you make your own selfish calculations and do not pray or examine yourself. This is why you feel restless inside. Perhaps you know what the problem is, so, straight away call God's name in your heart, come close to God, and you will recover. When your heart becomes increasingly flustered and restless, you absolutely must not think that God is allowing you to speak. New believers should pay especially close attention to obeying God in this. The feelings God puts inside man are peace, joy, clarity, and surety. Often, there are people who do not understand, who will make a mess and act arbitrarily—these are all interruptions; pay careful heed to this. If you are prone to this condition, you should take “preventive medicine” to head it off; otherwise, you will create interruptions and God will strike you. Do not be self-righteous; take the strengths of others to offset your own deficiencies, watch how others live by God's words; and see whether their lives, actions, and speech are worth emulating. If you regard others as less than you, you are self-righteous, conceited, and of benefit to no one. What is vital now is to focus on life, to eat and drink more of My words, to experience My words, to know My words, to make My words truly become your life—these are the main things. If someone cannot live by God's words, can their life mature? No, it cannot. You must live by My words at all times and have My words as the code of conduct for life, so that you will feel that acting by that code is what God takes joy in, and acting otherwise is what God hates; and slowly, you will come to walk on the right track. You must understand what comes from God and what comes from Satan. What comes from God gives you visions with ever greater clarity and brings you ever closer to God; you share earnest love with your brothers and sisters, you are capable of showing consideration for God's burden, and have a God-loving heart that never diminishes. There is a road ahead for you to walk. What comes from Satan causes visions to disappear with you, and causes you to lose all that you had before; you become estranged from God, you have no love for your brothers and sisters, and you have a hateful heart. You become desperate, you no longer wish to live the church life, and your God-loving heart is no more. This is Satan's work, and is also the consequence to which the work of evil spirits leads.

Now is a crucial moment. You must stay at your post until your final shift, clear the eyes of your spirit to distinguish between good and evil, and exert all your effort in building the church. Clear away Satan's lackeys, religious disturbances, and the work of evil spirits. Purify the church, make My will be carried out unimpeded, and truly, in this very short time that precedes the disasters, I will make you complete as quickly as possible, and bring you into glory.

To all the brothers and sisters who have heard My voice: You have heard the voice of My severe judgment and you have endured extreme suffering. However, you should know that behind My stern voice are hidden My intentions! I discipline you so that you may be saved. You should know that for My beloved sons, I will surely discipline you and prune you and soon make you complete. My heart is so eager, but you do not understand My heart and you do not act according to My word. My words today come upon you, making you truly recognize that God is a loving God and causing you all to experience the sincere love of God. However, there are also a small number of people who are pretending. When they see the sorrow of other people, they copy them, filling their eyes with tears, too. There are others who—on the surface—appear to owe a debt to God and they seem remorseful, but within them, they do not truly understand God, nor are they certain about Him; rather, they are just presenting a facade. I loathe these people the most! Sooner or later, these people will be cut off from My city. My intention is this: I want those who fervently want Me, and only those who pursue Me with a true heart can please Me. These are people whom I shall certainly support with My own hands, and I will ensure that they encounter no calamities. The people who truly want God will be willing to be considerate of God's heart and do My will. So, you should enter into reality soon and accept My word as your life—this is My greatest burden. If the churches and the saints all enter into reality and all are able to fellowship with Me directly, to come face to face with Me and practice truth and righteousness, only then will they be My beloved sons, the ones in whom I am well pleased. Upon these people, I shall bestow all great blessings.

Chapter 24

The time draws ever closer. Awaken! All saints! I will speak unto you, and all who hear shall awaken. I am the God in whom you have held faith during these many years. Today, I have become flesh and come before your eyes, thus revealing who truly wants Me, who is willing to pay any price for Me, who truly listens to My word, and who is willing to put the truth into practice. For I am the almighty God—I can see all of man's secrets hidden in darkness, I know who truly wants Me, and I know who resists Me. I observe all things.

Now, as soon as possible, I wish to make a group of people who are after My heart, a group of people who are able to be considerate of My burdens. However, I cannot refrain from cleansing and purifying My church; the church is My heart. I despise all the evil people who prevent you from eating and drinking of My word. This is because there are some other people who do not truly want Me. These people are full of deceit, they do not get close to Me with their true heart; they are evil, and they are people who obstruct the carrying out of My will; they are not people who put the truth into practice. These people are full of self-righteousness and arrogance, they are wildly ambitious, they love to be condescending, and though the words they speak are pleasant to hear, in secret they do not practice the truth. These evil people shall all be cut off and swept away; they shall languish amid disaster. These words are to remind and warn you to keep your feet on the path that is after My heart. Always return to your spirit, because I love those who love Me with all their heart. Because you draw close to Me, I will protect you and keep you away from those evil ones; I will make you stand firm in My home and guard you until the end.

Chapter 25

Almighty God, Eternal Father, Prince of Peace, our God is King! Almighty God sets His feet on the Mount of Olives. How beautiful it is! Listen! We watchmen lift up our voices; with our voices we sing together, for God has returned to Zion. We see with our own eyes the desolation of Jerusalem. Break forth into joyful noise and sing in unison, for God has brought comfort to us and has redeemed Jerusalem. God has bared His holy arm in the eyes of all the nations, the real person of God has appeared! All the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God.

Oh, Almighty God! The seven Spirits have been sent forth from Your throne to every church to reveal all of Your mysteries. Sitting on Your throne of glory, You have managed Your kingdom and made it firm and stable with justice and righteousness, and You have subdued all the nations before You. Oh, Almighty God! You have loosed the girdle of kings, You have made the gates of the city open wide before You, never to close. For Your light has come and Your glory rises and shines forth its brilliance. Darkness covers the earth and thick darkness is over the peoples. Oh, God! You, however, have appeared to and shone Your light upon us, and Your glory will be seen on us; all the nations shall come to Your light and the kings to Your radiance. You raise Your eyes and look around: Your sons gather before You, and they come from afar; Your daughters are carried in the arms. Oh, Almighty God! Your great love has caught hold of us; it is You who lead us forward on the road to Your kingdom, and it is Your holy words that permeate us.

Oh, Almighty God! We give thanks and we praise You! Let us look up to You, bear witness to You, exalt You, and sing to You with a heart that is sincere, calm, and undivided. Let us have but one mind and be built together, and may You soon make us into those who are after Your heart, to be put to use by You. Would that Your will may be carried out without hindrance upon the earth!

Chapter 26

My sons, take heed to My words, listen quietly to My voice and I will give you revelations. Be quiet within Me, for I am your God, your only Redeemer. You must quiet your hearts at all times and live within Me; I am your rock, your buttress. Have no other mind, but rely on Me with your whole heart and I will certainly appear to you—I am your God! Ah, those doubters! They surely cannot stand firm and they will gain nothing. You must know what the time is now, what a crucial moment it is! How crucial it is! Do not busy yourselves with things that are of no use; come quickly close to Me, fellowship with Me, and I will reveal all mysteries to you.

You must listen to every word of guidance from the Holy Spirit, and take each to heart. So many times have you heard My words and then forgotten them. Oh, thoughtless ones! You have lost so many blessings! You must now listen carefully and heed My words, fellowship more with Me and come close to Me more. In all that you do not understand, I will guide you, and I will lead you forward. Pay no mind to fellowshiping more with others. There are now many who preach letters and doctrines, and too few who genuinely possess My reality. Their fellowship makes one confused and numb, not knowing how to progress. Having heard them, one might merely understand a bit more of the letters and doctrines. You must watch your step and keep your heart living before Me at all times; you must communicate with Me and come close to Me, and I will let you see that which you do not understand. Take care in your speech, observe your heart at all times, and walk the path I walk.

It will not be long now; there is still a little time left. Make haste to forsake all things except Me and come follow Me! I will not mistreat you. So many times have you misunderstood My actions, yet do you know how much I love you? Ah, you simply do not understand My heart. No matter how you doubted, no matter how much you owed Me, I will not remember it, and yet I chose you to go forth and act according to My will.

Today is no time to tarry. From now on, should you harbor some ulterior motive, then My judgment will befall you. If you leave Me for even one moment, then you will become Lot's wife. Now the Holy Spirit's work quickens, and those who cannot keep up with the new light are in peril. Those who do not keep watch will be forsaken; you must protect yourselves. You know that all things in the environment that surrounds you are there by My permission, all planned by Me. See clearly and satisfy My heart in the environment I have given to you. Do not fear, the Almighty God of hosts will surely be with you; He stands behind you and He is your shield. Today, people have too many notions, which forces Me to express My will through people whom others look down upon, to the shame of those who are conceited and self-righteous, proud, ambitious, and of high standing. So long as you show sincere consideration for My burden, I will prepare everything for you. Just follow Me!

Chapter 27

The one true God who reigns over the universe and all things—Almighty God, Christ of the last days! This is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, proof incontrovertible! The Holy Spirit is working to bear testimony everywhere, so that no one will be in doubt. The triumphant King, Almighty God! He has prevailed over the world, He has prevailed over sin, and He has accomplished His redemption! He has saved us, this group of people corrupted by Satan, and made us complete to do His will. He wields kingly power over the whole earth, recapturing this land and chasing Satan down into the bottomless pit. He sits in judgment over the world, and no one can escape from His hands. He reigns as King.

The whole earth shouts in jubilation! It praises the triumphant King—Almighty God! For ever and ever! Worthy are You of honor and praise. Authority and glory be to the great King of the universe!

Time is short. Follow Almighty God's footsteps and keep pressing forward. Be meticulous to a fault, be considerate toward His burden, be of one mind with Him, and expend yourself for His management plan. You must not retain your possessions. So little time remains. Offer them up! Don't hold onto them! Offer them up! Don't hold onto them!

Chapter 28

When you see that time is so fleeting and the work of the Holy Spirit rushes ahead, having caused you to attain such great blessings and receive the King of the universe, Almighty God, who is the shining Sun, the King of the kingdom—this is all My grace and mercy. What more is there that could cut you off from My love? Ponder carefully, do not try to escape, wait quietly before Me at every moment and do not always wander outside. Your heart must adhere closely to My heart, and no matter what may happen, do not act blindly or arbitrarily. You must look to My will, do whatever I desire, and be determined to abandon that which I do not desire. You must not act on your emotions, but instead practice righteousness, like Me, without sentiment even for your parents. You must abandon all that does not conform to the truth and you must offer yourself up and expend of yourself for Me, with a pure heart that loves Me. Do not suffer the control of any person, event, or thing; so long as it conforms to My will, then just practice it in accordance with My words. Have no fear, as My hands support you, and I will keep you away from all evildoers. You should guard your heart, be within Me at all times, for your life relies in its living on My own; if you leave Me, then you will wither at once.

You should know these are the last days. The devil Satan, like a roaring lion, stalks abroad, searching for people to devour. All manner of plagues now break out, and there are many of every sort of evil spirit. Only I am the true God; only I am your refuge. Now you can do nothing but hide in My secret place, only within Me, and disasters will not befall you, and no calamity will come near your tent. You must come close to Me more often and fellowship with Me in the secret place; do not fellowship loosely with others. You must grasp the meaning in My words—I am not saying that you are not allowed to fellowship, but that you still have no discernment. During this time, the work of evil spirits is rampant. They use all kinds of people to give you fellowship. Their words sound very pleasant, but there is poison within. They are sugar-coated bullets and before you know it, they will put their poison inside you. You should know most people today are unstable, as though they were drunk. When you fellowship about your difficulties with others, what they tell you is merely rules and doctrine, and it is not as good as fellowshiping with Me directly. Come before Me and pour out the old things within you; open your heart to Me and My heart will surely be revealed to you. Your heart must be diligent before Me. Do not be lazy, but come close to Me often—this is the quickest way for your life to grow. You must live within Me and I will live within you, and within you I shall be King, directing you in all things, and you shall have a share of the kingdom.

Do not underestimate yourself because you are young. You should offer yourself up to Me. I do not consider how people appear on the surface, nor how old they are. I consider only whether they love Me sincerely, and whether they follow My way, and practice the truth disregarding all other things. Do not worry about how tomorrow will be, nor how the future will be. So long as you rely on Me to live every day, then I will surely lead you. Do not linger on the thought, “My life is too small, I do not understand anything,” which is a thought sent by Satan. You have only to use your heart to come close to Me at all times, to follow My footsteps to the end of the road. When you hear My words of reproach and warning, wake up and run forward at once; come close to Me without cease, keep pace with the flock, and keep your eyes ahead. In My presence, you must love your God with all your heart and soul. On the path of service, consider My words more often. In practicing the truth, do not be weak-hearted—have a mighty heart, with the resolve and determination of the male child; be possessed of a formidable heart. If you wish to love Me, then you must satisfy Me in everything I wish to accomplish in you. If you wish to follow Me, then you must forsake all that you have, all that you love; you must submit humbly before Me, with a simple mind. Do not explore or think haphazardly, but stay abreast of the work of the Holy Spirit.

Here, I give you counsel: Be sure to hold fast to all that I enlighten within you, and be sure to practice it!

Chapter 29

Do you know that time is pressing? Therefore, in the short term, you must rely on Me and cast away from you all the things that are incompatible with My disposition: ignorance, slowness to react, unclear thoughts, soft-heartedness, a weak will, absurdity, overwrought emotions, confusion, and a lack of discernment. These must be cast away as soon as possible. I am Almighty God! As long as you are willing to cooperate with Me, I can cure all that ails you. I am the God who looks deep into the hearts of people; I know all your ailments and where your defects dwell. These are the things that prevent you from progressing in life, and they must be cast away soon. Otherwise, My will cannot be carried out upon you. Rely on Me to cast off everything of yours I illuminate, live by Me always, be close to Me, and undertake all actions and behaviors with My likeness. Fellowship with Me more often about what you do not understand, and I will guide you, that you may go forward. If you are unsure, do not act rashly, but wait for My time. Maintain a stable temperament and do not let your passions run hot and cold; you must have a heart that holds Me always in reverence. What you do in front of Me and out of My sight must always be in accordance with My will. Do not be lenient to anyone on My behalf, be it your husband or your family; it is unacceptable, no matter how good they are. You must take action based on the truth. If you love Me, I will grant you great blessings. I will tolerate none who resist. Love those whom I love, and hate those whom I hate. Pay no heed to any man, event, or thing. Look with your spirit and see clearly the people I use; make more frequent contact with spiritual people. Do not be ignorant—you must differentiate. Wheat will always be wheat, and tare will never grow into wheat—you must recognize different types of people. You must be especially cautious in your speech and keep your feet on the path of My intention. Consider all these words carefully. You must cast away your rebelliousness at once and become fit for My use, so that you may satisfy My heart.

Chapter 30

Awaken, brothers! Awaken, sisters! My day will not be delayed; time is life, and to seize back time is to save life! The time is not far off! If you fail the college entrance examination, you can study and retake it as many times as you like. However, My day will brook no further delay. Remember! Remember! I urge you with these good words. The end of the world unfolds before your very eyes, and great disasters rapidly draw near. Which is more important: your life, or your sleep, your food and drink and clothing? The time has come for you to weigh these things. Be doubtful no longer, and do not shy away from certainty!

How pitiful! How poor! How blind! How cruel mankind is! Indeed, you turn a deaf ear to My word—am I speaking to you in vain? You are still so remiss—why? Why is that? Have you really never had such a thought? For whom do I say these things? Believe in Me! I am your Savior! I am your Almighty One! Keep watch! Keep watch! Time lost will never come again—remember this! There is no medicine in the world that cures regret! So, how should I speak to you? Is My word not worthy of your careful, repeated consideration? You are so careless with My word and so irresponsible with your life; how could I bear it? How could I?

Why, in all this time, has a proper church life been unable to arise among you? It is because you lack faith; you are unwilling to pay the price, to offer yourselves up, to expend yourselves before Me. Awaken, My sons! Believe in Me, My sons! My beloved, why will you not consider what is in My heart?

Chapter 31

I love all those who sincerely want Me. If you focus on loving Me, I shall surely bless you tremendously. Do you understand My intentions? In My house, there is no distinction between high and low status. Everyone is My son, and I am your Father, your God. I am supreme and unique. I control the universe and all things!

You ought to “serve Me with humility and in obscurity” in My house. This phrase should serve as your motto. Do not be a leaf on a tree, but be the root of the tree and take root deeply in life. Enter into a genuine experience of life, live by My words, seek Me more in every matter, and draw near to Me and fellowship with Me. Do not pay attention to any external things, and do not be controlled by any person, event, or thing, but only fellowship with spiritual people about what I am. Understand My intentions, let My life flow among you, and live out My words and comply with My requirements.

Devote all your strength to the matters for which I have commissioned you; do all you can to satisfy My heart. I am your power and I am your joy.... I am your everything. Just pursue Me. I know the true desires of your heart and that you sincerely expend yourself for Me, but you should know how to show loyalty to Me in My house and how to follow Me to the end.

The church is My heart and I am burning with anxiety for the construction of My church. You should expend yourself for Me by offering yourself up without the least reservation, and show consideration for My intentions so that My heart may be satisfied.

Chapter 32

What is light? In the past, you actually regarded the transformation of the work of the Holy Spirit as light. There is true light at all times: that is, gaining what God is through drawing near to Me and fellowshiping with Me. Having insight into God's words and grasping God's will in His words—that is, while eating and drinking them, feeling the Spirit in God's words and receiving God's words inside yourselves; you grasp what He is through experience, and receive God's illumination while communing with Him; all is light. You can be enlightened and gain new insight in God's words at any moment while contemplating and pondering. If you grasp God's word and you feel new light, then will you not have power in your service? You worry so much while you give service! That is because you have not touched reality, and you do not have true experience or insight. If you had true insight, then would you not know how to serve? When certain things befall you, you must experience them diligently. If, in an easy and comfortable environment, you can also live in the light of God's countenance, then you will see God's face every day. If you saw God's face and communicated with God, would you not have light? You do not enter into reality, and you are always on the outside, searching; as a result, you find nothing and your progress in life is delayed.

Do not focus on the outside; instead, just draw near to God within, commune deeply enough and grasp God's will; would you not then have a path in your service? You need to diligently pay attention and obey. If you do all things only according to My words and enter the paths that I point out, then would you not have a path? If you find the path to enter into reality, then you also have a path to serve God. It is simple! Come to God's presence more, ponder God's words more, and you will obtain that which you lack. You will also have new insight, new enlightenment, and you will have the light.

Chapter 33

My kingdom requires those who are honest, those who are not hypocritical or deceitful. Are not the sincere and honest people unpopular in the world? I am just the opposite. It is acceptable for the honest people to come to Me; I delight in this kind of person, and I also need this kind of person. This is precisely My righteousness. Some people are ignorant; they cannot feel the work of the Holy Spirit and they cannot grasp My will. They cannot clearly see the environment in which their family and their surroundings exist, and they do things blindly and lose many opportunities to attain grace. Time after time, they regret their actions and when they encounter a matter, they again cannot see it clearly. Sometimes they are able to rely on God to eke out a victory, but when they encounter the same kind of matter afterward, the old sickness recurs, and they cannot grasp My will. But I do not look at these things, and I do not remember your transgressions. Rather, I want to save you from this promiscuous land and allow you to renew your lives. I have pardoned you time after time. However, now is the most critical step. You cannot be confused anymore and cannot press forward like that anymore, in that stop-go way. When will you be able to arrive at the destination? You have to do your utmost to run toward the finish line without stopping. Do not slack off in the most critical time, move forward courageously, and a bountiful feast is before you. Quickly dress in your wedding garments and robes of righteousness, and attend the marriage supper of Christ; enjoy familial bliss for all eternity! No longer will you be depressed, sad and sighing as before. Everything of that time will have vanished like smoke and only the resurrected life of Christ will have power in you. Within you, there will be a temple purified by cleansing and washing, and the life of resurrection you have gained will dwell in you forever and ever!

Chapter 34

Almighty God is the all-powerful, all-achieving, and complete true God! He not only holds the seven stars, is endowed with the seven Spirits, has seven eyes, opens the seven seals, and opens the scroll, but more than that, He administers the seven plagues and the seven bowls, and reveals the seven thunders. Long ago, too, He sounded the seven trumpets! All things that He created and made complete should praise Him, render Him glory, and exalt His throne. Oh, Almighty God! You are everything. You have accomplished everything, and with You, all is complete, bright, emancipated, free, strong, and powerful! There is nothing at all hidden or concealed; with You, all mysteries are revealed. Furthermore, You have judged the multitudes of Your enemies, You reveal Your majesty, manifest Your raging fire, You exhibit Your wrath, and, moreover, You display Your unprecedented, everlasting, utterly infinite glory! All peoples should awaken to cheer and sing without reserve, extolling this almighty, completely genuine, all-living, bountiful, glorious, and true God who is from everlasting to everlasting. His throne should be exalted constantly, His holy name praised and glorified. This is My—God's—eternal will, and is a boundless blessing that He reveals and bestows upon us! Who among us does not inherit it? To inherit God's blessing, one must exalt His holy name and come to encircle His throne in worship. All those who go before Him with other motives and other intentions will be melted away by His raging fire. Today is the day His enemies will be judged, and it is also on this day that they will perish. Furthermore, that is also the day on which I, Almighty God, will be revealed and on which I will gain glory and honor. Oh, all peoples! Rise quickly to extol and welcome Almighty God who, from time immemorial to eternity, sends out to us lovingkindness, implements salvation and bestows upon us blessings, makes His sons complete, and successfully achieves His kingdom! This is God's wonderful deed! This is God's eternal predestination and arrangement—that He Himself has come to save us, to make us complete, and to bring us into glory.

All those who do not rise up and bear witness are the forbears of the blind and the kings of ignorance. They will become the eternally ignorant, the perpetual fools; the eternally dead who are blind. It is for this reason that our spirits should awaken! All the people should arise! Cheer, praise, and extol without end the King of glory, the Father of mercy, the Son of redemption, the bountiful seven Spirits, the Almighty God who brings majestic raging fire and righteous judgment and who is utterly sufficient, bountiful, almighty, and complete. His throne will be exalted forever! All the people should see that this is God's wisdom; it is His wonderful path to salvation and the achievement of His glorious will. If we do not rise up and bear witness, then once the moment has passed, there will be no going back. Whether we will gain blessings or misfortune is being decided during this current stage of our journey, based on what we do, what we think, and what we are living out right now. How should you act? Bear witness for and exalt God forever; exalt Almighty God, Christ of the last days—the eternal, unique, true God!

From now on, you should see clearly that all those who do not bear witness for God—who do not bear witness for this unique, true God, as well as those who harbor doubts about Him—they are all sick and dead, and are ones who defy God! God's words have already been proved from ancient times: All those who do not gather with Me scatter, and those who are not with Me are against Me; this is an unalterable truth that is etched in stone! Those who do not bear witness for God are Satan's lackeys. Such people have come to disturb and deceive God's children, and to interrupt His management; they must be put to the sword! All those who show them good intentions seek their own destruction. You should listen to and believe the utterances of God's Spirit, walk the path of God's Spirit, and live out the words of God's Spirit. Moreover, you should exalt the throne of the almighty God to the end of time!

Almighty God is the God of seven Spirits! That of the seven eyes and seven stars is He, too; He opens the seven seals, and the entire scroll has been unfurled by Him! He has sounded the seven trumpets, and the seven bowls and the seven plagues are in His grasp, to be unleashed at His will. Oh, the seven thunders that have always been sealed! The time to reveal them has come! He who will bring forth the seven thunders has already appeared before our eyes!

Almighty God! With You, all is emancipated and free; there are no difficulties, and all flows smoothly! Nothing dares to obstruct or hinder You, and all submit before You. Any that do not submit shall die!

Almighty God, the God with seven eyes! All is perfectly clear, all is bright and uncovered, and all is revealed and laid bare. With Him, all is crystal clear, and not only is God Himself like this, but His sons are this way, too. No one, no object, and no matter can be concealed before Him and His sons!

The seven stars of Almighty God are bright! The church has been perfected by Him; He establishes His church messengers, and the entire church is within His provision. He opens all seven seals, and He Himself brings His management plan and His will to completion. The scroll is the arcane spiritual language of His management, and has been unfurled and revealed by Him!

All the people should hearken to His seven resounding trumpets. With Him, all is made known, never again to be hidden, and there is no more sorrow. All is revealed, and all is victorious!

The seven trumpets of Almighty God are open, glorious, and victorious trumpets! They are also the trumpets that judge His enemies! In the midst of His triumph, His horn is being exalted! He rules over the entire universe!

He has prepared the seven bowls of plagues, His enemies are targeted, and they are unleashed in an extreme torrent, and those enemies will be consumed in the flames of His raging fires. Almighty God shows the might of His authority, and His enemies all perish. The final seven thunders are no longer to be sealed before Almighty God; they are all revealed! They are all revealed! He puts His enemies to death with the seven thunders, stabilizing the earth and making it render service to Him, never again to be laid waste!

The righteous Almighty God! We extol You forever! You deserve unending praise, and eternal acclaim and exaltation! Your seven thunders are not just to be used for Your judgment, but are more to be used for Your glory and authority, in order to complete all things!

All peoples celebrate before the throne, extolling and praising Almighty God, Christ of the last days! Their voices shake the entire universe like thunder! Absolutely all things exist because of Him and arise because of Him. Who dares not attribute all glory, honor, authority, wisdom, holiness, victory, and revelations entirely to Him? This is the accomplishment of His will, and it is the final completion of the construction of His management!

Chapter 35

Seven thunders come forth from the throne, shake the universe, overturn heaven and earth, and resound through the skies! The sound pierces the ear, and the people cannot escape it, nor can they hide from it. Thunder and lightning burst forth, and in an instant, heaven and earth transform, and the people are on the verge of death. Then, at lightning speed, the entire cosmos is enveloped in a violent rainstorm, falling from heaven! In the furthest corners of the earth, as thoroughly as a shower, it brooks no stain as it washes all from head to toe; nothing can be hidden from it, nor can any person be shut away from it. Peals of thunder, like flashes of lightning, gleam with chill light and make men tremble with fear! The sharp double-edged sword strikes down the sons of rebellion, and the enemy faces catastrophe, with nowhere to hide; they become dazed in the rush of wind and rain, and, reeling from the blow, they drop dead at once into the flowing waters and are washed away. There is only death, and no way for them to survive. The seven thunders issue from Me and convey My intention, which is to strike down the eldest sons of Egypt, to punish the wicked and to cleanse My churches, so that all may have affinity with each other, act truly to themselves, and be of one heart with Me, and so that all the churches in the cosmos can be built into one. This is My purpose.

The thunder sounds, and the sounds of wailing roll in its wake. Some are awakened from their slumber, and, greatly alarmed, they search deep in their souls and rush back before the throne. They cease their rampant trickery and outrageous acts; it is not too late for such people to be awakened. I watch from the throne. I look deep into the hearts of men. I save those who desire Me earnestly and fervently, and I take pity on them. I will save into eternity those who love Me in their hearts more than all else, those who understand My will and follow Me to the very end of the road. My hand will hold them safely, so that they will not encounter this scene and will come to no harm. Some, when they see this sight of flashing lightning, have inexpressible misery in their hearts and are regretful in the extreme. If they persist in behaving in this way, it is too late for them. Oh, all and every thing! It will all be done. This, too, is one of My means of salvation. I save those who love Me and strike down the wicked, I make My kingdom steady and stable on earth, and let all nations and all peoples, all in the universe and at the ends of the earth, know that I am majesty, I am raging fire, I am the God who searches the innermost heart of every man. From this time forward, the judgment of the great white throne is openly revealed to the masses, and to all peoples, it is announced that judgment has commenced! It is beyond doubt that all whose words are not heartfelt, those who doubt and dare not be certain, those time wasters who understand My wishes but are unwilling to put them into practice—they all must be judged. You must take care to examine your own intentions and motives, and assume your proper place; practice My words in earnest, value your life experience, and do not act with superficial enthusiasm, but make your lives grown, mature, stable, and experienced—only then will you be after My heart.

Deny to Satan's lackeys and to the evil spirits that disrupt and destroy that which I build any opportunity to exploit things to their advantage. They must be limited severely and restrained; they can only be dealt with by means of a sharp sword. The worst ones must be rooted out immediately, to prevent future trouble. And the church will be perfected, free of all deformity, and it will be healthy, full of vitality and energy. Following the flashing lightning, thunderclaps ring out. You must not be negligent, and you must not give up, but do your utmost to catch up, and you will surely be able to see what My hand does, what I mean to gain, what I mean to discard, what I mean to perfect, what I mean to root out, what I mean to strike down—all this will unfold before your eyes, allowing you clearly to see My omnipotence.

From the throne to the universe and the ends of the earth, the seven thunders echo. A large group of people will be saved and will submit before My throne. Following this light of life, people seek for a way to survive and cannot help but come to Me, to kneel down in worship, and with their mouths to call out the name of the almighty true God and voice their entreaties. But those who resist Me, those who harden their hearts, the thunder resounds in their ears, and without a doubt they must perish. This is simply the outcome that awaits them. My beloved sons who are triumphant will stay in Zion, and all peoples will see what they will obtain, and immense glory will appear before you. Truly, this is a great blessing, and it is a sweetness that is difficult to relate.

The clap of the seven thunders coming forth is the salvation of those who love Me, who desire Me with true hearts. Those who belong to Me and whom I have predestined and chosen are all able to come under My name. They can hear My voice, which is God calling to them. Let those at the ends of the earth see that I am righteous, I am faithful, I am lovingkindness, I am compassion, I am majesty, I am raging fire, and, ultimately, I am merciless judgment.

Let all in the world see that I am the real and complete God Himself. All men are fully convinced and none dare to resist Me again, nor to judge Me or slander Me again. Otherwise, curses come at once upon them, and disaster befalls them. They can only weep and gnash their teeth, having brought on their own destruction.

Let all peoples know, let it be known through the universe and at the ends of the earth, in every household and by all people: Almighty God is the one true God. All, one after another, will fall to their knees and worship Me, and even children who have just learned to speak will call out "Almighty God"! Those officials who wield power will also see with their own eyes the true God appearing before them, and they will also prostrate themselves in worship, begging for mercy and forgiveness, but this is indeed too late, for the time of their demise has come. They can only be finished and sentenced to the unfathomable abyss. I will bring the entire age to an end, and strengthen My kingdom all the more. All nations and peoples will submit before Me for all of eternity!

Chapter 36

Almighty true God, the King enthroned, rules the entire universe, facing all nations and all peoples, and everything under heaven shines with God's glory. All living things in the universe and unto the ends of the earth shall see. The mountains, the rivers, the lakes, the lands, the oceans, and all living beings have drawn open their curtains in the light of the true God's countenance, and they are revived, as if waking from a dream, as if they were sprouts breaking through the soil!

Ah! The one true God appears before the world. Who dares approach Him with resistance? All tremble with fear. All are utterly convinced, and all beg forgiveness repeatedly. All people fall to their knees before Him, and all mouths worship Him! The continents and oceans, the mountains, the rivers—all things praise Him endlessly! Springtime comes with its warm breezes, bringing fine spring rain. Like all people, the streams' currents flow with grief and joy, shedding tears of indebtedness and self-reproach. The rivers, the lakes, the surf and the swells all are singing, lauding the true God's holy name! The sound of praise rings out with such clarity! Old things that were once corrupted by Satan—each and every one of them will be renewed and changed and will enter into an entirely new realm ...

This is the holy trumpet, and it has begun to sound! Hearken to it. That sound, so sweet, is the utterance of the throne, announcing to every nation and people that the time has come, that the final end has come. My management plan is finished. My kingdom has appeared openly on earth. The kingdoms of the world have become the kingdom of Mine, who am God. My seven trumpets sound from the throne, and such wondrous things will occur! People at the ends of the earth will rush together from every direction with the force of an avalanche and the power of thunderbolts, some sailing the seas, some flying in planes, some riding in vehicles of every shape and size, some riding on horseback. Look closely. Listen carefully. These riders of horses of every color, spirits roused, mighty and magnificent, as if taking the field of battle, are indifferent to death. Amid the neighing of horses and the clamor of people shouting for the true God, so many men, women, and children will be trampled by their hooves in an instant. Some will be dead, some will be breathing their last, some will be mangled, with no one to tend them, shouting hysterically, howling in pain. Sons of rebellion! Is this not your final outcome?

I look with joy upon My people, who hear My voice and gather from every nation and land. All people, keeping the true God ever in their mouths, praise and jump endlessly for joy! They bear witness to the world, and the sound of their witness to the true God is like the thundering sound of many waters. All people will crowd into My kingdom.

My seven trumpets sound, rousing those who slumber! Get up quickly, it is not too late. Look to your life! Open your eyes and see what time it is now. What is there to seek? What is there to think about? And what is there to cling to? Have you never considered the difference in value between gaining My life and gaining all that you love and cling to? Be no longer willful nor gambol. Do not miss this opportunity. This time will not come again! Stand up right away, practice exercising your spirit, use various tools to see through and thwart Satan's every plot and trick, and triumph over Satan, so that your life experience may be deepened and you may live out My disposition, so that your life may become mature and seasoned and you may always follow My footsteps. Undaunted, not weak, moving always ahead, step by step, straight until the end of the road!

When the seven trumpets sound again, it will be the call to judgment, judgment of the sons of rebellion, judgment of all nations and all peoples, and each nation will surrender before God. God's glorious countenance will surely appear before all nations and all peoples. Everyone will be convinced utterly, and shout endlessly to the true God. The almighty God will be more glorious, and My sons and I will share in the glory and share in the kingship, judging all nations and all peoples, punishing the evil, saving and having mercy on those who belong to Me, and making the kingdom strong and stable. Through the sound of the seven trumpets, a great many people will be saved, returning before Me to kneel and worship with constant praise!

When the seven trumpets sound once again, it will be the coda of the age, the trumpet blast of victory over the devil Satan, the salute that heralds the beginning of living openly in the kingdom on earth! How lofty a sound, this sound reverberating around the throne, this trumpet blast shaking heaven and earth, which is the sign of My management plan's victory, which is Satan's judgment; it sentences this old world entirely to death, to return to the bottomless pit! This trumpet blast signifies that the gate of grace is about to close, that the kingdom's life will begin on earth, which is right and proper. God saves those who love Him. Once they return to His kingdom, the people on earth will face famine and pestilence, and God's seven bowls and seven plagues will take effect in succession. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My word shall not!

Chapter 37

You truly lack faith in My presence and you often rely on yourselves to act. "You cannot do anything without Me!" Yet you corrupt people always let My words blow into one ear and out of the other. Life nowadays is a life of words; without words, there is no life and there is no experience, and less does it bear mentioning that there is no faith. Faith is in words; only by pouring more of yourselves into God's words can you have everything. Do not worry that you will not grow up: Life does grow, and not from people's worries.

You are always apt to become anxious, and you do not listen to My instructions. You always want to exceed My pace. What is this? It is human ambition. You should distinguish clearly what comes from God and what comes from yourselves. Enthusiasm will never be praised in My presence. I want you to be able to follow Me until the end, with unchanging loyalty all the while. You believe that acting in this way is devotion to God. You blind people! Why do you not come more often before Me to seek, but muddle about on your own? You must see clearly! The one who is working now is certainly no human, but rather the Sovereign of all, the one true God—the Almighty! You must not be neglectful, but constantly hold on to all you have, for My day is near. Would you truly still not awaken at such a time? Have you not yet seen clearly? You are still consorting with the world; you cannot break away from it. Why? Do you truly love Me? Are you able to lay bare your hearts for Me to see? Are you able to offer your whole beings to Me?

Think more of My words, and always have a clear understanding of them. Do not be confused or half-hearted. Spend more time in My presence, receive more of My pure words, and do not misunderstand My intentions. What more would you have Me say to you? People's hearts are hard; people are laden too heavily with notions. They always think it is enough merely to get by, and they always make a joke of their lives. Foolish children! The hour is late; it is no time to seek amusement. You should open your eyes and see what time it is. The sun is about to cross the horizon and illuminate the earth. Open your eyes wide and look; do not be careless.

This is a great matter, yet you make light of it in such a way and treat it in such a way! I am anxious, but there are few who are considerate of My heart, who are able to hear My good exhortations and listen to My counsel! The mission is arduous, but there are few among you who can share the load for My sake. You still maintain such an attitude. Though, compared with the past, you have made some progress, you cannot remain always at this stage! My footsteps are rapidly moving forward, yet your speed remains as it is. How can you keep pace with the light of today and My steps? Hesitate no longer. I have emphasized to you once and again: My day will be delayed no longer!

The light of today, belonging to today, as it does, cannot be compared to yesterday's light, nor can it be compared to tomorrow's light. With each passing day, new revelations and new light grow stronger and brighter. Be dazed no longer; be foolish no longer; cling no longer to the old ways; and no longer delay or waste My time.

Be watchful! Be watchful! Pray more to Me and spend more time in My presence, and you will certainly obtain everything! Believe that by doing so, you are sure to obtain everything!

Chapter 38

It is not that your faith is good or pure, but rather, My work is wondrous! Everything is due to My mercy! You must not have the slightest corrupt disposition of selfishness or arrogance, otherwise I will not work on you. You must understand clearly that whether men fall or stand strong is not because of them; it is because of Me. Today, if you do not clearly understand this step, you will certainly fail to enter the kingdom! You must understand that what is being done today is the wondrous work of God; it has nothing to do with man. What do the actions of man count for? When they are not being selfish, arrogant, and prideful, they are interrupting God's management and destroying His plans. Oh, the corrupt ones! You must come to rely on Me today; if you do not, today I shall tell you that you will never achieve anything! All shall be in vain and your undertakings shall be worthless!

Do not dally or hesitate; today each of those who love Me shall have My wondrous work carried out upon them. I have no use for those who do not humble themselves, and today I only use those who are thoroughly humbled. I shall only be fully open to those of you who love Me with a true heart, who are looked down upon by others, and who are able to fully open themselves to Me. I will let you understand My intentions, and at all times you shall be before Me receiving My blessings. I absolutely will not mistreat those who expend themselves for Me today, offer up themselves for Me today, and bear burdens for Me today—thus My righteousness is revealed. Do not complain about Me; My grace is sufficient for you. You might as well come and take it so that you may taste incomparable sweetness. This will not only create love for Me within you, but it will deepen this love of yours.

My work is carried out step-by-step, and it is absolutely not careless or muddled. To follow Me, you must also do things in this way. See My demeanor and learn from Me; in this way, if you follow My footsteps, then you will be brought into the manifestation of the kingdom. Cheer with one voice! My sons! God's work shall be accomplished upon you, upon this group of people. Do you not feel blessed?

It is indeed hard to fathom! I have brought you here today so that you may see My wondrous work!

Chapter 39

Open your eyes and look, and you can see My great power everywhere! You can be certain of Me everywhere. The cosmos and the firmament are spreading My great power. The words I have spoken have come true in the warming of the weather, in climate change, in abnormalities within people, in the disorder of social dynamics, and in the deceit within people's hearts. The sun whitens and the moon reddens; it all is out of balance. Do you really still not see these things?

God's great power is revealed herein. Without a doubt, He is the one true God—the Almighty—whom people have pursued for many years! Who can bring things into being just by uttering words? Only our Almighty God. As soon as He speaks, the truth appears. How could you not say that He is the true God?

I know, deep down, that all of you are willing to cooperate with Me, and I believe that My chosen ones, My beloved brothers and sisters, all have this kind of aspiration, but just cannot enter or actually practice, and cannot remain cool and calm when encountering the occurrence of realities. You never pay any regard to God's intentions, and you put your own personal interests first and act on your own without waiting. Let Me tell you, this way will never satisfy My intentions! Child! Just give Me your heart completely. Be clear! I do not want your money, nor your possessions, and nor for you to zealously, deceitfully or narrow-mindedly come before Me to serve. Be quiet and of pure heart, wait and seek when problems arise, and I will give you an answer. Do not be in doubt! Why do you never believe My words to be true? Why can you not believe in My words? You are stubborn to such an extreme degree, and even at a time like this you are still like this; you are too ignorant, and simply not enlightened at all! How much of the vital truth do you remember? Have you really experienced it? You become muddled and act recklessly and hastily when encountering problems! The main thing today is that you enter the spirit and fellowship with Me more, in the same way that your own hearts often ponder questions. Do you understand? This is key! Delayed practice really is a problem. Hurry, and do not delay! People who hear My words and do not delay but practice them immediately will be greatly blessed! I will bestow upon you doubly! Do not worry! Act as I say, without a second's delay! Your human notions are often like this, and you are prone to putting things off, always delaying what should be done today until tomorrow. So lazy and so clumsy. Words cannot describe it! I am not exaggerating—this is fact. If you do not believe it, then carefully examine yourself and check your own situation, and you will discover that this is really how it is!

Chapter 40

Why are you so slow-witted? Why are you so numb? Several reminders have not awakened you, and this is distressing to Me. I truly do not have the heart to see My sons like this. How can My heart bear this? Ah! I have to teach you by My own hand. My pace continues to quicken. My sons! Quickly arise and cooperate with Me. Who sincerely expends themselves for Me now? Who is able to fully dedicate themselves without so much as a word of complaint? You are always so numb and dull-witted! How many are able to be considerate of My feelings, and who can truly grasp the Spirit of My words? All I can do is anxiously wait and hope; seeing that your each and every move cannot satisfy My heart, what can I say? My sons! Everything that your Father does today is for His sons. Why can My sons never understand My heart, and why do My sons always make Me, your Father, worry? When will My sons grow up, not cause Me to worry, and allow Me to be relaxed about them? When will My sons be able to live independently, stand up, and lighten the burden on their Father's shoulders? I just quietly shed tears for My sons, and I put everything into the completion of God's management plan, and to save My sons, My loved ones. I have no other choice.

My promises have come to pass and are manifest before your eyes. Why can you not be considerate of My heart? Why? Why? Up until now, have you counted: How many things you have done that satisfied My heart, and how many things you have done that nourished and fed the church? Carefully ponder this; do not be careless. Do not let go of a single bit of the truth. You cannot just focus on appearances and overlook the essence. At all times, you must examine whether your every word and action and your each and every move have undergone judgment before the seat of Christ, and whether you have transformed into the image of a new person—not in imitation, but rather emanating from deep within with the expression of life. Do not delay your life, so that you may avoid suffering losses. Hurry and remedy this situation, satisfy My heart, and bear in mind the principles of conduct: Do things with righteousness and uprightness, and satisfy My heart. Do not be reckless. Can you remember this?

Regarding the problems that arise in the church, do not be filled with such heavy misgivings. In the course of building the church, mistakes are inevitable, but do not panic when you meet with problems; rather, be calm and collected. Have I not already told you? Come before Me often and pray, and I will clearly show you My intentions. The church is My heart and it is My ultimate purpose, so how could I not love it? Do not be afraid—when things like this happen in the church, they happen with My permission. Stand and speak on My behalf. Have faith that all things and matters are permitted by My throne and contain My intentions within them. If you continue to fellowship in a wanton manner, there will be problems. Have you thought about the consequences? This is the type of thing that Satan will take advantage of. Come before Me often. I shall speak plainly: If you are going to do something without coming before Me, then do not imagine that you will be able to complete it. It is you who have forced Me into this position.

Do not be discouraged, do not be weak, and I will make things clear for you. The road to the kingdom is not so smooth; nothing is that simple! You want blessings to come to you easily, do you not? Today, everyone will have bitter trials to face. Without such trials, the loving heart you have for Me will not grow stronger and you will not have true love for Me. Even if these trials consist merely of minor circumstances, everyone must pass through them; it's just that the difficulty of the trials will vary from one person to another. Trials are a blessing from Me, and how many of you come often before Me and beg on your knees for My blessings? Silly children! You always think that a few auspicious words count as My blessing, yet you do not recognize that bitterness is one of My blessings. Those who share in My bitterness will certainly share in My sweetness. That is My promise and My blessing to you. Do not hesitate to eat and drink and enjoy My words. When the dark passes, light gathers. It is darkest before dawn; after this time the sky gradually brightens, and then the sun rises. Do not be afraid or timid. Today, I support My sons and wield My power for them.

When it comes to church business, do not always shirk your responsibility. If you bring the matter before Me conscientiously, you will find a way. When a trifling problem like this occurs, do you become afraid and panic, at a loss about what to do? I have said numerous times, "Come close to Me often!" Have you conscientiously put into practice the things I ask you to do? How many times have you pondered My words? If you have not done so, then you do not have any clear insight. Is this not your own doing? You blame others, but why do you not instead feel revulsion toward yourselves? You spoil things and afterward you remain careless and perfunctory; you must heed My words.

The obedient and the submissive will receive great blessings. In the church, stand firm in your testimony to Me, uphold the truth; right is right and wrong is wrong. Do not confuse black and white. You shall be at war with Satan and must completely vanquish it so that it never rises again. You must give everything you have to protect My testimony.

This shall be the goal of your actions—do not forget this. But now, you are lacking in faith and the ability to differentiate things and you are always unable to understand My words and My intentions. Nonetheless, do not be anxious; everything proceeds according to My steps and anxiety only begets trouble. Spend more time before Me and do not attach importance to food and clothing, which are for the physical body. Seek My intentions often, and I will clearly show you what they are. Gradually you will find My intentions in everything, so that for every human being, I will have a way in without obstruction. This will satisfy My heart, and you shall receive blessings with Me forever and ever!

Chapter 42

Great are the deeds of Almighty God! How wondrous! How marvelous! The seven trumpets sound, the seven thunders go forth, and the seven bowls are poured out—these will forthwith be revealed openly, and there can be no doubt. God’s love comes to us daily. Only Almighty God can save us; whether we meet with misfortune or with blessing rests entirely with Him, and we human beings have no way of deciding this. Those who offer themselves up with their whole heart will surely receive bounteous blessings, while those who seek to preserve their lives will only lose their lives; all things and all matters are in the hands of Almighty God. Do not halt your steps anymore. Tremendous change is coming to heaven and earth, from which man has no way of hiding. There will be no other choice for him but to wail in bitter pain. Follow the work that the Holy Spirit is doing today. You should be clear within yourself about the step to which His work has progressed, without needing to be reminded by others. Return now into the presence of Almighty God as often as you can. Ask Him for everything. He will surely enlighten you within and, at crucial moments, He will protect you. Have no fear! He already possesses your whole being. With His protection and His care, what is there for you to fear? Today the fruition of God’s will is at hand, and whosoever is fearful only stands to lose. What I am telling you is the truth. Open up your spiritual eyes: Heaven can change in an instant, but what is there for you to fear? With the slightest motion of His hand, heaven and earth are immediately annihilated. So what can man gain by fretting? Is not all in the hands of God? If He commands heaven and earth to change, then they will change. If He says we are to be made complete, then we will be made complete. Man need not worry, but should proceed calmly. Nevertheless, you must, as much as you can, take heed and be vigilant. Heaven can change in an instant! However wide man may open up his naked eyes, he will not be able to see much of anything. Be watchful now. The will of God has been accomplished, His project has been completed, His plan has succeeded, and His sons have all arrived at His throne. Together they come to sit in judgment over all nations and all peoples with Almighty God. Those who have been persecuting the church and harming God's sons will meet with stern punishment: That is for certain! Those who sincerely give themselves to God, who hold to everything, God will surely love them for all eternity, without ever changing!

Chapter 43

Have I not reminded you? Do not be apprehensive; you just do not listen to Me, such thoughtless people that you are! When will you be able to understand My heart? Every day there is new enlightenment, and every day there is new light. How many times have you grasped it for yourselves? Have I not told you Myself? You are still passive, like insects that move only when poked, and you are unable to take the initiative to cooperate with Me and show consideration for My burden. I would like to see all your lively and lovely smiles, to see My sons' active and lively manner, but I cannot. Instead, you are weak in the head—silly and foolish. You should take the initiative to seek. Boldly pursue! Just open your hearts and let Me live within you. Be cautious and vigilant! Some people in the church deceive people, and you must attach great weight to these words, always, lest your lives be affected or suffer some loss. Rest assured—as long as you have the courage to stand up and speak for Me, I will bear the burden of it all, and I will empower you! As long as you satisfy My heart, I will always show you My smile and My will. As long as you have a strong backbone and live out the male child's disposition, I will support you and put you in an important position. When you come before Me, just draw near to Me. Do not be afraid if you cannot speak. So long as you have a seeking heart, I will give you the words. I do not need words that sound pleasant, and I do not need your flattery; this type of thing is what I hate most of all. It is upon this type of person that I frown most of all. They are like a splinter in My eye or a thorn in My flesh that must be removed. Otherwise, My sons cannot wield power for Me, and shall be subject to stifling control. Why have I come? I have come to support and encourage My sons, so that their days of enduring oppression, bullying, cold-heartedness, and abuse will be gone forever!

Be bold. I will always walk with you, live with you, speak with you and act with you. Do not be afraid. Do not hesitate to speak. You are always emotional, timid, and afraid. Those who are of no benefit to the construction of the church must be removed. This includes those in the church whose conditions are not good and those who cannot act according to My words, not to mention your nonbelieving mother and father. I do not want those things. They must be eradicated, and not one should remain. Just release the bonds upon your hands and feet. As long as you examine your own intentions and they are not concerned with gains and losses, nor for fame and wealth, nor for personal relationships, then I will accompany you, point things out to you and give you clear guidance at all times.

Ah, My sons! What should I say? Although I say these things, you are still not considerate of My heart, and still you are too timid. What are you afraid of? Why are you still bound by laws and by rules? I have released you, but you still have no freedom. Why is this? Communicate with Me more and I will tell you. Do not test Me. I am real. Nothing is pretense with Me; all is real! What I say is true. I never go back on My word.

Chapter 44

I am righteous, I am trustworthy, and I am the God who examines the innermost heart of man! I will reveal at once who is true and who is false. Do not be alarmed; all things work according to My time. Who wants Me sincerely, and who does not—I will tell you, one by one. You just take care to eat up, drink up, and draw up close to Me when you come into My presence, and I will do My work Myself. Do not be too anxious for quick results; My work is not something that can be accomplished all at once. Within it there are My steps and My wisdom, and that is why My wisdom can be revealed. I will let you see what is done by My hands—the punishing of evil and the rewarding of good. I most certainly do not favor anyone. You who sincerely love Me, I will sincerely love you, and as for those who do not sincerely love Me, My wrath will ever be with them, so that they may remember through eternity that I am the true God, the God who examines the innermost heart of man. Do not act one way to others' faces but another way behind their backs; I see clearly everything you do, and though you may fool others, you cannot fool Me. I see it all clearly. It is not possible for you to conceal anything; all lies within My hands. Do not think yourself so very clever for making your petty little calculations come out to your advantage. I tell you: However many plans man may hatch, be they thousands or tens of thousands, in the end they cannot escape from the palm of My hand. All things and all objects are controlled by My hands, never mind a single person! Do not try to evade Me or hide, do not try to wheedle or conceal. Can it be that you still do not see that My glorious countenance, My wrath and My judgment, have been publicly revealed? Whosoever does not want Me sincerely, I will judge them immediately and without mercy. My pity has come to its end; there is no more left. Do not be hypocrites any longer, and put a stop to your wild and reckless ways.

My son, take care; spend more time in My presence and I will take charge of you. Have no fear, bring forth My sharp two-edged sword, and—in accordance with My will—fight with Satan to the bitter end. I will protect you; have no worries. All concealed things will be opened up and revealed. I am the Sun that gives forth light, mercilessly illuminating all the darkness. My judgment has come down in its entirety; the church is a battleground. You should all ready yourselves and devote your whole being to the final, decisive battle; I will surely protect you so that you may fight the good, victorious fight for Me.

Be careful—nowadays the hearts of people are deceitful and unpredictable and they have no way of winning other people’s trust. Only I am completely for you. There is no deceit in Me; just lean on Me! My sons will surely be victorious in the final, decisive battle, and Satan will most certainly come out for the death-struggle. Have no fear! I am your power, and I am your all. Do not think about things over and over, you cannot attend to so many thoughts. I have said before, I will no longer pull you along the path, because time is too pressing. I do not have any more time to catch hold of you by the ear and caution you at every turn—it is not possible! You just finish your preparations for battle. I take full responsibility for you; all things are within My hands. This is a battle to the death, and either one side or the other is sure to perish. But you must be clear on this: I am forever victorious and unbeaten, and Satan will surely perish. This is My approach, My work, My will, and My plan!

It is done! All is done! Do not be faint-hearted or afraid. I with you, and you with Me, shall be kings forever and ever! My words, once spoken, will never change, and events will soon come upon you. Be watchful! You should ponder well every single line; do not be vague about My words anymore. You must be clear about them! You must remember—spend as much time as you can in My presence!

Chapter 45

You publicly judge your brothers and sisters as if it were nothing. You truly do not know good from evil; you do not know shame! Is this behavior not terribly audacious and arbitrary? Every single one of you is confused and heavy of heart; you carry so much baggage and there is no place for Me within you. Blind men! Your cruelty has reached such an extreme—when will it end?

I speak to you from My heart time and again and I give everything I have to you, but you are so stingy and are lacking the slightest bit of humanity; this is truly difficult to fathom. Why do you cling to your own notions? Why can you not let Me have some place in you? How could I possibly harm you? You must not continue to behave in this way—My day is indeed not far from now. Do not speak carelessly, behave recklessly, or fight and cause trouble; what good can this bring to your lives? I am telling you truthfully, even if not a single person is saved when My day comes, I will still handle matters according to My plan. You must know that I am the almighty God! No object, no person, no matter dares to hinder My steps forward. You should not think that I have no way to carry out My will without you. I can tell you that if you treat your own life in this negative manner, you will only ruin your own life; this will be no concern of Mine.

The work of the Holy Spirit has progressed to a certain stage and the testimony has reached a peak. This is the plain truth. Quick, open your bleary eyes; do not allow My painstaking efforts in you to be in vain, and do not indulge yourselves any longer. You are happy to do good deeds in front of Me, but when I am not present, could your actions and behaviors be held up in front of Me for Me to see? You do not know good from evil! You do not listen to Me, you do one thing in front of Me and another behind My back. You still have not realized that I am the God who looks deep into man's heart. You are ignorant in the extreme!

Later, on the road ahead, you must not create artifice or engage in deception and crookedness, otherwise the consequences will be unimaginable! You all still do not understand what deception and crookedness are. Any actions or behaviors which you cannot let Me see, which you cannot bring out into the open, are deception and crookedness. Now you should understand this! If you engage in deception and crookedness in the future, do not pretend to not understand—if you do this, you are knowingly doing wrong, and you are doubly guilty. This will only lead to you being burnt by the fire, or even worse, ruining yourselves. You must understand! What you are facing today is the chastening of love; it is definitely not heartless judgment. If you cannot see this, then you are too pitiful, and you are simply beyond all hope. If you are not willing to accept the chastening of love, then all that can befall you is heartless judgment. When that happens, do not complain that I did not tell you. It is not I who have shirked My responsibilities, but rather you who have not listened to My words and have not carried out My words. I am telling you this now, lest people blame Me later.

Chapter 46

Whoever sincerely expends and offers themselves up for Me, I will surely protect you until the very end; My hand will surely hold you so that you are always at peace and always joyful, and so that every day you will have My light and revelation. I will surely double My blessings upon you, so that you have what I have and possess what I am. That which is given within you is your life, and no one can take it from you. Do not bring trouble on yourself or fall into depression; within Me there is only peace and joy. I sincerely love you, child, you who sincerely heed and obey Me. Those I hate most are the hypocrites; I will certainly wipe them out. I will eliminate any hint of the world from My house, and eliminate all those things that I cannot bear the sight of.

Within My heart I know exactly who sincerely wants Me and who does not. Though they may disguise themselves well and look the part, and it could even be said that they are the best actors in the world, I see clearly all that they hold within their hearts. Do not think I do not know what is in your heart; in reality there is none who understands more clearly than I. I know what is in your heart; you are willing to offer yourself up for God and expend for God, only you do not wish to use sweet talk to make others rejoice. See clearly! Today's kingdom is not built by the strength of man, but will be successfully built entirely using My manifold wisdom and painstaking effort. Whosoever possesses wisdom and possesses what I am within them will have a share in the building of the kingdom. Worry no more; you are always worrying yourself sick, with no regard for the revelation or the illumination of My will within you. Do this no longer. Whatever is the matter, fellowship more with Me about it, so that you may avoid suffering from your own actions.

Perhaps on the surface it looks as though I am indifferent to everyone, but do you know what I think inside? I am always raising the humble up high, and always bringing down those who are the self-conceited and self-important. Those who do not understand My will will suffer great loss. You must know that this is what I am, and this is My disposition—no one can change it, and no one can understand it thoroughly. Only through My revelation can you understand, otherwise you will not understand it thoroughly either; be not arrogant. Though some people may speak well, their hearts are never loyal to Me, and always contradicting Me in secret; I will judge this kind of person.

Do not just focus on taking cues from others, you should pay attention to My bearing and My manner. Only in this way will you gradually come to grasp My will; your actions will then conform to My will, and you will make no mistakes. Do not weep or be sorrowful; I see clearly all that you do, all your behavior and all that you think, and I know your sincere desires and wishes; I will use you. Now is a crucial time; the time to test you has arrived. Have you still not seen? Have you not yet perceived? Why do I take such an attitude toward you? Do you know? I have revealed these things to you and you have a little insight. But do not stop—continue to press on with your entry, and I will continue to enlighten you. Have you realized that the more you obey and heed Me, the brighter you are inside and the more revelation you have inside? Are you aware that the more you obey and heed Me, the more knowledge you have of Me and the more experience you gain? Do not always cling fast to your own notions; doing this will clog the flow of My living water and obstruct the carrying out of My will. You must know that to completely gain one person is not an easy matter. Do not get carried away by complex thoughts. Simply follow, and ponder no more!

Chapter 47

Almighty God of righteousness—the Almighty! In You absolutely nothing is hidden. Each and every mystery from time immemorial to eternity, never uncovered by humans, in You is manifest and altogether clear. We need no longer seek and grope, for today Your person is openly manifest to us, You are the mystery that has been revealed, You are the practical God Himself; for today You have come face to face with us, and as we see Your person, we see every mystery of the spiritual realm. Truly this is something no one could imagine! You are among us today, even within us, so very close to us; it defies description! Incomparable is the mystery within!

Almighty God has completed His management plan. He is the victorious King of the universe. All things and all matters are controlled in His hands. All people kneel in worship, calling out the name of the true God—the Almighty. By the words from His mouth, all things are done. Why are you so slack, unable earnestly to make yourselves work with Him, join closely with Him, and go with Him into glory? Can it be that you are willing to suffer? Willing to be cast out? Do you think I do not know who is sincerely devoted to Me and who has sincerely expended themselves for Me? Ignorance! Fools! You cannot make out My intentions, and still less can you show consideration for My burdens, always making Me worry about you, toil for you. When will it end?

To live Me out in all things, to witness Me in all things—is doing so simply a matter of opening your mouths and stringing a few words together? You do not know the difference between good and evil! You are without Me in what you do, and less still am I present in your daily lives. I know you do not consider believing in God a serious matter, so these are the fruits you bear! You still are not awake, and if you go on so, you will disgrace My name.

Ask yourself, when you speak, am I there with you? When you eat or put on your clothes, is My promise there? Truly, you are thoughtless! Whenever your problems are not called out directly, then you show your true colors, and none of you is amenable. If it were not so, you would think yourselves great and think you are in possession of many things inside you. Do you not know that inside you, filling you, is the ugly visage of Satan? Work with Me to pour out all of these things. Let what I am and have occupy you inside completely; only so can you live Me out, witness Me with more reality, and be the reason more people submit before My throne. You must know how heavy is the burden on your shoulders: exalting Christ, manifesting Christ, witnessing Christ, so that myriads of people obtain salvation, that My kingdom may remain firm and unshaken. I point all this out so that you do not simply muddle along, without understanding the importance of today's work.

Helpless when confronted with problems, like ants in a hot frying pan, running around in circles: this is your disposition. Outwardly, you look like adults, but your inner lives are that of a child; all you know how to do is make trouble and add to My burden. If there is the least thing that I do not concern Myself with, you make trouble. Is that not so? Do not be self-righteous. What I say is the truth. Do not always think that I am constantly lecturing you, as though I were just using high-sounding words; this is your real condition.

Chapter 48

I am anxious, but how many among you are able to be of one mind and one thought with Me? You just pay no heed to My words, completely ignoring and failing to focus on them, rather only focusing on your own superficial things. You regard My painstaking care and effort as a waste; is your conscience not condemned? You are ignorant and lacking in reason; you are all fools, and cannot satisfy Me at all. I am entirely for you—how much can you be for Me? You have misunderstood My intention, and this is truly your blindness and inability to see through things, always making Me worry about you and spend time on you. Now, how much of your time can you expend on and devote to Me? You should ask yourselves these questions more often.

My intention is all about you—do you really understand this? If you really understood it, you would long ago have grasped My intention and become considerate of My burden. Do not be careless again, or you will not have the Holy Spirit at work in you, which will make your spirits die and fall into Hades. Is that not too terrible for you? There is no need for Me to remind you again. You should search your consciences and ask yourselves: Is it that I am too sorry for you all, or that you owe Me too much? Do not confuse right and wrong; do not be devoid of sense! Now is not the time to fight for power and profit or to engage in intrigue. Rather, you must quickly set aside these things that are so detrimental to life and seek to enter into reality. You are so careless! You cannot understand My heart or realize My intention. There are many things I should not have had to say, but you are such confused people who do not understand, so I have had to say them again and again, and even so, you have still not satisfied My heart.

Counting you one by one, how many of you can truly be considerate of My heart?

Chapter 49

To serve in coordination, one must coordinate correctly, with energy, and vividly. Furthermore, one must have vitality, vigor, and be brimming with confidence, so that others, when they see, are provided for and will be full. To serve Me, you must serve as I intend, not only conforming to My heart, but moreover satisfying My intentions, so that I am satisfied by what I accomplish in you. Fill your life with My word, fill your speech with My power—this is what I request of you. Does following your own desires reveal My likeness? Will that satisfy My heart? Are you someone who has sincerely observed My intentions? Are you someone who has truly tried to understand My heart? Have you indeed offered up yourself to Me? Have you truly expended yourself for Me? Have you contemplated My words?

One must use wisdom in every aspect and use wisdom to walk My perfect way. Those who act within My word are the wisest of all, and those who act in accordance with My word are the most obedient. What I say goes, and you need not debate with Me or try to reason with Me. Everything I say, I say with you in mind (no matter if I am strict or gentle). If you focus on being obedient that will be fine, and this is the way of true wisdom (and of preventing the judgment of God befalling you). Today, in My house, do not be polite to My face and say other things behind My back. I want you to be practical; you need not use florid rhetoric. For those who are practical, there is everything. For those who are not, there is nothing. Even their bodies will return with them to nonexistence, because without practicality, there is only emptiness; there is no other explanation.

In your faith in God, I would have you be earnest and give no thought to what you might gain or lose, nor for all you have; you should seek only to place your feet on the true way and not be swayed by anyone or controlled by anyone. This is what is known as being a pillar of the church, an overcomer of the kingdom; to do otherwise means you are not worthy to live before Me.

In different situations, the way to be close to Me is likewise different. Some people love to say pretty words and act devout before Me. However, behind the scenes they are in total disorder and My words are quite absent in them. They are disgusting and annoying; it is out of the question that they could edify someone or provide for someone. You are not able to be considerate of My heart only because you cannot have more closeness or fellowship with Me; you make Me worry for you constantly and labor for you constantly.

Chapter 50

All churches and all saints should think back to the past as well as look to the future: How many of your past actions are qualified, and how many of them had a share in the building of the kingdom? Do not think yourselves clever! You should see clearly your own shortcomings, and you should understand your own condition. I know that none of you are willing to make any effort or to expend any time in this regard, so you are not able to boast any attainments. You idle away all your time in eating, drinking, and having fun. When a few of you get together you play around, paying no attention to fellowshiping spiritual matters in life or to providing life to each other. I cannot bear to see you laughing and joking when you talk, and yet you are so absurd. I have said many times, but you just do not know the meaning of what I say—is this not something that is so obvious that it is right there at the end of your nose? I have said things like this before, yet you are still not convinced and you do not acknowledge what I say, thinking that I misunderstand you, thinking that what I say is not real. Or could it be that this is not the case?

If you go through the motions with Me, then I will put you to one side. Just you dare to be perfunctory again! Just you dare to be thoughtless and careless again! My words are a carving knife; anything that does not conform to My will shall be cut out with this knife, and you need not have too much consideration for your own self-respect. I carve you so that you can take shape and conform to My will. Do not misunderstand My heart; only if you are as considerate toward My heart as possible will it be acceptable. If you show even the tiniest bit of consideration, I shall not turn away from you in contempt. Do not always blithely ignore it; allow My will to be constantly carried out on you.

The multitudes of saints are all situated in different positions, so of course you all have different functions. But you should do everything in your power to expend yourselves sincerely for Me; your duty is to do all you can. You should be loyal in this, and be gladly willing. You really must not be half-hearted! Otherwise, My judgment will ever be upon you; your flesh, spirit and soul will be unable to endure it, and for you, there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Oh! Almighty God! Amen! In You, all is released, all is free, all is open, all is revealed, and all is bright, not hidden or concealed in the least. You are Almighty God incarnate. You have reigned as King. You have been openly revealed—no longer are You a mystery, but You are revealed completely, for ever and ever! I have truly been revealed entirely, I have arrived publicly, and I have appeared as the Sun of righteousness, for today is no longer the era in which the morning star appears, nor is it still the phase of concealment. My work is like flashing lightning; it is accomplished as swiftly as a sudden clap of thunder. My work has progressed to this current stage, and whosoever dawdles or is idle will only be met with merciless judgment. In particular, you must have a clear understanding that I am majesty and judgment, and that I am no longer compassion and love as you might imagine. If you are still not clear on this point, then what you will receive is but judgment, for you yourself will taste of that which you have not acknowledged; otherwise, you will continue to have doubts and dare not to be firm in your belief.

As for that which I have entrusted to you, are you able to complete it with devotion? I say that any undertaking requires wisdom, yet how often have you given repeated scrutiny and further consideration to My exhortations while doing something? Even if you have some understanding of one word of My exhortations, and you think it fine when you hear it, you subsequently disregard it. When you hear it, you direct it at your own actual condition and despise yourself—but then later, you believe it to be a trivial matter. The question today is whether or not your life can progress; it is not a question of how you are adorned externally. None of you has any resolution, and you are unwilling to be determined. You do not wish to pay the price, and you do not want to cast aside transient earthly pleasure, yet you are afraid of losing blessings from heaven. What sort of person are you? You are a fool! You should not feel aggrieved; is what I have said not factual? Has it not simply pointed out that which you yourself have already thought? You have no humanity! You do not even possess the quality of a normal person. Moreover, even though this is how it is, you still do not see yourself as impoverished. You are leisurely and carefree the whole day long, and utterly complacent! You do not know how extensive your own deficiencies are, or what you lack. How foolish!

Do you not see that My work has already come to such a point? All My will is in you. When will you be able to grasp it and show it some consideration? You are lazy! You are unwilling to pay the price, unwilling to do the hard work, unwilling to take the time, and unwilling to put forth the effort. Let Me tell you something! The more afraid you are of suffering hardship, the fewer benefits your life will reap and, moreover, the more obstacles you will encounter as your life grows, and the more unlikely your life is to progress. Let Me remind you once more (I will not say it again)! I will be indifferent to and abandon anyone who does not take responsibility for his own life. I have already begun to put this into effect; have you not seen this clearly? This is not a business transaction, nor is it commerce; it is life. Is that clear?

Chapter 52

I emerge as the Sun of righteousness, and you and I together share glory and good blessings, forever and ever! This is an incontrovertible fact, and it has already begun to be confirmed in you. This is because all that I have promised, I will fulfill for you; all that I say is reality, and shall never return void. These good blessings are upon you, and no other can claim them; they are the fruits of your service done in coordination with Me with one accord. Cast away your religious notions; believe in the veracity of My words, and do not be doubtful! I do not joke with you; I mean what I say. Those upon whom I bestow blessings thus receive them, while those upon whom I do not bestow blessings do not receive any. This is all determined by Me. Earthly fortune is simply inconsequential! In My view, it is nothing but dung, worth not even a penny. You therefore should not value earthly enjoyments too highly. Is enjoying heavenly blessings with Me not far more meaningful and rewarding?

Previously, the truth had not been revealed, and I had not openly appeared; back then, you doubted Me and dared not feel certain of Me. However, now all things have become revealed, and I have emerged as the Sun of righteousness—so if you are still in doubt, what say you to that? When darkness covered the earth, it was forgivable that you could not see the light, but now that the sun has illuminated all dark corners, the hidden is no longer hidden, and the concealed is no longer concealed—if you are still in doubt, I will not easily pardon you! Now is the time to be absolutely certain about Me, the time to be willing to devote yourselves to Me and expend for Me. Whosoever opposes Me in the slightest way will be set upon forthwith by the fires of judgment without a second thought or a moment's delay—for now is the time that merciless judgment has come, and for those whose minds and hearts are not right, judgment will be swift. This is the true meaning of, "My work is like flashing lightning," as is spoken of.

It is progressing quickly; it cannot but surprise people, it cannot but make people feel afraid, it cannot be delayed any longer, and it cannot be stopped. The more My work is carried out, the faster it moves forward; whoever is not vigilant and prepared carries always the danger of being cast away. No longer can you succumb to the impulse of temptation. My work has fully begun and is expanding toward the Gentile nations and the universe world. The fires of judgment are ruthless and without mercy or love to anyone. Those who are loyal to God, yet who harbor incorrect thoughts and ideas or even just resist a little bit, will also be judged; of this there is no doubt. Whomever My light is cast upon shall live within the light and act in the light, and shall serve Me until the very end of the road. Those who do not live within the light are living in darkness. I will make a decision after judging them, depending on their attitudes toward their own guilt.

My day has come. "My day," which I have mentioned in the past, is now before your eyes, for you have descended together with Me. Me with you, and you with Me; we have met in the air, and share in glory together. My day has indeed completely come!

Chapter 53

I am the Beginning, and I am the End. I am the resurrected and complete one true God. I speak My words before you, and you must firmly believe what I say. Heaven and earth may pass away, but not one letter or one stroke of what I say will ever pass away. Remember this! Remember it! Once I have uttered it, not a single word has ever been taken back, and each one will be fulfilled. Now the time has come, and you must quickly enter reality. There is not much time. I will lead My sons into the glorious kingdom, and that which you have striven and longed for will be realized. My sons! Rise up quickly and follow Me! There is not enough time for you to still be mulling it over. Time lost will never return; after darkness there is light, and the rapture is here before your eyes. Do you understand? Open your eyes! Wake up quickly! You are not permitted now, while communicating amongst yourselves, to engage in idle chatter or say anything that is of no benefit to the construction of the church. What is important is to supply your brothers and sisters with your practical experiences or accounts of how you have been illuminated before God and know yourselves. Whoever is able to supply these things will have stature! Nowadays, some of you are still not fearful, and no matter what I say or how much I worry, you remain fearless; your old self does not allow itself to be touched in the slightest. Well, then just keep on going like that! Just wait and see who will be ruined! You are always thinking of grasping at the world, longing for wealth, and feeling a strong attachment for your sons, daughters and husband. Well, you can just keep on feeling attached! It is not as though My words have not been addressed to you, and you can just carry on however you wish! In the near future, you will understand everything, but by then it will already be too late. All that awaits you is judgment.

Chapter 54

I know the situation of each church like the back of My hand. Do not think I do not understand or have clarity about them. As for the various people of the churches, I have an even clearer understanding and knowledge. It is now My urgent will to train you, so you may grow more quickly into adulthood; so the day you can be of use to Me may come sooner; and so that your actions can be full of My wisdom, that you can manifest God wherever you may be. In this way, My ultimate objective will be achieved. My sons! You should show consideration for My will. Do not make Me hold your hand as I teach you. You must learn to grasp My will and see to the heart of matters. This will enable you to handle every matter you encounter with ease, like a snap of the fingers. In your training, you might not be able to grasp it the first time—but after the second time, and the third time, and so on, you will eventually be able to grasp My will.

Your words always have an impenetrable quality. You believe this to be wisdom, do you not? Sometimes, your words are disobedient; sometimes, you speak in a joking way; and, sometimes, you speak with an element of human notions and jealousy.... In sum, you speak without steadiness, not knowing how to supply life to others or grasp their conditions, but communicate sloppily. Your thinking is unclear and you have no idea what is wisdom and what is deceit. How muddled you are! You regard deceit and crookedness as wisdom; does this not bring shame on My name? Is this not blasphemy against Me? Does this not bring a false charge against Me? So, what is the goal you seek? Have you thought carefully about that? Have you done any seeking in this matter? I tell you, My will is the direction and the objective that you seek. If this were not so, all would be in vain. Those who do not know My will are those who do not know how to seek, those who will be abandoned, cast out! Clearly, to grasp My will is the first lesson you must learn. It is the most urgent of tasks, and it brooks no delay! Do not wait for Me to call each of you to task, one by one! You spend whole days in a hazy state of dull-witted numbness. How ridiculous! Your muddle-headedness is astounding; you show no consideration for My will! Ask yourselves: How many times have you grasped hold of My will when taking action? It is now time for you to train yourselves! Having Me deal with you one by one is an impossibility! You should learn to gain experience and to acquire insight and wisdom as you act. The words from your mouths are well and good, but what is the reality? When you face reality, you are unable to do anything about it. What you say never matches up to reality. Truly, I cannot stand to see what you are doing; when I watch, I feel terribly saddened. Remember this! In the future, learn to grasp My will!

Chapter 55

So-called normal humanity is not as supernatural as people imagine. Rather, it can transcend the bonds of all humans, events, and objects, and the persecutions arising from one's environment. It is able to draw close to Me and commune with Me in any place or circumstance. You humans always misinterpret My intentions. When I say you should live out a normal humanity, you exercise self-restraint and tame your flesh, but you do not pay any attention to searching carefully within your spirit. You only focus on your outward appearance, ignoring the revelations and stirrings I cause within you. How careless you are! Too careless! Can it be that you regard completing that which I have entrusted to you as some great accomplishment? You are foolish! You are not paying attention to putting down deep roots! "Do not be a leaf on a tree, but be the root of the tree"—is that really your motto? Thoughtless! Careless! You are satisfied as soon as you think you have made small gains. How little you care about My will! From now on, take heed, do not be passive, and do not be negative! As you serve, draw close to Me more often, and communicate more with Me: This is your only way out. I am aware that you have already denied yourself, know of your own deficiencies, and are aware of your own weaknesses. However, simply knowing is not enough. You need to cooperate with Me, and once you understand My intentions, implement them immediately. This is the best way to show concern for My burden, as well as the best way to submit.

No matter how you treat Me, I wish to carry out My will in you and all the saints, and I want it to be carried out unhindered across the entire land. Be fully aware of this! This concerns My administrative decrees! Are you not in the least afraid? Are you not trembling in fear over your own actions and behavior? Among all the saints, there are hardly any who can sense My intentions. Do you not wish to stand out as a person who is truly mindful of My will? Are you aware? My urgent intention at present is to seek out a group of people who are capable of being absolutely mindful of My will. Do you not want to be one of them? Do you not want to expend yourself for My sake, and to offer yourself up for Me? You are not willing to pay even the smallest price or to put in even the tiniest effort! If that continues to be the case, My painstaking efforts will be wasted on you. Now that I have pointed this out to you, do you still not understand the seriousness of this issue?

"To those who sincerely expend for Me, I shall surely bless you greatly." You see! I have told you this several times, yet you still have so many misgivings and fears to do with your family circumstances and the external environment. You really do not know what is good for you! I only use honest, simple, and open people. You have been happy and willing for Me to use you—but why are you still so worried? Can it be that My words have had no effect on you at all? I have said I am using you, yet you are unable to be steadfastly confident in that. You are always doubting, afraid that I will abandon you. Your notions are so entrenched! When I say I am using you, it means I am using you.

Why are you always so doubtful? Have I not spoken clearly enough? Every word I have said is true; not one utterance is false. My son! Trust Me. Be committed on My behalf, and I will certainly be committed to you!

Chapter 56

I have begun to take action to punish those who do evil, and those who wield power and who persecute God's sons. From now on, the hand of My administrative decrees will ever be upon those who contradict Me in their hearts. Know this! This is the beginning of My judgment, and no mercy will be shown to anyone, nor will anyone be spared, for I am the dispassionate God that practices righteousness, and it would be well for you all to recognize this.

It is not that I wish to punish those who do evil; rather, this is retribution they have brought upon themselves by their own evildoings. I am not quick to punish anyone, nor do I treat anyone unjustly—I am righteous to all. I certainly love My sons, and I certainly hate those evil ones who defy Me; this is the principle behind My actions. Every one of you should have some insight into My administrative decrees; if you do not, then you will not have an ounce of fear, and will act carelessly before Me. You also will not know what I want to achieve, what I want to accomplish, what I want to gain, or what kind of person My kingdom needs.

My administrative decrees are:

1. No matter who you are, if you contradict Me in your heart, you will be judged.
2. Those whom I have chosen will be disciplined immediately for any wrong thinking.
3. I will put those who do not believe in Me to one side. I will allow them to speak and act carelessly until the very end, when I will thoroughly punish them and sort them out.
4. I shall look after and protect those who believe in Me at all times. At all times I will supply them with life by way of salvation. These people will have My love, and they will surely not fall or lose their way. Any weakness they have will only be temporary, and I will certainly not remember their weaknesses.
5. Those who seem to believe, but do not actually do so—who believe there is a God but who do not seek Christ, yet who also do not resist—these are the most pitiful sort of people, and through My deeds, I will make them see clearly. By way of My actions, I will save such people and bring them back.
6. The firstborn sons, the first to accept My name, will be blessed! I will surely bestow the best blessings upon you, allowing you to enjoy them to your hearts' content; no one will dare hinder this. All of this is wholly prepared for you, as this is My administrative decree.

You should be able to see, in every regard, all the actions of My hand and all the thoughts of My heart. Is it not all for you? Who among you is for Me? Have you examined the thoughts in your hearts or the words on your lips? Have you taken a conscientious approach to these things? Muddle-headed! Dissolute! You do not accept the constraints of the Holy Spirit! I have been releasing My voice within you over and over again, yet it has elicited no reaction at all. Be obtuse no longer! Your duty is to grasp My will; furthermore, it is the path you should enter. You are bewildered, you have no insight, and you do not see clearly what I wish to accomplish in you or gain from you! To grasp My will, you must begin by coming close to Me and communicating with Me more. You always say that you are unable to grasp My will. If you are already filled with things of your own, then how can I work on you? You do not take the initiative and come before Me, but merely wait, passive. I say that you are like a worm, yet you feel wronged and refuse to accept this. This time you should rise up and cooperate with Me! Do not be passive! That will set your life back. Being proactive brings benefits to you, not to others. Have you still not recognized and understood this? My will is constantly revealed in you. Have you not perceived it? Why have you never paid attention to it? Why have you never been able to grasp My will? Could grasping My will truly bring you no advantage?

I wish you to show consideration to My will in all respects so that through you, I will have a way forward and a home in which to rest. Obstruct Me no longer—that is too heartless! You have no understanding of My words, and make no response to them. Look at what the time is now; there can be no more waiting! If you do not follow My footsteps closely, then it will be too late, much less will there be any way you can redeem it!

Chapter 57

Have you examined each of your thoughts and ideas, and your every act? Do you have a clear idea of which of these are in accord with My will and which are not? You are absolutely incapable of discerning this! Why have you not come before Me? Is it because I will not tell you, or is it for some other reason? You should know this! Know that those who are negligent absolutely cannot grasp My will or receive any great illumination or revelation.

Have you discovered the reasons the church is unable to gain nourishment and lacks genuine fellowship? Are you aware of how many factors that have led to this are to do with you? I instructed you to provide life and to release My voice. Have you done these things? Can you take responsibility for delaying your brothers' and sisters' progress in life? When you encounter issues, rather than being calm and collected, you have been distraught. You really are ignorant! My voice should be released to the saints. Do not suppress the work of the Holy Spirit, and do not delay Me through procrastination; none of that benefits anyone. I want you to dedicate yourself to Me completely, in body and in mind, so that your every thought and idea will be for Me, so that you will share My thoughts and concerns, and so that everything you do will be for the sake of today's kingdom and My management, and not for yourself. Only that will satisfy My heart.

Nothing I have done is without proof. Why have you not emulated Me? Why have you not sought proof for what you do? What more would you have Me say? I took you by the hand to teach you, yet you have not been able to learn. You are so stupid! Do you wish to start all over again? Do not be disheartened. You must pull yourself together once more, and dedicate yourself entirely on behalf of the shared hopes and wishes of the saints. Remember these words: "To those who sincerely expend for Me, I shall surely bless you greatly."

Whatever you do must be done in an orderly way, not haphazardly. Do you really dare to claim that you know the state of the saints like the back of your hand? That shows you are lacking wisdom, that you have not taken this matter seriously at all, and that you have not spent any time on it. If you could truly spend all your time on this, then you would see just what your internal state would be like. You do not seek to make subjective efforts; you just look for objective reasons, without exhibiting a shred of consideration for My will. That has hurt Me deeply! Do not continue on like this! Could it be that you do not accept the blessings I have given you?

Oh, God! Your child is in Your debt. I have not taken Your work seriously or shown consideration for Your will, nor have I been faithful to Your exhortations. Your child wishes to turn all of this around. May You not abandon me, and may You continue to carry out Your work through me. Oh, God! Do not leave Your child all by himself! Rather, please accompany me in every moment. Oh, God! Your child knows You love me, yet I cannot grasp Your will; I do not know how to show consideration for Your burden or how to fulfill what You have entrusted to me. Still less do I know how to shepherd the church. You are aware that I am disconsolate and distressed over this. Oh, God! Please guide me at all times. Only now do I feel how much I am lacking—I lack far too much! I simply cannot describe how much. Let Your almighty hand show grace to Your child, support me at all times, and enable me to prostrate myself completely before You, no longer making my own choices and no longer having my own thoughts or ideas. Oh, God! You know that Your child wishes to do everything completely for Your sake and for the sake of today's kingdom. You know what I am thinking and what I am doing at this moment. Oh, God! Search me Yourself. I ask only that You walk with me and remain with me in life at all times so that Your strength will accompany all that I do.

Chapter 58

Having grasped My intention, you will become capable of having consideration for My burden, and you can gain light and revelation and obtain release and freedom. This will make Me satisfied and cause My will for you to be carried out, bring edification to all the saints, and make firm and steady My kingdom on earth. The crucial thing now is to grasp My intention; this is the path you should enter and, moreover, it is the duty that every person should fulfill.

My word is good medicine that cures all manner of illnesses. As long as you are willing to come before Me, I will heal you and allow you to see My omnipotence, My wondrous deeds, My righteousness, and My majesty. Moreover, I will give you a glimpse of your own corruption and weaknesses. I completely understand every condition inside of you; you always do things within your heart, and do not show them on the outside. I am even clearer about every single thing that you do. However, you should know which things I praise and which things I do not; you should clearly distinguish between these, and not take a casual attitude toward this.

In saying, “We must show consideration toward God’s burden,” you are merely paying lip service. However, when you confront the facts, even though you know full well what God’s burden is, you do not give it any consideration. You really are quite muddle-headed and foolish, and moreover, you are ignorant to the extreme. This explains how difficult humans are to deal with; all they do is voice nice-sounding words such as, “I simply can’t grasp God’s intention, but if I do succeed in grasping it, I will definitely act in keeping with it.” Is this not your actual condition? Although you all know God’s intention, and you know what the cause of your illness is, the vital issue is that you are not at all willing to practice; this is your greatest difficulty. If you do not resolve this immediately, it will be the biggest impediment to your life.

Chapter 59

Seek out My will more in the environments you encounter, and you will surely gain My approval. As long as you are willing to seek and maintain reverence for Me, I will bestow upon you all that you lack. The church is now entering a formal training, and everything is on the right track. Things are no longer as they were when it was a foretaste of things to come; you must no longer be confused or lack discernment. Why do I require that you enter reality in everything? Have you genuinely experienced this? Can you truly satisfy Me in what I require of you, just as I satisfy you? Do not be deceitful! I simply keep tolerating you again and again, and yet you repeatedly fail to tell the difference between good and bad and to show your appreciation!

My righteousness, My majesty, My judgment, and My love—all these things that I possess, the things that I am—have you truly tasted of them? You really are so thoughtless, and you insist on not perceiving My will. I have told you over and over that you yourselves must taste of the feasts I prepare, yet you overthrow them again and again, and cannot tell a good environment from a bad one. Which of these environments were created by you yourselves? Which were arranged by My hands? Stop defending yourselves! I see everything perfectly clearly, and the fact is that you simply do not seek. What more can I say?

I will always comfort all those who perceive My will, and I will not allow them to suffer or come to harm. The crucial thing now is to be able to take action in accordance with My will. Those who do this will certainly receive My blessings and come under My protection. Who can truly and completely expend themselves for Me and offer up their all for My sake? You are all half-hearted; your thoughts go around and around, thinking of home, of the outside world, of food and clothing. Despite the fact that you are here before Me, doing things for Me, deep down you are still thinking of your wife, children, and parents at home. Are all these things your property? Why do you not entrust them into My hands? Do you not have sufficient faith in Me? Or is it that you are afraid I will make inappropriate arrangements for you? Why do you always worry about the family of your flesh? You always pine for your loved ones! Do I have a certain place in your heart? You still talk about allowing Me to have dominion within you and occupy your entire being—these are all deceptive lies! How many of you are wholeheartedly committed to the church? And who among you think not of yourselves, but are acting for the sake of the kingdom of today? Think very carefully about this.

You have pushed Me to the extent that I can only use My hands to strike you and drive you forward; I will no longer coax you along. This is because I am the wise God, and I treat different people in different ways, according to how loyal you are to Me. I am the almighty God—who would dare hinder My forward steps? From now on, all those who dare to treat Me with disloyalty will surely come under the hand of My administrative decrees, so that they will be made to know My almightiness. What I want is not a great number of people, but excellence. I shall forsake and punish whoever is disloyal, dishonest, and engages in crooked behavior and deceit. Think no longer that I am merciful, or that I am loving and kind; such thoughts are just self-indulgences. I know that the more I humor you, the more negative and passive you become and the more unwilling you are to let go of yourself. When people are difficult to such a degree, I can only constantly spur them on and drag them along. Know this! From now on, I am the God who judges; no longer am I the merciful, kind, and loving God that people imagine Me to be!

Chapter 60

It is no easy thing for life to grow; it requires a process and, moreover, that you be able to pay the cost, and that you cooperate with Me with one heart, and thereby you shall receive My praise. The heavens and earth and all things are established and made complete by the words I utter, and with Me, anything can be accomplished. My only wish is that you grow up quickly, take the burden from My shoulders, place it upon your own, and do My labor on My behalf; only then will I be satisfied. What son would refuse his father's burdens? What father would not labor night and day for his son? Nevertheless, you simply have no understanding of My will, and are inconsiderate of My burdens; My words do not carry weight with you, and you do not do as I say. You are always your own masters; how selfish! You only think of yourselves!

Do you actually understand My will, or are you pretending not to? Why do you always engage in such wanton behavior? Does your conscience say that you are doing right by Me in acting so? Upon finding the cause of the illness, why do you not communicate with Me for the cure? I shall tell you: From this day forward, you will have no more diseases of the body. If ever some part of you feels unwell, do not busy yourselves with looking for an external cause; rather, come before Me and seek to know My intention. Will you remember this? This is My promise: From this day forward, you will completely walk away from your physical body and into the spiritual world; that is, no longer will your body be burdened with illness. Are you happy with that? Do you feel joyful? This is My promise. Furthermore, it is that for which you have long hoped. Today it is accomplished in you blessed ones. How marvelous and unfathomable!

My work progresses day and night; moment by moment, it never stops. This is because My urgent desire is to make you after My own heart, and that My heart will soon be comforted by you. My sons! The time has come for you to share in My blessings of goodness! In the past, you suffered for My name, but now your days of trial are over. Should anyone dare to harm a hair upon My sons' heads, I would not forgive them easily, nor would they ever be able to rise again. This is My administrative decree, and anyone who violates it does so at their peril. My sons! Revel to your hearts' content! Sing and call out in joy! You will no longer be bullied and oppressed, and you will no longer be subject to persecution. No longer must you be fearful over your belief in Me; you should publicly proclaim your faith. Call out My holy name loud enough to make the universe and the ends of the earth shake. Let them see that those whom they looked down upon, who were ravaged and tortured by them, today stand above them and rule them, govern them, and, more importantly, judge them.

Concern yourselves only with entry, and I shall bestow the even better blessings upon you that wait for you to enjoy, and you will be able to better taste of incomparable sweetness, boundless mysteries, and unfathomable profundity!

Chapter 61

When you are aware of your own condition, you may then fulfill My will. Actually, My will is not difficult to grasp; it is simply that in the past, you never sought in accordance with My intentions. I do not want people's notions or thoughts, much less your money or your possessions. What I want is your heart. Do you understand? This is My will;

moreover, it is what I wish to obtain. People always use their own notions to judge Me and use their criteria to assess My stature. With the human race, this is the hardest thing to deal with, and it is what I loathe and detest the most. Do you see now? It is because this is Satan's most visible disposition. Furthermore, you are of such small stature, you frequently fall into Satan's cunning schemes. You are simply unable to discern them! I have told you many times to be cautious at all times and in all respects, so as not to be tricked by Satan. Nevertheless, you do not listen and instead blithely ignore what I say. As a result, you end up suffering losses in life, and then it becomes too late for regrets. Would it not be a very good idea for you to take this as a lesson for your future seeking? I say to you! Being prone to negativity will bring losses to your life of the utmost severity. Knowing this, is it not time you woke up?

People are impatient for quick results, and they only see what is right in front of them. When I say that I have begun to punish those in power, you become even more anxious, asking: "Why are those men still in power? Doesn't this mean God's words are empty?" Human notions are so entrenched! You do not understand the meaning of what I say. The people I punish are the evil, those who defy Me, and those who do not know Me, and I ignore the ones who merely believe in Me without seeking the truth. You are truly ignorant! You have not understood one iota of what I have said! Nevertheless, you still pat yourselves on the back, thinking that you have matured, that you comprehend things, and that you are able to grasp My will. I often say that all things and matters render service to Christ, but do you genuinely understand these words? Do you really know what they mean? I have said before that I do not punish anyone rashly. Every single person in the universe world follows My proper arrangements. Those who are the objects of My punishment, those who render service to Christ (whom I shall not save), those who are chosen by Me, and those who are chosen by Me but are to be cast out afterward—all these I hold in My hands, not to mention you, one of the chosen whom I understand even more. All of the things I do during this phase and the next are in keeping with My wise arrangements. You do not need to make arrangements for Me in advance; just wait and enjoy! This is something you deserve. I dominate what is Mine, and I do not let off lightly those who dare to complain or have other opinions of Me. I often flare up in anger these days, with the program of administrative decrees I have arranged progressing to this stage. Do not assume I have no feelings. This is because, as I have said before, no object, person, or event dares to hinder My steps forward. I do what I say, and this is what I am; moreover, this is the most visible manifestation of My disposition. I treat all people the same, for you are all My sons, and I love every one of you. What father does not take responsibility for his son's life? What father does not work hard, day and night, for his son's future? Who among you recognizes this? Who can show My heart consideration? You constantly make plans and arrangements for your own carnal pleasures, and you have no realization whatsoever of My heart. I worry My heart to pieces for you, but you constantly hanker after carnal pleasures, eating and drinking, sleeping, and garments. Do you have not the slightest bit of conscience? If this is the case, then you are but beasts in human clothing. What I say is not undue, and you should be able to endure these words. This is the best way to save you and, even more so, this is where My wisdom lies: Strike at Satan's vital weakness, defeat it utterly, and leave it completely destroyed. As long as you repent and ensure that you rely on Me to eliminate your old nature and live out the image of a new person, I will be entirely satisfied, as this is what it means to live out a normal humanity and bear witness to My name. Nothing makes Me happier.

You must remain close to Me always. It is evident that My pace is quickening day by day. If you lack spiritual fellowship even for a moment, then My judgment will be brought to bear upon you at once. On this point, you have gained a profound realization. I chasten you not because I do not love you; rather, I discipline you out of love. Otherwise, you would not grow, and you would always be debauched without the restraints of the Holy Spirit. This further demonstrates My wisdom.

Grasping My will is not merely so that you may know it, but that you may act in accordance with My intentions. People simply do not understand My heart. When I say a direction is east, they cannot but deliberate, wondering: "Is that really east? Maybe it isn't. I can't just take that on faith; I need to look for myself." Such is the extent to which you people are difficult to handle; you do not know what real submission is. When you know My intentions, concern yourself only with enacting them—do not think! You always take what I say with a grain of salt, and you have an absurd way of accepting it. How can this yield true insight? You never enter into My words. As I have said before, what I want is excellence in people, rather than greatness in their numbers. Whoever does not focus on entering into My words does not deserve to be a good soldier of Christ; instead, they act as Satan's lackey and interrupt My work. Do not think this a small matter. Whoever interrupts My work violates My administrative decrees, and it is certain that I will discipline such people severely. This means that, from now on, if you turn away from Me for a moment, judgment will befall you. If you do not believe My words, then see for yourself what state it is to live in the light of My countenance and what state it is to have left Me.

I am not concerned if you do not live in the spirit. My work has progressed to the current stage, so what can you do? Do not be anxious, for all I do has its steps, and I will do My work Myself. As soon as I act, all are utterly convinced; were they not, I would chastise them with redoubled severity, which touches further on My administrative decrees. It can be seen that My administrative decrees have already begun to be promulgated and implemented and are no longer hidden. You must see this clearly! Everything now touches on My administrative decrees, and whoever violates them must suffer loss. This is no small matter. Do you truly have some insight into this? Do you see this with clarity? I shall begin to fellowship: All nations and all peoples of the world are administered in My hands, and, regardless of their religion, they must flow back to My throne. Of course, some, having been judged, will be cast into the bottomless pit (being objects of ruination that will be utterly burned, and will remain no longer), while some, having been judged, will accept My name and become people of My kingdom (which they will only enjoy for one thousand years). You, however, will hold the kingship with Me unto eternity, and, because you previously suffered for Me, I will replace your sufferings with blessings that I bestow on you without end. Those who are My people will merely continue to render service to Christ. What is called enjoyment here does not mean only enjoyment, but also that those people will be kept from suffering disasters. This is the inner meaning of My demands of you now being so strict, and of everything now touching on My administrative decrees. The reason for this is that if you did not accept My training, there would be no way for Me to give you what you are meant to inherit. Even so, you still fear suffering and are afraid that your souls will be wounded, always thinking for the flesh and constantly making arrangements and plans for yourselves. Are My arrangements for you unsuitable? Why, then, do you continue to make arrangements for yourself? You vilify Me! Is that not so? I arrange something for you, then you repudiate it utterly and make your own plans.

You may be eloquent, but, in reality, you do not observe My will whatsoever. Listen to Me! I would certainly not say there is one among you capable of showing true consideration for My will. Though your actions may conform to My will, I will certainly not praise you. This is My method of salvation. Even so, you are still complacent at times, thinking yourselves amazing while holding everyone else in contempt. This is one aspect of man's corrupt disposition. That all of you acknowledge this point I am making is a superficiality. To be able truly to change, you must come close to Me. Fellowship with Me, and I will bestow grace upon you. Some people want only to sit idle and reap what others have sown, feeling that to be clothed, they need only stretch out their arms, and to be fed, they need only open their mouths, even waiting for others to chew their food and put it in their mouths before they swallow it. Such people are most foolish, loving to eat what has been chewed by others. This is also a manifestation of the laziest aspect of man. Having heard these words of Mine, you must no longer pass them over. You will do right only by redoubling your attention, and only then will you satisfy My will. This is the best kind of submission and obedience.

Chapter 63

You must understand your own condition and, moreover, be clear about the path you need to walk; do not wait any longer for Me to lift up your ears and point things out to you. I am the God who observes the innermost heart of man, and I know your every thought and idea. What is more, I understand your actions and behavior—but do these all contain My promise? Do they all contain My will? Have you ever actually sought these before? Have you really spent any time on this? Have you truly made any effort? I am not criticizing you; you have simply ignored this aspect! You are always so befuddled, and cannot see anything clearly. Do you know what the cause for this is? It is that your thoughts are unclear and your notions are too firmly entrenched; moreover, you show no consideration for My will. Some people will say, “How can You claim that we show Your will no consideration? We are constantly trying to grasp Your will, but we never succeed—so what should we do? Can You really say that we make no effort?” Let Me ask you this: Would you dare to claim that you are truly loyal to Me? And who dare say that they offer up themselves to Me in perfect loyalty? I fear that not one among you can say this because, needless for Me to say, every one of you has your own choices, your own likes, and, even more so, your own intentions. Do not be deceitful! I long ago gained a thorough understanding of all your innermost thoughts. Do I still need to clarify this? You must examine more from every aspect (your thoughts and ideas, everything you say, every word, and every intention and motivation behind every move you make); in this way, you will attain entry to every aspect. Furthermore, you will be able to equip yourself with the complete truth.

If I did not tell you such things, you would still be befuddled, hankering after carnal pleasures all day long and with no desire whatsoever to show My will any consideration. I am constantly using My loving hand to save you. Do you know that? Have you come to this realization? I sincerely love you. Dare you say that you sincerely love Me? Frequently ask yourself this: Are you truly able to come before Me to submit your every action to My inspection? Can you genuinely let Me examine your every action? I say you are debauched, and you jump to your own defense. My judgment comes upon you; now you should wake up to the truth! All that I speak is the truth; My words point out the actual condition within you. Ah, mankind! You are so difficult to deal with. Only when I point out your actual condition do you accept what I say wholeheartedly. If I did not do this, then you would always hold fast to your outdated set of ideas and cling to your ways of thinking, assuming that no one on earth is smarter than you. In this are you not simply being self-righteous? Are you not indulging in self-satisfaction and complacency and being arrogant and conceited? You should recognize this by now! You should not think yourself to be smart or extraordinary; rather, you must be constantly aware of your own deficiencies and weak points. In this way, your resolve to love Me will not diminish and shall instead become stronger and stronger, and your own condition will continue to improve. More importantly, your life will progress ever further, day by day.

When you come to grasp My will, you will come to know yourself, thereby gaining a better understanding of Me and progressing further in your certainty about Me. Currently, if someone cannot achieve ninety percent certainty about Me, but instead continues to be up one minute and down the next, blowing hot and cold, then I say that person is one who will be certainly cast away. The remaining ten percent rests entirely with My enlightenment and illumination; with these, people can achieve one hundred percent certainty about Me. Right now—meaning, today—how many can achieve this kind of stature? I am constantly revealing My will to you, and feelings of life run continually within you. Why, then, do you not act in line with the Spirit? Are you afraid of making mistakes? If so, why do you not give any focus to training? I say to you that people cannot grasp My will by simply trying once or twice; they must undergo a process. I have pointed this out many times, so why do you not put it into practice? Do you not think you are being disobedient? You wish to finish everything in an instant and are never willing to make any effort or spend any time on anything. How foolish you are, and, moreover, how ignorant you are!

Are you not aware that I am always talking about things without mincing words? Why do you continue to be obtuse, numb, and dull-witted? You should examine yourselves more, and if there is ever anything you do not understand, then you should come before Me more often. I tell you this: The purpose of Me speaking in this way or that way is to lead you before Me. Why, after so long, do you still not realize this? Is it because My words have completely confounded you? Or is it that you have not taken every single one of My words seriously? When you read them, you gain a good knowledge of yourselves, and you go on to say things like you owe Me and cannot grasp My will. What about afterward, though? It is as though you have had nothing to do with these things; it is as if you are simply not someone who believes in God. Are you not simply wolfing down information without giving yourselves time to digest it? When you enjoy My words, it is like you are merely getting a quick glimpse of flowers as you gallop by on horseback; you never try to actually understand from My words what My will is. This is what people are like: They always love to appear humble. Such are the most hateful sort of people. When they get together to fellowship with others, they always love to share their knowledge of themselves in front of other people, making others see that they are ones who show consideration for My burden—when in actuality, they are the stupidest of fools. (They do not fellowship their true insights or knowledge of Me with their brothers and sisters; instead, they just put themselves on display and show off in front of other people; I loathe such people the most, as they vilify and disparage Me.)

I frequently make My greatest miracles manifest in you. Can you not see them? So-called “reality” is lived out by those who sincerely love Me. Have you not seen it? Is this not the best proof through which you can know Me? Does it not bear better witness for Me? And yet you do not recognize it. Tell Me: Who can live out reality on this promiscuous earth that is so dirty, filthy, and corrupted by Satan? Are not all humans corrupt and empty? In any case, My words have reached their pinnacle; no words can be more easily understood than these. Even an utter moron could read My words and understand them—so is it not simply that you have not put in enough effort?

Chapter 64

You must not understand My words in a skewed and fallacious way; you should understand them from all aspects, and try to fathom them more and deliberate on them repeatedly—not just for a day or a night. You do not know wherein My will lies or in what aspects I have paid a painstaking price; how can you show consideration for My will? This is how you people are—utterly incapable of delving into details, focusing only on the surface, and only capable of imitation. How can this be called spirituality? It is merely man's enthusiasm; it is something I do not commend and, moreover, something I detest. I say this to you: All things I detest must be eliminated, languish in calamity, and succumb to My burning and judgment. Otherwise, people will not know what it means to be fearful and will be so debauched, always seeing Me with human eyes—they are so foolish! The best way to rid yourselves of Satan's ideas is to get close to Me and communicate with Me. I would like you all to act in accordance with this rule so that you can avoid being judged and suffering loss in your life.

Humans are so hard to deal with, always under the control of outside people, events, and things, as well as their own notions. As a result, they are unable to bear good witness for Me and incapable of cooperating with Me very well. I am constantly supporting and fostering you, yet you are just not capable of doing your best to cooperate with Me. All of these things amply show your lack of understanding of Me. When the time comes—when you no longer have any doubts about Me at all—no one will be able to hinder you from walking the true way, and no human notions shall have dominion over you. Why do I say this? Do you truly understand the meaning of My utterances? Only when I clarify words like these do you gain a little understanding. People are just so stupid and weak in the head. Only when the needle hits the bone do they begin to feel the slightest pain. That is, only when My words point out the source of your sickness are you completely convinced. Nevertheless, you are still at times unwilling to put My words into practice or to know yourselves. Why, at this point, have you still not perceived how difficult humans are to deal with? Is it that My words are not obvious or transparent enough? What I want is for you to cooperate with Me, both earnestly and sincerely; whether or not you speak any pleasant-sounding words, as long as you are willing to cooperate with Me and can sincerely worship Me, you will come under My protection. Even if this kind of person is very ignorant, I will enlighten them so that they may cast off their ignorance. This is because My actions are necessarily in line with My words; I am the Almighty God who never makes a promise He cannot keep.

I will immediately reveal My will to the churches and all the firstborn sons, and never again will anything be hidden, for the day in which all is revealed has arrived. That is, the word “hidden” will, from now on, not be used again, much less will anything hidden continue to exist. All hidden people, events, and things will certainly be exposed one by one. I am the wise God who wields full authority. All events, all things, and every single person are held within My hands. I take My own steps to uncover them, and I will uncover them all one by one, in an orderly fashion. As for any who dare to wheedle Me or try to conceal anything from Me, I will ensure that they never rise again. I will take action in this manner so that it is all evident for you to see. Take a clear look! The painstaking price I have paid has not been in vain; it will bear fruit. Whosoever does not heed or obey will immediately encounter My judgment. Who still dare go against Me? You must all obey Me. I tell you this: All that I say and do, and every action, idea, thought, and design I have today, are all completely correct; they leave man absolutely no room for any further consideration. Why do I say to you over and over that all you need to do is to follow, and that there is no need to think about it any further? It is for this reason. Do you still need Me to clarify it?

Your notions have dominion over you, yet you do not think that it is because you yourselves have not put in enough effort. Instead, you look to Me for causes, saying that I have not enlightened you. What kind of talk is this? You yourselves take no responsibility and are always complaining to Me. I am warning you! If you carry on this way, continuing not to pay any price at all, then you will be cast away! I do not talk big all day to intimidate you. This is indeed a fact: I do what I say. As soon as the words leave My mouth, they immediately begin to be fulfilled. Before, the words I uttered were fulfilled slowly; now, though, things are different and will no longer happen slowly anymore. To put it clearly, I no longer push or coax; instead, I spur and force you along. To say it even more plainly, those who can keep up will do so, while those who cannot keep up, and who cannot continue forward, will be cast out. I used to try to speak to you patiently in every way possible, but you simply did not listen. Now that the work has continued up to this stage, what will you do? Are you really going to continue indulging yourselves? Such people cannot be made complete, but will be surely cast out by Me!

My words are always striking home at your vulnerabilities, that is, they point out your fatal weaknesses; otherwise, you would still be dragging your heels, with no idea of what time it is just now. Know this! I use the way of love to save you. No matter how you act, I will certainly complete the things that I have approved, and not make any mistakes whatsoever. Can I, the righteous Almighty God, possibly make a mistake? Is that not a human notion? Tell Me: Is everything I do and say not for your sakes? Some people will humbly say, "Oh God! Everything You do is for us, but we don't know how to act in concert with You." Such ignorance! You even go so far as to say that you do not know how to cooperate with Me! These are all shameful lies! Given that you have voiced such things, why, in actual fact, do you repeatedly show consideration for the flesh? Your words sound good, but you do not act in an easy and pleasant manner. You must understand this: I do not ask much of you today, nor are My requirements beyond your grasp; rather, they are achievable by humans. I do not overestimate you in the least. Am I not aware of the extent of man's capabilities? I have a perfectly clear understanding of it.

My words constantly enlighten you, yet your hearts are too hardened, and you are unable to grasp My will within your spirits! Tell Me: How many times have I reminded you not to focus on food, clothing, or your appearance, and instead to focus on your inner lives? You simply will not listen. I am sick of speaking. Is this how numb you have become? Are you utterly senseless? Could it be that My words have been spoken in vain? Have I said anything wrong? My sons! Be considerate of My earnest intentions! Once your lives have matured, there will be no further need to worry, and everything will be provided. There is no value in focusing on those things right now. My kingdom has been thoroughly realized, and it has publicly come down into the world; this signifies all the more that My judgment has completely arrived. Have you experienced it? I am loath to judge you, but you show My heart no consideration whatsoever. It is My wish that you will constantly be granted the care and protection of My love, rather than merciless judgment. Could it be that you are willing to be judged? If not, then why do you not repeatedly get close to Me, fellowship with Me, and have association with Me? You treat Me so coldly, yet when Satan gives you ideas, you feel elated, thinking that they tally with your own will—yet nothing you do is for My sake. Do you desire to always treat Me so cruelly?

It is not that I do not wish to give to you, but that you are not willing to pay the price. As such, you are empty-handed, holding nothing at all. Do you not see how quickly the work of the Holy Spirit is progressing? Do you not see that My heart burns with anxiety? I ask you to cooperate with Me, but you remain unwilling. All manner of disasters will befall, one after another; all nations and places will experience calamities: Plague, famine, flood, drought, and earthquakes are everywhere. These disasters are not just happening in one or two places, nor will they be over within a day or two; rather, instead they will expand across a greater and greater area, and become more and more severe. During this time, all manner of insect plagues will arise one after another, and the phenomenon of cannibalism will occur everywhere. This is My judgment upon all nations and peoples. My sons! You must not suffer the pain or hardship of disasters. It is My wish that you will soon come of age and, as quickly as possible, take up the burden that lies on My shoulders. Why do you not understand My will? The work ahead will grow more and more strenuous. Are you so hard-hearted as to leave Me with My hands full, having to work so arduously on My own? I will put it more plainly: Those whose lives mature will enter refuge, and not suffer pain or hardship; those whose lives do not mature must suffer pain and harm. My words are clear enough, are they not?

My name must extend in all directions and to all places, so that everyone may know My holy name and know Me. People of all walks of life in the US, Japan, Canada, Singapore, the Soviet Union, Macau, Hong Kong, and other countries will immediately crowd into China together, searching for the true way. My name has already been testified to them; all that remains is for you to mature as soon as possible, so that you may shepherd and lead them. This is why I say that there is even more work to be done. My name will circulate widely in the wake of the disasters, and if you are not careful, you will lose your rightful share. Are you not afraid? My name extends out to all religions, all walks of life, all nations, and all denominations. This is My work being done in an orderly way, in close linkage; it all happens by My wise arrangement. I would only wish that you are able to advance with every step, closely following My footsteps.

Chapter 66

My work has continued up to this stage, and all of it has followed the wise arrangements of My hand, and it has all been a great success of Mine. Who among humanity could do such a thing? Is it not instead the case that people interrupt My management? Nevertheless, you must know that no one can do My work in My stead, much less obstruct it, as there is not a single person who can say or do the things that I do and say. Though this is the case, people still do not know Me, I who am the wise, Almighty God! Externally, you would not dare to openly defy Me, yet in your hearts and in your minds, you set yourselves against Me. Fools! Do you not know that I am the God who watches man's innermost heart? Do you not know that I watch your every word and deed? I say to you this: Gentle words will never again be uttered from My lips. Instead, Mine will all be words of stern judgment, and I will see whether you can endure them or not. From now on, those whose hearts are not close to Me—meaning, those who have no sincere love for Me—are those who openly defy Me.

Today, the work of the Holy Spirit has come to a point at which the previous method will no longer be used; instead, a new method is being implemented. Those who do not cooperate with Me positively and actively will fall into Hades, an abyss of death (and these people will suffer perdition forever). The new method is as follows: If your heart and mind are not right, then My judgment shall befall you immediately. This includes clinging to the world, wealth, your family, husband, wife, children, parents, eating and drinking, clothing, and all such things that are not part of the spiritual realm. The enlightenment of the saints will become increasingly visible; that is, feelings of life will become ever more obvious, and will be constantly in motion. Anyone who causes the slightest interruption will suffer a disastrous tumble, falling far behind on the racetrack of life. Those who are indifferent, who do not seek with devotion, I will abandon utterly, and I will ignore them all without exception. They will be made to languish in disasters for a thousand years. As for those who seek ardently—that is, those who are always causing interruptions—I shall cast off their ignorance and make them loyal to Me. Furthermore, they shall have wisdom and intelligence, and will thereby seek with even greater faith. I double My blessings upon all of My firstborn sons, and My love comes upon you at all times. I am always looking after you and protecting you, and I will not allow you to fall into Satan’s net. I have begun to launch My work amongst all peoples; that is, I have added another work project. These are the ones who will render service to Christ for a thousand years, and vast numbers of people will throng into My kingdom.

My sons, you must intensify your training. There is much work awaiting you, work which you must undertake and complete. I only wish for you to hurry up and mature, so that you may finish the work with which I have entrusted you. This is your sacred responsibility, and it is the duty that should be done by you who are My firstborn sons. I will protect you until you reach the end of the path, and I will safeguard you so that you may enjoy bliss alongside Me forever! Every one of you should have insight into the fact that I have arranged many sacrifices and many environments, all in order to perfect you. You know that these are all My blessings, do you not? You are all My beloved sons. As long as you love Me sincerely, I will forsake not one of you—though this depends on whether or not you are able to cooperate harmoniously with Me.

Chapter 67

My sons appear in the open and before all peoples. I shall severely chastise any who dare openly defy them; that is certain. Today, all those who are able to rise up and shepherd the church have attained the status of firstborn son, and are now with Me in glory—all that is Mine is also yours. I bestow ample grace upon all those who submit to Me in earnest, that you may become mighty, beyond the strength of other men. My will in its entirety goes out to you, firstborn sons, and I wish only for you to mature as soon as possible and complete that which I have entrusted to you. Know this! That with which I entrust you is the final project of My management plan. I hope only for you to be able to offer up your entire being to Me, with all your heart, mind, and strength, and to expend it all for Me. Time truly waits for no man, and no person, event, or thing can hinder My work. Know this! My work progresses smoothly, without hindrance, at every step.

My footsteps tread across the universe and to the ends of the earth, My eyes are examining every single person constantly, and, moreover, I watch the universe as a whole. My words are actually at work in every corner of the universe. Whosoever dares not render service for Me, whosoever dares be disloyal to Me, whosoever dares render judgment upon My name, and whosoever dares revile and slander My sons—those truly capable of such things must undergo severe judgment. My judgment will befall in its totality, which means that now is the era of judgment, and, through careful observation, you will find that My judgment extends throughout the universe world. Of course, My house will not be exempt; judgment will come to those whose thoughts, words, or actions do not conform to My will. Understand this! My judgment is directed at the entire universe world, not only at one group of people or things. Have you come to realize this? If, deep down, you are conflicted in your thoughts about Me, then you will be judged internally at once.

My judgment comes in all shapes and forms. Know this! I am the unique and wise God of the universe world! Nothing is beyond My power. My judgments are all revealed to you: If you are conflicted about Me in your thoughts, I will enlighten you, as a warning. If you do not listen, I will abandon you immediately (in this I am referring not to doubting My name, but to outward behaviors that relate to carnal pleasures). If your thoughts toward Me are defiant, if you complain to Me, if you repeatedly accept the ideas of Satan, and if you do not follow the feelings of life, then your spirit will be in darkness and your flesh will suffer pain. You must be closer to Me. You cannot possibly restore your normal condition in only one or two days, and your life will fall far behind visibly. As for those who are dissolute in speech, I shall discipline your mouths and tongues, and subject your tongues to being dealt with. Those who are unrestrainedly dissolute in deed, I shall warn you in your spirits, and I will severely chastise those who do not listen. Those who openly judge and defy Me, being those who display disobedience in word or deed, I shall utterly cast out and abandon them, causing them to perish and to lose the highest blessings; these are the ones who will be cast out after being chosen. Those who are ignorant, being those whose visions are not clear, I will yet enlighten them and save them; however, those who understand the truth yet do not practice it will be administered according to the aforesaid rules, whether they are ignorant or not. As for those people who have had errant intentions from the start, I shall make them forever unable to grasp reality, and, eventually, they shall gradually be cast out, one by one. Not one will remain, though they remain now by My arrangement (for I do not do things hastily, but in an orderly fashion).

My judgment is completely revealed; it addresses various people, who must all take their proper places. I will administer and judge people according to which rules they have broken. As for those who are not in this name and do not accept Christ of the last days, only one rule applies: I shall immediately take the spirits, souls, and bodies of any who defy Me and cast them into Hades; whoever does not defy Me, I shall wait for you to mature before carrying out a second judgment. My words explain everything with absolute clarity, and nothing is hidden. I hope only that you are able to keep them in mind at all times!

My word is being implemented in every country, place, nation, and denomination, and it is being fulfilled in every corner at any given time. The disasters that occur everywhere are not battles between people, nor are they fights with weapons. Afterward, there will be no more wars. All are within My grasp. All will face My judgment and languish amidst disaster. Let those who resist Me, as well as those who do not take the initiative to cooperate with Me, suffer the pain of various disasters; let them weep and gnash their teeth into eternity, remaining in darkness forever. They will not survive. I act with straightforwardness and agility, and I give no consideration to how faithful you have been to Me in the past; as long as you resist Me, My hand of judgment will unleash swift wrath upon you, without any delay whatsoever—not even a second—and without a shred of mercy. I have been saying all along that I am the God who keeps His word. Every word I utter will be fulfilled, and I will make you see each of them. This is what is truly meant by entering reality in everything.

Great disasters will certainly not befall My sons, My loved ones; I will look after My sons at every moment and in every second. You definitely will not have to endure such pain and suffering. Instead, the point of it is to perfect My sons, and to fulfill My word in them. As a result, you may recognize My omnipotence, further grow in life, shoulder burdens for Me sooner, and devote your entire selves toward the completion of My management plan. You should rejoice with gladness and happiness because of this. I will hand over everything to you, allowing you to take control; I will place it in your hands. If it is true that a son inherits his father's entire estate, then how much truer will this be for you, My firstborn sons? You are truly blessed. Rather than suffer from the great disasters, you will enjoy everlasting blessings. What glory! What glory!

Increase your pace, and follow My footsteps everywhere and at all times; do not fall behind. Let your hearts follow My heart, and let your minds follow My mind. Cooperate with Me and be as one in heart and mind. Eat with Me, live with Me, and enjoy with Me. Wonderful blessings are waiting for you to enjoy and to take. Such incomparable abundance exists within Me. Not even a little of it has been prepared for anyone else; I do this entirely for My sons.

At present, what I have in My mind is what will be fulfilled. By the time I have finished speaking to you, those matters will have already been completed. The work truly proceeds that quickly, and it is changing at every moment. If your attention wanders for even an instant, a "centrifugal" phenomenon will occur, and you will be cast a great distance away, thus departing this stream. If you do not seek in earnest, you will cause My painstaking efforts to be made in vain. In the future, people from various nations will crowd in at any time: At your current level, will you be able to lead them? I will thoroughly train you to become good soldiers within this short period of time in order to fulfill My commission. I wish for you to glorify My name in all respects, and to bear wonderful testimonies for Me. Let those whom they despised stand above them today, to lead and govern them. Do you comprehend My intentions? Have you realized the painstaking efforts I have made? I do this all for you. It just depends on whether or not you are able to enjoy My blessings.

I, the God who searches the mind and heart of humanity, travel to the ends of the earth. Who would dare not render service for Me? Tensions run high among all nations, and they struggle bitterly; in the end, however, they will not escape My grasp. I will surely not let them off easily. I will bring them to judgment one by one according to their actions, earthly statuses, and earthly pleasures. I will spare none. My wrath has begun to be revealed, and it will all rain down upon them. All will be fulfilled in them one by one, and they will have brought all of this upon themselves. People who failed to know Me or despised Me in the past will now face My judgment. As for those who have persecuted My sons, I will particularly chastise them in accordance with their past words and actions. I will not spare even the children; all these people are Satan's ilk. Even if they say and do nothing, if, deep down, they harbor hate for My sons, I will not spare a single one of them. I will make them all see that we—this group of people—reign and hold power today; it is certainly not they. For this reason, it is even more crucial that you devote your uttermost strength and expend yourselves in earnest for Me, so that you may glorify and bear witness for My name in every place, corner, religion, and denomination, and spread it to the entire universe and the ends of the earth!

Chapter 69

When My will issues forth, whosoever dares to resist and whosoever dares to judge or doubt, I shall immediately purge. Today, whosoever does not act in accordance with My will, or whosoever mistakes My will, must be cast out and discarded from My kingdom. In My kingdom there is no one else; all are My sons—the people whom I love and who are considerate toward Me. Furthermore, they are the ones who act according to My word and are able to reign in power to judge all nations and all peoples on My behalf. Moreover, they are a group of firstborn sons who are innocent and lively, simple and open, and both honest and wise. My will is satisfied in you, and that which I wish to do is fulfilled in you, free of error, entirely open and revealed. Those who have the wrong intents and purposes, I have begun to abandon, and I will cause them to fall, one by one. I will destroy them one at a time to the point where they cannot survive—and all this refers to their spirits, their souls, and their bodies.

Understand that the actions of My hand—supporting the poor, caring for and protecting those who love Me, saving the ignorant and zealous who do not interfere with My management, punishing those who resist Me and those who do not actively cooperate with Me—all these things shall be confirmed one by one, in accordance with

My utterances. Are you one who truly loves Me? Are you one who faithfully expends yourself for Me? Are you one who listens to My word and acts accordingly? Are you one who is against Me, or are you one who is compatible with Me? Deep down, do you have a clear idea of these things? Can you answer each of the things I have said? If you cannot, then you are someone who seeks with enthusiasm but does not understand My will. Such people will most easily interfere with My management and mistake My will. If they have the wrong intention even for a moment, they will be subjected to My purging and destruction.

In Me, there are endless mysteries, which are unfathomable. I will reveal them to the people one by one, in accordance with My plan. That is, I will reveal them to My firstborn sons. Those who are unbelievers and who resist Me, I will simply allow to go with the flow; in the end, however, I must make them understand that I am majesty and judgment. The unbelievers of today only have knowledge of what happens in front of their eyes, yet they do not know My will. Only My sons—the people whom I love—know and understand My will. To My sons, I am openly revealed; to Satan, I am majesty and judgment, and not hidden at all. These days, only My firstborn sons are worthy of knowing My will; no one else qualifies—and all of this I had prearranged prior to creation. Early on, I properly arranged who would be blessed and who would be scourged; I was clear about this, and today it has already been fully manifested: Those who are blessed have begun to enjoy their blessings, while those who are scourged have begun to suffer disaster. Those who do not wish to be scourged will be nevertheless, for this is what I ordained and what My hands of administrative decrees have arranged. Precisely what kind of person is blessed, and what kind of person is scourged? I have already revealed these things; this is not a mystery to you, instead it is out in the open: Those who accept Me but who have the wrong intentions; those who accept Me but do not seek Me; those who know Me but do not submit to Me; those who engage in crookedness and treachery to deceive Me; those who read My words but spew negativity, and those who do not know themselves, who do not know what they are, who think themselves as great, and who assume that they have reached maturity (the example of Satan)—all such people are objects of scourging. Those who accept Me and whose intentions are for My sake (and, if they cause interruptions, I will not remember their transgressions—but their intentions must be right, and they must always be cautious, careful, and not dissolute; and they must always harbor the will to listen to Me and submit to Me); those who are pure; those who are open; those who are honest; those who are not controlled by any person, thing, or matter; and those who are childlike in appearance despite being mature in life—these ones are My beloved, the objects of My blessings. Now, each of you shall take your proper place according to your condition. Moreover, you will know whether you are blessed or scourged; there is no need for Me to say it plainly. Those who are blessed should rejoice and be happy, while those who are to suffer scourging should not be distressed. Both have been arranged by My hand, though I am not to blame: It is your own lack of active cooperation with Me, as well as your failure to understand that I am the God who searches the innermost heart of man. This is what I have determined in advance, and you have harmed yourself through your own petty trickery; you brought this upon yourself! That you should fall into Hades is not mistreatment of you! This is your end; this is your outcome!

Blessed firstborn sons! Rise up quickly and cheer! Rise up quickly and give praise! From now on, there will be no more bitterness and no more suffering; everything is in our hands. Anyone whose thoughts are completely attuned with Mine is a person whom I love, and will not have to suffer disaster. Whatever is your heart's desire, I will fulfill it (though it cannot be arbitrary); this is My work.

Chapter 70

That My mysteries are revealed and openly manifest, and no longer hidden, is entirely due to My grace and mercy. Moreover, that My word appears among men, and is no longer concealed, is also due to My grace and mercy. I love all who sincerely expend themselves for Me and devote themselves to Me. I hate all who are born of Me yet who do not know Me, and even resist Me. I will not abandon anyone who is sincerely for Me; rather, I will double that person's blessings. I will doubly punish those who are ungrateful and violate My kindness, and I will not let them off easily. In My kingdom there is no crookedness or deceit, and no worldliness; that is, there is no smell of the dead. Rather, all is rectitude and righteousness; all is purity and openness, with nothing hidden or concealed. Everything is fresh, everything is enjoyment, and everything is edification. Anyone who still reeks of the dead can in no way remain in My kingdom, and will instead be ruled by My iron rod. All endless mysteries, from time immemorial to the present day, are fully revealed to you—the group of people who are gained by Me in the last days. Do you not feel blessed? The days when all is openly revealed are, moreover, the days in which you share My reign.

The group of people who truly reign as kings depend upon My predestination and selection, and there is absolutely no human will within it. Anyone daring to take part in this must suffer a blow from My hand, and such people will be objects of My raging fire; this is another side of My righteousness and majesty. I have said that I rule all things, I am the wise God who wields full authority, and I am lenient to no one; I am utterly ruthless, completely devoid of personal feelings. I treat anyone (no matter how well he speaks, I will not let him off) with My righteousness, rectitude, and majesty, meanwhile enabling everyone to better see the wonder of My deeds, as well as what My deeds mean. One by one, I punished evil spirits for all manner of actions they commit, casting them each into the bottomless pit. This work I finished before time began, leaving them with no position, leaving them no place to do their work. None of My chosen people—those predestined and selected by Me—can ever be possessed by evil spirits, and will instead always be holy. As for those I have not predestined and selected, I will turn them over to Satan, and no longer allow them to remain. In all aspects, My administrative decrees involve My righteousness and My majesty. I will not let go of even a single one of those on whom Satan works, but cast them along with their bodies into Hades, for I hate Satan. I shall by no means spare it easily, but shall utterly destroy it, allowing it not the least opportunity to do its work. Those whom Satan has corrupted to a certain degree (that is, those who are objects of disaster) are under the wise arrangement of My own hand. Do not think this has happened as a result of Satan's ferocity; know that I am Almighty God that rules the universe and all things! For Me, there are no problems that cannot be resolved, and much less is there anything that cannot be accomplished or any word that cannot be uttered. Humans must not act as My advisers. Beware of being struck down by My hand and cast into Hades. I tell you this! Those who are proactively cooperating with Me today are the smartest ones, and they will avoid losses and escape the pain of judgment. All of these are My arrangements, predestined by Me. Make no indiscreet remarks and do not speak bombastically, thinking you are so great. Is all of this not through My predestination? You, who would be My advisers, know no shame! You know not your own stature; how pathetically small it is! Even so, you think this is no great matter, and do not know yourselves. Time after time, you turn a deaf ear to My words, causing My painstaking efforts to be in vain and not at all realizing that they are manifestations of My grace and mercy. Rather, you try to show off your own cleverness again and again. Do you remember this? What chastisement must people receive, who think they are so smart? Indifferent and unfaithful to My words, and not engraving them in your hearts, you use Me as a pretense to do this and that. Evildoers! When will you be able to fully consider My heart? You have no consideration for it, so calling you "evildoers" is not a mistreatment of you. It fits you perfectly!

Today I am showing you, one by one, things that were once hidden. The great red dragon is cast into the bottomless pit and utterly destroyed, for keeping it would be of no use at all; this means it cannot do service for Christ. Hereafter, red things will no longer exist; gradually, they must waste away to nothing. I do what I say; this is the completion of My work. Remove human notions; everything I have said, I have done. Whoever tries to be clever is just bringing destruction and contempt upon themselves, and does not want to live. Therefore, I will satisfy you, and will definitely not keep such people. Hereafter, the population will increase in excellence, whereas all who do not proactively cooperate with Me will be swept away into nothingness. Those of whom I have approved are the ones I shall perfect, and I shall not cast away a single one. There are no contradictions in what I say. Those who do not proactively cooperate with Me will suffer more chastisement, although, ultimately, I will surely save them. By that time, however, the extent of their lives will be quite different. Do you want to be such a person? Rise up and cooperate with Me! I certainly will not treat shabbily any who sincerely expend themselves for Me. As for those who devote themselves to Me in earnest, I shall bestow all My blessings upon you. Offer up yourself entirely to Me! What you eat, what you wear, and your future are all in My hands; I will arrange everything properly, so that you can have endless enjoyment, which you will never use up. This is because I have said, “To those who sincerely expend for Me, I shall surely bless you greatly.” All blessings will come to every person who sincerely expends himself for Me.

I have made all of Myself manifest to you all, but why can you not ponder My words with the entirety of your heart and soul? Why do you take My words to be rubbish? Is what I say incorrect? Have My words struck at your vulnerabilities? You are continually delaying and hesitating. Why do you act this way? Have I not spoken clearly? I have said, so many times, that My words should be pondered carefully, and that you should pay close attention to them. Are any of you obedient and submissive children? Have My words been in vain? Have they had no effect at all? How much of you can conform to My will? If, even for a moment, you go without being spoken to, then you will become dissolute and uncontrolled. If I do not state clearly how to act and speak, then could it be that deep down you will have no idea? Let Me tell you! One who suffers losses is one who is disobedient, who does not submit, and who foolishly believes! People who do not pay attention to what I say and cannot grasp the details will not be able to fathom My intentions, nor will they be able to serve Me. People like these will be dealt with by Me and meet My judgment. To not grasp the details is to be extremely audacious, as well as willfully rash; I therefore hate such people, and will not go easy on them. I will show them no mercy; I will only show them My majesty and judgment. See, then, if you still dare to deceive Me. I am the God who examines the innermost depths of the human heart. This point should be evident to everyone; otherwise, they will just go about their work in a casual manner and deal with Me perfunctorily. This is the reason some people unwittingly get struck down by Me. I have said that I will not treat anyone unjustly, that I do no wrong, and that all My actions are done by the wise arrangements of My hand.

My judgment has fallen upon all people who do not truly love Me. It is precisely at this time that it becomes clear whom I have predestined and selected, and who is to be cast out. These will all be revealed, one by one, and nothing will remain hidden. All people, events, and things stand and exist to bring My words to fulfillment, and are all busy making true the words uttered from My mouth. The universe and the ends of the earth are controlled by Me alone. I must smite anyone who dares to disobey My words or refuse to enact My deeds, causing that person to sink down to Hades and cease to exist. All of My words are fitting and proper, and completely devoid of impurity. Can your manner of speaking resemble Mine? You are so long-winded; you make no sense, and do not explain yourselves clearly—yet, still, you think you have gained some things, and that you have almost gotten it. Let Me tell you! The more self-satisfied people are, the further they are from meeting My standards. They show no consideration for My will, and they cheat Me and dishonor My name most severely! How shameless! You do not look at what sort of stature you yourself have. How foolish and ignorant you are!

My words are constantly, and in all respects, pointing things out. Can it be that you still do not get it? Do you still not understand? Is it your intention to disappoint Me? Pick up your spirits, and drum up your courage. I do not treat shabbily a single person who loves Me. I examine the innermost depths of the human heart, and I know everything that exists in the hearts of all people. All these things will be revealed, one by one, and they will all be examined by Me. Never will I overlook a single one of those who truly love Me; they are all recipients of blessings, and are the group of firstborn sons whom I have predestined to be kings. As for those who do not truly love Me, they are the targets of their own ruses, and will suffer misfortune; this, too, has been predestined by Me. Do not worry; I will reveal them one by one. I have prepared this work well in advance, and I have already begun doing it. It is all being done in an orderly manner; it is not at all chaotic. I have already decided who is to be chosen and who is to be cast out. One by one, they will all be revealed for you to see. During these times, you will see what My hand is doing. All people will see that My righteousness and majesty allow no offense or resistance from anyone, and that whoever offends will be severely punished.

I am the One who constantly searches the innermost depths of everyone's heart. Do not see Me only from the outside. Blind people! You do not listen to the words that I have spoken so clearly, and you simply do not believe Me—the complete God Himself. I will certainly not tolerate anyone who dares to wheedle Me or conceal anything from Me.

Do you remember each one of My utterances? "Seeing Me is the same as seeing every single hidden mystery from everlasting to everlasting." Have you pondered this statement carefully? I am God, and My mysteries have been displayed for you to see. Have you not seen them? Why do you pay no attention to Me? And why do you so worship that vague God that is in your mind? How could I—the one true God—do anything wrong? Get this through your heads! Be certain of it! My every word and action, My every deed and every move, My smiling, My eating, My clothing, My everything is done by God Himself. You judge Me: Could it be that you had already seen God before My arrival? If not, then why are you always making mental comparisons between Me and your God? It is completely a product of human notions! My actions and behaviors do not conform to your imaginations, do they? I do not allow any person to opine whether or not My actions and behaviors are correct. I am the one true God, and this is the unalterable, incontrovertible truth! Do not fall victim to your own ruses. My words have pointed this out with absolute clarity. There is not a speck of humanity in Me; all of Me is God Himself, fully made manifest to you, with not a single thing hidden!

Chapter 72

If you discover any shortcoming or weakness in yourself, you must immediately rely on Me to rid you of it. Do not delay; otherwise, the work of the Holy Spirit will be too far away from you, and you will fall very far behind. The work that I have entrusted to you can be accomplished only by frequently drawing close, praying, and having fellowship in My presence. If you do not do these things, then no results will be achieved, and all will have been done in vain. My work today is not the same as in the past; the extent of life in the people I love is greatly different from what it was before. They all have a clear understanding of My words, as well as a penetrating insight into them. This is the most obvious aspect, which is most capable of reflecting the wonder of My work. My work's pace has accelerated, and this work certainly is different from the past. It is difficult for people to imagine and, moreover, impossible for them to fathom. Nothing is a mystery to you anymore; instead, all has been made known and manifest. It is transparent, it is released, and, what is more, it is completely free. Those whom I love will definitely not be restricted by any person, event, or thing, nor by any space or geography; they will transcend the control imposed by all environments and emerge from the flesh. This is the completion of My great work. There will be nothing more to do afterward; it will be completely finished.

The completion of the great work is mentioned in reference to all of the firstborn sons and to all of the people whom I love. Hereafter, you will not be controlled by any person, event, or thing. You will travel throughout the various nations of the universe, traversing the entire cosmos and leaving your footprints everywhere. Do not consider this to be a long way off; it is something that will come true, very soon, right in front of your eyes. What I do will be entrusted to you, and the places I tread will have your footprints. Moreover, this is the true meaning of us—you and Me—reigning as kings together. Have you pondered why it is that the revelations I grant are growing ever clearer, and more and more obvious, without being hidden in the slightest? Why have I borne highest witness and told all these mysteries and all these words to you? The reason is none other than the aforementioned work. However, the progress of your work, at present, is too slow. You are not able to keep up with My strides, you cannot cooperate with Me very well, and, for now, you are still incapable of achieving My will. I must train you more intensely and speed up My completion of you, so that you can bring satisfaction to My heart as soon as possible.

Currently, the most obvious thing is that the group of firstborn sons has completely formed. All were approved by Me, and have even been predestined and chosen by Me since the creation of the world. Each one was promoted by My own hand. There is no room for any human consideration in this. It is beyond your control. Do not be proud; it is all My kindness and compassion. From My perspective, everything has already been accomplished. It is simply that your eyes are too blurred, and even now, you are unable to gain a clear view of the wonder of My deeds. None of you possesses a perfectly clear or true understanding of My omnipotence, My wisdom, My every action, or My every word and deed. For this reason, I speak clearly. For My sons, My beloved, I am willing to pay all costs, to toil, and to expend Myself. Do you know Me through My words? Do you need Me to voice them more clearly? Be not dissolute anymore; show consideration for My heart! Now that such a great mystery has been told to you, what do you have to say? Do you still have any complaints? If you do not pay the price and work hard, then can you be worthy of all the painstaking effort I have gone to?

People nowadays cannot control themselves. Love for Me cannot arise in those I do not favor even if they want it to. The people whom I have predestined and chosen, however, will not be able to escape, though they may want to; no matter where they go, they cannot evade My hand. Such is My majesty and, even more so, My judgment. All people must go about their affairs according to My plan and My will. From this day forth, absolutely everything comes back to My hand and is beyond their control. Everything is controlled and arranged by Me. If people participate in a small way, I will not let them go lightly. Starting today, I will let all people begin to know Me—the only true God, who created everything, who came among humans and was rejected and slandered by them, and who controls and arranges everything in its entirety; the King who is in charge of the kingdom; the God Himself who manages the cosmos; and, moreover, the God who controls the life and death of humans and who holds the key of Hades. I will let all humans (adults and children, whether they have spirits or not, and whether or not they are fools or have disabilities, etc.) know Me. I will not excuse anyone from this task; it is the most severe work, a task that I have well prepared and one that is being carried out, beginning right now. What I say shall be done. Open up your spiritual eyes, drop your individual notions, and recognize that I am the only true God who administers the universe! I am hidden from no one, and I carry out My administrative decrees upon everyone.

Put aside all of your own things. Are not the things that you gain from Me of greater value, and much more significant? Is there not a world of difference between them and that junk of yours? Hurry up and dump everything that is of no use! It is being decided right now whether you will gain blessings or meet with misfortune. This is a crucial moment; it is even a most critical moment. Are you truly able to see this?

Chapter 73

My words are fulfilled as soon as I have spoken them; they never change, and are absolutely correct. Remember this! You must carefully consider each and every word and phrase that issues forth from My mouth. Be extra careful, lest you suffer loss and receive only My judgment, My wrath, and My incineration. My work is now moving along at a very quick pace, though it is not sketchy; it is so subtly refined that it is practically invisible to the naked eye, and cannot be grasped by human hands. It is especially meticulous. I never utter empty words; everything I say is true. You should believe that My every word is genuine and accurate. Do not be careless; this is a crucial moment! Whether you will obtain blessings or misfortune will be decided in this very moment, and the difference is like that between heaven and earth. Whether you will go to heaven or Hades is totally in My control. Those headed for Hades are engaging in their last dying struggle, while those going to heaven are engaged in their final bit of suffering and expending for Me for the final time. In the future, everything they do will involve enjoyment and praise, without all the trivial things that trouble people (marriage, work, troublesome wealth, status, and so forth). However, as for those going to Hades, their suffering is eternal (this refers to their spirits, souls, and bodies); they will never escape from My hand of punishment. These two sides are as incompatible as fire and water. They are not at all mixed together: Those who suffer misfortune will keep suffering misfortune, while those who are blessed will meet with enjoyment to their hearts' content.

All events and things are controlled by Me, not to mention that even more so, you—My sons, My beloved—belong to Me. You are the crystallization of My six-thousand-year management plan; you are My treasures. All those I love are pleasing to My eyes, for they manifest Me; all those I hate, I despise without even looking at them, for they are Satan's descendants and belong to Satan. Today, people should all examine themselves: If your intentions are right, and you genuinely love Me, then you will surely be loved by Me. You must truly love Me, and not deceive Me! I am the God who examines people's innermost hearts! If your intentions are wrong, and you are cold and disloyal toward Me, then you are sure to be loathed by Me; I neither chose you nor preordained you. Just keep waiting for when you go to hell! Other people might not be able to see these things, but only you and I, the God who looks deep into people's hearts, know them. They shall all be revealed at a certain time. The sincere need not be anxious, and the insincere need not be afraid. This is all part of My wise arrangements.

The task at hand is urgent and onerous, and it requires that you expend for Me one last time to complete this final work. My requirements are not actually very demanding: I simply need you to be able to do a good job of coordinating with Me, to satisfy Me in everything, and to follow the guidance I give you from within. Do not be blind; have a goal, and feel out My intentions from all aspects and in everything. This is because I am no longer a hidden God to you, and you must be very clear about this in order to understand My intentions. In a very short period of time, you will not only meet with foreigners who seek the true way, but, more importantly, you must have the ability to shepherd them. That is My urgent intention; it will not do if you cannot see this. However, you must believe in My omnipotence. As long as people are right, I will certainly train them to be good soldiers. Everything has been appropriately arranged by Me. You must aspire to suffer for Me. This is the key moment. Do not miss it! I will not dwell on things you did in the past. You must pray and supplicate before Me often; I will bestow sufficient grace upon you for your enjoyment and use. Grace and blessings are not the same thing. What you are enjoying right now is My grace, and in My eyes, it is not worthy of mention, whereas blessings are what you shall enjoy infinitely in the future. They are blessings that have not occurred to people, and which they cannot imagine. This is the reason I say you are blessed, and these blessings have not been enjoyed by man, ever since creation.

I have already revealed My all to you. I only hope that you can be considerate of My heart, devote your thoughts to Me in everything you do, and be considerate toward Me in all respects, and what I always see are your smiling faces. From now on, those who gain the status of firstborn sons are the ones who shall reign as kings alongside Me. They shall not be bullied by any brother, nor shall they be chastened or dealt with by Me, for this is the principle by which I act: Those in the group of firstborn sons are people who have been looked down upon and been bullied by others, and who have suffered all the vicissitudes of life. (They have been dealt with and broken by Me in advance, and have also been made complete in advance.) These people have already enjoyed with Me, in advance, the blessings that are their due. I am righteous, and never partial to anyone.

Chapter 74

Blessed are those who have read My words and believe that they will be fulfilled. I will not at all mistreat you; I will have what you believe be fulfilled in you. This is My blessing coming upon you. My words strike home at the secrets hidden in every person; everyone has mortal wounds, and I am the good physician who heals them: Simply come into My presence. Why did I say that in the future there will be no more sorrow and no more tears? It is for this reason. In Me, everything is accomplished, but in humans, all things are corrupt, empty and deceitful to humans. In My presence, you are sure to gain all things, and you can definitely both see and enjoy all the blessings you could never have imagined. Those who do not come before Me are certainly rebellious, and are absolutely the ones who resist Me. I will certainly not let them off lightly; I will chastise such people severely. Remember this! The more people come before Me, the more they will gain—though it will just be grace. Later, they will receive even greater blessings.

Since the creation of the world, I have begun to predestine and select this group of people—namely, you of today. Your temperament, caliber, appearance, and stature, your family into which you were born, your job, and your marriage—you in your entirety, even including the color of your hair and your skin, and your time of birth—were all arranged by My hands. I arranged by hand even the things you do and the people you meet every single day, not to mention the fact that bringing you into My presence today was actually done by My arrangement. Do not throw yourself into disorder; you should proceed calmly. What I allow you to enjoy today is a share that you deserve, and it has been predestined by Me since the world's creation. Humans are all so extreme: They are either overly headstrong or utterly shameless. They are unable to go about things in accordance with My plan and arrangements. Do not do this any longer. In Me, all is emancipated; do not bind yourself, as there will be loss with respect to your life. Remember this!

Believe that everything is in My hands. What were considered mysteries to you in the past are all openly revealed today; they are no longer concealed (for I have said that in the future, nothing shall be hidden). People are often impatient; they are too anxious to complete things, and do not consider what is in My heart. I am training you so you may share My burden and manage My household. I want you to grow up quickly so that you will be able to lead your brothers who are younger than you, and so that we the Father and sons may be soon reunited, never to be apart again. This will fulfill My intentions. The mysteries have already been revealed to all people, and nothing at all remains hidden: I—the complete God Himself, who possesses both normal humanity and complete divinity—have been revealed, today, right in front of your eyes. My entire being (attire, outward appearance, and bodily form) is a perfect manifestation of God Himself; it is an embodiment of the person of God that men have imagined since the creation of the world, but whom no one has seen. The reason My actions are as good as My words is that My normal humanity and complete divinity complement one another; moreover, this allows all people to see a normal person actually holds such tremendous power. Those of you who truly believe in Me do so because I gave you each a genuine heart so that you could love Me. When I deal with you, I shed light on you and enlighten you, and it is through this that I allow you to know Me. As a result, regardless of how I deal with you, you will not run away; instead, you will become more and more certain of Me. When you are weak, this is also by My arrangement, and it allows you to see that if you leave Me, you will die and wither. From that you may learn that I am your life. As you become strong after having been weak, you will be allowed to see that being weak or strong is not up to you; it is totally up to Me.

All mysteries are completely revealed. In your future activities, I will give you My instructions, task by task. I will not be vague; I will be utterly explicit, and even speak to you directly; this is so that you need not reflect on things on your own, lest you disrupt My management. It is for this reason that I keep stressing, over and over, that nothing more will be hidden, from now on.

Chapter 75

All shall be fulfilled as soon as My words are spoken, without the slightest deviation. From now on, all hidden mysteries will not be obscured or concealed at all, and shall be revealed to you—My beloved sons. I shall make you see even greater signs and wonders in Me, and even greater mysteries. These things will surely astonish you and give you a better understanding of Me, the almighty God, and allow you to appreciate My wisdom therein. Today you are brought face to face with the one true God that humans have never seen since creation, and there is nothing special about Me. I eat, live, speak, and laugh with you, and I always live within you, while at the same time also moving amongst you. For those who do not believe or who have grievous notions of their own, this is a stumbling block. This is My wisdom. I shall also reveal some people on things My normal humanity does not know, but this does not mean that I am not God Himself. To the contrary, this point is sufficient to prove that I am the almighty God. For people who believe, this point has a decisive effect, and just because of this point they have one hundred percent certainty in Me. Do not be overly anxious; I shall reveal things to you one by one.

For you, I am open and not hidden. However, for unbelievers—those who are treacherous, who have been corrupted by Satan to a certain extent—I will remain hidden. However, when I spoke before of revealing Myself to all peoples, I was referring to My righteousness, judgment, and majesty, so that they would know from the outcome they receive that I am in charge of the universe and all things. Act courageously! Just keep your heads up! Do not be afraid: I—your Father—am here to support you, and you will not suffer. As long as you pray and supplicate before Me frequently, I will bestow all faith upon you. Those in power may seem vicious from the outside, but do not be afraid, for this is because you have little faith. As long as your faith grows, nothing will be too difficult. Cheer and jump to your hearts' content! Everything is beneath your feet and in My grasp. Is accomplishment or destruction not decided by one word of Mine?

Those I am using now were all approved by Me long ago, one by one. That is, those people in the group of firstborn sons have already been determined, and have been determined since I created the world. No one can change this, and all must be at My command. No human can do it; these are all My arrangements. With Me, everything shall be steady and secure; with Me, all shall be done appropriately and properly, without consuming the slightest effort. I speak and it is established; I speak and it is done. With the international situation in turmoil, why have you not rushed to begin your training? Until when will you wait? Will you wait until the day foreigners flood into China to meet with you? You may have been a little slow before, but you cannot continue to indulge yourselves! My sons! Be considerate of My painstaking intentions! Those who get close to Me more often will gain everything. Do you distrust Me?

The pace of My work is a flash of lightning, but certainly not the roaring sound of thunder. Do you understand the true meaning of these words? You must be able to better coordinate with Me and be considerate of My intentions. You want to receive blessings, but are also afraid of suffering; is this not your ambivalence? Let Me tell you! If one wishes to receive blessings today but does not make all sacrifices to that end, then all they shall receive is punishment and My judgment. However, those who make all sacrifices will experience peace in all things and have everything in abundance, and everything they receive will be My blessings. What is urgently needed today is your faith, and for you to pay a price. Do not misinterpret My intentions. Everything shall come to pass, and you shall see it with your own eyes and experience it personally. With Me, there is not one false word or lie; everything I say is completely true, and not lacking in wisdom. Do not half believe and half doubt. It is I who accomplish everything amongst you, and it is also I who judge and sort out those who do evil. I love you, and I make you perfect. To them, however, I am the complete opposite: hate and destruction, without any leeway and without leaving a trace. My abundance is inherent in everything I say and do. Have you examined them bit by bit? Some words I have said many times, so why do you not understand what I mean? After you read My words, will everything be just as it should be? Does everything then get accomplished? You do not have any intention of being considerate of My heart. Why do I say that I am the fully authoritative, all-wise, one true God who looks deep into people's hearts? Do you still not understand the meaning of these words? Have you memorized each of the words I have emphasized? Have they actually become the principles for how you act?

I stand above everything, observing the entire universe. I shall demonstrate My great power and all My wisdom to every nation and people. Do not simply do all you can to pursue enjoyment right now. When all the nations of the world unite, what will not be yours? Nevertheless, I will not let you be lacking now, nor will I allow you to suffer. Believe that I am the almighty God! Everything shall be accomplished and become better and better! My firstborn sons! All blessings will come to you! They will be enjoyed by you endlessly, inexhaustible in supply, rich and in abundance, and full in complement!

Chapter 76

My utterances are all expressions of My will. Who can be considerate of My burden? Who can understand My intention? Have you considered each of the questions I have raised with you? Such carelessness! How dare you disturb My plans? You are out of hand! If such work of evil spirits continues, I shall cast them to death immediately in the bottomless pit! I have long seen clearly the various deeds of evil spirits. And people used by evil spirits (those with wrong intentions, those who lust after flesh or wealth, those who exalt themselves, those who disrupt the church, etc.) have also each been seen through by Me. Do not assume that everything is finished once the evil spirits have been cast out. Let Me tell you! From now on, I shall dispose of these people one by one, never to use them! That is to say, any person corrupted by evil spirits shall not be used by Me, and will be kicked out! Do not think I do not have feelings! Know this! I am the holy God, and I will not reside in a filthy temple! I only use honest and wise people who are completely loyal to Me and can be considerate of My burden. This is because such people were predestined by Me, and absolutely no evil spirits are working on them at all. Let Me make one thing clear: From now on, all those without the work of the Holy Spirit have the work of evil spirits. Let Me reiterate: I do not want a single person whom evil spirits work on. They shall all be cast down into Hades along with their flesh!

My requirements of you in the past were a little loose, and you have been dissolute when it comes to the flesh. From this day forward, I will not allow you to keep going like this. If your words and actions do not manifest Me in every way, or if they even differ slightly from My likeness, then I will certainly not let you off lightly. Otherwise, you would always be laughing and joking, laughing your heads off, without restraint. When you do something wrong, do you not feel that I have left you? Since you do know, why are you still dissolute? Are you waiting for the touch of My hand of judgment? From today, I shall immediately punish anyone who does not accord with My intention for even a single moment. If you sit around together gossiping, then I shall leave you. Do not speak if you do not give spiritual supply. I say this not to restrain you, but I mean that since My work has progressed up to the point it is at now, I will continue in accordance with My plan. If you sit around together communicating about spiritual things in life, then I shall surely be with you. I will not treat any of you unfairly. If you open your mouth, I shall bestow upon you the appropriate words. You must appreciate My heart from within My words. I am not telling you to pretend to be mute, nor am I telling you to engage in small talk.

Why do I keep saying there is not much time left, and that My day must not be delayed? Have you thought about this carefully? Do you truly understand the meaning of My words? That is, I have been working ever since I began to speak. Each and every one of you has been the object of My work. Not any person in particular; and moreover, not anyone else. You only worry about not enjoying blessings, but you do not think upon your lives. How foolish you are! How pitiful you are! You are not considerate of My burden at all!

All My painstaking efforts and the price I have paid have been for your sake. If you are not considerate of My burden, then you have not lived up to My expectations of you. All nations are waiting for you to govern, and all peoples are waiting for you to rule over them. I have passed everything into your hands. Now, those in power have all begun to step down and have collapsed, and they are just waiting for My judgment to befall them. See clearly! The world is now falling apart, while My kingdom has been successfully built. My sons have appeared and My firstborn sons reign with Me as kings, ruling over various nations and peoples. Do not think this is a vague thing; it is the plain truth. Is it not? As soon as you pray and plead with Me, I shall take actions immediately and punish those who persecute you, deal with those who disturb you, destroy those you hate, and manage those people, events, and things that serve you. I have said it many times: I will not bring salvation to anyone who does service for Christ (that is, anyone who renders service for My Son). Doing service for My Son does not mean they are good people; it is entirely a result of My great power and wonderful deeds. Do not place too much importance upon humanity. Such people surely do not have the work of the Holy Spirit and do not understand spiritual things at all. They will be of no use after I finish with them. Remember this! This is My confirmation to you. Do not grasp about wildly, understand?

There are fewer and fewer people, but the members are ever more refined. This is My work, My management plan, and moreover My wisdom and My omnipotence. It is the coordination of My normal humanity and My complete divinity. Do you see this clearly? Do you have any real understanding of this point? One by one I shall accomplish, through My divinity, everything of which I have spoken from My normal humanity. This is why I keep reiterating that what I say shall come to pass without any ambiguity; rather, it will all be very clear and obvious. Everything I say shall be fulfilled, and certainly not carelessly. I do not speak empty words and I do not make mistakes. Whoever dares to measure Me shall be judged, and will surely not be able to escape the palm of My hand. As soon as My words are spoken, who dares to resist? Who dares to wheedle Me or conceal anything from Me? I have said it before: I am a wise God. I use My normal humanity to reveal all people and satanic behavior, expose those with wrong intentions, those who act one way in front of others and another behind their backs, those who resist Me, those who are disloyal to Me, those who lust after money, those who are not considerate of My burden, those who engage in deception and crookedness with their brothers and sisters, those who speak with a silver tongue to make people rejoice, and those who cannot coordinate with their brothers and sisters unanimously in heart and mind. So many people, because of My normal humanity, secretly resist Me and engage in deception and crookedness, assuming that My normal humanity does not know. And so many people pay special attention to My normal humanity, giving Me good things to eat and drink, serving Me like servants, and speaking what is in their hearts to Me, all the while acting completely differently behind My back. Blind humans! How little you know Me—the God who looks deep into the heart of man. You still do not know Me even now; you still think I am not aware of what you are doing. Think back: How many people have ruined themselves because of My normal humanity? Wake up! Do not deceive Me any longer. You must put all your conduct and behavior, your every word and deed before Me, and accept My scrutiny of it.

Chapter 77

Being uncertain of My words is tantamount to holding an attitude of denial toward My actions. That is, My words have flowed out from within My Son, yet you place no importance on them. You are so frivolous! Many words have flowed out from within My Son, yet you remain dubious and unsure. You are blind! You do not understand the purpose behind every single thing that I have done. Are the words I express through My Son not My own words? There are some things that I am not willing to voice directly, so I speak through My Son. Why, though, are you so absurd that you insist that I should speak directly? You do not understand Me, and you always have doubts about My acts and deeds! Have I not said before that My every move and My every act and deed are correct? People must stop scrutinizing them. Withdraw your filthy hands! Let Me tell you something: All the people I use were preordained back before I created the world, and they are also approved by Me today. You are constantly putting effort into such things, scrutinizing the person that I am and studying My actions. You all have a transaction mentality. If this occurs again, you shall certainly be struck down by My hand. What I am saying is this: Do not doubt Me, and do not analyze or ponder the things I have done. Much less should you meddle in such things, for this has to do with My administrative decrees. This is no small matter!

Seize what time you have to do all that I have instructed. Let Me say it again, and also as a warning: Foreigners are about to flood into China. This is absolutely the truth! I know that most people are dubious about this, and are not certain, so I remind you over and over so that you may quickly seek life growth and be able to satisfy My will sooner. From today forward, the international situation will grow even tenser, and various countries will begin to collapse from within. In China, happy days are at an end. This means that workers will go on strike, students will walk out on their classes, businessmen will stop doing business, and factories will all shut down and be unable to survive. Those cadres will begin to prepare funds to escape (this, too, will serve My management plan), and central government leaders at all levels will be too busy focusing on certain things at the expense of others as they all make preparations (this is to serve the next step). Take a good look! This is something that involves the entire universe, not just China, for My work is oriented toward the whole world. However, it is also in service of making kings out of the group of people who are the firstborn sons. Do you see this clearly? Hurry up and seek! I will not treat you unfairly; I will allow you to experience enjoyment to your hearts' content.

My actions are wondrous. As great disasters in the world unfold, and while all the evil-doers and rulers are receiving punishment—or to be more precise, when the evil-doers, who are all outside My name, suffer—I will begin to bestow My blessings upon you. This is the intrinsic meaning of the words, “You will certainly not suffer the pain or harm of the disasters,” which I have said repeatedly in the past. Do you understand this? “This time” I speak of refers to the time when the words issue forth from My mouth. The work of the Holy Spirit is done at a very rapid pace; I will not delay or waste a single minute or even a single second. Rather, I will act in accordance with My words at the very moment that they are spoken. If I say that today I am casting someone out, or that I despise someone, it will be over for that person instantly. In other words, My Holy Spirit will immediately be retrieved from them, and they will become the walking dead, utterly useless. Such people may still be breathing, walking, and talking, and may still pray before Me, but they will never realize that I have left them. They will be quintessentially useless people. This is absolutely true and genuine!

My words represent the human being that I am. Remember this! Do not doubt; you absolutely must be certain. This is a matter of life and death! This is extremely serious! At the very moment My words are spoken, what I want to do has already come to pass. All these words must be spoken through My Son. Who among you have given serious consideration to this matter? How else can I explain it? Stop being so frightened and timid all the time. Do I really have no consideration for the feelings of people? Will I casually cast out those of whom I approve? Everything I do is principled. I will not tear up the covenant I Myself established, nor will I disrupt My own plan. I am not naive like you. My work is a great thing; it is something that no human being can accomplish. I have said that I am righteous, and that to those who love Me, I am love. Do you not believe this is true? You continue to have misgivings! If you have a clear conscience about everything, then why are you still so afraid? It is all because you have bound yourself. My son! I have reminded you many times not to be sad or shed tears, and that I will not discard you. Are you still unable to trust Me? I will hold onto you and not let go; I will always embrace you in My love. I will look after you, protect you, and, in everything, give you revelations and insights so that you can see that I am your Father, and that I am the one who supports you. I know that you are always wondering how you can lighten the burden on your Father's shoulders. This is the burden I have given you. Do not try to shrug it off! How many people these days can be loyal to Me? I hope you can speed up your training and quickly grow up and satisfy My heart. The Father toils for the son day and night, so the son should also consider the Father's management plan, at every minute and at every second. This is the proactive cooperation with Me of which I used to speak.

All is My doing. I shall lay a burden on the people I use today and give them wisdom so that all their actions will conform to My will, so that My kingdom will be realized, and so that a new heaven and earth will emerge. The people I am not using are the complete opposite; they are always in a daze, they sleep after they eat, and they eat after they sleep, having no idea whatsoever what burden means. Such people lack the work of the Holy Spirit, and should be purged from My church as soon as possible. Now I will communicate some matters to do with visions: The church is a precondition to the kingdom; people can only enter the kingdom once the church has been built up to a certain extent. No one can enter the kingdom directly (if not promised by Me). The church is the first step, but it is the kingdom that is the goal of My management plan. Everything will take shape once people enter the kingdom, and there will be nothing to be afraid of. At present, only My firstborn sons and I have entered the kingdom and begun to govern all nations and peoples. That is, My kingdom is starting to get organized, and all those who shall be kings or My people have been announced publicly. Future events will be told to you step by step and in sequence; do not be overly anxious or worried. Do you remember every word I have said to you? If you are truly for Me, then I shall speak truthfully to you. As for those who practice deceit and crookedness, I shall treat them perfunctorily in return, and let them have a clear view of just who it is that such behavior will bring to ruin!

Chapter 78

I have said before that I am the One doing the work, not any single human being. With Me, everything is relaxed and happy, but with you, things are very different; you encounter extreme difficulty in everything you do. Anything I approve, I shall certainly accomplish; anyone I approve, I shall perfect. Human beings: Do not meddle in My work! You only need to act while following My lead, doing what I love, rejecting all that I hate, extracting yourselves from sin, and throwing yourselves into My loving embrace. I am not boasting to you, nor am I exaggerating; this is actually the truth. If I say I am going to destroy the world, then in the time it takes for you to blink, the world will turn into ashes. You are often overly anxious, and add to your own burdens, deeply afraid that My words are empty. Thus, you run around trying to “find a way out” for Me. Blind! Foolish! You do not even know your own worth, yet you attempt to be My counselor. Are you worthy? Take a good look in the mirror!

Let Me tell you something! The timid must be chastised for their timidity, while the supremely faithful will earn blessings for their faith. To be clear, the most crucial point right now is faith. Before the blessings that will come upon you have been revealed, you need—right now—to sacrifice everything in order to expend for Me. This is precisely the aspect to which “obtaining blessings” and “suffering calamity” refer. My sons! Are My words still engraved in your hearts? “To those who sincerely expend for Me, I shall surely bless you greatly.” Today, do you truly understand the meaning that dwells within? I do not speak empty words; from now on, nothing will be concealed. That is, the things that used to be hidden in My words will now be told to you, one by one, without any concealment whatsoever. Furthermore, each word will be My true meaning, not to mention that revealing all people, events, and things hidden before Me will be done easily and will not at all be difficult for Me. Everything I do contains an aspect of My normal humanity as well as an aspect of My complete divinity. Do you truly have a clear understanding of these words? This is why I keep reiterating that you should not be in too much of a hurry. Revealing a person or thing is not difficult for Me, and there is always a time for it. Is that not so? So many people have had their true forms exposed before Me. Whether they are fox-spirits, dogs, or wolves, they all reveal their true forms at a specific time that I determine, because everything I do is part of My plan. On this point you must have a perfectly clear understanding!

Do you really understand what the saying “The time is not far off” refers to? In the past, you always thought that it referred to My day, but you have all been interpreting My words based on your notions. Let Me tell you! From now on, anyone who misinterprets My words is undoubtedly absurd! The words I uttered, “The time is not far off,” refer to your days of enjoying blessings; that is, the days in which all evil spirits shall be destroyed and kicked out of My church and all human ways of doing things shall be rejected. Moreover, this expression refers to the days when all great disasters shall descend. Remember this! It is all great disasters; misinterpret this no longer. My great disasters shall descend from My hands upon the entire world at once. Those who have gained My name will be blessed, and will certainly not have to endure such suffering. Do you still remember that? Do you understand what I am talking about? The time that I speak is precisely the time that I begin to work (when the great disasters have descended, at just such a time). You do not truly understand My intentions. Do you know why I place such strict demands on you, without showing you any leniency at all? Right when the international situation is tense, and while the (so-called) ones in power within China are making all preparations, this is the exact same time that a time bomb is about to explode. Those of the seven nations seeking the true way will desperately surge into China like water through the floodgates, regardless of the cost. Some have been chosen by Me, and others are meant to do service for Me, but there is no firstborn son among them. This is My doing! This was already a done deal when I created the world. Get rid of your human notions. Do not assume that I am speaking nonsense! What I think about is what I have already accomplished, and My plan is something I have already accomplished, too. Are you clear on this?

All of everything rests with My thoughts and with My plan. My son! I chose you for your sake and, moreover, because I love you. Whoever dares to disobey in thought, or give rise to jealousy, shall die by My curse and burning. This involves the administrative decrees of My kingdom, because the kingdom of this day has already been formed. However, My son, you must be cautious and should not treat this as a sort of capital. You should be considerate of your Father's heart and, through this, appreciate your Father's painstaking efforts. From this, My son must understand what kind of person I love the most, what kind of person I love second, what kind of person I hate the most, and what kind of person I loathe. Do not keep heaping pressure upon yourself. Whatever disposition you have was prearranged by Me, and is a revelation of one aspect of My divine disposition. Cast off your misgivings! I do not harbor hatred toward you. How should I say this? Do you still not understand? Are you still constrained by your fears? Who is loyal, who is passionate, who is honest, who is deceitful—I know it all, for as I have said before, I know the situation of the saints like the back of My hand.

In My eyes, everything has long been accomplished and revealed. (I am the God who scrutinizes people's innermost hearts; My purpose is simply to show you the aspect of My normal humanity.) However, from your perspective, all is still hidden and nothing has been accomplished. This is completely due to the fact that you do not know Me. All is in My hands, all is beneath My feet, and My eyes scrutinize all things; who can escape My judgment? All those who are unclean, those who have things to hide, those who judge behind My back, those who harbor resistance in their hearts, and so forth—all these people whom I deem not precious with My eyes must kneel before Me and unburden themselves. Perhaps, after hearing this, some will be slightly motivated, while others will not take this as such a serious matter. I warn you! May the wise hasten to repent! If you are a fool, then just you wait! When the time comes, just see who it is that will suffer calamity!

Heaven is still the original heaven, and earth is still the original earth, but in My view, both have already changed, and are no longer the heaven and earth they once were. What does heaven refer to? Do you know? And what does the heaven of today refer to? What did the heaven of the past refer to? Let Me communicate this to you: The heaven of the past referred to the God you believed in but whom no one had seen, and He was the God in whom people believed with genuine sincerity (because they could not see Him). The heaven of today, on the other hand, refers to both My normal humanity and My complete divinity; that is, it refers to this practical God Himself. Both are the same God, so why do I say I am the new heaven? This is all directed at man's notions. The earth of today refers to where you are situated. The earth of the past did not have a single place that was holy, whereas the places you visit today have been set apart as holy. This is why I say this is a new earth. "New" here means "holy." The new heaven and earth have now been completely realized. Do you get it now? I shall reveal all mysteries to you, page by page. Do not be in a rush, and even greater mysteries shall be revealed to you!

Chapter 79

Blind! Ignorant! A heap of worthless trash! You separate My normal humanity from My complete divinity! Do you not see this to be a sin against Me? Moreover, it is something that is difficult to forgive! The practical God has come among you today, yet you only know the one side of Me—My normal humanity—and have not at all seen the side of Me that is completely divine. Do you think I do not know who tries to cheat Me behind My back? I am not criticizing you; I am simply watching to see what level you can reach, and to see how you will ultimately end up. My words have been spoken in the hundreds of thousands, yet you have done a great many bad things. Why do you repeatedly try to cheat Me? Beware of losing your life! If you provoke My anger to a certain level, then I will show you no mercy, and you will get kicked out. I will not take into account how you were before, whether you were loyal or zealous, how much you have run around, or how much you have expended for Me; I will not look at these things at all. You need only provoke Me now, and I will cast you into the bottomless pit. Who still dares to attempt to cheat Me? Remember this! From now on, whenever I get angry, regardless of whom it is with, I will purge you immediately so that there will be no future trouble and so that I do not have to see you anymore. If you defy Me, I will instantly chastise you. Will you keep this in mind? The smart ones among you should repent at once.

Today—meaning, now—I am wrathful. You should all be loyal to Me and offer up your entire being to Me. You must not delay any longer. If you do not heed My words, I shall stretch forth My hand and strike you down. In doing this, I shall make Myself known to all; on this day, I am wrathful and majestic toward everyone (which is even more severe than My judgment). I have spoken so many words, yet you have not reacted at all; are you really so dull-witted? I do not think you are. This is the old devil inside you, up to mischief. Do you see this clearly? Make haste to bring about a radical change! Today, the work of the Holy Spirit has progressed to this stage; have you not seen it? My name will spread from house to house, in all nations and in all directions, and will be shouted from the mouths of adults and children alike throughout the universe world; this is an absolute truth. I am the unique God Himself and, moreover, I am the one and only person of God. Even more so, I, the entirety of the flesh, am the complete manifestation of God. Whosoever dares not revere Me, whosoever dares exhibit resistance in their eyes, and whosoever dares speak words of defiance against Me will surely die from My curses and wrath (there will be cursing because of My wrath). Furthermore, whosoever dares not be loyal or filial toward Me, and whosoever dares try to trick Me, will surely die from My hatred. My righteousness, majesty, and judgment will endure forever and ever. At first, I was loving and merciful, but this is not the disposition of My complete divinity; righteousness, majesty, and judgment merely comprise the disposition of Me, the complete God Himself. During the Age of Grace, I was loving and merciful. Because of the work I had to finish, I possessed lovingkindness and mercy; afterward, however, there was no more need for such things (and there has been none ever since). It is all righteousness, majesty, and judgment, and this is the complete disposition of My normal humanity coupled with My complete divinity.

Those who do not know Me will perish in the bottomless pit, whereas those who are certain about Me will live forever, to be cared for and protected within My love. The moment I utter a single word, the entire universe and the ends of the earth tremble. Who can hear My words and not tremble in fear? Who can hold back from welling up with reverence for Me? And who is incapable of knowing My righteousness and majesty from My deeds! And who cannot see My almightiness and wisdom within My deeds! Whosoever does not pay attention will surely die. This is because those who do not pay attention are the ones who resist Me and who do not know Me; they are the archangel, and are the most wanton. Examine yourselves: Anyone who is wanton, self-righteous, conceited, and arrogant is certainly an object of My hatred, and is bound to perish!

I now pronounce the administrative decrees of My kingdom: All things are within My judgment, all things are within My righteousness, all things are within My majesty, and I practice My righteousness toward all. Those who say they believe in Me but who, deep down, contradict Me, or those whose hearts have abandoned Me, will be kicked out—but all in My own good time. People who speak sarcastically about Me, but in a way that others do not notice, will die immediately (they will perish in spirit, body, and soul). Those who oppress or cold-shoulder My beloved will be judged immediately by My wrath. This means that people who are jealous of the ones I love, and who think Me unrighteous, will be handed over to be judged by My beloved. All who are well-behaved, simple, and honest (including those who lack wisdom), and who treat Me with single-minded sincerity, will all remain in My kingdom. Those who have not been through training—meaning, those honest people who lack wisdom and insight—will have power in My kingdom. However, they have also been dealt with and broken. That they have not undergone training is not absolute. Rather, it is through these things that I will show everyone My almightiness and My wisdom. I will kick out all those who still doubt Me; I want not one of them (I detest people who still doubt Me at such a time as this). By way of the deeds I do throughout the entire universe, I will show honest people the wondrousness of My actions, thereupon causing their wisdom, insight, and discernment to grow. I will also cause deceitful people to be destroyed in an instant as a result of My wondrous deeds. All the firstborn sons who were first to accept My name (meaning those holy and unblemished, honest people) will be the first to attain entry to the kingdom and rule over all nations and all peoples alongside Me, reigning as kings in the kingdom and judging all nations and all peoples (this refers to all the firstborn sons in the kingdom, and no others). Those among all nations and all peoples who have been judged, and who have repented, will enter My kingdom and become My people, while those who are stubborn and unrepentant will be cast into the bottomless pit (to perish forever). The judgment in the kingdom will be the last one, and it will be My thorough cleansing of the world. There will then no longer be any injustice, grief, tears, or sighs, and, even more so, there will be no more world. Everything will be a manifestation of Christ, and all will be the kingdom of Christ. Such glory! Such glory!

Chapter 80

In all things, real communication with Me is necessary for one to be enlightened and illuminated; only through this can the spirit be at peace. Otherwise, the spirit will have no peace. Currently, the most serious illness among you is separating My normal humanity from My complete divinity; moreover, the majority of you emphasize My normal humanity, as if you have never known that I also have complete divinity. This blasphemes Me! Do you know that? Your illness is so serious that if you do not hurry up and recover, you will be killed by My hand. To My face you behave one way (appearing as a person of honor; humble and patient), yet behind My back you behave totally differently (entirely hypocritical, dissolute and without restraint, doing whatever you want to do, creating factions, setting up independent kingdoms, wishing to betray Me). You are blind! Open your eyes that have been deluded by Satan! Look at who I really am! You have no shame! You do not know that My actions are wondrous! You do not know of My almightiness! Who can be said to do service for Christ while not yet being saved? You do not know what role you are playing! You actually come before Me in disguise, showing off your charms—you wretch! I will kick you out of My house; I do not use this type of person, because I neither predestined nor chose them.

I do what I say. Those who do evil must not fear; I do not do wrong to any person. I always act according to My plan and do things in accordance with My righteousness. Because those who do evil have been Satan's descendants since creation, I did not choose them; this is what is meant by the saying, "though mountains and rivers may shift and transform, one's nature shall not change." On matters that humankind cannot understand, everything has been made clear, and nothing is hidden to Me. You might be able to hide something from the eyes of a small number of people, and even win the trust of quite a few people, but with Me it is not so easy. Ultimately, you cannot escape My judgment. The gaze of humankind is limited, and even those who can understand a small portion of the present situation are counted as possessing some skill. For Me, everything proceeds smoothly and nothing gets in My way in the slightest, for all is under My control and arrangement. Who would dare to not submit to My control! Who would dare to disrupt My management! Who would dare to be disloyal or unfilial toward Me! Who would dare to tell Me something that is not true, and instead tell Me a pack of lies! None of them will escape My wrathful hand. Even if you have now conceded defeat, and are willing to be chastised and to enter the bottomless pit, I still will not spare you easily. I must retrieve you up from the bottomless pit so that once again you will be subjected to My wrathful punishment (extreme loathing). Is there anywhere you can run off to? The thing I hate most is when people separate My normal humanity from My complete divinity.

Blessed are those who are loyal to Me; that is, blessed are those who truly identify Me as the God Himself who closely examines the human heart. I will surely multiply your blessings, allowing you to enjoy good blessings in My kingdom forever. This is also the most effective way to bring shame to Satan. However, do not be too impatient or anxious; I set a time for everything. If the time that I have predetermined has not yet come, then even if it is just one second early, I will not act. I act precisely and according to a rhythm; I do not act without reason. From a human point of view, I am not at all harried by anxiety; I am as steady as Mount Tai—but do you not know that I am the almighty God Himself? Do not be too impatient; all is in My hands. Everything has long since been prepared, and nothing can wait to do service for Me. The entire universe world appears from the outside to be in chaos, but from My perspective, all is in order. What I have prepared for you is only for you to enjoy. Do you realize this? Do not insert yourselves into My management. I will let all peoples and all nations see My almightiness from My acts, and I will let them bless and praise My holy name for My wondrous deeds. This is because, as I have said, nothing I do is without basis; rather, everything is filled with My wisdom and My power, with My righteousness and majesty, and, even more so, with My wrath.

Those who immediately awaken upon hearing My words will surely receive My blessings and will definitely receive My protection and care. They will not experience the suffering of chastisement; rather, they will enjoy the happiness of family. Do you know this? Suffering is eternal, and joy is even more eternal; they will both be experienced from now on. Whether you suffer or experience joy depends on what kind of attitude you hold as you acknowledge your sin. As for whether or not you are one of My predestined and chosen, you ought to be sure of this in light of what you have said. You can fool people, but you cannot fool Me. Those I have predestined and chosen will be greatly blessed from now on; as for those I have not predestined and chosen, I will chastise them harshly from now on. This will be My proof to you. Those who are now blessed are undoubtedly My beloved; as for those who are chastised, it goes without saying that they are not predestined and chosen by Me. You should be clear on this! That is to say, if what you get now is to be dealt with by Me, and if you receive My words of harsh judgment, then you are hated and detested in My heart and you will be one of the ones I cast aside. If you receive My consolation and My provision of life, then you are in My possession; you are one of My beloved. You cannot determine this based on My outward appearance. Do not lose your mind over this!

My words speak to every person's actual condition. Do you believe that I just carry on about random topics, or that I just say whatever I feel like saying? Absolutely not! My wisdom is hidden in My every word. You should just take My words to be the truth. Within a very short time, foreigners who are seeking the true way will be coming in. When that happens, you will be dumbstruck, and everything will be accomplished without the slightest difficulty. Do you not know that I am the almighty God? Upon hearing these words of Mine, you steadfastly believe them, do you not? I make no mistakes, let alone utter misstatements. Do you know this? Therefore, I have repeatedly emphasized that you are to quickly accept My training, so as to lead and shepherd them. Do you know this? Through you I will make them perfect. Even more importantly, through you I will make manifest My immense signs and wonders; that is, among those that humankind looks down on, I have chosen a group of people to manifest Me, to glorify My name, to take charge of everything for Me, and to reign as kings with Me. Thus, My current training of you is the greatest management of the world; this is an amazing thing that humankind cannot carry out. By means of perfecting you, I shall throw Satan into the lake of fire and brimstone and into the bottomless pit, utterly cast down the great red dragon to its death, never to rise again. Therefore, all who are thrown into the bottomless pit are descendants of the great red dragon. I hate them to an extreme degree. This I have brought about. Can you not see? All who are disloyal, and all who employ crookedness and deception, have been exposed. The proud, conceited, self-righteous, and impudent are descendants of the archangel, and they are the most typical of Satan—they all are My sworn enemies, My adversaries. I must punish them one by one in order to extinguish the hatred in My heart. I will do this one item at a time, resolving each one in turn.

Now, what exactly are the lake of fire and brimstone and the bottomless pit? In the human imagination, the lake of fire and brimstone is a material thing, but humankind does not know that this is a highly mistaken explanation. Nevertheless, it still occupies a certain position in people's minds. The lake of fire and brimstone is My hand meting out chastisement on humankind; whoever is thrown into the lake of fire and brimstone has been slain by My hand. These people's spirits, souls, and bodies are forever suffering. This is the true meaning of My words when I said that all are in My hands. What, then, does the bottomless pit refer to? Humans conceptualize it to be a large abyss that is endless and unfathomably deep. The real bottomless pit is Satan's influence. If a person falls into Satan's hands, this person is in the bottomless pit; even if they were to grow wings they could not fly out. This is why it is called the bottomless pit. Such people will all be subjected to eternal chastisement; this is the way I have arranged it.

Chapter 81

How evil and licentious is this old era! I will swallow you up! Mount Zion! Arise to hail Me! For the completion of My management plan, for the successful accomplishment of My great work, who dares not rise up and cheer! Who dares not rise up and leap endlessly in joy? They will meet their deaths at My hand! I carry out righteousness upon everybody, without the slightest mercy or lovingkindness, and I do so utterly dispassionately. All peoples! Rise up to give praise, and give glory to Me! All unending glory, from everlasting to everlasting, exists because of Me, and was established by Me. Who would dare to take glory for himself? Who would dare to treat My glory as a material thing? They will be slain by My hand! Oh, cruel humans! I created you and provided for you, and I have led you to this day, yet you know not the least about Me, and you do not love Me at all. How can I show mercy for you again? How can I save you? I can only treat you with My wrath! I shall repay you with destruction, and with eternal chastisement. This is righteousness; it can only be this way.

My kingdom is solid and steady; it will never collapse. It will exist into eternity! My sons, My firstborn sons, and My people will enjoy blessings with Me forever and ever! Those who do not understand spiritual matters and who are not granted revelations from the Holy Spirit will be cut off from My kingdom sooner or later. They will not leave of their own accord, but will be forced out by the rule of My iron rod and by My majesty; moreover, they will be kicked out by My foot. Those who have been possessed for a time by evil spirits (meaning, since birth) will all be exposed now. I will kick you out! Do you still remember what I have said? I—the holy and unblemished God—do not reside in a foul and filthy temple. Those who were possessed by evil spirits know this for themselves, and I need not clarify. I have not predestined you! You are old Satan, yet you want to infiltrate My kingdom! Absolutely not! I am telling you! Today I shall make it very clear for you: Those I chose at the time of the creation of mankind, I have imbued with My quality and My disposition; therefore, today they are loyal to Me alone, they can bear a burden for the church, and they are willing to expend themselves for Me and offer up their entire beings to Me. Those whom I have not chosen have, therefore, been corrupted by Satan to a certain degree, and they possess none of My quality and none of My disposition. You think that My words are contradictory, but the words, “You are predestined and chosen by Me, yet you bear the consequences for your actions,” all refer to Satan. Now I will explain one point: Today, those who can rise up and assume authority over the churches, shepherd the churches, be considerate of My burden, and fulfill special functions—not a single one of those people are in service to Christ; they all are those whom I have predestined and chosen. I tell you this so that you do not worry too much and delay your life progress. How many can win the status of firstborn son? Could it be that this is as easy as being given a diploma? Impossible! Were it not for My perfection of you, you would have long since been corrupted to a certain degree by Satan. This is why I have repeatedly emphasized that I shall always look after and protect those loyal to Me and shield them from harm and suffering. Those I have not predestined are those whom evil spirits have possessed; they are those who are numb, dull-witted, and spiritually stunted, and who cannot shepherd the churches (meaning, those with enthusiasm but who are unclear regarding visions). You should be quickly removed from My sight, and the sooner the better, lest I should become disgusted and angry by seeing you. If you get away quickly, you will receive less chastisement—but the longer you take, the harsher the chastisement will be. Do you understand? Stop acting so shamelessly! You are debauched and unrestrained, unthinking and careless, and have no idea just what kind of trash you are! You are blind!

Those who hold power in My kingdom are all carefully chosen by Me and have undergone repeated tests; nobody can defeat them. I have given them strength, so they will never fall or go astray. They have gained My approval. From this day forward, the hypocrites will show their true colors. They are capable of all sorts of shameful things, but ultimately, they will not escape My hand, which chastises and incinerates Satan. My temple shall be holy and spotless. All of it is a testimony to Me, a manifestation of Me, and glory to My name. My temple is My eternal abode and the object of My eternal love; I often caress it with the hand of love, bring comfort to it with the language of love, care for it with eyes of love, and embrace it in the bosom of love so that it will not fall into the traps of evil ones or be beguiled by Satan. Today, those who render service for Me but who are not saved will be used by Me one last time. Why do I hurry to cast these things out of My kingdom? Why must I drive them from My sight? I hate them down to the marrow of My bones! Why do I not save them? Why do I detest them so? Why must I strike them dead? Why must I destroy them? (Not one bit of them can remain in My sight, including their ashes.) Why? Even the great red dragon, the ancient serpent, and old Satan seek unearned sustenance in My kingdom! Fantasize no longer! They all will come to nothing and be turned to ashes!

I will destroy this age, transform it into My kingdom, and live and enjoy unto eternity with the people I love. Those unclean things should not assume that they can remain in My kingdom. Do you think you can fish in murky waters? Forget such fantasies! You do not know that My eyes are all-seeing! You do not know that everything is arranged by My hand! Do not think that you are so highly esteemed! Each one of you must take your proper place. Do not pretend to be humble (I am referring to those who are blessed) or shiver and be afraid (I am referring to those who suffer misfortune). Right now, people should all know for themselves inside their hearts. Even if I do not mention you by name, you should still feel sure, for I have directed My words at every individual. Regardless of whether you are My chosen or not, My words are directed at all of your current states. That is to say, if you are among My chosen, then I speak of the state of those I have chosen based on how you have presented yourselves; as for those who are not My chosen, I also speak in accordance with their states. Therefore, My words have been spoken to a certain point; each of you should have a good sense of that. Do not deceive yourselves! Do not fear! Because the number of people is limited to only a scant few, deception will not work! Whomever I say is chosen is chosen, and no matter how good you might be at pretending, without My quality, you will fail. Because I keep My word, I do not casually disrupt My own plans; I do whatever I want to do, because everything I do is correct. I am supreme, and I am unique. Are you clear on this? Do you understand?

Now, after reading My words, those who do evil and who are crooked and deceitful, are also working hard to seek progress and to make their own personal efforts. They want to pay only a small price to worm their way into My kingdom. They should lay aside such thoughts! (These people have no hope because I have not given them the opportunity to repent.) I guard the gate to My kingdom. Do you believe that people can enter My kingdom as they wish? Do you believe that My kingdom will just accept any kind of junk? That My kingdom will take any kind of worthless trash? You are mistaken! Today, those in the kingdom are those who hold kingly power with Me; I have carefully cultivated them. This is not something that can be achieved just by wanting it; you must gain My approval. Furthermore, this is not something that is discussed with anyone; it is something that I arrange Myself. Whatever I say goes. My mysteries are revealed to those whom I love. Those who do evil—that is, those whom I have not chosen—are not entitled to receive them. Even if they heard these mysteries, they would not understand, because Satan has covered their eyes and taken hold of their hearts, ruining their entire beings. Why is it said that My actions are amazing and wise, and that I mobilize everything in My service? I will hand over those who have not been predestined and chosen by Me to Satan to punish and corrupt them, and I will take no hand in punishing them; this is how wise I am! Who has ever thought of this? Without any effort at all, My great work has been accomplished, has it not?

Upon hearing My words, all are terrified; every single person is filled with trepidation. What are you afraid of? I am not going to kill you! It is that you have a guilty conscience; what you do behind My back is so frivolous and worthless. This has made Me hate you so much that I fervently wish I had thrown everyone I had not predestined and selected into the bottomless pit, to be smashed to pieces. However, I have My plan; I have My goals. I shall spare your petty life for the time being, and refrain from kicking you out until after your service to Me is finished. I do not want to see such creatures; they are a disgrace to My name! Do you know this? Do you understand? Worthless wretches! Get this through your head! When you are put to use, it is I who do so, and when you are not put to use, this, too, is because of Me. Everything is orchestrated by Me, and in My hands, everything is well-behaved and orderly. Whoever dares move out of turn will be immediately struck down by My hand. I often say “struck down”; do you think that I really do that with My own hand? I do not need to! My actions are not as foolish as humans imagine. What is meant when it is said that everything is established and accomplished by My words? Everything is accomplished without My even lifting a finger. Do you understand the true meaning of My words?

I shall never bring salvation to any of those who do service for Me; they have no share in My kingdom. This is because these people only busy themselves with external matters, rather than do My will. Although I am making use of them now, in reality they are the people I hate the most; the people I most detest. Today, I love whomever can do My will, whomever can show consideration for My burdens, and whomever can give their all for Me with a true heart and sincerity. I will constantly enlighten them, and not let them slip away from Me. I often say, “To those who sincerely expend for Me, I shall surely bless you greatly.” What does “bless” refer to? Do you know? In the context of the current work of the Holy Spirit, it refers to the burdens I give to you. For all who are able to carry a burden for the church, and who sincerely offer themselves up for My sake, their burdens and their earnestness are both blessings that come from Me. In addition, My revelations to them are also a blessing from Me. This is because those who do not currently have a burden were not predestined and selected by Me; My curses have already come down upon them. In other words, those whom I have predestined and selected have a share in the positive aspects of what I have said, while those whom I have not predestined and selected can only share in the negative aspects of My utterances. The more My words are spoken, the clearer their meaning; the more I say them, the more transparent they become. Every one of those who are crooked and deceitful, and whom I have not predestined, was cursed by Me prior to the creation of the world. Why is it said that the year, the month, the day, and even the hour, the minute, and the second of your births were all appropriately planned by Me? I long ago predetermined which ones would attain the status of firstborn sons. They are in My eyes; they have long been deemed by Me to be precious, and have long had a place in My heart. Every word I speak has weight and carries My ideas. What is man? Except for those few whom I love, who hold the status of firstborn sons, what few show any consideration for My will? What are My sons worth? What are My people worth? In the past, the term “My sons” was an appellation for My firstborn sons, but those of My sons and My people who knew no shame thought it was an honorific title for themselves. Do not shamelessly play the role of My firstborn sons. Do you deserve this title? Today, the only ones to have been verified are those who have been placed in important positions before Me; these people have obtained the status of firstborn sons. They already have a share in My throne, My crown, My glory, and My kingdom. Everything has been meticulously arranged by Me. All those who have today received the status of firstborn sons have all undergone great pain, persecution, and adversity, including what they have experienced in their families since birth, their own individual prospects, work, and marriage. These firstborn sons have not won this status without paying a price; rather, they have already undergone all aspects of life: the good and the bad, the ups and the downs. All those who were previously held in high esteem by the people of the world, and who were living in comfort at home, have no share in the firstborn sons. They do not deserve to be the firstborn sons; they bring shame to My name, and I absolutely do not want them. My sons and My people, whom I have chosen, also have a good reputation in the world, but they fall far short of My firstborn sons. I am currently using certain people, but among them many do not even qualify to be My people. They are but objects of eternal perdition; they are being used to render service to Me for a time, but are not meant for long-term use. I have, deep in My heart, already decided which ones are to be used in the long term. That is, those whom I put in important positions are the ones I love, and I began using them long ago. In other words, their functions have already been set. As for the people I detest, at the current stage, they are merely being used on a temporary basis. When the foreigners come, that is when the firstborn sons will be clearly revealed to you.

Right now I require you to quickly grow up and show consideration for My burden. This burden is not too great, and I will only have you do what is within your capabilities. I know your stature; I know what functions you can perform. I know all of this, and I understand these things; I just wish you, My sons, would willingly deny yourselves and genuinely manage to love what I love, hate what I hate, do what I do, and say what I say. Do not be controlled by space, geography, time, or any other person. It is My wish that your spirits be free, everywhere, and that each of you can stand in the position of My firstborn sons. Who offers their entire being up to Me today? Who loyally expends for Me? Who is up day and night for My sake? Who runs My household affairs for Me? Who alleviates the burdens on My shoulders for Me? Are they not My sons? Everything I do is to perfect My sons and done in service to My sons. Do you understand? All is for My firstborn sons, and I make no mistakes. Do not labor under the misapprehension that I misjudge people, and do not think that I look down on you. Do not assume that I underutilize great talent, or that I made a mistake in not predestining you. It is not that; it is that you do not deserve it! Do you know that? Now I shall confirm some things for you: Whoever frequently arouses My ire and is often the target of My criticism or dealing, is certainly the target of My hatred. Such people will surely die—this is set in stone. I have said that I will no longer deal with My firstborn sons, because these people have already undergone My severe tests and have gained My approval. Whomever I look at with a dour expression is in danger. Are you not afraid? Many shall die as soon as My words issue forth from My mouth. However, some will still maintain their flesh; it will simply be that their spirits are dead. Their clearest indicator is that they do not possess the work of the Holy Spirit and they have nothing holding them back. (They have already been corrupted by Satan, to a deep degree.) Whenever their flesh is extinguished, it happens after the appropriate planning by Me and at a time I have specified. Their spiritual deaths can do no great service for Me; I will make use of their flesh to demonstrate the wondrousness of My deeds. From this, people shall be convinced; they shall give unending praise, and there shall be none who does not revere and fear Me. I do not treat any detail lightly; all must live or die for Me, and none can leave until they have performed their service for Me. Even Satan cannot retreat into the bottomless pit until it has performed its service for Me. Every step I take is steady and secure, and on solid ground; no step I take is impractical—not in the least.

Who would dare to compare with Me? Who would dare to oppose Me? I shall strike you down immediately! I will leave no trace, and your flesh will be obliterated; this is absolutely true. When I say these things, I act on them instantly, and there will be no going back. The world is crumbling day by day, and day by day mankind is perishing. With each passing day, My kingdom is taking shape and My firstborn sons are growing up. Day by day, My rage is growing, My chastisements are becoming more severe, and My words are growing harsher. You are still waiting for Me to speak to you more softly, and My tone to lighten up, but think again! My tone depends on what people I am dealing with. To those I love, My tone is gentle and always consoling, but to you, I can only show harshness and judgment, on top of which I add chastisement and rage. Without anyone's being aware of it, the situation in every country of the world is becoming increasingly tense, crumbling and falling into chaos day by day. The leaders of each country all hope to win power in the end. It really has not occurred to them that My chastisement is already upon them. They seek to seize My power—but theirs is but a pipe dream! Even the leader of the United Nations must beg for My forgiveness. The evil deeds he has committed are numerous. Now is the time for chastisement, and I will not let him off lightly. All those in power must take off their crowns; only I deserve to rule over all things. Everything depends on Me—all of it, including even a handful of foreigners. I shall immediately strike down any who scrutinize Me, because this is how far My work has come. Every day sees a new revelation; every day there is new light.

All is becoming increasingly complete. Satan's last day is getting closer and closer and more evident.

Chapter 83

You know not that I am the almighty God, nor do you know that all events and things are under My control! What does it mean that everything is established and completed by Me? The blessings or misfortunes of every person depend on My fulfillment and on My actions. What can man do? What can man accomplish by thinking? In this final age, in this debauched age, in this dark world that Satan has corrupted to a certain degree, what scant few can be in harmony with My will? Whether it be today, yesterday, or the near future, the lives of all are determined by Me. Whether they receive blessings or suffer misfortunes, and whether they are loved or hated by Me, everything was precisely determined by Me in a single stroke. Who among you dares to assert that your steps are self-determined and that your fate is in your control? Who dares to say so? Who dares to be so defiant? Who does not fear Me? Who is, at heart, disobedient toward Me? Who dares to act as they please? I will chastise them on the spot, and will have absolutely no more mercy on humankind or grant any further salvation. This time—that is, the moment you have accepted My name—is the last time I will show any lenience toward humanity. That is to say, I have selected a portion of humankind who, though their blessings may not be eternal, have enjoyed a good deal of My grace; therefore, even if it is not predestined that you will be eternally blessed, it does not follow that you will be mistreated, and you are much better off than those who will suffer direct misfortune.

Truly, My judgment has already reached a peak, and is entering unprecedented territory. My judgment is upon every individual, and now it is a wrathful judgment. In the past it was a majestic judgment, but now it is very different. In the past, people did not feel an ounce of fear until they encountered My judgment being delivered; now, though, as soon as they hear just a single word, they are frightened out of their wits. Some even get scared when I but open My mouth. If My voice but issues forth, when I begin to speak, they are so afraid that they know not what to do, desiring earnestly at that time to secrete themselves in a hole in the ground or remain hidden in the darkest of corners. Such people cannot be saved because they are possessed by evil spirits. When I judge the great red dragon and the ancient serpent, they grow timid and are even afraid of being seen by others; truly, they are descendants of Satan, born in the darkness.

I often used to utter the words, "predestination and selection." What do they mean, exactly? How do I predestine and select? Why would someone not be among the predestined and selected? How can you understand this? These things require some clear explanation from Me, and they necessitate My speaking to you directly. If I revealed these things within you, then the obtuse would falsely believe it was a thought given by

Satan! I would be unfairly vilified! Now I will speak bluntly, and not hold anything back: When I created all things, I first created those materials that serve mankind (flowers, grass, trees, wood, mountains, rivers, lakes, the land and the ocean, all manner of insects, the birds, and the animals; some are for humankind to eat, and some are for humankind to look at). Various types of grains were created for humankind according to the differences between different areas; only after making all of these things did I begin to create humans. There are two types of people: The first are My selected and predestined; the second possess the qualities of Satan, and this type were created before I created the world, but since they were completely corrupted by Satan, I have abandoned them. I then created a type selected and predestined by Me, each of whom possesses My qualities to different degrees; therefore, those selected by Me today each possess My qualities to varying degrees. Although they have been corrupted by Satan, they still belong to Me; each step is a part of My management plan. The honest rule in the kingdom because this was planned in advance by Me. Those who are crooked and deceitful can never be honest, because they are Satan's spawn and are possessed by Satan; they are its servants and are under its command from beginning to end. However, the purpose of all of this is to fulfill My will. I have made it clear so as to obviate your guessing. Those whom I perfect, I will take care of and protect; as for those whom I detest, once their service is at an end, they shall get out of My place. When these people are spoken of, I am enraged; at the very mention of them, I very much wish to deal with them forthwith. Nevertheless, I am restrained in My actions; I am measured in My actions and speech. I can oppress the world in a fit of anger, but those I have predestined are the exception; after calming down, I can hold the world in the palm of My hand. In other words, I control everything. When I see that the world has been corrupted to such an extent that people cannot bear it, I will immediately destroy it. Could I not simply do it with the utterance of a single word?

I am the practical God Himself; I do not perform supernatural signs or wonders—but My marvelous works are everywhere. The road ahead will become incomparably more radiant. My revelation of each step is the way that I point out to you and it is My management plan. That is to say, in the future, these revelations will become even more numerous and increasingly clear. Even in the Millennial Kingdom—in the near future—you must advance according to My revelations and following My steps. All has taken shape and all has been prepared; eternal blessings await you among the blessed, whereas the scourged have eternal chastisement awaiting them. My mysteries are too numerous for you; what to Me is the simplest of words are to you the most difficult. Therefore, I utter more and more, for you understand too little and need Me to explain each and every word. Do not worry too much, though; I will speak to you in accordance with My work.

Chapter 84

Because of their lack of knowledge of Me, humans have interrupted My management and undermined My plans countless times, but they have never been able to obstruct My advancing steps. This is because I am a God of wisdom. In Me there is infinite wisdom, and in Me there are boundless and unfathomable mysteries. From time immemorial, humans have never been able to fathom and completely understand these. Is that not so? Not only is there wisdom in every word I utter, but each word also contains My hidden mysteries. With Me, all is mystery; every part of Me is mystery. Today you have merely seen mystery, which is that you have seen My person—but you have yet to unravel this mystery that is hidden within. Humans can only enter My kingdom by following My lead; otherwise, they shall perish along with the world and become ashes. I am the complete God Himself; I am nobody but God Himself. Previous sayings, such as the “manifestation of God,” are already outdated; they are worn-out old things that are not applicable anymore. How many of you have come to understand this? How many of you have been certain of Me to this extent? All must be clearly explained and instructed by Me.

Satan’s kingdom has been destroyed, and its people will soon be finished doing their service for Me. One by one, they will be driven out of My house, which means that those who have been masquerading in various roles have all had their true colors revealed, and all of them will be cut off from My kingdom. Do not forget! From today on, all those I forsake, including those I have forsaken in the past, are the ones who are just acting, and are just shams; they have merely been putting on a show for Me, and once this play is over, they must leave the stage. Those who are truly My sons will officially be in My kingdom to receive My love and enjoy the blessings that I have already prepared for you. Blessed are the firstborn sons! Because you were trained by Me in advance, you are now fit for My use. Believe that I am the almighty God. The things that people cannot accomplish, I can do without a hitch, and there is absolutely no room for contest. Do not assume that you cannot do anything or that you are not fit to be My firstborn sons. You are absolutely worthy! This is because all things depend on Me to be done; they all rely on Me to be accomplished. Why do you now feel that you are of such a stature? This is simply because the time for Me to truly use you has not yet arrived. Great talents cannot be used for trivial purposes; do you understand? In all the universe world, are you merely confined to a tiny China? That is, all the people in the entire universe world will be given to you to shepherd and lead, for you are the firstborn sons, and leading your brothers is your duty to fulfill. Know this! I am the almighty God! I stress once again that I am allowing you to enjoy yourselves. I am the One who is working—the Holy Spirit is working everywhere, and is personally taking the lead.

In the past, people had no understanding of My salvation. Now do you understand? There are several aspects to My salvation: One is that for some people, there is absolutely no predestination, which means that they cannot enjoy My grace at all; another is that there are those who are initially predestined, who enjoy My grace for a period of time, but after some time, which is a time that I have predetermined, I will cast them out, and then their lives will be completely over. Yet another aspect is that there are those whom I have predestined and chosen, and who enjoy eternal blessings; they enjoy My grace from the beginning until the end, including the hardships they have suffered before and after accepting Me, as well as the enlightenment and illumination they have received after accepting Me. From now on, they will start to enjoy blessings—that is, they are the ones whom I am thoroughly saving. This is the most obvious expression of the completion of My great work. What, then, do blessings refer to? Let Me ask you: What do you most want to do? What do you hate the most? What do you most hope to obtain? You have gone through pains and hardships in the past, all for the sake of gaining Me and so that your lives can grow; those comprise a part of grace. “Blessings” means that in the future, you will no longer have the things that you hate, which means that these things will no longer be present in your actual lives; they will have been removed completely, right before your eyes. Family, work, wife, husband, children, friends and relatives, and even the three meals a day that you hate every day, will be gone. (This means not being restricted by time, and walking out of the flesh completely. Only your sated spirit can maintain your body, but this refers to your body, not the flesh. You will be completely free and transcendent. This is the greatest and most evident miracle that God has manifested since the creation of the world.) All particles of soil will be removed from your body, and you will completely be spiritual bodies that are holy and untainted, able to travel throughout the universe and to the ends of the earth. From that time onward, you will also be rid of all that troublesome washing and scrubbing, and you will simply enjoy yourselves to the fullest. From then on, you will no longer think about marriage (because I am ending an age, not creating the world), and there will be no more labor pains that are so torturous for women. Neither will you work or labor any longer in the future. You will immerse yourselves completely in My embrace of love, enjoying the blessings that I have bestowed upon you. This is absolute. While you are enjoying these blessings, grace will continue to follow you. All that I have prepared for you—that is, rare and precious treasures from all over the world—will be given to you. Right now, you can neither conceive of nor imagine all of these, and no one has enjoyed them before. When these blessings come upon you, you will be ecstatic without end—but do not forget that these are all due to My power, My actions, My righteousness, and, even more so, My majesty. (I will be gracious to those to whom I choose to be gracious, and I will be merciful to those to whom I choose to be merciful.) At that time, you will have no parents, and there will be no blood relations. You are all people whom I love, My beloved sons. From that time on, no one will dare to oppress you. It will be a time for you to grow into adults, as well as a time in which you rule the nations with an iron rod! Who dares hinder My beloved sons? Who dares attack them?

All shall revere My beloved sons, because the Father has gained glory. All the things that no one could ever imagine will appear before your eyes; they will be unlimited, inexhaustible, and endless. Before long, you will certainly no longer need to be scorched by the sun or endure the torturing heat, nor will you have to suffer the cold or feel the touch of rain, snow, or wind. This is because I love you, and it will be entirely a world of My love. I will give you everything that you want, and I will prepare for you everything that you need. Who dares claim that I am not righteous? I will kill you immediately, because I have said before that My wrath (against the evil ones) shall last into eternity, and I will not relent even one bit. However, My love (for My beloved sons) will also last forever; I will not hold it back in the least.

Today, people who hear My words as judgment are those who are not in the right state. However, by the time they discover that, the Holy Spirit will already have abandoned them. Out of the entire universe world, the firstborn sons are chosen from among you, whereas the sons and people only make up a small portion of you. My emphasis is on the entire universe world, which means that the sons and people are chosen from all the nations of the world. Do you understand? Why do I keep emphasizing that the firstborn sons should grow up quickly and go out to lead those foreigners? Do you understand the true meaning of My words? This is because China is a nation that I have cursed; it has persecuted Me the most, and I hate it the most. You must know that My firstborn sons and I come from heaven and are the universal people; we do not belong to any one nation. Stop clinging to human notions! This is because I have revealed My person to you. Everything is up to Me. Can you remember My words? Why do I say that there are fewer and fewer people among you, and that the population has become more and more refined? It is because My salvation is turning gradually toward the universe world. Those who are cast out, who have accepted My name, are the ones who did service for the sake of perfecting the firstborn sons. Do you understand? Why do I say they are all ones who have done service for My sons? Now you genuinely understand, do you not? The number truly is scant; there certainly are few. However, those people have benefited considerably because of My sons, and have enjoyed much of My grace—and that is why I said that I am saving the human race for the last time. Now you know the true meaning of My words! I will severely chastise anyone who resists Me, and I will turn My face toward whoever defends Me. This is because, ever since the beginning, I have always been a majestic and righteous God, and everything will be revealed to you. I work swiftly in wonderful ways, and soon, wondrous things that are unimaginable to humans will occur. I do mean immediately and soon. Do you understand? Seek life entry, without delay! My beloved sons, all things are here for you, and all things exist for your sake.

Chapter 85

I make use of different people to achieve My will: My curses are realized on those whom I chastise, as are My blessings on those whom I love. Now, the question of who among you will receive My blessings and who will suffer My curses rests completely with a single word of Mine; it is all determined by My utterances. You know that whomever I am good to now is bound to be always granted My blessings (meaning, gradually coming to know Me and growing more and more sure about Me, gaining the new light and revelations, and being able to keep up with the pace of My work). Whomever I detest (this is something inside Me that people cannot see from the outside) are people who will surely suffer My curses, and they are undoubtedly among the offspring of the great red dragon; as such, they will have a share in My cursing of it. As for those whom I cannot bear the sight of whose quality I see to be lacking, and who cannot be perfected or used by Me, they will still have a chance to be saved, and they will be one among My sons. If someone does not possess any of My quality, cannot comprehend spiritual matters, and does not know Me but has an ardent mindset, then that person will be designated as one of My people. I consider those who share in My curses to be beyond salvation, and they are the ones who have been possessed by evil spirits. I am eager to kick them out. They were birthed by the great red dragon, and are the ones I most hate. From this point on, I do not need them to render service to Me. I simply do not want them anymore! I do not want any of them! Even their weeping and gnashing of teeth before Me has no effect; I do not look at any of them. I just kick them away. What sort of things are you? Do you deserve to be before Me? Are you worthy? You are still pretending to be good people and feigning humility! After you have done all those countless wicked deeds, can I spare you? And then, no sooner do you rise before Me than you start to defy Me again. You have never had any good intentions; you just want to trick Me! Can you really become good when you are a descendant of the great red dragon? Impossible! You have already been cursed by Me, and I judge you through and through! Render service for Me wholeheartedly, honestly, and in a disciplined way, and then go back to your bottomless pit! Do you want a share in My kingdom? You are dreaming! How shameless! You, with your filthy and dirty body, have been corrupted to a certain degree, yet you still have the nerve to stand before Me! Make way! If you delay any further, I will punish you severely! All those who engage in crookedness and deceit before Me must be exposed. Where can you hide? Where can you conceal yourself? No matter how much you dodge or take cover, can you really escape My control? If you do not render service for Me properly, then you will have an even shorter longevity; you will be done for immediately!

I tell you with all clarity what kind of people are My firstborn sons, and I give you accurate proof. Otherwise, you would not be able to take your proper places, and would instead make indiscriminate decisions for yourselves as to what your places should be.

Some would be too humble, and some would be too unrestrained; and those who do not possess My quality, or whose quality is overly lacking, would all wish to be My firstborn sons. What expressions are made by those who are My firstborn sons? First of all, they focus on grasping My will and show consideration for it. Moreover, they all have the Holy Spirit working on them. Secondly, they persistently seek within their spirits, refrain from debauchery, and keep within My bounds at all times; they are extremely normal. Moreover, in acting this way, they are not imitating. (Because they are focused on sensing the work of the Holy Spirit, and are considerate of My love for them, they are cautious at all times, and have a deep fear of falling into a mindset of betrayal or defiance against Me.) Thirdly, they act wholeheartedly for Me, are capable of offering up their entire selves, and have already abolished any idea of their own future prospects, their lives, what they eat, wear, and use, and where they live. Fourthly, they constantly hunger and thirst for righteousness, and they believe they lack too much and that they are too immature of stature. Fifthly, as I have mentioned before, they have a good reputation in the world, but have been cast aside by the people of the world. In their relationships with the opposite sex, they possess moral integrity. All of these are proof, but I cannot now reveal them completely to you, for My work has not yet reached that stage. Firstborn sons, remember! The life feelings within you, your reverence for Me, your love for Me, your knowledge of Me, your seeking for Me, your faith—all these things embody My love for you; they are all proof I give to you so that you may truly become My beloved sons and be the same as Me, eating, living, and enjoying blessings alongside Me in unparalleled glory.

I cannot show lenience toward any who have persecuted Me, any who had no knowledge of Me (including before My name was witnessed), who believed Me to be human, or any who have blasphemed against Me and slandered Me in the past. Even if they were to bear the most resounding witness for Me right now, it still would not do. Persecuting Me in the past was a way of rendering service for Me, and were those people to bear witness for Me today, they would still be My tools. Only those who are genuinely made perfect by Me today are of any use to Me, as I am the righteous God Himself, and I have come out from the flesh and detached Myself from all relationships that are of the earth. I am God Himself, and all people, matters, and things that used to be around Me are in My hands. I am without emotion, and I practice righteousness with all things. I am upright, and not tainted with the slightest bit of filth. Do you understand the meaning of My words? Can you also achieve this? People think that I also possess normal humanity, and have a family and emotions—but do you know that you are completely wrong? I am God! Have you forgotten this? Are you confused? You still do not know Me!

My righteousness has been completely revealed to you. Any way in which I deal with any kind of person reveals both My righteousness and My majesty. Because I am the God Himself who brings wrath with Him, I will not let off the hook even a single person who has persecuted or reviled Me. Under such a strict requirement, do you recognize this? Those whom I chose and predestined are like rare pearls or pieces of agate; they are few and far between. This is because there are bound to be far fewer people who will reign as kings than ones who will be My people, and this is evidence of My power and My wondrous deeds. I often say that I will reward you and bestow crowns upon you, and that with Me there is glory without end. What do I mean by rewards, crowns, and glory? People are under the notion that rewards are material things such as food, clothing, or other things that can be used, but this is completely an outdated way of thinking; it is not what I mean by those terms, and is instead a misconception. Rewards are things that are obtained right now, and they are a part of grace. However, there are also some rewards that are related to carnal pleasures, and those who render service for Me but whom I will not save can also attain some material enjoyment (although, those are still just material things that do service for Me). A crown is not a badge of office; that is, it is not a material thing that I grant you so that you may enjoy it. Rather, it is a new name that I bestow upon you, and whosoever is able to live up to your new name will be a person who has gained a crown, which is gaining My blessings. Rewards and crowns are a part of blessings, but when compared with blessings, they are as different as heaven and earth. Glory simply cannot be imagined with human notions, because glory is not a material thing. For them, it is an extremely abstract concept. What, then, is glory, exactly? What does it mean to say that you will descend in glory together with Me? My entirety—that is, what I am and what I have, mercy and lovingkindness (to My sons), and righteousness, majesty, judgment, wrath, cursing, and burning (to all people)—My person is glory. Why do I say that with Me there is glory without end? It is because with Me there is wisdom without end, as well as incomparable abundance. Therefore, descending in glory with Me means that you have already been made complete by Me, you possess what I am and what I have, you have been completed by Me, you revere Me, and you do not oppose Me. Surely this is clear to you by now!

The tense situation of all nations on earth has reached a climax, and they are all steadily preparing to render service for Me and to accept the incineration I bring to them. When My wrath and burning arrive, there will have been no prior clue. However, I know what it is I do, and I am absolutely clear about it. You should be certain about My words, and you must make haste to get everything ready. Be prepared to shepherd those who come seeking from abroad. Remember this! China—that is, every single person and place within China—is subject to My curses. Do you understand the meaning of My words?

Chapter 86

People say that I am a merciful God; they say that I will bring salvation to all that I have created. These things are all said based upon human notions. That I am a merciful God is said to My firstborn sons, and that I will bring salvation to all is said to My sons and My people. Because I am a wise God, it is clear, in My mind, which people I love and which people I hate. For those whom I love, I will always love them to the very end, and that love shall never change. As for those whom I hate, I am not moved one bit, no matter how well they behave. This is because they were not born of Me and do not possess My qualities or My life. In other words, they were not predestined and selected by Me—for I am infallible. That is, all My deeds are called holy and honorable, and I never have any regrets. In people's eyes, I am extremely heartless—but do you not recognize that I am the righteous and majestic God Himself? Everything of Mine is correct; those whom I hate shall certainly receive My curses, and those whom I love shall certainly receive My blessings. This is My holy and inviolable disposition, and no one shall change it. This is absolute!

Today, those who are truly in accord with My intentions will surely be made complete by Me, for My work is both forthright and thorough, and I leave no loose ends. Those whom I curse shall be burned. Why is it, then, that the majority of people have been cursed by Me and yet the Holy Spirit is still doing His work upon them (this is said in regard to My not residing in a filthy temple)? Do you understand the true meaning behind the saying that all matters and all things render service for Christ? The Holy Spirit does His work through them when I make use of their service, but ordinarily, when they are not in My service, they are fundamentally not spiritually enlightened. Even if they do seek, they do it out of zeal, and this is a ruse of Satan's—for in ordinary times, they pay no attention at all to My work and are utterly inconsiderate with regard to My burdens. Now that My firstborn sons have grown up, I am kicking them away; for this reason, My Spirit has withdrawn everywhere, and special emphasis has been placed upon My firstborn sons. Do you understand? All things rest on My deeds, My predestination, and all the words that issue forth from My mouth. All locations that have received My blessings are necessarily places in which I work and in which My work is carried out. China is the nation in which Satan is most worshiped, so it has been cursed by Me. Moreover, it is the nation that has done the most to persecute Me. I absolutely will not do My work on people who are under the influence of the great red dragon. Do you understand the true meaning of My words? After all, My sons and My people are few. Absolutely everything is within My hands; energy should be focused and more efforts should be spent on the ones whom I have chosen and predestined. In other words, those who are My firstborn sons should hurry up and practice so that they can share in My burdens as soon as possible, and devote all their efforts to My work.

Those of you who do service for Me, listen! You can receive some of My grace when doing service for Me. That is, you will know, temporarily, about My later work and things that will happen in the future—but you will absolutely not enjoy them. This is My grace. When your service is fulfilled, leave at once, and do not linger. Those of you who are My firstborn sons should not be arrogant, but you are allowed to be proud, for I have bestowed endless blessings upon you. Those of you who are targets for destruction should not bring trouble upon yourselves or feel sad about your destiny. Are you not a descendant of Satan? After you have done your service for Me, you may return to the bottomless pit, because you will no longer be of any use to Me. I shall then begin to deal with you with My chastisement. Once I start working, I will follow through to the end; My deeds shall be accomplished, and My accomplishments shall last forever. This is all applicable to My firstborn sons, My sons, and My people, and it goes for you as well: My chastisements of you will be everlasting. I have told you many times before that the evil ones who resist Me shall surely be chastised by Me. If you are not reprimanded by the Holy Spirit after you resist Me, then you have already been cursed, and thereafter you shall be struck down by My hand. If you are disciplined by the Holy Spirit while having bad thoughts about Me, then you have received My blessings; however, you must always be cautious, never neglectful, and never careless.

You must hasten your pace and do what I want to be done—this is what I intend for you with great eagerness. Could it be that even now, you still have not understood the meaning of My words? Could it be that you still do not know My intention? I have spoken with increasing clarity, and said more and more, but have you still made no effort to fathom the meaning of My words? Satan, do not imagine that you can destroy My plan! Those who do service for Satan—that is, the offspring of Satan (this refers to those who are possessed by Satan, who, therefore, most certainly have the life of Satan, and so are said to be its offspring)—beg for mercy at My feet, weeping and gnashing their teeth. However, I would not do such a stupid thing! Can I forgive Satan? Can I bring salvation to Satan? That would be impossible! I do what I say, and I will never regret it!

Anything I voice comes into being. Is that not so? Nevertheless, you continue to distrust Me, doubt My words, and think that I am just joking with you. It is just so ridiculous. I am God Himself! Do you understand? I am God Himself! If I did not possess any wisdom or power, could I just do and say as I please? Yet still you distrust Me. I have repeatedly stressed these things to you, and I have told them to you over and over. Why is it that most of you still do not believe? Why do you still harbor doubts? Why do you cling for dear life to your own notions? Can they save you? I do what I say. I have told you several times: Regard My words as true, and do not doubt. Have you taken them seriously? On your own, you can do nothing, yet you are unable to believe in what I do. What can be said of such a person? To be blunt, it is as though I never created you. In other words, you are unqualified, in every respect, to be a service-doer for Me. Everyone must believe My words! All must pass the test; I will let no one slip by. Of course, the exceptions are those who believe. People who trust in My words will certainly receive My blessings, which will be bestowed upon you and fulfilled in you according to what you believe. My firstborn sons! I am now beginning to grant you all My blessings. Little by little, you will begin to cast off all those detested bonds of the flesh: marriage, family, eating, dressing, sleeping, and all natural disasters (wind, sun, rain, biting gales, the misery of snowfall, and all other things you hate). You will travel across the oceans, over the land, and through the air without being affected by any restrictions of space, time, or geography, heartily enjoying yourselves in My loving embrace and in charge of everything under My tender care.

Who is not proud of the firstborn sons that I have made complete? Who will not praise My name for their sake? Why do I now wish to reveal so many mysteries to you? Why now, and not in the past? This in itself is also a mystery; do you know that? Why did I not mention in the past that China is a nation I have cursed? And why did I not make known those who do service for Me? Today, I shall also tell you this: Today, in My opinion, everything has been accomplished, and I say this with regard to My firstborn sons. (For today, My firstborn sons have come to reign alongside Me—and have not only taken shape, but actually are reigning together with Me. At present, those in whom the Holy Spirit works surely reign alongside Me—and this is being revealed right now; not yesterday, and not tomorrow.) Today I am bringing to light all of My mysteries of normal humanity, because those people whom I wish to reveal have been revealed, and this is My wisdom. My work has progressed to this step: That is, I must, at this point in time, implement the plan of administrative decrees I have decided upon specifically for this period. As such, I am conferring the appropriate verifications upon the firstborn sons, the sons, the people, and the service-doers, because I have authority and will issue judgment, and I will rule with the iron rod. Who dares not do service for Me obediently? Who dares complain to Me? Who would dare say that I am not the God of righteousness? I know, your demonic nature has long been revealed before Me: You feel jealousy and hatred toward anyone to whom I am good. This is absolutely Satan's nature! I am good to My sons; would you dare claim that I am unrighteous? I could kick you out completely, but fortunately for you, you are doing service for Me, and now is not the time; otherwise, I would have kicked you out!

Satan's ilk! Stop being savages! Speak no more! Act no more! My work has already begun to be carried out in My chosen sons and people, and it is already spreading throughout all nations, all denominations, all religions, and all walks of life outside of China. Why is it that those who render service for Me are always spiritually blocked? Why do they never comprehend spiritual matters? Why is it that My Spirit never works in these people? Generally speaking, I simply cannot expend too much effort on those I have neither predestined nor chosen. All My previous suffering, and all My painstaking care and efforts, have been for the sake of My firstborn sons and a small portion of sons and people; moreover, I have done these things so that My future work can be completed without a hitch and so that My will is unimpeded. Because I am the wise God Himself, I have made proper arrangements for every step. I make no effort to retain any person (this is directed at those who were not chosen or predestined), nor do I strike down any person casually (this is directed at the chosen and predestined): This is My administrative decree, which no one can change! Toward those whom I hate, I am ruthless; toward those whom I love, I am watchful and protective. Thus, I do what I say (those whom I choose, are chosen, and those whom I predestine, are predestined; these are My affairs that have been arranged by Me since before creation).

Who can change My heart? Other than My acting according to the plans that I make as I wish, who would dare to act rashly and not obey My orders? These are all My administrative decrees; who would dare to remove even a single one of them from Me? All must be at My command. Some people say a certain person has suffered so much, and is honest and purely considerate of My heart. Why, then, did I not choose him? This, too, is an administrative decree of Mine. If I say someone is in tune with My intentions, then that person is in tune with My intentions and is one I love; if I say that someone is a child of Satan, then that person is one I hate. Do not curry favor with anyone! Can you truly see through that person? These things are all decided by Me. A son will always be a son, and Satan will always be Satan; in other words, man's nature does not change. Unless I make them change, all will follow their own kind, and are immutable!

I reveal My mysteries to you as My work progresses. Do you actually know to which step it is that My work has progressed? Will you really follow My Spirit's lead, to do what I do and to say what I say? Why do I mention that China is a nation I have cursed? Firstly, I created the Chinese people of today in My image. They had no spirit, and early on, they were corrupted by Satan and could not be saved. For this reason, I grew angry with these people and cursed them. I hate these people the most, and I get angry whenever they are even mentioned, for they are the children of the great red dragon. This makes one recall the era in which the countries of the world had annexed China. It is still the same to this day, and it has all been My curse—My most powerful judgment against the great red dragon. Finally, I made another kind of people, within whom I predestined My firstborn sons, My sons, My people, and those who render service for Me. Thus, all that I do today was arranged by Me long ago. Why do those in power in China repeatedly persecute and oppress you? It is because the great red dragon is unhappy with My curse, and resists Me. However, it is precisely under this sort of persecution and threat that I make complete My firstborn sons, so that this may give a strong counterattack against the great red dragon and its children. I will sort them out later. Now, after listening to My words, do you truly understand the significance of My allowing you to reign with Me? The time that I say the great red dragon has been utterly cast down to its death is also the time when My firstborn sons reign with Me. The great red dragon's persecution of the firstborn sons serves Me greatly, and once My sons are grown up and can manage the affairs of My house, those wicked servants (the service-doers) will be kicked aside. Because My firstborn sons will have been reigning with Me and will have fulfilled My intentions, I will, one by one, push the service-doers into the lake of fire and brimstone: They must go, at all costs! I am fully aware that Satan's ilk also want to enjoy My blessings, and do not wish to return under Satan's domain; however, I have My administrative decrees, by which everyone must abide and which must be executed—and no one will be exempt. Later, I will tell you My administrative decrees one after another, to keep you from violating them.

People simply cannot imagine the extent to which My pace has accelerated: This is a wonder that has occurred that is unfathomable to man. My pace has continued since the creation of the world, and My work has never stopped. The entire universe world changes from day to day, and people, too, are constantly changing. These are all part of My work, all part of My plan, and, moreover, they belong to My management, and no human knows or understands these things. Only when I Myself tell you, only when I communicate with you face-to-face, do you know even the tiniest bit; otherwise, absolutely no one can have any idea of the blueprint for My management plan. Such is My great power, and moreover, such are My wondrous actions. These are things that no one can change. Therefore, what I say today goes, and this simply cannot change. Human notions do not contain even the least bit of knowledge of Me—they are all but nonsensical chatter! Do not think that you have had enough or that you are satisfied! I tell you this: You still have far to go! Of My entire management plan, you know but a little, so you must listen to what I say and do whatever I tell you to do. Act according to My wishes in everything, and you will surely have My blessings; whosoever believes can receive, whereas whosoever does not believe will have that “nothing” that they imagined fulfilled in them. This is My righteousness, and, even more, it is My majesty, My wrath, and My chastisement. I will not let anyone get away with even a single thought or action.

Upon hearing My words, most people fear and tremble, their faces creased with worried frowns. Have I actually wronged you? Could it be that you are not a child of the great red dragon? You even pretend to be good! You even pretend to be My firstborn son! Do you think I am blind? Do you think I cannot distinguish between people? I am the God who searches people's innermost hearts: This is what I tell My sons, and what I also tell you, the children of the great red dragon. I see everything clearly, making not the slightest error. How could I not know what I do? I am crystal clear about what I do! Why do I say that I am God Himself, the Creator of the universe and all things? Why do I say that I am the God who examines people's innermost hearts? I am well aware of every person's situation. Do you think I do not know what to do or what to say? This is not your concern. Be careful not to be killed by My hand; you would suffer loss that way. My administrative decrees are unforgiving. Do you understand? All of the above are parts of

My administrative decrees. From the day I tell them to you, if you commit any further transgressions, there will be retribution, because previously you did not understand.

Now I promulgate My administrative decrees for you (effective from the day of their promulgation, assigning different chastisements to different people):

I keep My promises, and everything is in My hands: Whosoever doubts will certainly be killed. There is no room for any consideration; they will immediately be exterminated, thus ridding My heart of hatred. (From now on it is confirmed that whosoever is killed must not be a member of My kingdom, and must be a descendent of Satan.)

As firstborn sons, you should keep your own positions and fulfill your own duties well, and not be nosy. You should offer yourselves up for My management plan, and everywhere you go, you should bear good witness to Me and glorify My name. Do not commit shameful acts; be examples for all My sons and My people. Do not be debauched even for a moment: You must always appear before everyone bearing the identity of firstborn sons, and not be servile; rather, you should stride forward with heads held high. I am asking you to glorify My name, not to disgrace My name. Those who are firstborn sons each have their own individual function, and cannot do everything. This is the responsibility I have given you, and it is not to be shirked. You must dedicate yourselves wholeheartedly, with all your mind and all your strength, to fulfilling that with which I have entrusted you.

From this day forward, throughout the universe world, the duty of shepherding all My sons and all My people will be entrusted to My firstborn sons to fulfill, and I will chastise whosoever cannot dedicate their entire heart and mind to fulfilling it. This is My righteousness. I will neither spare nor go easy on even My firstborn sons.

If there is anyone among My sons or among My people who ridicules and insults one of My firstborn sons, I will punish them harshly, for My firstborn sons represent Myself; what someone does to them, they do also to Me. This is the most severe of My administrative decrees. I will allow My firstborn sons to, according to their wishes, administer My righteousness against any of My sons and My people who violate this decree.

I will gradually abandon whosoever regards Me frivolously and focuses only on My food, clothing, and sleep, attends only to My external affairs and has no consideration for My burden, and does not pay attention to fulfilling their own functions properly. This is directed at all who have ears.

Whoever finishes doing service for Me must obediently withdraw without fuss. Be careful, or else I will sort you out. (This is a supplementary decree.)

My firstborn sons shall pick up the iron rod from now on and begin to execute My authority to govern all nations and peoples, to walk among all nations and peoples, and to carry out My judgment, righteousness, and majesty among all nations and peoples. My sons and My people shall fear Me, praise Me, cheer Me, and glorify Me without ceasing, because My management plan is fulfilled and My firstborn sons can reign with Me.

This is a part of My administrative decrees; after this, I will tell them to you as the work progresses. From the above administrative decrees, you will see the pace at which I do My work, as well as which step My work has reached. This shall be a confirmation.

I have already judged Satan. Because My will is unimpeded and because My firstborn sons have gained glory alongside Me, I have already exercised My righteousness and majesty upon the world and all things that belong to Satan. I do not lift a finger or pay attention to Satan at all (because it does not even deserve to converse with Me). I just keep doing what I want to do. My work proceeds smoothly, step by step, and My will is unimpeded across the entire earth. This has shamed Satan to a degree, and it has been completely destroyed, but this in itself has not fulfilled My will. I also allow My firstborn sons to carry out My administrative decrees over them. On the one hand, what I let Satan see is My wrath toward it; on the other hand, I let it see My glory (see that My firstborn sons are the most resounding witnesses to Satan's humiliation). I do not punish it in person; rather, I let My firstborn sons carry out My righteousness and majesty. Because Satan used to abuse My sons, persecute My sons, and oppress My sons, today, after its service is over, I will allow My mature firstborn sons to sort it out. Satan has been powerless against the fall. The paralysis of all nations in the world is the best testimony; people fighting and countries at war are the obvious manifestations of the collapse of Satan's kingdom. The reason I did not show any signs and wonders in the past was to bring humiliation upon Satan and glorify My name, step by step. When Satan is completely finished off, I begin to show My power: What I say comes into being, and the supernatural things that are not in conformance with human notions will be fulfilled (these refer to the blessings soon to come). Because I am the practical God Himself and I have no rules, and because I speak according to changes in My management plan, what I have said in the past is therefore not necessarily applicable in the present. Do not cling to your own notions! I am not a God who abides by rules; with Me, everything is free, transcendent, and completely released. Perhaps what was said yesterday is outdated today, or perhaps it might be cast aside today (however, My administrative decrees, since they are promulgated, will never change). These are the steps in My management plan. Do not cling to regulations. Every day there is new light and there are new revelations, and that is My plan. Every day My light will be revealed in you and My voice will be released to the universe world. Do you understand? This is your duty, the responsibility I have entrusted to you. You must not neglect it for even a moment. I will use to the end the people I approve, and this will never change. Because I am the almighty God, I know which kind of person should do which thing, as well as which kind of person is able to do which thing. This is My omnipotence.

Chapter 89

It is not easy to do everything in accordance with My intentions. It is not a matter of forcing yourself in pretense; rather, it depends on whether I endowed you with My qualities prior to My creation of the world. All these things are up to Me. They are not things that humans can accomplish. I love whom I wish to love, and whoever I say is the firstborn son, is surely the firstborn son. That is exactly right! You might want to fake it, but doing so would be in vain! Do you think I cannot recognize you for what you are? Is it good enough for you to just exhibit some good behavior when before Me? Is it that simple? It absolutely is not; you must have My promise, and you must have My predestination. Do you think I am unaware of what you do behind My back? You are debauched! Once your service to Me is done, hurry back to the lake of fire and brimstone! I am disgusted; I am filled with loathing at the very sight of you. All in service to Me, all who do not loyally expend themselves for Me, all who are dissolute and unrestrained, and all who cannot grasp My intentions—after your service is done, hurry up and get out of My sight! Otherwise, I will kick you out! These people may not stay in My house (namely, the church) for a single moment longer. They must all get out of here so as not to bring shame on My name and ruin My reputation. These people are all descendants of the great red dragon; they were sent by the great red dragon to disrupt My management. They specialize in deception to disturb My work. My son! You must see through this! Do not associate with such people. When you see these kinds of people, quickly get far away from them to avoid falling into their traps; that would do your life harm! I most detest those people who speak carelessly, who act without thinking, who just joke around and laugh, and who engage in frivolous chitchat. I do not want any of those people; they are all of the ilk of Satan! They engage in teasing for no reason at all. What are these creatures? They talk nonsense and run amok. Do they still feel no shame? Actually, this type of person has the least value, and I have long since seen through them and abandoned them. Had I not, why would they repeatedly talk nonsense without being subject to My discipline? They truly are descendants of the great red dragon! Now, I have begun to remove these things one by one. Could I use Satan's descendants as My firstborn sons, as My sons and My people? Would I not then be muddled? I will definitely not do that. Do you have a clear understanding of this?

Everything that you encounter today, whether good or bad, was all arranged by My wise hands; all is orchestrated by Me and under My control. This is definitely not something that humankind can readily accomplish. Some people still have sweaty palms from worrying about Me, but they truly need not worry! They neglect their main task, and do not seek to enter the spirit, yet still they wish for growth in life. They hope in vain! They are not anxious at all, yet they still want to satisfy My will! You worry on My behalf, but I do not worry. What are you worried about? Your work for Me is perfunctory, and you lie through your teeth. I tell you! From this moment forth, I shall drive people like you out of My house. Such people are not worthy of serving Me in My house. I detest them because they blaspheme Me with their actions. When it was said “blasphemy against Me is an unforgivable sin,” to whom did this refer? Are you clear about this? A person like this believes the problem has not yet gotten so serious, even though he has already committed this sin. Truly, this muddled person is blind and ignorant, and his spirit is blocked! I will kick you out! (Because this is Satan’s temptation of Me, I hate it so much, and this subject has been repeatedly mentioned, enraging Me every time. I cannot hold My rage back, and nobody can stop it. The time has not yet come, otherwise I would have long since dealt with that person!) (This is about the fact that at present, there are many people who still do not believe that foreigners will seek to crowd into China; even now they still do not believe, and this is causing My rage to churn and boil over.)

Within My house, exactly what sort of person is it who is after My heart? That is, prior to creation, what sort of people did I predestine to live in My house forever? Do you know? Have you considered what sort of people I love and what sort of people I hate? My house is for those who are of the same mind as Me, and who share good times and hardships with Me—in other words, people who share in both the blessings and in hardship. These people can all love what I love and hate what I hate. They are able to abandon what I detest. If I say they cannot eat, then they are willing to let their stomachs go empty to satisfy My intentions. This kind of person is willing to remain loyal to Me and expend themselves for Me, and can show consideration for My painstaking efforts, always working hard for My sake. Therefore, to such people, I grant the status of firstborn sons, giving everything I have to them: I have the ability to lead all the churches, and this I give unto them; I have wisdom, and this I also give unto them; I can suffer for the sake of practicing the truth, and I shall also grant these people determination, making them able to suffer everything for My sake; I have good qualities, and I shall give these unto them, making them exactly like Me, without the slightest bit of difference, so that others will see Me when they see these people. Now, I am putting My complete divinity within these people to enable them to live out one aspect of My complete divinity, so that they can manifest Me fully; this is My intention. Do not seek to be like Me in terms of outward things (eating the same as Me, or wearing the same clothes as Me); all of that is useless, and you will only ruin yourselves if you seek such things. This is because those who seek to imitate Me outwardly are lackeys of Satan, and that sort of effort is a scheme of Satan; it is reflective of Satan’s ambition. You seek to be the same as I, but are you worthy? I will trample you to death! My work is constantly underway, expanding to every nation around the world. Quickly, follow My footsteps!

Chapter 90

All those who are blind must be gone from Me and must not remain a moment longer, for the ones I want are those who can know Me, who can see Me and who can gain all things from Me. And who can truly gain all things from Me? There are most certainly very few of this kind of person and they will surely receive My blessings. I love these people and I will pick them out one by one to be My right hand, to be My manifestation. I shall make all nations and all peoples praise Me unceasingly, cheering on and on for the sake of these people. Oh, Mount Zion! Raise the banner of victory and cheer for Me! For I go across the universe and to the ends of the earth, covering every corner of mountains, rivers and all things, before returning here once more. I return victoriously with righteousness, judgment, wrath and burning, and even more so with My firstborn sons. All things that I loathe and all people, matters, and objects that I detest, I cast far away. I am victorious and I have completed all that I want to do. Who dares to say I have not completed My work? Who dares to say I have not gained My firstborn sons? Who dares to say that I have not returned in triumph? Such people are certainly the kind of Satan; they are those who find it hard to gain My pardon. They are blind, they are filthy demons and I loathe them the most. On these things I will begin to reveal My wrath and the entirety of My judgment, and, through My burning fire, kindle the universe and the earth from end to end, illuminating every corner—this is My administrative decree.

Once you have understood My words, you should derive comfort from them; you must not let them pass by unheeded. Utterances of judgment befall every day, so why are you so dull-witted and numb? Why do you not cooperate with Me? Are you so willing to go to hell? I say I am the God of mercy to My firstborn sons, My sons and people, so how do you understand this? This is not a simple statement, and it should be comprehended from a positive perspective. Oh, blind mankind! I have saved you many a time, bringing you out of Satan's grasp and out of chastisement so that you may obtain My promise, so why do you not show any consideration for My heart? Can any one of you be saved in this way? My righteousness, majesty and judgment show no mercy to Satan. But as far as you are concerned, the purpose of these things is to save you, yet you are just incapable of understanding My disposition, and nor do you know the principles behind My actions. You thought that I make no distinctions in the severity of My various actions, and that I make no distinctions between the targets of My actions—how ignorant! I am able to see clearly all people, events, and things. I understand with complete clarity the substance of every person, which is to say, I completely see through to the things a person harbors within themselves. I can see clearly if a person is a jezebel or a harlot, and I know who does what in secret. Do not flaunt your charms before Me, you wretch! Get out of here now! So as to avoid bringing shame on My name, I make no use of that kind of person! They cannot bear witness to My name, and instead act counterproductively and bring disgrace to My family! They shall be expelled from My house immediately. I do not want them. I will not tolerate a delay of even one second! For those people, no matter how they seek, it is futile, for in My kingdom all are holy and unblemished in any way. If I say I do not want someone—and that includes My own people—then I mean it; do not wait for Me to change My mind. I do not care how good you were to Me before!

I reveal mysteries to you every day. Do you know My method of speaking? What is the basis upon which I reveal My mysteries? Do you know? You often say that I am the God who provides for you at the right time, so how do you comprehend these aspects? I reveal My mysteries to you one by one in accordance with the steps of My work, and I provide for you in accordance with My plan, and even more so in accordance with your real statures (whenever My provision is mentioned, it is in reference to every single person in the kingdom). My method of speaking is thus: To the people in My house I give comfort—I provide for them and I judge them; to Satan I show no mercy, not a shred, and all is wrath and burning. I will use My administrative decrees to cast out from My house one by one those whom I have not predestined or chosen. There is no need to feel anxious. After I cause them to reveal their original forms (after they render service for My sons when the end comes), they will return to the bottomless pit, or else I shall never put this matter to rest and I shall never let go. People often mention hell and Hades. But what do these two words refer to, and what is the difference between them? Do they really refer to some cold, dark corner? Human minds are always interrupting My management, thinking that their own random ponderings are perfectly good! But these are all nothing but their own imaginings. Hades and hell both refer to a temple of filth that has previously been lived in by Satan or by evil spirits. That is to say, whosoever has been occupied before by Satan or by evil spirits—it is they who are Hades and it is they who are hell—there is no mistake! This is why I have stressed repeatedly in the past that I do not live in a temple of filth. Can I (God Himself) live in Hades, or in hell? Would that not be ridiculous nonsense? I have said this several times, but you still do not understand what I mean. Compared to hell, Hades is corrupted more severely by Satan. Those who are for Hades are the most serious cases, and I have simply not predestined these people; those who are for hell are those whom I have predestined, and then cast out. Put simply, I have not chosen even one of these people.

People frequently show themselves to be experts at misunderstanding My words. If I did not clearly point out and clarify things bit by bit, who among you would understand? You only half believe even the words that I speak, never mind things that have not been mentioned before. Now, internal disputes have begun within all nations: Laborers disputing with leaders, students with teachers, citizens with government officials, and all activities such as these that cause unrest first arise within every nation, and this is all just part of the service that is rendered to Me. And why do I say that service is rendered to Me through these things? Do I take pleasure in people's misfortune? Do I sit by, unheeding? Certainly not! For this is Satan lashing out in its death throes, and the purpose of all of these things is to harness the negative to act as a foil for My power and for My wondrous deeds. It is all a strong testimony that bears witness to Me, and a weapon with which to attack Satan. Just when all nations of the world are fighting over land and influence, My firstborn sons and I reign as kings together and deal with them, and it is absolutely beyond their imagination that under these deplorable environmental conditions, My kingdom is realized utterly among man. Furthermore, when they vie for power and are wishing to judge others, others judge them and they are burned by My wrath—how pitiful! How pitiful! My kingdom is realized among man—what a glorious event this is!

Being human (whether the people of My kingdom or the progeny of Satan), you must all see My wondrous deeds, otherwise I shall never put this matter to rest. Even if you are willing to accept My judgment, it will still not do if you have not seen My wondrous deeds. All people must be convinced by heart, by word and by sight, and no one can be let off lightly. All people must give glory to Me. In the end, I shall make even the great red dragon rise up and praise Me for My victory. This is My administrative decree—will you remember it? All people must praise Me unendingly and give glory to Me!

Chapter 91

My Spirit speaks and utters My voice constantly—how many among you can know Me? Why must I become flesh and come among you? This is a great mystery. You think of Me and yearn for Me all day long, and you praise Me, enjoy Me, and eat and drink of Me every day, and yet today you still do not know Me. How ignorant and blind you are! How little you know Me! How many among you can be considerate of My will? That is, how many among you can know Me? All of you are devilish types, yet you still want to satisfy My will? Forget it! Let Me tell you: No matter how good Satan's actions are, they are meant to demolish My construction and to interrupt My management. No matter how good its actions, its substance does not change—it defies Me. Therefore, many people are unwittingly struck down by My hand and unwittingly driven out of My family. Today, not one thing (whether great or small) is orchestrated by man; all is in My hands. If someone says that all things are under man's control, then I say that you defy Me, and I will surely chastise you severely and leave you forever without a place to rest your head. Of all events and things, what is not held within My hands? What is not set by Me, or determined by Me? And still you talk of knowing Me! These are devilish words. You have cheated others, so you think you can cheat Me too? You think that if no one knows what you have done, then nothing will come of it? Do not think you will get off lightly! I must make you kneel before Me and speak it out. It is unacceptable not to speak; this is My administrative decree!

Do you truly understand who My Spirit is, and who My fleshly self is? What is the significance of My incarnation? Who among you has carefully pondered this great matter and received some revelation from Me? You are all fooling yourselves! Why do I say you are the offspring of the great red dragon? Today, I reveal to you the mystery of My incarnation, a mystery that man has been unable to unravel since the creation of the world, that has brought so many objects of My hatred to ruin. And so it is today. Because of My flesh, many whom I love have been perfected. Why exactly must I become flesh? And why do I appear as I do (in all things, including My height, appearance, stature, and so on)? Who has anything to say about that? There is so much significance in My incarnation that it simply cannot all be said. I will tell you now just a part of it (as the steps of My work have made it this far, I must do this and say this): My incarnation is primarily directed at My firstborn sons, in order that I may shepherd them and that they can converse and speak with Me, face-to-face; it further shows that I and My firstborn sons are intimate with each other (meaning that we eat together, stay together, live together, and take action together), in order that they may be fed by Me in reality—these are not empty words, but reality. Previously, people believed in Me but could not grasp reality, and this was because I had not yet been incarnated. Today, My incarnation allows you all to grasp reality and allows those who sincerely love Me to know Me—the wise God Himself—through My speech and behavior and the principles behind the way I handle matters. It also allows those who do not sincerely seek Me to see in My imperceptible actions the aspect of Me that is My humanity, and thereby defy Me, and then die for “no reason at all,” being struck down by Me. In humiliating Satan, the incarnation bears the most resounding witness for Me; not only am I able to come forth from the flesh, but I can also live within the flesh. I suffer no spatial or geographical restriction; for Me, there are no obstructions whatsoever, and everything flows smoothly. It is in this that Satan is most shamed, and when I come forth from the flesh, I still do My work in My flesh, and am not affected at all. I still stride over mountains, rivers, lakes, and every corner of the universe, as well as the myriad things within it. I have been incarnated in order to reveal all those who were born of Me but have risen to defy Me. If I did not become flesh, there would be no way to reveal them (referring to those who act one way to My face and another behind My back). If I remained a Spirit, people would worship Me in their notions, and would think that I am a formless and unreachable God. My incarnation today is quite the opposite of people’s notions (speaking of My height and appearance), as He looks ordinary and is not very tall. It is this point that most humiliates Satan and is the most powerful counter to people’s notions (Satan’s blasphemy). If My appearance were different from everyone else, that would be troublesome—everyone would come to worship Me and understand Me through their own notions, and they would not be able to bear beautiful witness for Me. Thus, I adopted the image I have today, which is not hard to understand at all. Everyone should step outside of human notions and not be tricked by Satan’s cunning schemes. I will tell you more in the future, piece by piece, in accordance with the needs of My work.

Today, My great work has achieved success, and My plan is accomplished. I have gained a group of people who cooperate with Me with a single, unified mind. This is the most glorious time for Me. My beloved sons (all those who love Me) are able to be of one heart and mind with Me in completing, together with Me, all the things I need to do. This is a wondrous thing. After today, those whom I regard unfavorably will not have the work of the Holy Spirit, meaning that I will discard those who do not conform to what I have said in the past. People must conform perfectly to what I say. Remember this! You must conform perfectly. Do not misunderstand; all is up to Me. People—do not talk terms with Me. If I say you are qualified, then it is written in stone; if I say you are not, do not look pained and blame Heaven and earth. It is all My arrangement. Who said you should disrespect yourself? Who said you should commit that shameful folly? Even if you say nothing, you cannot hide the truth from Me. For whom are My words meant when I say I am the God Himself who examines the innermost heart of man? I say it to those who are dishonest. How shameless—doing such a thing behind My back! Do you want to pull the wool over My eyes? It is not that easy! Get out of here, immediately! Son of rebellion! You do not love yourself, and you do not respect yourself! You do not care about yourself, yet you still want Me to love you? Forget it! I do not want even a single wretch of such a likeness. Get away from Me, all of you! This brings the most serious shame upon My name; if you do not see this clearly, it will not do. You must protect yourselves from being contaminated by any filth in this evil and promiscuous old era; you must be completely holy and unblemished. Today, those who are qualified to rule as kings with Me are those who are uncontaminated by any filth, for I am the holy God Himself, and I do not want any who shame My name. Such people are sent by Satan to test Me, and verily, they are all lackeys of Satan that must be beaten back (casting them into the bottomless pit).

My family is holy and unblemished, and My temple is magnificent and majestic (meaning those who possess what I am and what I have). Who dares to enter and cause trouble as they please? I will certainly not forgive them. They shall be utterly destroyed and made greatly ashamed. I act wisely. Without a sword, without a gun, and without lifting a finger, I shall utterly defeat those who defy Me and shame My name. I am magnanimous, and I continue My work at a steady pace, even when Satan creates disturbance to such an extent; I pay it no mind and I will defeat it with the completion of My management plan. This is My power and My wisdom, and more than that, it is a small part of My unending glory. In My eyes, those who defy Me are like bugs crawling in the dirt that I can crush to death underfoot in accordance with My intentions, at any time. However, I do things with wisdom. I would have My firstborn sons deal with them; I am in no rush. I act methodically, in an orderly fashion and without the minutest error. Those firstborn sons who are born of Me should possess what I am, and be able to see My unending wisdom in My deeds!

Every person can see My almightiness and My wisdom in My words and My actions. Wherever I go, My work is there. My footsteps are not only in China; what is more important is that they are in all nations of the world. The first to receive this name, however, are only the seven previously discussed nations, as this is the sequence of My work; in the near future, you will come to have great clarity about this, understanding it thoroughly. If I tell you now, I fear the majority will fall down as a result, for I have said before that I speak to you and utter My voice to you in accordance with your statures, and all I do has within it My unending wisdom, which no one can fathom; the only way is to tell it to you in batches. Know this! You are forever children in My eyes; in every step you take, you must be led by Me and instructed by Me. People—only under My guidance can you live through your lives; without it, no one would be able to go on living. The entire universe world is in My hands, yet you do not see Me bustling around. On the contrary, I am relaxed and happy. People do not know My almightiness, and would feel anxious for Me—how little you know yourselves! You still flaunt your worthless trifles before Me, admiring yourselves! I saw through this long ago. And you engage in tricks before Me, you contemptible wretches! Get out of My house right now! I do not want wretched things like you. I would rather there be no one in My kingdom than your kind—contemptible wretches! Do you know that I have already stopped working on you, despite the fact that you are still eating and dressing as usual? But did you know that you are living for Satan, and that you are rendering service for Satan? Yet you still have the nerve to stand before Me! You are truly shameless!

In the past, I often said, “The great disasters will soon come; the great disasters have already fallen from My hands.” What does “great disasters” refer to, and how should this “fallen” be explained? You think that these great disasters refer to inescapable disasters that injure man’s spirit, soul and body, and you think that the “earthquakes, famines and plagues” of which I speak are these great disasters. But you do not know that you have misinterpreted My words. And you think that this “fallen” means that the great disasters have begun—this is laughable! This is indeed how you understand it, and having heard your explanations, I become truly angry. The mystery that people have been unable to reveal (which is the most secret mystery) is also the one that has been the most seriously misinterpreted throughout the ages, and it is a mystery of which no one has had personal experience (as it is brought to bear only in the last days, and only in the final age can man see it, though they will not recognize it), because I seal it most tightly, such that man cannot penetrate it (even to see the smallest part of it). Now that My work has been carried out to this stage, I enlighten you in accordance with the needs of My work; otherwise, people would have no way to understand. Now I begin to give fellowship; everyone should pay attention, for whoever is not cautious, including My firstborn sons, will suffer My judgment, and in the most serious cases, they shall be struck down by My hand (which means their spirit, soul, and body shall be taken). The great disasters are spoken of in relation to every one of the administrative decrees of My kingdom, and every one of My administrative decrees is a part of the great disasters. (My administrative decrees have not been entirely disclosed to you, but do not worry yourselves or feel anxious about this; there are some things that will bring you little benefit should you come to know them too early. Remember this! I am a wise God.) So, what is the other part? The great disasters contain two parts: My administrative decrees, and My wrath. The time when the great disasters come will also be when I begin to flare in anger and enforce My administrative decrees. Here, I tell My firstborn sons: You must not become degenerate due to this. Have you forgotten that all things and all matters are predestined by Me? My son, have no fear! I shall surely protect you; you shall enjoy good blessings with Me forever, and shall be together with Me for eternity. Because you are My loved ones, I will not forsake you. I do no foolish things, yet if I tore down a thing that has been completed with such difficulty, would I not be shooting Myself in the foot? I know what you think in your heart. Have you remembered this? What else would you have Me say? I will talk more of the great disasters. When the great disasters come, it will be the most frightening time, and they will reveal the ugliness of man to the greatest degree. All manner of demonic visages will be exposed in the light of My face, and they will have nowhere to hide, nowhere to find cover; they will be utterly exposed. The effect of the great disasters will be to make all who are not My chosen or predestined kneel before Me and beg for forgiveness, with weeping and gnashing of teeth. This is My judgment of Satan, My wrathful judgment. I am currently engaged in this work, and there are some, perhaps, who wish to affect qualifications and bluff their way through; the more they do so, the more Satan will work on them, until, at a certain point, their original forms are revealed.

I am in no rush to do My work, and I orchestrate every person Myself (this is a mockery of them, proving they are descendants of the great red dragon, and I pay no attention to them, so it is not excessive to use the word “orchestrate”), and do every deed Myself. Everything succeeds with Me, and it is a safe and secure success; everything I do is already arranged, step by step. I tell you of My will and of My burden a little at a time. From this point on, My words begin to appear to all nations and all peoples. Because My firstborn sons are made complete already (My words focus on My sons and My people), the way I work has begun again to change. Do you see this clearly? Have you felt the tone of My words these past few days? I comfort My firstborn sons every step of the way, but from now on (because My firstborn sons are already made complete), I carry a knife in My hand (“knife” meaning “words of the utmost sternness”). Whomsoever I regard unfavorably for a moment (this refers to those who have not been predestined or chosen, and therefore there is no contradiction), I do not care if they render service for Me, or if they are something else; I will scrap them immediately. I am the almighty God, and I can make all people render service to Me. I am not reluctant to part with such people at all; if I say I do not want them, then I do not want them. Now that this time has come, I need only to see someone who displeases Me and I will discard them immediately, without investigation, for I am the God who is as good as His word. To those whom I have predestined to be in My service—no matter how good you are, no matter whether you have done anything that defies Me, if you displease Me, then I will kick you out. I fear no future trouble. I have My administrative decrees, I am as good as My word, and My word shall be accomplished. Would I let Satan remain? Hear Me, you people! You need not be afraid; you must get out whenever I ask you to get out. Do not give excuses to Me; I have no words to say to you! For I have exercised such patience, and the time to enforce My administrative decrees has arrived, and your last day is also here. For thousands of years, you were debauched and did things always in a headstrong, willful way, but I was always tolerant (as I am magnanimous and permit your corruption to a certain extent). But now, My lenience has come to term, and the time has come for you to be possessed and cast into the lake of fire and brimstone. Make haste and get out the way. I begin formally to enforce My judgment, and I begin to release My wrath.

In all nations and all places of the world, earthquakes, famines, plagues, and all manner of disasters occur frequently. As I do My great work in all nations and all places, these disasters will arise with more severity than at any other time since the creation of the world. This is the beginning of My judgment of all peoples, but My sons can rest easy; no disaster will befall you, and I will protect you. (This means that you will afterward live in the body, but not in the flesh, so you will not suffer the pain of any disaster.) Together with Me, you will simply reign as kings and judge all nations and all peoples, enjoying good blessings with Me forever in the universe and at the ends of the earth. These words will all be fulfilled, and they will soon be achieved before your very eyes. I delay not a single hour nor a single day; I do things incredibly quickly. Do not be worried or anxious; the blessing I give you is something no one can take from you—this is My administrative decree. All people will be obedient to Me because of My deeds; they will cheer without cease, and more yet will they leap for joy without end.

Chapter 93

Reality is achieved before one's eyes, and every single thing has already been achieved; the pace of My work quickens, rising high, like a rocket after launch. No one ever expected this. Only after things come to pass will you understand the true meaning of My words. The offspring of the great red dragon are no exception, and they must be made to witness My wondrous deeds with their own eyes. Do not think that because you are certain of Me after having seen My deeds, I will not forsake you—it is not that simple! I shall certainly fulfill the words I have said and the events I have decided, and they will not return to Me void. In China, apart from the minority who are My firstborn sons, there are few who are My people. So today, I say clearly to you (the offspring of the great red dragon, who have persecuted Me most terribly) that you must not hold onto any great hopes, and that the focus of My work (since the creation of the world) has been on My firstborn sons and on several nations beyond China. For this reason, when My firstborn sons are grown, My will shall be achieved. (Once My firstborn sons are grown, all things will be done, for the task ahead is given to them.) I now allow these people to see a portion of My wondrous deeds only to shame the great red dragon. These people are simply not able to take pleasure in that but can only be happy that they render service to Me. And they have no alternative, for I have My administrative decrees and none dare offend them.

I will now fellowship about some situations involving the coming of foreigners, so that you may have foreknowledge, properly prepare everything to bear witness to My name, and go stand above them and rule them. (I say “stand above them and rule them” because the greatest among them is still the least among you.) These people have all gained the revelation of the Holy Spirit, and in the future, they will all crowd together into China, as if by prior arrangement. The great red dragon is taken unawares and tries its utmost to resist, but remember one thing! My management plan has been realized completely, and nothing and no man dare obstruct My steps. I give them revelation at all times, and they act by following the guidance of the Holy Spirit. They will certainly not suffer the bondage of the great red dragon, for in Me, all is released and set free. I have arranged all things appropriately, waiting for you to do the preparatory work to shepherd them. I have said so all along, but most of you still only half believe. How about now? You are dumbfounded, are you not?

These things are all secondary; the main thing is your completing all preparatory work as soon as possible. Do not be alarmed. The One who does the work is Me and, when the time comes, I shall do My work Myself. I have smashed the great red dragon to pieces. That is to say, My Spirit has withdrawn from all people, apart from My firstborn sons (and now it is easier to reveal who are the offspring of the great red dragon). These people have finished rendering service to Me, and I will send them back to the bottomless pit. (This means that I will use none of them. From now on, My firstborn sons will be completely revealed, and those who are by My side and who are fit for My use shall be My firstborn sons.) My firstborn sons, you officially enjoy the blessings I bestow on you (for all those I detest have shown their true colors), and henceforth there will be no instances of defiance against Me among you. You are genuinely, one-hundred-percent certain about Me. (Only today is this completely accomplished, and I preordained this time.) All that you hold in your hearts and minds is endless love and reverence for Me, and you praise Me and give glory to Me at all times. You truly are living under the care and protection of My love in the third heaven. What unparalleled bliss and happiness! It is another realm, one that people find hard to imagine—the true, spiritual world!

All disasters arise in succession, each more severe than the last, and the situation grows tenser by the day. This is only the beginning of the disasters; the more severe disasters that are to come are unimaginable to man. Let My sons sort them out; this is My administrative decree, and I arranged it long ago. All signs and wonders, never before seen by man, arise from Me, appearing one after another to all peoples (meaning all the people of My kingdom). But this is something that will happen in the near future. Do not be anxious. This entering the kingdom, of which everyone has spoken—what state is it to enter the kingdom? And what is the kingdom? Is it a physical city? You misunderstand. The kingdom is not on earth, nor in the physical sky, but the spiritual world that man cannot see or touch. Only those who, having accepted My name, are made entirely complete by Me and enjoy My blessings will be able to enter it. The spiritual world, often mentioned before, is the surface of the kingdom. Truly entering the kingdom, however, is not an easy matter. Those who enter it must obtain My promise and must be people I have predestined and chosen Myself. Therefore, the spiritual world is not a place where people can come and go as they please. People's understanding of this used to be so superficial, and consisted purely of the notions of man. Only those who enter the kingdom can enjoy blessings, so not only is man unable to enjoy these blessings, but more than that, he is unable to see them. This is My final administrative decree.

Chapter 94

I return to Zion with My firstborn sons—do you really understand the true meaning of these words? As I have once and again reminded you, I want you to grow up quickly and reign with Me. Do you remember? These things are all related directly to My incarnation: From Zion, I came into the world in the flesh, in order to gain through the flesh a group of people who are of one mind with Me, and having done so, I will return to Zion. This means we still need to return from the flesh to the original body. This is the true meaning of “returning to Zion.” This is also the true meaning and focus of My entire management plan, and even more, it is the most important part of My management plan, which no one can block, and which will be achieved immediately. When in the flesh, one can never cast off human notions and thinking, and much less can one cast off the earthly air or cast off the dust, and one will always be clay; only in the body can one be eligible to enjoy blessings. What are blessings? Do you remember? In the flesh, there can be no consideration of blessings, so the path from the flesh to the body is one every firstborn son must follow. In the flesh, you are oppressed and persecuted by the great red dragon (which is because you have no power and have gained no glory), but in the body, it will be very different, and you will be proud and elated. The days of oppression will be entirely done, and you will be forever released and set free. Only in this way can I join what I am and what I have into you. Otherwise, you will only have My quality. No matter how a person imitates another person externally, they cannot be exactly the same. Only in the holy spiritual body (meaning the body) can we be exactly the same (which refers to having the same qualities, the same being, the same possessions, and being able to be of one mind, united, undivided, and unpartitioned, for all is the holy spiritual body).

Why have you now begun to hate the world, to be disgusted with eating, dressing, and all such manner of irritating things, and moreover, cannot wait to be rid of them? This is a sign that you will enter into the spiritual world (the body). You all have premonitions of this (though they differ in degree). I will make use of different people, different events, and different things, all in service of My most crucial step, and these shall all render service for Me. I must do so. (Of course, I cannot accomplish this in the flesh, and only My Spirit Himself can do this work, because the time has not yet arrived.) This is the final bit of function that the entire universe world serves. Everyone shall praise Me and acclaim Me joyfully. My great work is complete. The seven bowls of plagues pour out from My hand, the seven thunders peal, the seven trumpets sound, and the seven seals are opened—to the universe world, to all nations and all peoples, and to the mountains, the rivers, and all things. What are the seven bowls of plagues? What is their precise target? Why do I say they will pour out from My hand? A long time will pass before everyone is utterly convinced, before everyone understands completely. Even if I told you now, you would only understand a small part. According to human imagination, the seven bowls of plagues are aimed at all the countries and peoples of the world, but this is not, in fact, the case. “Seven bowls of plagues” refers to the influence of Satan the devil, and to the conspiracy of the great red dragon (the object that I use to render service for Me). At that time, I will release Satan and the great red dragon to chastise the sons and the people, and it will thereby be revealed who the sons are and who the people are. The deceived are those who were not targets of My predestination, while My firstborn sons will at that time be reigning with Me. In this way, I will make complete the sons and the people. The pouring out of the seven bowls of plagues will not bear on all nations and all peoples, but only on My sons and My people. Blessings do not come easily; a full price must be paid. When the sons and the people grow up, the seven bowls of plagues will be cleared away entirely, and afterward, they will not exist. What is the “seven thunders pealing”? This is not hard to understand. At the moment My firstborn sons and I become the body, the seven thunders will peal. This will shake the entire universe, as if heaven and earth were being turned upside down. Everyone will know this; no one will remain ignorant of it. At that time, My firstborn sons and I will be together in glory and begin the next step of work. Many people will kneel down for mercy and forgiveness because of the peal of the seven thunders. But it will no longer be the Age of Grace: It will be the time for wrath. As for all who do evil (being those who fornicate, or deal in dirty money, or have unclear boundaries with the opposite sex, or who interrupt or damage My management, or who do not understand spiritual matters, or who are possessed by evil spirits, and so on—all except My elect), none will be let off, nor any pardoned, but cast down, each and every one of them, to Hades, where they will perish forever! “The seven trumpets sounding” does not refer to a great, hostile environment, nor does it refer to any declaration to the world; these are entirely human notions. “The seven trumpets” refers to My wrathful utterance. When My voice (majestic judgment and wrathful judgment) issues forth, the seven trumpets sound. (In the context of right now, in My home, this is the most severe, and no one can escape it.) And all demons in Hades and hell, great and small, will take their heads in their hands and flee in all directions, weeping and gnashing their teeth, ashamed and with nowhere to hide. At the moment, it is not the seven trumpets beginning to sound, but My raging fury and My most severe judgment, which no one can escape and all must undergo. At this time, what has been revealed is not the contents of the seven seals. The seven seals are the blessings you will enjoy in the future. “The opening” refers only to informing you of them, but you have not yet enjoyed these blessings. When you do enjoy these blessings, then you will know the contents of the seven seals. You are now just touching on a part that is not yet complete. I can only tell each step as it arises during future work, so you will experience it personally and feel an incomparable glory, and you will exist in a state of endless ecstasy.

To be able to enjoy the blessings of firstborn sons is neither an easy thing nor something the average person can achieve. I will emphasize once again and say more forcefully that I must make strict demands of My firstborn sons. Otherwise, they could not glorify My name. I resolutely reject whoever is disreputable in the world, and even more do I reject anyone who is promiscuous. (They have no part in becoming God’s people—to this I give particular emphasis.) Do not think that what you did in the past is over and done with—how could there be such a good thing! Is it so simple to gain the status of firstborn son? I reject in the same way any who are against Me, any who do not recognize Me in My flesh, any who interfere with Me as I do My will, and any who persecute Me—this is how harsh I am (because I have taken back My power completely)! Finally, in the same way do I reject anyone who has never had any setbacks in life. I want those who, like Me, have emerged from their afflictions, even if they are small afflictions. If they have not, then they are the sort that I will kick out. Do not be shameless, wanting to be My firstborn son, parading yourself before Me. Get away from Me, quickly! You have previously told Me trivial matters, seeking to win My pleasure! This is blindness! Do you not know that I hate you, you worthless wretch? Do you think I do not know your underhanded dealings? You hide again and again! Do you not know that you have shown your devil face? Though people cannot see it, do you think I cannot? Those who render service to Me are not good; they are a bunch of worthless wretches. I must deal with them. I will throw them into the bottomless pit and burn them up!

You speak in an ungodly manner, act faithlessly, and do not cooperate properly with others; that such a person still wishes to be a king—are you not dreaming? Are you not delusional? Do you not see what you are? You are a worthless wretch! Is there any use for such a person? Hurry away from My sight! Everyone should understand what I say clearly, be inspired by My words, recognize My omnipotence, and know My wisdom. It has often been said that the holy spiritual body has appeared. Ultimately, would you say that the holy spiritual body has appeared or not? Is what I say empty talk? What is the holy spiritual body? In what circumstances does the holy spiritual body exist? To humans, it is unimaginable and cannot be comprehended. I tell you: I am flawless, and in Me all is open, and everything is released (because I act wisely and I speak freely). Among My actions, none is shameful, and all are done in the light, so that everyone can be convinced utterly. Moreover, no man can take hold of anything within them to use them against Me. That is an explanation of the “holy” in “the holy spiritual body.” So, I have repeatedly stressed that I do not want any who do shameful things. This is an item of My administrative decrees, and it is also a part of My disposition. “The spiritual body” refers to My utterances. What I say always has purpose, always has wisdom, but is not subject to control. (I say what I want to say, and it is My Spirit uttering His voice, and it is My person speaking.) What I say is released freely, and when it does not meet people’s notions, then that is the time to reveal people. This is My proper arrangement. Therefore, whenever the person that I am speaks or acts, it is always a good opportunity to expose the substance of Satan. When the person that I am has been anointed, the holy spiritual body emerges. In the future, “the holy spiritual body” will refer to the body, and there are two aspects in this meaning. There is one aspect of the meaning at present, and there is another aspect of the meaning in the future. But in the future, the holy spiritual body will be very different from the present—the difference will be as that between heaven and earth. No one can fathom it, and I will have to reveal it to you personally.

Chapter 95

People imagine everything to be extremely simple, when in fact this is not the case. There are hidden mysteries contained within everything, as well as My wisdom and My arrangements. No detail is overlooked, and all are arranged by Myself. The judgment of the great day befalls all those who do not love Me sincerely (remember, the judgment of the great day is aimed at every person who receives this name) and causes them to weep and gnash their teeth. This sound of wailing comes from Hades and from hell; it is not people weeping, but demons. It is My judgment that brings this weeping, that brings My management plan’s final salvation for people. I used to hold some hopes for some people. But looking now, I must forsake these people one by one, for this is the stage My work has reached, and this is something no one can change. All those who are not My firstborn sons or My people must be forsaken and must get away from Me! You must understand that, in China, apart from My firstborn sons and My people, all the others are the offspring of the great red dragon and are to be discarded. You must all understand, China is after all a nation cursed by Me, and a few of My people there are nothing more than those that render service for My future work. To say it another way, apart from My firstborn sons, there is no one else—they are all to perish. Do not think that I am too extreme in My deeds—this is My administrative decree. Those who suffer My curses are objects of My hatred, and this is set in stone. I make no mistakes; if I see someone who displeases Me, I will kick them out; that is sufficient proof that you are cursed by Me and are a descendant of the great red dragon. Let Me impress upon you again—there are only My firstborn sons in China (besides My people who render service) and this is My administrative decree. But My firstborn sons are so few and have all been predestined by Me—I know what it is I do. I do not fear your negativity and I do not fear that you will turn around and bite Me, for I have My administrative decrees and I have wrath. That is to say, I hold the great disasters in My hand and I fear nothing, as I regard all things to be already achieved, and when that day arrives I will deal with you thoroughly. One cannot be perfected or edified by man into becoming a firstborn son of Mine—this matter rests entirely on My predestination. Whoever I say is a firstborn son is a firstborn son; do not try to compete for it or seize it. All things rest on Me, the almighty God Himself.

One day I will allow you all to see what My administrative decrees are and what My wrath is (all will bend the knee to Me, all will worship Me, all will beg Me for forgiveness and all will abide in obedience; I now only allow My firstborn sons to see a part of it). I will make all offspring of the great red dragon see that I have selected many to be sacrificed (everyone except My firstborn sons) in order to perfect My firstborn sons, that I have made the great red dragon fall prey to its own cunning scheme. (In My management plan, the great red dragon sends forth those who render service for Me—that being everyone except My firstborn sons—to interrupt My management plan; yet it has fallen prey to its own cunning scheme, and they all render service to My work. This is a part of the true meaning of My mobilizing all to render service for Me.) Today, when all things have been achieved, I will dispose of them all, crush them beneath My feet, and through this I shall humiliate the great red dragon and make it utterly ashamed (they attempt to bluff their way through to gain blessings, but they never thought that they would render service for Me)—this is My wisdom. Hearing this, people think I am without feelings or mercy, and that I have no humanity. I am indeed without feelings or mercy toward Satan, and furthermore I am the God Himself who transcends humanity. How can you say I am a God with humanity? Do you not know that I am not of the world? Do you not know that I am above all things? Apart from My firstborn sons, there is no one like Me, no one who has My disposition (a disposition that is not human, but divine), and no one who possesses My qualities.

When the gate to the spiritual world is opened, you will see all mysteries, enabling you to enter completely into a free realm, to enter into My loving embrace and into My everlasting blessings. My hands have always supported mankind. But there is a part of mankind that I shall save and a part that I shall not save. (I say “support” because without My support, the entire world would long ago have fallen into Hades.) Realize this! This is My management plan. And what is My management plan? I created mankind, but I never planned to gain every single person, only to gain a small part of mankind. So why did I create so many people? I have said before that, with Me, all is freedom and release, and I do whatever I wish. When I created mankind, it was only so that they could live a normal life and then there could arise a small part of mankind that would be My firstborn sons, My sons and My people. It can be said that all people, events, and objects—apart from My firstborn sons, My people and My sons—are all service-doers and must all perish. In this way, My entire management plan will be concluded. This is My management plan, it is My work and it is the steps by which I act. When everything is over I will be completely at rest. At that time, everything will be fine; everything will be peaceful and secure.

The pace of My work is so very fast that it is beyond human imagination. It changes day by day and whoever cannot keep up will suffer loss; one can only hold fast to the new light every day (although there is never any change in My administrative decrees, as well as the visions and the truth I fellowship). Why do I speak every day? Why do I constantly enlighten you? Do you understand the true meaning within? Most people are still now laughing and joking and cannot be serious. They simply pay no attention whatsoever to My words, but just feel a passing anxiety when they hear them. Afterward, My words are soon forgotten and they are soon unaware of their own identity and they become careless. Do you know what your status is? Whether someone renders service for Me or is predestined and chosen by Me is administered only by My hands; no one can alter this—I must do this Myself, I must choose and predestine them Myself. Who dares say I am an unwise God? Every word I say and everything I do are My wisdom. Who dares to once again interrupt My management or destroy My plans? I shall certainly not forgive them! Time rests in My hands and I fear no delay; am I not the One who decides the time when My management plan will end? Does it not all rest upon a single thought of Mine? When I say it is done, it is done, and when I say it ends, it ends. I am in no rush and I shall make appropriate arrangements. People must not poke their noses into My work and they must not do things for Me whichever way they please. I curse whoever pokes their nose in—this is one of My administrative decrees. I Myself do My work and I need no one else (I allow those service-doers to act, otherwise they would not dare to act rashly or blindly). All work is arranged by Me, and is decided by Me, for I am the one God Himself.

All nations of the world vie with each other for power and profit, and fight over land, but do not be alarmed, for all these things are in My service. And why do I say they are in My service? I do things without lifting a finger. To judge Satans, I first make them dispute amongst themselves and in the end bring them to ruin and make them fall prey to their own cunning schemes (they wish to vie with Me for power, but they end up rendering service for Me). I only speak and give My orders, and everyone does what I tell you to do, or else I will destroy you at once. These things are all a part of My judgment, for I command all things, and all things are ordained by Me. Whoever does anything does so involuntarily, doing so by My own arrangement. I hope that you can be full of My wisdom in the events that will soon befall. Do not take a reckless approach, but draw closer to Me more often when things befall you; be more careful and cautious in all respects to avoid offending My chastisement, and to avoid falling prey to Satan's cunning schemes. You should gain insights from My words, know what I am, and see what I have. You must do things according to My meaningful looks and must not act recklessly. Do what I do, and say what I say. I say these things to you in advance so that you can avoid making mistakes and avoid being tempted. What are "My being" and "My possessions"? Do you really know? The pain I suffer is a part of My being, as it is a part of My normal humanity, and My being can also be found in My complete divinity—do you know this? My being is made up of two aspects: One aspect is that of My humanity, while the other is that of My complete divinity. Only these two aspects combined together make the complete God Himself. What My complete divinity is also includes a good many things: I suffer no restraint by any person, matter, or thing; I transcend all environments; I am beyond any restriction of time or space or geography; I know all people, matters, and things truly, like the back of My hand; and yet I am still flesh and bones, and I exist in a tangible form; I am still this person in people's eyes, but the nature has changed—it is not flesh, but body. These things are just a small part of it. All My firstborn sons will also be like this in the future; this is the path that must be trodden, and those who have been doomed cannot escape. While I am doing this, all those who have not been predestined will be kicked out (for this is Satan testing Me to see whether My words are accurate). Those who are predestined cannot escape it no matter where they go, and you will see thereby the principles behind this deed of Mine. "My possessions" refers to My wisdom, My knowledge, My resourcefulness and every word I say. Both My humanity and My divinity possess it. That is to say, all that which is done by My humanity as well as that which is done by My divinity is My possessions; no one can take these things away nor remove them; they are in My possession, and no one can change them. This is My most severe administrative decree (for in the notions of man, many things I do are not in conformity with their notions and are beyond human understanding; this is the decree that every single person offends most easily and it is also the most severe. Therefore their lives therein suffer loss). I shall say again, you must take a conscientious approach to that which I exhort you to do—you must not be careless!

Chapter 96

I shall chastise everyone born of Me who yet does not know Me in order to make manifest all My wrath, My great power, and My full wisdom. In Me, all is righteous, and there is absolutely no unrighteousness, no deceit, and no crookedness; whosoever is crooked and deceitful must be a son of hell, born in Hades. In Me everything is open; whatever I say shall be accomplished, shall indeed be accomplished; whatever I say shall be established, shall be established, and no one can change or emulate these things because I am the one and only God Himself. In what is about to come, everyone who is in the group of My predestined and chosen firstborn sons shall be revealed one by one, and everyone who is not in the group of firstborn sons shall be cast out by Me through this. This is how I do and accomplish My work. Right now, I expose some people only so that My firstborn sons can see My wonderful deeds, but later I shall not work this way. Rather, I shall proceed from the general situation instead of letting them show their true natures one by one (because demons are all basically the same, it is enough to pick only a few to serve as example). All My firstborn sons are clear in their hearts, and there is no need for Me to elaborate (because at the appointed time, they will surely be revealed one after another).

It is My disposition to keep My promises, and in Me nothing is hidden or concealed. I will tell you all about each and every one of the things you are supposed to understand, and I will absolutely not tell you anything you should not know, lest you become unable to stand firm. Do not cling to small things and thereby lose the important things—it truly is not worth it. Believe that I am the almighty God, and then everything will be accomplished and all will become easy and pleasant. This is how I do things. Whosoever believes, I allow him to see, and whosoever does not believe, I do not allow him to know, and I never let him understand. In Me there is no feeling or mercy, and no matter who offends My chastisement, I will certainly kill them without staying My hand, and I shall treat them all in the same way. I am the same toward everyone—I have no personal feelings and do not in any way act emotionally. How could people not see My righteousness and majesty through this? This is My wisdom and My disposition, which no one can change and no one can completely know. My hands are always in command of everything, at all times, and I always arrange everything to do service for Me at My beck and call. Numerous people are rendering service on My behalf in order to fulfill My management plan, but in the end they see the blessings but cannot enjoy them—how pitiful! But no one can change My heart. This is My administrative decree (whenever administrative decrees are mentioned, this refers to something that no one can change, so when I speak in the future, if I have set My mind on something, then that most certainly is My administrative decree. Remember! Do not offend against this, lest you suffer loss), and it is also a part of My management plan. It is My own work, not something that just any man can do. I must do this—I must arrange this, which is sufficient to show My omnipotence and to manifest My wrath.

Most people still do not know and are not clear about My humanity. I have said it several times, but you are still hazy and do not understand much. But this is My work, and now, at this time, whosoever knows, knows, and whosoever does not know, I do not coerce. It can only be this way. I have spoken about it with clarity, and I will not talk of it again later (because I have said too much, and I have spoken very clearly. One who knows Me certainly has the work of the Holy Spirit and is undoubtedly one of My firstborn sons. One who does not know Me is decidedly not, proving that I have already withdrawn My Spirit from him). But in the end, I will make everyone know Me—completely know Me, both in My humanity and in My divinity. These are the steps of My work, and I must work this way. This is also My administrative decree. Everyone must call Me the only true God, and praise and joyfully acclaim Me without ceasing.

My management plan has already been fully completed, and everything has long since been accomplished. To human eyes, it looks as though a lot of My work is still in progress, but I have already arranged it properly, and all that awaits is its completion according to My steps one task at a time (this is because before the creation of the world I predestined who is able to stand firm under trial, who cannot be chosen and predestined by Me, and who cannot share in My suffering. Those who can share in My suffering—that is, those predestined and chosen by Me, I shall certainly keep them and enable them to transcend everything). I am clear in My heart about who is in each role. I am well aware of who renders service to Me, who is a firstborn son, and who is among My sons and My people. I know this like the back of My hand. Whoever I have said in the past is a firstborn son is still a firstborn son now, and whoever I have said in the past is not a firstborn son is still not a firstborn son now. Whatsoever I do, I do not regret, and do not easily change it. I mean what I say (in Me nothing is frivolous), and it never changes! Those who render service to Me always render service to Me: They are My cattle; they are My horses (but these people are never enlightened in their spirit; when I make use of them they are useful, but when I do not make use of them, I kill them. When I speak of cattle and horses, I mean those who are not enlightened in their spirit, who do not know Me, and who disobey Me, and even if they are obedient and submissive and simple and honest, they are still real cattle and horses). Now, most people are wanton and unfettered before Me, talking and laughing riotously, behaving irreverently—they only see My humanity, and not My divinity. In My humanity these behaviors can pass and I can bring Myself to pardon them, but in My divinity it is not so easy. In the future, I will decide that you have committed the sin of blasphemy. In other words, My humanity can be offended, but My divinity cannot, and whosoever conflicts with Me even in the slightest way, I will judge immediately, without any delay. Do not think that because you have associated for many years with this person that I am and have become familiar with Me, you can speak and act wantonly. I truly do not care! No matter who it is, I will treat them with righteousness. This is My righteousness.

My mysteries are revealed to people day by day, and they become clearer day by day, following the stages of revelation, which is sufficient to show the pace of My work. This is My wisdom (I do not say it directly. I enlighten My firstborn sons and blind the offspring of the great red dragon). Furthermore, today I will reveal My mystery to you through My Son. Things that are unimaginable to people I will reveal to you today, to let you know thoroughly and have a clear understanding. Moreover, this mystery exists in everyone outside of My firstborn sons, but no one can understand it. Although it is there within each person, no one can recognize it. What am I saying? In My work and in My utterances during this period, I often mention the great red dragon, Satan, the devil, and the archangel. What are they? What are their relationships? What is manifested in these things? The manifestations of the great red dragon are resistance to Me, lack of understanding and comprehension of the meanings of My words, frequent persecution of Me, and seeking to use schemes to interrupt My management. Satan is manifested as follows: struggling with Me for power, wanting to possess My chosen people, and releasing negative words to deceive My people. The manifestations of the devil (those who do not accept My name, who do not believe, are all devils) are as follows: coveting the pleasures of the flesh, indulging in evil lusts, living in bondage to Satan, some resisting Me and some supporting Me (but not proving they are My beloved sons). The manifestations of the archangel are as follows: speaking insolently, being ungodly, often adopting My tone to lecture people, focusing only on outwardly imitating Me, eating what I eat and using what I use; in short, wanting to be on equal footing with Me, being ambitious but lacking My caliber and not having My life, and being a piece of waste. Satan, the devil, and the archangel are all typical demonstrations of the great red dragon, so those who are not predestined and chosen by Me are all the offspring of the great red dragon: This is absolutely how it is! These are all My enemies. (However, Satan's disruptions are excluded. If your nature is My quality, no one can change it. Because now you still live in the flesh, occasionally you will be faced with Satan's temptations—this is inevitable—but you must always be careful.) Therefore, I will abandon all the offspring of the great red dragon outside of My firstborn sons. Their nature can never change—it is the quality of Satan. It is the devil that they manifest, and it is the archangel that they live out. This is completely true. The great red dragon I speak of is not a big red dragon; rather it is the evil spirit in opposition to Me, for which the “great red dragon” is a synonym. So, all the spirits other than the Holy Spirit are evil spirits, and can also be said to be the offspring of the great red dragon. This should all be crystal clear to everyone.

Chapter 97

I will make every single person see My wondrous deeds and hear My wise words. This must include every single person, and it must happen through every single thing. This is My administrative decree, and this is My wrath. I will touch upon every single person and every single matter so that all people everywhere in the universe and to the ends of the earth will see with their own eyes; I shall never stop until this has been achieved. My wrath has been poured out wholly, with not a single shred being withheld. It is directed at every single person who accepts this name (it will soon be turned upon all nations of the world). And what is My wrath? How severe is it? What kind of person does My wrath fall upon? Most people think that wrath is the most severe degree of anger, but this does not wholly explain it. My wrath and My administrative decrees are two inseparable parts; when I enact My administrative decrees, wrath follows in their wake. So what exactly is wrath? Wrath is a degree of judgment I mete out to people and it is the principle behind the enactment of any one of My administrative decrees. Whosoever offends one of My decrees, My wrath will be of a corresponding magnitude, depending on which decree has been offended. When My wrath is present, it is certain that My administrative decrees are also present, and vice versa. My administrative decrees and wrath form an inseparable whole. It is the sternest of judgments, which none may offend. All people must abide by it, or else they will not easily avoid being struck down by My hand. People never knew of it throughout the ages (although there were some who suffered pain caused by great disasters, they still did not know of it; however, the execution of this administrative decree mainly begins from now), but today I reveal it all to you, that you may avoid causing offense.

All people should hear My voice and believe in My words. Otherwise, I shall not act, and nor shall I do any work. My every word and action are the examples you should follow; they are your exemplar and they are a model for you to follow. The reason why I became flesh is so that you may see what I am and what I have in My humanity. In the future, I will let you witness what I am and what I have in My divinity. Things must proceed step by step in this way. Otherwise, people will simply be unable to believe, and they will have no knowledge of Me. Instead, they will be capable only of unclear and indistinct visions, and they will be unable to have a clear understanding of Me. My words have shown that My person has wholly appeared unto you, yet people hear My words and still do not know Me—for the sole reason that they are foolish and ignorant. Even now that I have become flesh, people still defy Me, and therefore I employ My wrath and My administrative decrees to punish this wicked and promiscuous old era and to utterly shame Satan and the devils. This is the only way; it is the destination for mankind, and it is the end that awaits mankind. The outcome is a foregone conclusion that none can change or talk their way out of. I alone have the final say; this is My management and this is My plan. People must all believe and be convinced in heart and in word. Those who obtain good fortune in this life will surely suffer for all eternity, while those who suffer in this life will surely be blessed for all eternity—this I have preordained, and none can change it. There are none who can change My heart, and there are none who can add so much as one word more to My words, and much less are they permitted to arbitrarily remove even a single word; if anyone violates this, I shall surely chastise them.

My mysteries are revealed to you daily—do you really understand them? Are you really certain about them? When Satan is deceiving you, are you able to see through it? This is determined according to your statures in life. Since I say that all things are preordained by Me, why then have I personally incarnated in order to perfect My firstborn sons? Furthermore, why have I done so much work that people think of as useless? Is it I who am confused? Remember this! Everything I do is done not only in order to gain My firstborn sons but, more importantly, to shame Satan. Although Satan defies Me, yet I have the power to make its offspring rebel against it and turn to praise Me. Moreover, all that I do is so that the next step of work will flow smoothly, and that the whole world will cheer and praise Me and all things that breathe will bend the knee to Me and glorify Me; that day truly will be a day of glory. I hold all things in My hands, and when the seven thunders erupt, all things will be wholly accomplished, never changing, all fixed. From that point forward, the new life of the new heaven and earth shall be entered into, entirely new circumstances shall be entered into, and the life of the kingdom shall begin. But what is it like within the kingdom? People simply cannot perceive it clearly (because no one has ever had a taste of the life of the kingdom before, and so it has only been imagined in people's minds and mulled over in their hearts). In turning from the church life to the life of the kingdom, which is turning from the present state to the future state, many things will happen during this time that people have never before imagined. The church life is the precursor to entry into the life of the kingdom, so before the life of the kingdom arises, I will spare no effort to foster the church life. What is the church life? It is like this: everyone, including My firstborn sons, eating, drinking and enjoying My words and knowing Me, thereby receiving My burning and purification, so that they may understand My administrative decrees, My judgment and My wrath, and avoid causing offense in the life of the kingdom. And what is "the life of the kingdom"? The life of the kingdom is where My firstborn sons reign as kings together with Me, ruling over all peoples and all nations (only My firstborn sons and I are able to enjoy the life of the kingdom). Although My sons and My people from all nations and all peoples enter into the kingdom, they are not able to enjoy the life of the kingdom. The life of the kingdom can only be enjoyed by those who enter the spiritual world. So only My firstborn sons and I are able to live in the body, while My sons and My people remain living in the flesh. (Yet this is not the flesh that has been corrupted by Satan. This is the significance of My firstborn sons reigning together with Me as kings.) All other people will have their spirits, souls and bodies taken and cast into Hades. That is to say that these people will perish utterly and will cease to exist (yet they must pass through all the bonds and cruelties of Satan, such as hardships and disasters). Once this is done, the life of the kingdom will be officially on track, and I shall begin to officially reveal My deeds (to be revealed openly and not hidden). From then on, there will surely be no more sighs and no more tears. (For there will no longer be anything that can hurt people, or cause them to weep or cause them suffering, and this goes for My sons and My people as well; but there is one point that must be emphasized, which is that My sons and My people shall forever be flesh.) All will be cheerful—a vision of delight. It will not be something physical, but rather something that cannot be seen with physical eyes. Those who are My firstborn sons will also be able to enjoy it; this is My wondrous deed, and this is My great power.

I desire for you to be able to seek My will and be considerate toward My heart at all times. Transient pleasure can destroy your entire life, while transient suffering can usher in an eternity of blessings. Be not disconsolate; this is the path that must be trodden. I have often said before: “To those who sincerely expend for Me, I shall surely bless you greatly.” And what are “blessings”? They are not only those that are obtained today, but more so they are those that are to be enjoyed in the future—only these are true blessings. When you return to Mount Zion, you will show endless gratitude for your current suffering, for this is My blessing. Living now in the flesh is being on Mount Zion (meaning that you live within Me), while living in the body tomorrow will be the day of glory, and this, even more so, is being on Mount Zion. After hearing these words that I speak, you understand what is meant by “Mount Zion.” Mount Zion is a synonym for the kingdom, and it is also the spiritual world. On the Mount Zion of today, you are in the flesh receiving comfort and obtaining My grace; on the Mount Zion of the future, you will be in the body enjoying the blessing of reigning as kings. This categorically must not be ignored. And by no means allow times when blessings can be gained to slip past; today is today, after all, and it is very different from tomorrow. When you come to enjoy blessings, you will think that the grace of today is not worth mentioning. This is what I entrust you with, and this is My final counsel.

Chapter 98

All things will come upon every one of you, and they will allow you to know more about Me and to be more certain about Me. They will allow you to know Me, the one God Himself, to know Me, the Almighty, to know Me, the incarnate God Himself. Afterward, I will come out of the flesh, return to Zion, to the good land of Canaan, which is My residence and My destination, the base where I created all things. Now, none of you understand the meaning of the words which I am saying; there is not one person who can understand the meaning of these words. Only when everything is revealed to you will you understand why I am saying these words. I am not of the world, much less am I of the universe, because I am the one God Himself. I hold the whole universe world in My hand, I Myself am in charge of it, and people can only submit to My authority, speak My holy name, cheer for Me and praise Me. Everything will be gradually revealed to you. Although nothing is hidden, you still cannot fathom My way of speaking or the tone of My words. You still do not understand what My management plan is all about. So, I will tell you later about all the things which you do not understand in what I have said because, for Me, everything is simple and clear while, for you, it is extremely difficult, and you simply do not understand it at all. To this end, I will change My method of speaking, and I will no longer connect things together when I speak, but will clarify each point one by one.

What does it mean to resurrect from the dead? Does it mean to die in the flesh and then return to the body after death? Is this what it means to resurrect from the dead? Is it that simple? I am the almighty God; what do you know of this? How do you comprehend this? Could My resurrection from the dead during My first incarnation really be taken literally? Was the process really as it was described in those texts? I have said that if I do not speak frankly and if I do not tell people clearly, then no one will be able to understand the meaning of My words. There has not been one person throughout the ages who did not think that the resurrection from the dead was like that. Since the time of the creation of the world, no one has understood the real meaning of this. Was I really nailed to the cross? And, after death, did I come out of the tomb? Did it really happen like this? Could this really be true? No one throughout the ages has put any effort into this, no one has come to know Me from this and there is not one person who does not believe this; everyone thinks it is true. They do not know that My every word has an inner meaning. Then, what exactly is resurrection from the dead? (In the near future, you will experience this, so I am telling you about it in advance.) No created being is willing to die; they all want to live. From My perspective, the death of the flesh is not a real death. When My Spirit is reclaimed from a person, that person dies. Therefore, I call all those demons corrupted by Satan (those who have no faith, all unbelievers) the dead. Since the time of the creation of the world, I have furnished My Spirit upon everyone whom I have chosen. However, after a phase which followed the time of creation, people were occupied by Satan for a time. So I left, and people started to suffer (the suffering I endured when I was incarnated and nailed onto the cross, as has been spoken of). However, at the time predetermined by Me (the time when My abandonment of people ended), I reclaimed the people I had predestined, and I once again placed My Spirit in you so that you came back to life. This is called "resurrection from the dead." Now, those who really live in My Spirit are all already transcendent, and they all live in the body. However, before long, you will all cast off your thinking, your notions, and all earthly entanglements. But, it is not, as people imagine, rising from the dead after suffering. That you are living now is the precondition to living in the body; it is the necessary path to enter into the spiritual world. The transcending of normal humanity I speak of means to have no family, no wife, no children, and no human needs. It is to concentrate solely on living out My image, to concentrate solely on entering inside Me and to not think about other things outside of Me; everywhere you go is your home. This is transcending normal humanity. You have utterly misunderstood these words of Mine; your understanding is too shallow. How exactly will I appear to all nations and all peoples? In the flesh today? No! When the time comes, I will appear in My body in every nation of the universe. The time when foreigners need you to shepherd them has not yet arrived. At that time you will need to come out of the flesh and enter the body to shepherd them. This is the truth, but it is not the "resurrection from the dead" that people imagine. At the appointed time, you will come out of the flesh unknowingly and enter the spiritual world and rule all nations with Me. It is not yet time. When I need you to be in the flesh, you shall be in the flesh (according to the requirements of My work, you must have thinking now and must still live in the flesh, so you should still do the things which you need to do in the flesh according to My steps; do not passively wait, because this would cause delays). When I need you to act in the body as shepherds of the church, you shall come out of the flesh, cast off your thinking, and completely rely on Me to live. Have faith in My power and in My wisdom. Everything will be done by Me personally. You only need to wait and enjoy. All the blessings will come to you, and you will have an inexhaustible and endless supply. When that day comes, you will understand the principle of how I do this, you will know My wonderful deeds, and you will understand how I bring My firstborn sons back to Zion. This is really not as complicated as you imagine, but it is also not as simple as you think.

I know that when I say this you become even less able to grasp the purpose behind My words and become even more confused. You will mix them up with what I have said earlier so that you cannot understand anything, and it will seem as if there is no way out. However, do not worry. I will tell you everything. Everything I say has meaning. I have said that I can make existing things return to nothing and can make a multiplicity of things out of nothing. In the human imagination, to enter the body from the flesh, one must be resurrected from the dead. In the past, I used this method and manifested My greatest miracle, but today is not like the past. I will take you directly from the flesh into the body. Is this not an even greater sign and miracle? Is this not a greater manifestation of My omnipotence? I have My plan, and I have My intentions. Who is not in My hands? I know the work that I do. My working methods today are, after all, different from the past. I adjust My methods of working according to the change of eras. When I was nailed to the cross, that was the Age of Grace, but now is the final age. The pace of My work is accelerating; it does not proceed at the same speed as it did in the past, and much less is it slower than in the past. Rather, it proceeds much faster than in the past. There is simply no way to describe it, and there is no need for so many complex processes. I am free to do anything. Is it not true that it only takes one word of authority from Me to determine how My will shall be completed and how I will make you perfect? Everything I say will surely be done. In the past, I often said that I would suffer, and I did not allow people to mention the suffering I had endured before; to mention this was blasphemy toward Me. This is because I am God Himself and for Me there is no hardship; when you mention this suffering you make people weep. I have said that in the future there will be no sighs and no tears. This should be explained from this aspect, and then the meaning of My words can be understood. The meaning of "humans simply cannot stand this suffering" is that I can break away from all human notions and thinking, break away from the emotions of the flesh, break away from all traces of being worldly and walk out of the flesh, and that I can remain standing when everyone is refuting Me. This is sufficient to prove that I am the one God Himself. I have said, "Every firstborn son must enter the spiritual world from the flesh; this is the path that they must take to reign with Me as kings.” The meaning of this sentence is that when you encounter the thing which you have, in the past, imagined, you will officially come out of the flesh and will enter the body to officially begin to judge those princes and kings. They will be judged based on the things which occur at this time. However, it is not as complicated as you imagine—it will be done in an instant. You will not need to rise from the dead and you will not even need to suffer (because your suffering and hardships on earth have already come to an end and I have already said that I will no longer deal with My firstborn sons thereafter). The firstborn sons will enjoy their blessings, as has been spoken of, in the fact that you will unknowingly enter the spiritual world. Why do I say that this is My mercy and grace? If one could only enter the spiritual world after rising from the dead, this would be far from being merciful and gracious. So this is the most obvious expression of My mercy and grace and, furthermore, this reveals My predestination and My selection of people. It is sufficiently able to show how strict My administrative decrees are. I will be gracious to whomever I wish, and merciful to whomever I wish. No one shall contend or fight. I will decide all of this.

People cannot figure it out, and they put pressure on themselves until they cannot breathe, and yet it is still they who bind themselves up. People’s thinking is really limited, so they must do away with human thinking and notions. Hence, I must come out of the flesh and enter the spiritual world to take control of everything, to manage everything. This is the only way to rule all peoples and all nations and to fulfill My will. It is not far off. You do not have faith in My omnipotence, and you do not know who I am. You think that I am only a human being, and you cannot see My divinity at all. Things will be complete whenever I want them to be complete. All it takes is one word from My mouth. You have only paid attention to the aspect of My humanity in what I have recently said, and in My every move, but you have not paid attention to the aspect of My divinity. That is to say, you think that I also have thinking and notions. But I have said that My thoughts, ideas and mind, My every move, everything I do and everything I say, are the complete manifestation of God Himself. Have you forgotten all this? You are all muddled people! You do not understand the meaning of My words. I have allowed you to see the aspect of My normal humanity from what I have said (I have allowed you to see My normal humanity in My everyday life, in reality, because you still do not understand the aspect of My normal humanity from what I have said during this period), yet you do not understand My normal humanity, and you just try to grab hold of something that can be used against Me, and you are unbridled before Me. You are blind! You are ignorant! You do not know Me! I have spoken in vain for so long! You do not know Me at all, and you simply do not regard My normal humanity as a part of the complete God Himself! How can I not be angry? How can I be merciful again? I can only respond to these children of disobedience with My wrath. You are so presumptuous, you do not know Me at all! You think I have done wrong! Could I do wrong? Would I carelessly choose any fleshly body in which to become incarnate? My humanity and My divinity are two inseparable parts which make up the complete God Himself. Now you should be perfectly clear about this! My words have already reached their zenith, and My words can no longer be explained at greater length!

Chapter 99

Because the pace of My work is speeding up, no one can keep up with My footsteps, and no one can penetrate My mind, yet this is the only way forward. This is “the dead” (referring to being unable to grasp My will, being unable to understand what I mean from My words; this is another explanation of “the dead,” and does not mean “being forsaken by My Spirit”) in the phrase “resurrection from the dead,” which has already been spoken of. When you and I have transitioned from this phase into the body, then the real meaning of “being resurrected from the dead” will be fulfilled (that is, this is the real meaning of resurrection from the dead). Now, this is the condition in which you all exist: You cannot grasp My will and you cannot find My footsteps. Moreover, you cannot be quiet in your spirits, so you feel uneasy in mind. This kind of condition is exactly the “suffering” I mentioned, and within this suffering, which people cannot bear, you are thinking of your own future on the one hand, and on the other hand you are accepting My burning and My judgment, which is shooting and striking at you from all directions. In addition, you cannot grasp any rules from the tone and manner in which I speak, and in one day of utterance there are several kinds of tone, so that you suffer greatly. These are the steps in My work. This is My wisdom. In the future, you will experience greater suffering in this respect, all of which is in order to reveal all hypocritical people—this should be clear now! This is the way I work. With the motivation of this kind of suffering, and after having experienced this pain which is equivalent to death, you will enter into another realm. You will enter into the body, and reign with Me over all nations and all peoples.

Why have I recently been speaking in a more severe tone? Why has My tone changed so frequently, and why has My way of working also changed so frequently? My wisdom has been in these things. My words are spoken for everyone who has accepted this name (whether or not they believe My words can be accomplished), so My words should be heard and seen by everyone, and they must not be suppressed, because I have My way of working and I have My wisdom. I use My words to judge people, to reveal people, and to expose human nature. Thereby, I select those who have been picked out by Me, and I cast out those who have not been predestined or chosen by Me. All this is My wisdom, and it is the wonder of My work. This is My method in this phase of My work. Among people, is there anyone who can grasp My will? Among people, is there anyone who can be considerate of My burden? The One doing the work is Me, God Himself. There will come a day when you will thoroughly understand the significance of these words of Mine, and you will be completely clear about why I want to speak these words. My wisdom is endless, infinite, and immeasurable, and it is completely impenetrable to humans. Humans can only see a portion of it from the things I do, but what they see is still flawed and incomplete. When you have completely transitioned from this phase to the next phase, then you will be able to see it clearly. Remember! Now is the most precious era—it is the last phase in which you are in the flesh. Your life right now is the last of your physical life. When you enter the spiritual world from the flesh, at that time all the pain will leave you. You will greatly rejoice and exult, and you will jump for joy without ceasing. But you must be clear that these words I speak are only for the firstborn sons, because only the firstborn sons are worthy of this blessing. Entry into the spiritual world is the greatest blessing, the highest blessing, and the most valuable thing to be enjoyed. The things that you now obtain to eat and to wear are nothing more than the enjoyments of the flesh; they are grace, and I simply have no regard for these things. The focus of My work is in the next phase (entering into the spiritual world and facing the universe world).

I have said that the great red dragon has already been thrown down by Me and crushed. How can you not believe My words? Why do you still wish to endure persecution and adversity for Me? Is this not an unnecessary price for you to pay? I have reminded you many times that you only need to enjoy, while I do the work Myself, personally. Why are you so eager to take action? You really do not know how to enjoy! I have completely prepared everything for you—why have none of you come to Me to claim it? You are still uncertain about what I have said! You do not understand Me! You think that I am speaking empty pleasantries; truly, you are muddle-headed! (The complete preparations I speak of mean that you should look up to Me more and pray more before Me, while I will personally work to curse everyone who resists Me, and to punish everyone who persecutes you.) You do not know anything about My words! I reveal all My mysteries to you, but how many of you really understand them? How many of you understand them deeply? What is My throne? What is My iron rod? Who among you knows? When My throne is mentioned, most people think that is where I sit, or that it refers to My dwelling place, or that it refers to Me, to the person that I am. These are all erroneous understandings—simply a mess of misunderstanding! None of these interpretations are correct, are they? This is the way you all understand and grasp it—this is simply an extreme deviation of understanding! What is authority? What is the relationship between authority and the throne? The throne is My authority. When My firstborn sons hold high My throne, that is the time that My firstborn sons will receive the authority from Me. Only I have authority, so only I have the throne. In other words, after My firstborn sons have suffered the same way as I suffered, they will accept what I am and what I have, and will receive everything from Me; this is the process by which they will attain the status of firstborn son. It will be the time when My firstborn sons hold high My throne, and this will also be the time that they accept authority from Me. Now you should understand this! Everything I say is clear and completely unambiguous, so that everyone will understand. Put aside your own notions, and wait to accept the mysteries that I reveal to you! So what is the iron rod? In the previous phase, it referred to My harsh words, but now it is different from the past: Now the iron rod refers to My deeds, which are great disasters imbued with authority. So, whenever the iron rod is mentioned, it is always in conjunction with authority. The original meaning of the iron rod is spoken of in terms of great disasters—it is part of authority. Everyone must see this clearly and only thus can they grasp My will and receive revelation from My words. Whosoever has the work of the Holy Spirit holds the iron rod in his hand, and it is he who bears authority and has the right to execute any of the great disasters. This is one of My administrative decrees.

Everything and all things are open to you (this refers to the portion that has been pointed out clearly), and everything and all things are hidden from you (this refers to the secret portion of My words). I speak with wisdom: I let you understand only the literal meaning of some of My words, while I let you grasp the meaning of others (but most people are unable to understand), because this is the sequence of My work. I can only tell you the true meaning of My words when you reach a certain stature. This is My wisdom, and these are My wondrous deeds (so as to perfect you and in order to thoroughly defeat Satan and humiliate the devils). It is not until you enter into another realm that you will be able to fully understand. I have to do it this way because in human notions there are many things people simply cannot fathom, and even if I speak clearly you still will not understand. People's minds are, after all, limited, and there are many things that I can only convey to you after you have entered into the spiritual world; otherwise, the human flesh is not up to the task, and this can only disrupt My management. This is the true meaning of "the sequence of My work" that I speak of. In your notions, how much do you understand Me? Is your understanding flawless? Is it knowledge within the spirit? Therefore, I must let you transition into another realm in order for you to complete My work and to do My will. So exactly what is this other realm? Is it really, as people think, a kind of transcendent sight? Is it really something like air, which cannot be seen or felt and yet exists? As I have said, the state of being in the body is one of having flesh and bone, of possessing form and shape. This is absolutely true and indubitable, and everyone must believe it. This is the real state in the body. Moreover, in the body there are no matters that people hate. But what exactly is this state? When people pass from the flesh to the body, a large group must appear. That is to say, they will break free from their fleshly home, and it can be said that each will follow their own kind: The flesh gathers to the flesh and the body gathers to the body. Now those who break away from their homes, their parents, wives, husbands, sons, and daughters, begin to enter into the spiritual world. In the end, it is like this: The situation in the spiritual world is that the firstborn sons are gathered together, singing and dancing, praising and cheering My holy name. This is a scene that is beautiful and ever new. All are My beloved sons, forever praising Me without ceasing, forever holding high My holy name. This is the situation after the entry into the spiritual world, this is also the work after the entry into the spiritual world, and this is also the situation of which I have spoken, of shepherding the church in the spiritual world. Furthermore, it is that My person appears in every nation of the universe and among all nations and all peoples, bearing My authority, My wrath, and My judgment, and even more, bearing My iron rod to govern all nations and all peoples. This, among all peoples and the whole universe, bears witness to Me that shakes heaven and earth, causing all peoples and all things on the mountains, in the rivers, in the lakes, and at the ends of the earth to praise Me and glorify Me, and to know Me, the one God Himself, who is the Creator of all things, and who guides everything, manages everything, judges everything, accomplishes everything, punishes everything, and destroys everything. This, then, is the true appearance of My person.

I loathe all those who have not been predestined and chosen by Me. I must therefore get these people out of My house one by one, thus making My temple holy and unblemished, My house always new and never old, My holy name able to spread forever, and My holy people able to become My loved ones. This kind of scene, this kind of house, this kind of kingdom is My goal and My abode; this is the base of My creation of all things. No one may sway or change it. There will only be Myself and My beloved sons living together within it, and no one will be allowed to trample it underfoot, nothing will be allowed to occupy it, and even less will anything unpleasant be allowed to happen. All will be praise and cheering, and all will be a scene unimaginable to man. I desire only that you offer all your strength up to Me with all your heart and mind, and to the best of your ability. Whether today or tomorrow, whether you are someone who renders service for Me or someone who gains blessings, you should all exert your measure of strength for My kingdom. This is an obligation that all created people should take up, and it must be done and implemented in this way. I shall mobilize all things to render service for the beauty of My kingdom to be made ever new, and for My house to be made harmonious and united. No one is allowed to defy Me, and any who do so must suffer judgment and be cursed. Now My curses begin to fall upon all nations and all peoples, and My curses are even more severe than My judgment. It is now time to start condemning all people, so it is said to be curses. This is because now is the final age, and not the time of creation. As the ages have shifted, the pace of My work is now very different. Due to the needs of My work, the people I need are also different; those who should be abandoned will be abandoned; those who should be cut off will be cut off; those who should be killed will be killed, and those who should be left must be left. This is an inevitable trend independent of man's will, and no man may change it. It must be done according to My will! I forsake those whom I want to forsake, and cast out those whom I want to cast out; no one shall act arbitrarily. I leave those whom I desire to leave and I love those whom I desire to love; this must be done according to My will! I do not act on emotions; with Me there is only righteousness, judgment and wrath—there is no emotion at all. There is not the faintest trace of the human in Me, for I am God Himself, the person of God. Because people all see the aspect of Me that is My humanity and they have not seen the aspect that is My divinity. Truly, they are blind and muddled!

You must keep what I tell you in your hearts, you must understand My heart through My words and show consideration toward My burden. Then, you will come to know My almightiness and see My person. For My words are words of wisdom, and no one can grasp the principles or the laws behind My words. People think that I practice deceit and crookedness and they do not know Me through My words, but on the contrary, they blaspheme against Me. They are so blind and ignorant! They lack even the slightest amount of discernment. Every sentence I utter carries authority and judgment, and no one can change My words. Once My words issue forth, things are certain to be accomplished in accordance with My words; this is My disposition. My words are authority and whosoever amends them offends My chastisement, and I must strike them down. In serious cases they bring ruination down on their own lives and they go to Hades, or into the bottomless pit. This is the only way in which I deal with mankind, and man has no way to change it—this is My administrative decree. Remember this! No one is allowed to offend My decree; things must be done according to My will! In the past, I was too easy on you and you encountered only My words. The words I spoke about striking people down have not yet come to pass. But from today, all the disasters (these in relation to My administrative decrees) will come one after another to punish all those who do not conform to My will. There must be the advent of facts—otherwise people would not be able to see My wrath but would debauch themselves over and over. This is a step of My management plan, and it is the way in which I do the next step of My work. I say this to you in advance so that you can avoid committing offense and suffering perdition forever. That is to say, from today forward, I will make all people except for My firstborn sons take their proper places in accordance with My will, and I shall chastise them one by one. I shall not let even one of them off the hook. Just you dare be debauched again! Just you dare be rebellious again! I have said before that I am righteous to all, that I am without a shred of sentiment, and this serves to show that My disposition must not be offended. This is My person. No one can change this. All people hear My words and all people see My glorious countenance. All people must obey Me completely and absolutely—this is My administrative decree. All people across the universe and at the ends of the earth should praise and glorify Me, for I am the unique God Himself, for I am the person of God. No one can change My words and utterances, My speech and deportment, as these are matters for Me alone, and these are things which I have possessed from the most ancient times and which shall exist forever.

People harbor the intention to test Me, and they want to find something within My words which they can use against Me, so as to slander Me. Am I to be slandered by you? Am I to be casually judged? Is My business to be casually discussed? You really are a bunch who do not know what is good for you! You do not know Me at all! What is Mount Zion? What is My abode? What is the good land of Canaan? What is the base of creation? Why, over the last few days, have I kept mentioning these words? Mount Zion, My abode, the good land of Canaan, the base of creation—these are all spoken of in reference to My person (in reference to the body). People all think that these are places that exist physically. My person is Mount Zion; it is My abode. Whoever enters the spiritual world will climb Mount Zion and will enter into My abode. I created all things within My person; that is, all things were created inside the body, therefore it is the base. Why do I say that you will return into the body together with Me? Therein lies the original meaning. Just like the appellation “God,” these nouns have no meaning in and of themselves, but rather are different names I give to different places. So do not pay too much attention to their literal meanings, but focus only on hearing My words. You must see them in this way, and then you will be able to grasp My will. Why do I remind you again and again that there is wisdom in My words? How many of you have tried to figure out the meaning behind this? You are all analyzing blindly and being unreasonable!

You still now do not understand the majority of things I have said in the past. You remain in a state of doubt and cannot satisfy My heart. At whatever time you can become certain about every sentence I utter, that will be the moment when your life matures. To Me, one day is as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day; how do you think about the time that I speak of? How would you explain it? You misinterpret it! And furthermore, most people fuss over this with Me, wishing to find something to use against Me—you do not know what is good for you! Be careful, for otherwise I will strike you down! When the day comes where everything is made clear, you will understand completely. I still do not tell you now (now is the time to expose people; everyone must be careful and cautious to be able to satisfy My will). I will expose all people through My words, and their original forms will be revealed to show whether they are true or not. If someone is a whore or a jezebel, I must expose them. I have said before that I do things without lifting a finger and that I use only My words to expose people. I fear no disguise; once My words are uttered, you must reveal your original form, and no matter how well you disguise yourself I shall surely see through it. This is the principle of My deeds—using only utterances and not expending any strength whatsoever. People work themselves into a sweat about whether or not My words will be fulfilled, and they become anxious for My sake and worry for Me, but these efforts are really not necessary; they are a price that does not need to be paid. You worry about Me, but has your own life matured? What about your own destiny? Ask yourself often and do not be slipshod. People should all take My work into consideration and—through My deeds and My words—see My person, have a greater knowledge of Me, know My almightiness, know My wisdom and know the means and methods by which I created all things, and thereby give Me unending praise. I will make all people see upon whom I lay the hands of My administrative decrees, whom I work upon, what it is I want to do and what it is I want to complete. This is something that every single person must achieve, for this is My administrative decree. I will accomplish what I say. No one should analyze My words casually; all must see the principles behind My deeds through My words, and from My words know what My wrath is, what My curse is and what My judgment is. These things all rest upon My words and are things that should be seen by every single person within every single one of My words.

I will not be the slightest bit lenient toward anyone who interrupts My management or who seeks to ruin My plans. Everyone should grasp My meaning from the words I utter, and should have a clear understanding of what I am talking about. In view of the present situation, each of you should examine yourself: What sort of role are you playing? Are you living for My sake, or are you doing service for Satan? Does each and every one of your actions stem from Me, or from the devil? You should be clear on all of this, so as to avoid offending My administrative decrees and thereby incurring My raging fury. Thinking back on the past, people have always been disloyal and unfilial toward Me; they have been disrespectful and, furthermore, they have betrayed Me. For these reasons, these people face My judgment today. Although I appear to be just a man, all those whom I do not approve of (you should understand My meaning from this: It is not about how beautiful you look or how charming you are, but whether I have predestined and selected you) are to be cast out by Me. This is absolutely true. This is because I may appear human on the outside, but you need to see past My humanity to perceive My divinity. As I have said many times, "Normal humanity and complete divinity are two inseparable parts of the complete God Himself." Nonetheless, you still do not understand Me; you only attach importance to that vague God of yours. You are people who do not understand spiritual matters. Nevertheless, such people still wish to be My firstborn sons. How shameless! They do not see what their own status really is! They do not even have the status of serving as My people, so how could they be My firstborn sons and be kings along with Me? Such people do not know themselves; they are Satan's ilk, and are unworthy of being pillars in My household, much less of serving before Me. I therefore shall cast them out one by one, and one by one I will reveal their true faces.

My work proceeds step by step, unobstructed and without the slightest hindrance, because I have gained victory and because I have reigned as King throughout the entire universe. (What I am referring to is that since defeating the devil Satan, I have recovered My power anew.) As I gain all of the firstborn sons, the banner of victory shall rise upon Mount Zion. That is to say, My firstborn sons are My victory banner, My glory, and that of which I boast; they are a sign that I have humiliated Satan, and they are the method by which I work. (Through a group of people who were corrupted by Satan after I had predestined them, but who returned to My side once again, I humiliate the great red dragon and rule over all the sons of rebellion.) My firstborn sons are where My almightiness lies; they are My great success, unalterable and indisputable. It is through them that I shall complete My management plan. This is what I meant in the past when I said, “It is through you that I will make all nations and all peoples return before My throne.” It is also what I was referring to when I spoke the words, “the heavy burden on your shoulders.” Is that clear? Do you understand? The firstborn sons are the crystallization of My entire management plan; for this reason, I have never treated this group gently, and I have always disciplined them severely (that severe discipline being the miseries suffered in the world, the misfortunes of families, and the abandonment by parents, husbands, wives, and children—in short, the abandonment by the world and being forsaken by the age), and this is why you have the good fortune to come before Me today. This is the answer to the question that you have pondered so often: “Why did other people not accept this name, but I did?” Now you know!

Today nothing is the same as in the past. My management plan has adopted new methods, My work is even more different than it was previously, and My utterances are now even more unprecedented. I have therefore emphasized repeatedly that you should render service to Me properly (this is said to the service-doers). Do not treat yourselves negatively, but maintain an earnest pursuit. Is it not enjoyable to gain some grace? It is far better than suffering in the world. I tell you! If you do not render service to Me wholeheartedly, and instead complain that I have been unrighteous, then tomorrow you will descend to Hades and hell. No person wants an early death—is that not so? Even one more day of life is a day that counts, so you shall offer yourself entirely to My management plan and, afterward, await My judgment of you and wait for My righteous chastisement to befall you. Do not assume that what I am saying is nonsense; I speak from My righteousness and from My disposition. Moreover, I act with My majesty and righteousness. That people all say that I am not righteous is because they do not know Me; this is a clear expression of their rebellious dispositions. As for Me, there is no emotion; rather, there is only righteousness, majesty, judgment, and wrath. The more time passes, the more you will see My disposition. The present is a transitional stage, and you are able to see only a small portion of this; you can only see some externally manifested things. When My firstborn sons appear, I will allow you to see everything and understand it all. Everyone will be convinced in their hearts and in their words. I will have you speak out in witness to Me, forever praise Me, and forever extol Me. This is inevitable, and can be changed by no one. People can hardly imagine it, let alone believe it.

Those who are the firstborn sons have increasing clarity with regard to the visions, and their love for Me grows ever greater. (This is not romantic love, which is Satan’s temptation of Me and something that must be seen through. For this reason, I have previously mentioned that there are those who show off their charms in front of Me. Such people are Satan’s lackeys, believing I would be attracted to their looks. Shameless!

They are the basest of wretches!) However, people who are not themselves the firstborn sons have, through these words I have spoken over this period, become increasingly unclear about the visions and have lost faith in the person that I am. Thereafter, they gradually grow indifferent, until they finally fall. Such people cannot help themselves. That is the goal of what I am saying during this period; everybody should see this (I am speaking to the firstborn sons), and through My utterances and actions, behold My wonderfulness. Why is it said that I am the Prince of Peace, the Eternal Father, that I am the Wonderful, and that I am the Counselor? Explaining this from the perspective of My identity, My utterances, or from what I do would be overly superficial; it would not even be worth mentioning. The reason for calling Me the Prince of Peace stems from My power to complete the firstborn sons, My judgment of Satan, and the boundless blessings I have conferred upon the firstborn sons. In other words, only the firstborn sons are qualified to call Me the Prince of Peace, for I love My firstborn sons, and the epithet “Prince of Peace” should come from their mouths. To them, I am the Prince of Peace. To My sons and My people, I am known as the Eternal Father. Due to the existence of My firstborn sons, and because they can hold the power of kingship together with Me and govern all nations and all peoples (that is, the sons and the people), the sons and the people should therefore call Me the Eternal Father—meaning God Himself, who is above the firstborn sons. I am the Wonderful to those who are not the sons, the people, or the firstborn sons. Because of the wonderfulness of My work, nonbelievers cannot see Me at all (for I have veiled their eyes), and have no clear view of My work. To them, therefore, I am the Wonderful. To all devils and to Satan, I am the Counselor, because all that I do serves to shame them; all My actions are for the sake of My firstborn sons. My every step proceeds smoothly, and I gain victory with each step. Moreover, I can see through all of Satan’s schemes and use them to serve Me, making it an object to serve My purposes from the negative side. This is what is meant by My being “the Counselor,” which no one can alter and which no one can completely understand. However, in terms of My person, I am the Prince of Peace and the Eternal Father, as well as the Counselor and the Wonderful. There is nothing in this that is untrue. It is an irrefutable and immutable truth!

I have so much to say; there is simply no analogy that can be drawn. I therefore require that you be patient and wait. Whatever you do, do not leave on a whim. Because what you understood in the past is now outdated, it is no longer applicable, and the present is a time of change—like a transition between dynasties. For this reason, I need you to alter your thinking and discard your old notions. This is the true meaning of “putting on the holy robe of righteousness.” Only I can explain My own words, and only I Myself know what I have undertaken to do. Therefore, only My words are without impurity and are entirely what I intend, and therefore it is putting on the holy robe of righteousness. The understanding of the human mind is mere imagination; human understanding is impure and unable to achieve My intentions. Therefore, I Myself speak, and I Myself explain, and this is what I meant when I said, “I do the work Myself.” It is an indispensable part of My management plan, and all people must glorify Me and praise Me. With regard to comprehending My words, I have never given that power to humans, nor do they possess the faculty for it at all. This is one of My methods for humiliating the devil. (If humans understood My utterances and could probe My intentions at every step, then Satan could possess people whenever it wanted, and as a result, they would turn against Me and make it impossible to attain My goal of selecting the firstborn sons. If I understood every mystery, and the person that I am could speak utterances that no one could fathom, then I, too, could be possessed by Satan. This is the reason that while I am in the flesh, I am not at all supernatural.) It is necessary for everyone to have a clear understanding of the significance of these words and follow My lead. Do not try to understand profound words and doctrines all by yourselves.

I have spoken to a certain degree and My work has reached a certain point; each of you should be grasping My will and, to varying degrees, be able to be considerate of My burden. Now is the turning point when the flesh transitions into the spiritual world—you are the forerunners crossing between the ages, the universal people who traverse the universe and the ends of the earth. You are My dearest; you are the ones I love. It can be said that I love no one but you, because all My strenuous effort has been for your sake. Can it be that you do not know that? Why would I create all things? Why would I move them all about so as to serve you? All these actions were expressions of My love for you. The mountains and all things in the mountains, and the earth and all things on the earth, praise Me and glorify Me for having gained you. Truly, everything has been done; moreover, everything has been done thoroughly. You have borne resounding witness to Me, and you have humiliated the devils and Satan for Me. All the people, affairs, and things outside of Me submit to My authority, and all, due to the completion of My management plan, follow their own kind (My people belong to Me, and Satan’s kind all belong to the lake of fire—they fall into the bottomless pit, where they will wail eternally and perish forever). When I speak of “perishing” and “from that time on, taking their spirit, soul, and body,” I am referring to handing them over to Satan and allowing them to be trampled. In other words, all who are not of My house shall be objects of destruction, and they shall cease to exist. This does not mean, as people imagine, that they will be gone. It can also be said that everything outside of Me, in My opinion, does not exist, and this is the true meaning of perdition. To human eyes, these things still appear to exist, but in My view, they have turned to nothingness and will perish for all eternity. (I emphasize that those on whom I no longer work are outside of Me.) In humans, no matter how they think, they cannot figure this out, and no matter how well they see, they cannot penetrate it. People cannot clearly understand unless I enlighten them, illuminate them, and explicitly point it out to them. Moreover, they all become more and more hazy about it, feeling ever emptier and, increasingly, that there is no path to follow—they are almost like dead people. Right now, most humans (meaning all but the firstborn sons) are in this condition. I have pointed out these things with such clarity, yet these people have no reaction and still care for their fleshly enjoyments. They eat and then they sleep; they sleep and then they eat. They do not ponder My words. Even when they are energized, it is only for a while; afterward, they are still the same as they were, completely unchanged, as though they had not listened to Me at all. These are the typical, useless humans who have no burdens; they are the most obvious of freeloaders. At a later date, I will forsake them one by one; do not worry! One by one, I will send them back to the bottomless pit. The Holy Spirit has never worked on such people, and everything that they do flows from the gifts they have received. When I speak of gifts, I mean that these are people with no life, who are My service-doers; I do not want any of them, and I will cast them out (but as of right now, they are still a little bit useful). You who are service-doers, listen! Do not think My using you means that I favor you; it is not so simple. If you want Me to favor you, then you must be someone of whom I approve and whom I perfect personally. This is the kind of person whom I love. Even if people say that I have made a mistake, I will never renege. Do you know this? Those who render service are but cattle and horses; how can they be My firstborn sons? Would that not be nonsense? Would it not be a violation of the laws of nature? Whosoever has My life and My quality, those ones are My firstborn sons. This is a reasonable thing; no one can refute it. It must be so; otherwise, there would be no one who could play this role, and no one who could substitute for it. This is not a matter acted upon from emotion, for I am the righteous God Himself; I am the holy God Himself. I am the majestic, unoffendable God Himself!

Everything that is impossible for humans goes smoothly and freely for Me. No one can stop it, and no one can change it. This world, in all its enormity, is completely in My hands, not to mention the little devil Satan. If it were not for My management plan, and if it were not for My firstborn sons, I would long ago have destroyed this old evil as well as this promiscuous age that is so permeated with the stench of death. However, I act with propriety, and I do not speak lightly. Once I say something, it will be accomplished; even if this were not so, there is always the aspect of My wisdom, which will accomplish everything for Me and open the way for My actions. This is because My words are My wisdom; My words are everything. People fundamentally fail to understand them, and cannot figure them out. I often refer to the “lake of fire.” What does that mean? How is it different from the lake of fire and brimstone? The lake of fire and brimstone refers to Satan’s influence, while the lake of fire refers to the entire world under Satan’s domain. Everyone in the world is subject to immolation in the lake of fire (that is, they grow increasingly corrupt and, once their corruption has reached a certain level, they will be destroyed by Me one by one, which I can do easily with the utterance of but a single word). The greater My wrath, the higher the flames blaze throughout the lake of fire. This refers to how people are growing more and more evil. The time when My wrath erupts will also be the time when the lake of fire explodes; that is, it will be the time when the whole universe world perishes. On that day, My kingdom will be fully realized on earth and a new life shall begin. This is something that will soon be fulfilled. Upon My speaking it, everything will come to be in full view. This is the human view of the matter, but in My view, things have already been completed in advance, because for Me, everything is easy. I speak, and it is done; I speak, and it is established.

Every day, you eat of My words, enjoy the fatness in My temple, drink water from My river of life, and pluck the fruit of My tree of life. What, then, is the fatness in My temple? What is the water of My river of life? What is the tree of life? What is the fruit of the tree of life? Though these phrases may be common, they are nevertheless incomprehensible to all humans, who are all confused. They speak them irresponsibly, use them recklessly, and apply them at random. The fatness in the temple refers neither to the words I have spoken nor to the grace I have bestowed upon you. What, then, does it actually mean? Since ancient times, there has never been anyone fortunate enough to enjoy the fatness in My temple. Only in the last days, among My firstborn sons, can people see what this fatness in My temple is. The “temple” in this phrase refers to My person; it refers to Mount Zion, My abode. Without My permission, no one can enter it or exit from it. What does the “fatness” refer to? It refers to the blessing of being able to reign with Me in the body. Generally speaking, this refers to the blessing of the firstborn sons’ being able to reign with Me in the body, and this is not difficult to understand. The water of the river of life has two meanings: On the one hand, it refers to the living water that flows from My innermost being—that is, every word that issues from My mouth. On the other hand, it refers to the wisdom and strategy behind My actions, as well as to what I am and what I have. My words contain endless, hidden mysteries (and that the mysteries are no longer hidden is mentioned in contrast with the past, but when compared with the public revelation that will occur in the future, they are still hidden. Here, “being hidden” is not absolute; it is relative). In other words, the water of the river of life is ever-flowing. In Me there is infinite wisdom, and people absolutely cannot grasp what I am and what I have; that is, the water of the river of life is ever-flowing. In the human view, there are many kinds of physical trees, but no one has ever laid eyes upon the tree of life. However, despite seeing it today, people still do not recognize it—and yet, they even speak of eating from the tree of life. It truly is ridiculous! They would eat from it indiscriminately! Why do I say that today people see it but do not recognize it? Why do I say that? Do you understand the meaning of My words? The practical God Himself of today is the person that I am, and He is the tree of life. Do not use human notions to measure Me. On the outside, I do not look like a tree, but do you know that I actually am the tree of life? My every move, My speech, and My manner are the fruit of the tree of life, and they are My person—they are what My firstborn sons should eat, so, eventually, only My firstborn sons and I will be exactly the same. They will be able to live Me out and bear witness for Me. (These are things that will take place after we enter into the spiritual world. Only in the body can we be exactly the same; in the flesh, we can only be roughly the same, but we still have our own preferences.)

I not only will reveal My power in My firstborn sons, but I will also reveal it in their governance over all nations and all peoples. This is one step of My work. Now is the key, and moreover, now is the turning point. When everything has been accomplished, you shall see what My hands are working up, and you shall see how I plan and how I manage—however, this is not a vague thing. In light of the dynamics of every country of the world, it is not too far off; it is something that people cannot imagine and, moreover, it is something that they cannot foresee. You absolutely must not be careless or negligent, so as not to miss out on the opportunity to be blessed and rewarded. The prospect of the kingdom is in sight, and the entire world is gradually falling down dead. From the bottomless pit and from the lake of fire and brimstone, bursts of wailing sounds sound forth, horrifying the people and making them feel frightened and with nowhere to hide themselves. Whosoever is selected in My name and then cast out shall end up in the bottomless pit. Thus, as I have said many times, I shall toss those whom I am to cast out into the bottomless pit. When the entire world has been demolished, everything that has been destroyed will fall into the lake of fire and brimstone. In other words, these things will be transferred from the lake of fire into the lake of fire and brimstone. At that time, everyone will have been determined either for eternal destruction (meaning, all those who are outside of Me) or for eternal life (meaning, all those who are within Me). At that time, I and My firstborn sons shall emerge from the kingdom and enter eternity. This is something that will be fulfilled later on; even if I were to tell you now, you would not understand. You can only follow My lead, walk in My light, accompany Me in My love, experience enjoyment with Me in My house, reign with Me in My kingdom, and rule with Me over all nations and all peoples under My authority. All that I have described above comprises the endless blessings that I am giving you.

Chapter 103

A thunderous voice issues forth, shaking the entire universe. It is so deafening that people cannot dodge out of the way in time. Some are killed, some are destroyed, and some are judged. It truly is a spectacle, the likes of which no one has ever seen. Listen closely: The peals of thunder are accompanied by the sound of weeping, and this sound comes from Hades; it comes from hell. It is the bitter sound of those sons of rebellion who have been judged by Me. Those who have not listened to what I say and who have not put My words into practice have been severely judged and received the curse of My wrath. My voice is judgment and wrath; I treat no one gently and show mercy to no one, for I am the righteous God Himself, and I am possessed of wrath; I am possessed of burning, of cleansing, and of destruction. In Me, nothing is hidden or emotional, but on the contrary, everything is open, righteous, and impartial. Because My firstborn sons are already with Me upon the throne, ruling over all nations and all peoples, those things and people that are unjust and unrighteous are now beginning to be judged. I will probe them one by one, missing nothing and revealing them completely. For My judgment has been fully revealed and opened up fully, and I have not kept back anything at all; I will throw out everything that does not accord with My will, and let it perish to all eternity in the bottomless pit. There I will allow it to burn forever. This is My righteousness, and this is My uprightness. No one can change this, and all must be under My command.

Most people ignore My utterances, thinking that words are just words and that facts are facts. They are blind! Do they not know that I am the faithful God Himself? My words and facts occur simultaneously. Is this not genuinely the case? People simply do not comprehend My words, and only those who have been enlightened can truly understand. This is a fact. As soon as people see My words, they become frightened out of their wits and scurry all over the place to hide. This is even more the case when My judgment falls. When I created all things, when I destroy the world, and when I make complete the firstborn sons—all these things are accomplished by a single word from My mouth. This is because My word itself is the authority; it is the judgment. It can be said that the person that I am is the judgment and the majesty; this is an unalterable fact. This is one aspect of My administrative decrees; it is but one way in which I judge people. In My eyes, everything—including all people, all affairs, and all things—is in My hands and under My judgment. No one and nothing dares to behave wildly or willfully, and all must be accomplished in accordance with the words I utter. From within human notions, everyone believes the words of the person that I am. When My Spirit gives voice, everyone is dubious. People do not have the slightest knowledge of My omnipotence, and they even make imputations against Me. I tell you now, whosoever doubts My words, and whosoever slights My words, these are the ones who shall be destroyed; they are the perpetual sons of perdition. From this it can be seen that there are very few who are firstborn sons, because this is how I work. As I have said before, I accomplish everything without moving a finger; I use only My words. This, then, is where My omnipotence lies. In My words, no one can find the source and the purpose of what I say. People cannot achieve this, and they can only act while following My lead and do everything in conformance with My will according to My righteousness, causing My family to have righteousness and peace, to live forever, and to be eternally firm and unwavering.

My judgment comes to everyone, My administrative decrees touch everyone, and My words and My person are revealed to everyone. This is the time for the great work of My Spirit (at this time, those who will be blessed and those who will suffer misfortune are distinguished from one another). As soon as My words issue forth, I have distinguished those who will be blessed, as well as those who will suffer misfortune. This is all crystal clear, and I can see it all at a glance. (I am saying this with regard to My humanity; therefore, these words do not contradict My predestination and selection.) I roam about the mountains and rivers and among all things, across the spaces of the universe, observing and cleansing every place so that those unclean locations and those promiscuous lands will all cease to exist and be incinerated into nothingness as a result of My words. For Me, everything is easy. If now were the time I had predetermined for the world's destruction, I could swallow it up with the utterance of a single word. However, now is not the time. All must be ready before I will do this work so that My plan is not disturbed and My management is not interrupted. I know how to do this reasonably: I have My wisdom, and I have My own arrangements. People must not move one finger; be careful not to be killed at My hand. This has already touched upon My administrative decrees. From this one can see the harshness of My administrative decrees, as well as the principles behind them, which have two sides to them: On the one hand, I kill all who are not in line with My will and who violate My administrative decrees; on the other hand, in My wrath I curse all who violate My administrative decrees. These two aspects are indispensable, and are the executive principles behind My administrative decrees. Everyone is handled according to these two principles, without emotion, regardless of how loyal a person might be. This is enough to show My righteousness, My majesty, and My wrath, which will incinerate all earthly things, all worldly things, and all things that are not in line with My will. In My words are mysteries that remain hidden, and also in My words, there are mysteries that have been revealed. Thus, according to human notions, and in the human mind, My words are forever incomprehensible, and My heart is forever unfathomable. That is, I must cast humans out of their notions and thinking. This is the most important item of My management plan. I must do it this way in order to gain My firstborn sons and to accomplish the things I want to do.

The world's disasters grow greater by the day, and in My house, catastrophic disasters grow ever more powerful. People truly have nowhere to hide, nowhere to conceal themselves. Because the transition is happening right now, people do not know where they will pass their next step. This will only become obvious after My judgment. Remember! These are the steps of My work, and it is the way in which I work. I will comfort all of My firstborn sons one by one, and uplift them one step at a time; as for the service-doers, I will cast out and abandon them all, one by one. This is one part of My management plan. After all the service-doers have been revealed, My firstborn sons will also be revealed. (For Me, this is extremely easy. After they hear My words, all those service-doers will gradually withdraw before the judgment and threat of My words, and only My firstborn sons will remain. This is not something voluntary, nor is it something that human will can change; rather, it is My Spirit working in person.) This is not a distant event, and you should, to some extent, be able to perceive it from within this phase of My work and My words. Why I would say so much, as well as the unpredictable nature of My utterances, are unfathomable to people. I speak to My firstborn sons in tones of comfort, mercy, and love (because I always enlighten these people, and I will not leave them, for I predestined them), while I treat people other than My firstborn sons with severe judgment, with threats, and with intimidation, making them feel constantly frightened to the point that their nerves are always at work. Once the situation has developed to a certain extent, they will escape from this state (when I destroy the world, these people will be in the bottomless pit), yet they will never escape My hand of judgment or break free of this situation. This, then, is their judgment; this is their chastisement. On the day that the foreigners arrive, I will reveal these people, one by one. These are the steps of My work. Do you now understand the intention behind My previous utterances of those words? In My opinion, something unfulfilled is also something that has been fulfilled, but something that has been fulfilled is not necessarily something that has been achieved. This is because I have My wisdom and My way of working, which are simply inscrutable to humans. Once I have achieved results with this step (when I have revealed all the evil ones who resist Me), I will begin the next step, for My will is unimpeded and no one dares to obstruct My management plan, and nothing dares to put up any obstacles—they must all clear the way! Children of the great red dragon, hear Me! I came from Zion and became flesh in the world to gain My firstborn sons, to humiliate your father (these words are aimed at the descendants of the great red dragon), to support My firstborn sons, and to right the wrongs done to My firstborn sons. Therefore, do not be savage again; I will let My firstborn sons deal with you. In the past, My sons were bullied and oppressed, and since the Father wields power for His sons, My sons shall return to My loving embrace, no longer to be bullied and oppressed. I am not unrighteous; this shows My righteousness, and it is truly “loving those whom I love and hating those whom I hate.” If you say I am unrighteous, then you should hurry up and get out. Do not be shameless and freeloader in My house. You should go back to your home with haste so that I no longer have to see you. The bottomless pit is your destination, and that is where you will rest. If you are in My house, there will be no place for you, because you are beasts of burden; you are the tools I use. When I no longer have any use for you, I shall cast you into the fire to incinerate you. This is My administrative decree; I must do it this way, and only this shows the manner in which I work and reveals My righteousness and My majesty. More importantly, only in this way will My firstborn sons be allowed to reign in power with Me.

Chapter 104

All people, events, and things outside of Me shall pass away into nothingness, while all people, events, and things within Me shall gain everything from Me and enter glory with Me, enter My Mount Zion, enter My residence, and coexist with Me forever. I created all things at the beginning, and I shall complete My work at the end. I shall also exist and rule as King forever. During the intervening period, I also lead and command the entire universe. No one can take away My authority, for I am the one God Himself. Furthermore, I have the power to pass on My authority to My firstborn sons so that they can reign alongside Me. These things will exist forever, and can never be changed. This is My administrative decree. (Wherever I discuss My administrative decree, I am referring to what happens in My kingdom and what will exist forever and can never be changed.) Everyone must be convinced wholeheartedly, and must see My great power in those I love. None can shame My name; anyone who does must get out of here! It is not that I am merciless, but that you are unrighteous. If you violate My chastisement, then I shall deal with you and cause you to perish for all eternity. (Of course, this is all directed at people who are not My firstborn sons.) Such trash is not welcome in My house, so hurry up and get out of here! Do not tarry for a minute, or even for a second! You must do what I say, or else I will destroy you with a single word. You had better not still be hesitating, and you had better not still be trying to deceive. When before Me, you make up nonsense, and lie to My face. Hurry up and leave! The time I have for such things is limited. (When it is time to do service, these people will do service, and when it is time to leave, they will leave. I do things with wisdom, never a minute or even a second out of time; never the least bit off. All My actions are righteous and completely accurate.) When it comes to My firstborn sons, however, I am infinitely tolerant, and My love for you is eternal, enabling you to forever enjoy good blessings and eternal life with Me. In the meantime, you will never endure any setbacks or have to undergo My judgment. (This refers to when you start to enjoy blessings.) This is the infinite blessing and the promise I made to My firstborn sons when I created the world. You should see My righteousness therein: I love those I have predestined, and I hate those I have abandoned and cast out, forever and ever.

As My firstborn sons, you should all hold on to your own duties and stand firm in your own positions. Be the first ripe fruits caught up before Me and accept My personal inspection so that you can live out My glorious image and so that the light of My glory can shine through your faces, so that My utterances can be spread from your mouths, so that My kingdom can be governed by you, and so that My people can be ruled by you. Here I mention “first ripe fruits,” as well as terms such as “caught up.” What are “first ripe fruits”? According to people’s notions, they think of them as the first batch of people caught up, or the overcomers, or people who are firstborn sons. These are all fallacies and erroneous interpretations of My words. First ripe fruits are the people who have received revelation from Me and who have been granted authority by Me. The words, “first ripe,” refer to being in My possession, and to being predestined and selected by Me. “First ripe” does not mean “the first in a sequence.” “First ripe fruits” are not material things seen by human eyes. These so-called “fruits” refer to things that exude fragrance (this is a symbolic meaning); that is, it refers to people who can live Me out, manifest Me, and live with Me forever. When I speak of “fruits,” I am referring to all My sons and people, whereas the “first ripe fruits” refer to the firstborn sons who shall reign alongside Me as kings. Therefore, “first ripe” should be explained as carrying authority; that is its true meaning. “Being caught up” does not mean being taken from a low place to a high place, as people might imagine; that is a huge misconception. “Being caught up” refers to My predestining and then selecting. It is directed at all those I have predestined and chosen. All those who are caught up are people who have gained the status of firstborn sons or sons, or who are God’s people. This is most incompatible with people’s notions. Those who will have a share in My house in the future are all ones who have been caught up before Me. This is absolutely true, never-changing, and irrefutable. It is a counterattack against Satan. Anyone I predestined shall be caught up before Me.

How does one explain the “holy trumpet”? What is your understanding of this? Why is it said to be holy and that it has already been sounded? This should be explained from the steps of My work and understood from the method in which I work. The time when My judgment is announced publicly is when My disposition is revealed to all nations and peoples. That is the time when the holy trumpet is sounded. That is, I often say that My disposition is holy and unoffendable, which is why “holy” is used to describe the “trumpet.” From this it is evident that the “trumpet” refers to My disposition and represents what I am and have. It can also be said that My judgment is in progress every day, My wrath is being released every day, and My curse befalls every single thing that does not accord with My disposition on a daily basis. Then it can be said that the time My judgment begins is the time the holy trumpet is sounded, and it continues to sound every day, without halting for a moment and without stopping for even a minute or a second. From now on, the holy trumpet shall sound louder and louder, alongside the gradual befalling of great disasters. In other words, along with the revelation of My righteous judgment, My disposition will be increasingly made public, and what I am and have will be increasingly added into My firstborn sons. This is how I will work in the future: On the one hand, sustaining and saving those I love, while on the other, using My words to reveal all those whom I despise. Remember! This is the method of My work, the steps of My work, which is absolutely true. I have been planning this since creation, and it cannot be changed by anyone.

There are still many sections of My words that are difficult for people to understand, so I have further improved My speaking style and the methods with which I reveal mysteries. That is, My speaking style is changing and improving every day, with new forms and methods daily. These are the steps of My work, and they cannot be changed by anyone. People can only speak and act in accordance with what I say. This is absolutely the truth. I have made suitable arrangements in both My person and My flesh. Within every action and deed of My humanity comes an aspect of the wisdom of My divinity. (As mankind does not possess any wisdom at all, saying that firstborn sons have My wisdom refers to the fact that they have My divine disposition in them.) When firstborn sons do foolish things, it is because you still have human elements within you. You must therefore get rid of such human foolishness, and do what I love and reject what I hate.

Anyone who comes from Me must return to be within Me, and anyone who is born of Me must return to be within My glory. Those I hate must be abandoned and cut off from Me, one by one. These are the steps of My work; it is My management and it is the plan of My six-thousand-year creation. Those I abandon should all submit and leave Me obediently. Those I love should all, due to the blessings I have bestowed upon them, praise Me so that My name can grow even more glorious, and so that glorious light can be added to My glorious visage, so that they can be full of My wisdom in My glory, and glorify My name even more in My glorious light!

Because of the principles behind My words, and because of the manner in which I work, people deny Me; this is the purpose behind My speaking for so long (this is directed at all the descendants of the great red dragon). This is the wise method of My work; it is My judgment of the great red dragon. This is My strategy, and not a single person can fully understand it. At every turning point—that is, at every transitional phase of My management plan—some people must be cast out; they are cast out according to the sequence of My work. This, and this only, is the way in which My entire management plan works. After I have thrown out, one by one, the people I want to cast out, I then begin the next step of My work. However, this is the final casting out (and this means within the churches in China), and it is also the time when the greatest number of people will have been cast out, during a transitional phase, since the creation of the world. Throughout history, every time people have been cast out, there has been a portion left over to render service for later work. However, this time is not the same as previous times; it is clean and efficient. This is the most critical and the most comprehensive of all times. Even though most people, after reading My words, try to force doubt from their minds, they ultimately cannot overcome it and, in the end, they fall in their struggles. This is not up to them to decide, because those whom I have predestined cannot escape and those whom I have not predestined I can only scorn. The only people I love are those whom I look favorably upon; otherwise, not a single person may freely leave and enter My kingdom. This is My iron rod, and only this is the powerful testimony and full manifestation of carrying out My administrative decrees. This certainly is not a matter of merely being spirited. Why have I said that Satan has been powerless against the fall? At first it had strength, but it is in My hands; if I ask it to lie down, it must lie down, and if I ask it to rise to render service for Me, it must rise and render service for Me, and do so well. It is not that Satan is willing to do this; it is that My iron rod rules Satan, and only in this way is it convinced in heart and in word. My administrative decrees govern it, and I have My might, so Satan cannot but be utterly convinced; it must be trodden down beneath My footstool, without a trace of resistance. In the past, when it was rendering service for My sons, Satan was audacious in the extreme, and willfully bullied them, hoping thereby to shame Me and claiming that I was incapable. How blind! I will trample you to death! Go ahead; I dare you to be savage once more! I dare you to treat My sons with cold indifference again! The more honest people are, and the more they listen to My words and submit to Me, the more you bully and isolate them (here I am referring to your gathering your accomplices to form a faction). Now your days of savagery are at an end, and bit by bit, I am settling accounts with you; I will not let you get away with even one iota of what you have done. Now it is not you—Satan—that have taken power; rather, I have taken that power back, and the time to call My sons to deal with you has come. You must be obedient, and not resist in the slightest. No matter how well-behaved you have been when before Me in the past, that will not help you today. If you are not one of those whom I love, then I do not want you. One too many is unacceptable; it must be the number that I have predetermined, and one fewer than that is even worse. Satan—do not be disruptive! Can it be that I am not clear within My own heart about whom I love and whom I hate? Do I need you to remind Me? Could Satan give birth to My sons? All are absurd! All are wretched! I will thoroughly and completely discard all. Not even a single one is wanted; all must get out! The six-thousand-year management plan is at an end, My work is done, and I must clear away this horde of beasts and brutes!

Those who believe My words and carry them out must be those whom I love; I will not abandon a single one of them, and I will not let a single one go. So, those who are the firstborn sons need not worry. Since it is bestowed by Me, no one can take it away, and I am bound to bestow it upon those whom I bless. Those of whom I approved (prior to the creation of the world), I bless (today). This is the way in which I work, and it is also the main principle behind each clause of My administrative decrees, and no one can change it; not one more word can be added, nor one more sentence, nor even a single word or sentence omitted. In the past I often said that My person appears to you. What, then, is My “person,” and how does it appear? Does this simply refer to the person that I am? Does it simply mean every sentence that I say? These two aspects, while indispensable, only make up a small part; that is, they do not comprise a complete explanation of My person. My person includes My fleshly self, My words, and also My deeds, but the most exact explanation is that My firstborn sons and I are My person. That is to say, a group of corporate Christian men, who reign and hold power, are My person. Hence, each of the firstborn sons is indispensable and is a part of My person, and therefore, I emphasize that the number of people can be neither one too many (thus bringing humiliation to My name), nor, even more crucially, one too few (thus being unable to fully manifest Me). Moreover, I emphasize over and over that the firstborn sons are My dearest, My treasures, and the crystallization of My six-thousand-year management plan; only they can embody My perfect and full manifestation. I Myself can only be a full manifestation of My person; only together with the firstborn sons can I Myself be said to be a perfect and full manifestation. Thus, I place strict demands on My firstborn sons, without overlooking a thing, and over and over I cut down and kill all those apart from My firstborn sons; this is the root of all that I have said, and is the ultimate goal of all that I have said. Moreover, time and again, I emphasize that they must be people who have been approved of by Me, whom I have personally chosen since the creation of the world. How, then, may the word “appear” be explained? Is it about the time when one enters into the spiritual world? Most people believe that it is the time My fleshly self was anointed, or the time at which they saw My fleshly self, but all of this is false; it is not even close. “Appear,” according to its original meaning, is by no means difficult to understand, but to understand it according to My intention is much harder. It can be said thusly: When I made mankind, I was putting My quality into this group of people whom I loved, and this group of people was My person. To put it another way, My person had already appeared by then. It is not that My person appeared after this name was received; rather, it was that it appeared after I predestined this group of people, because they contained My quality (their nature does not change, and they are still a part of My person). Thus, My person, from the time of the creation of the world until the present day, has always appeared. Most people believe the notion that My fleshly self is My person, which is absolutely not so; that idea just originates in their thoughts and notions. If My fleshly self alone were My person, then that would not be enough to put Satan to shame. It could not glorify My name, and it would in fact have a counter-effect, thus bringing shame to My name, and become a mark of Satan’s shaming of My name throughout the ages. I am the wise God Himself, and I would never do such a foolish thing.

My work must have results and, moreover, I must speak words with methods; all My words and utterances are spoken along with My Spirit, and I speak according to all that My Spirit does. Therefore, all should, through My words, feel My Spirit, see what it is that My Spirit is doing; they should see what it is exactly that I want to do, they should see based on My words the method in which I work, and see what the principles of My entire management plan are. I watch the entire picture of the universe: Every person, every event, and every place all fall under My command. There are none who dare to violate My plan; all advance step by step in the order I have prescribed. This is My might; this is where the wisdom of managing My entire plan lies. No one can fully understand or speak clearly; all is done personally by Me, and controlled by Me alone.

Chapter 106

Those who do not know My words, those who do not know My normal humanity, and those who defy My divinity shall all be demolished into nothingness. No one shall be exempt from this, and all must pass muster in this aspect, for it is My administrative decree, and this is the most serious one to put into practice. Those who do not know My words are the ones who have listened to things I have clearly pointed out yet still have no knowledge of them; in other words, they are people who do not understand spiritual matters (as I have not created a human faculty that corresponds to spiritual matters, I do not demand much of them; I merely require that they listen to My words and can put them into practice). Those are not people of My house, nor are they of the same type as Me; they belong to Satan's realm. I therefore do not want a single one of these people who do not understand spiritual matters. Before, you thought I had gone too far, but by now you should understand. How could beasts possibly converse with God? Would that not be absurd? People who do not know My normal humanity are those who use their own notions to measure what I do in My humanity. Rather than submit, they, with their eyes of flesh, come to nitpick with Me. Perhaps the words I have spoken have been in vain? I have said that My normal humanity is an indispensable part of Me, the complete God Himself, and that this is the proper way that My normal humanity and complete divinity work in concert with one another: When the things I do through My normal humanity do not fit with human notions, those who defy Me and those who are not compatible with Me are revealed. After that, My complete divinity speaks through humanity, and in this way, I have dealt with some people. If you do not understand what I do but can nonetheless submit, then you are the kind of person whom I do not condemn; I just enlighten such people. I love such people, and because of your submission, I enlighten you. Those who defy My divinity include ones who do not know My words, who are incompatible with My normal humanity, and who disapprove of what I do in divinity (for example, My becoming angry or constructing the church, and so on). These are all expressions of resistance to My divinity. However, there is one thing I must emphasize, and every single one of you should pay attention: Those who are incompatible with the person that I am today are resisting My divinity. Why do I keep saying the person that I am is the complete God Himself? The disposition of the person that I am comprises the entirety of the divine disposition; do not use human notions to measure Me. Even now, many people still say that I possess normal humanity and that not all of the things I do are necessarily correct. When people are like this, are you not simply asking to die? They do not know a single word of what I am saying, and they are absolutely the descendants of the blind and the spawn of the great red dragon! I will tell everyone one more time (and I will not say this again afterward, and all who commit this offense again will surely be cursed): My words, My laughter, My eating, My living, My speech, and My behavior are all done by Me—the God Himself—and there is not the faintest trace of humanity mixed therein. None! None at all! People must all stop playing mind games, and quit their petty calculations. The more people continue with these, the more doomed they will be. Heed My advice!

I am always searching everyone's innermost heart, searching each individual's every word and action. I see clearly, one by one, those whom I like and those whom I dislike. This is something that people cannot imagine and, moreover, something that they cannot accomplish. I have said so much, and I have done so many things; who would be able to pinpoint what the purpose of My words is, and of what I do? No one could. Henceforth, I shall speak even more words; on the one hand, this will cast out all the people whom I dislike, while on the other, it will make you suffer a bit more in this regard, so that you will taste of resurrection once more, only with more severity. This cannot be determined by people, nor can anyone keep it from happening. Even if you know of this now, when the time comes you will still not be able to avoid this sort of suffering, because this is the method of My work. I must work like this in order to achieve My goals, and so that My will can be fulfilled upon you. This is why it is called “the last suffering you will have to endure.” Afterward, your flesh will not suffer ever again, for the great red dragon will have been annihilated by Me and will not dare to run riot again. This is the final step before entering the body; it is the transitional stage. But do not be afraid—I will definitely lead you through difficulty after difficulty. Believe that I am the righteous God Himself, and that what I say will surely come to pass. I am the trustworthy God Himself. All countries, all lands, and all denominations are returning to Me and flocking to My throne. This is My great power, and I shall judge each and every child of rebellion and cast them into the lake of fire and brimstone, without any exceptions. All must retreat. This is the final step of My management plan, and once it is complete, I shall enter into rest, because everything will have been done, and My management plan will have come to an end.

Because the pace of My work has increased (though I do not at all feel anxious), I reveal My words to you every day and I uncover the mysteries I hold to you every day, so that you can closely follow My footsteps. (This is My wisdom; I use My words to perfect people, but also to strike people down. All read My words and are able to act in accordance with My will in My words. Those who are negative will be negative, and those who are to be revealed will show their true colors; the defiant will resist, and those who love Me loyally will grow even more loyal. Thus, all will be able to follow My footsteps. All these situations I have described are methods in which I work and goals I wish to achieve.) In the past, I have said this sort of thing: However I lead you, you should seek in the same way; whatever I say to you, you should listen. What do I mean by this? Do you know? What are the purpose and significance of My word? Do you understand? How many people can fully articulate this? When I say, “However I lead you, you should seek in the same way,” I am not merely referring to guidance I provide as the person that I am; I am moreover referring to the words I speak and the path I take. Today, these words have truly been fulfilled. As soon as I have spoken My words, all kinds of demonic faces are exposed before the light of My presence, giving you a clear view of them all. These utterances of Mine are not only an announcement to Satan, but also an entrustment to you all. Most of you ignore these words, believing them to be an entrustment to you; you do not realize that they are words of judgment, and words that carry authority. The purpose of My words is to command Satan to do service for Me properly and submit to Me completely. Of the mysteries I have revealed in the past, there are still many that you do not yet comprehend. As such, in the future I will reveal more to you so that you can attain a clearer and more thorough understanding.

When catastrophes come, everyone is terrified. People all cry with sorrow and feel loathing for the evil things they did in the past, but by then it is too late, for this is the age of wrath. It is not the time to save people and offer grace, but the time to clear away all service-doers and allow My sons to rule for Me. This is indeed different from times in the past; it is unprecedented since the creation of the world. Because I created the world once, I shall destroy it once, and what I have predestined cannot be changed by anyone. The two terms, “the corporate Christian men” and “the corporate universal new men,” were previously mentioned quite often. How should they be explained? Does “corporate Christian men” refer to the firstborn sons? Does “corporate universal new men” refer to the firstborn sons as well? No; people have not interpreted those phrases correctly. Because human notions can only help them to understand things to this degree, I shall clarify them for you, right here and now. The corporate Christian men and the corporate universal new men are not the same; their meanings are separate. Although the wording of these two terms is very similar, and they might seem like the same thing, the true situation is the complete opposite. To whom exactly does “corporate Christian men” refer? Or, to what does it refer? Speaking of Christian men, everyone would unanimously think of Me. They are not at all wrong to do so. Furthermore, in human notions, the term “men” would definitely refer to humans; not one person would associate it with something else. When speaking of the term “corporate,” people would think it means a gathering of many people who are practically a single unit, and hence called “corporate.” Here it can be seen that human minds are far too simple; they cannot understand My meaning at all. Now, I will officially begin to fellowship about what the corporate Christian men are (but people must all set aside their own notions; otherwise, none of them will be able to understand, and even if I explained the term, they would neither believe nor be able to comprehend it): As soon as My words are spoken, My firstborn sons shall all be able to act in line with My will, and express My will, so they are of one heart and of one mouth. While they are judging all nations and all peoples, they will be able to carry out My righteousness and implement My administrative decrees; they are an expression of Me, and they are My manifestation. Thus, it can be said that the corporate Christian men are the fact of the firstborn sons’ implementation of My administrative decrees; they are the authority in the hands of the firstborn sons. This is all related to Christ—hence the term, “Christian men.” In addition, all of the firstborn sons can act according to My will, and for this reason, I use the term, “corporate.” The “corporate universal new men” means all people in My name; in other words, My firstborn sons, My sons, and My people. The word “new” is in reference to My name. Because they are in My name (My name carries everything, and is eternally new and never old; it is unchangeable by man), and because they will remain alive forever in the future, they are the universal new men. The word “corporate” here is in regard to the number of people, and it is not the same as the former case. When My word is spoken, all should believe in it. Do not doubt. Rid yourselves of your human notions and human thoughts. My current process of revealing mysteries is precisely the process of removing human notions and thoughts (because people use their own notions to measure Me and measure what I say, I use My own revealed mysteries to remove human notions and thoughts). This work will soon be completed. When My mysteries are revealed to a certain degree, people will have almost no more thought processes about My words, and they will stop measuring Me by their human notions. What they think every day, I will reveal, and I will strike back. At a certain point, people will think no more; their heads will be empty of all thought, and they will completely submit to My words. That will be the time when you will enter the spiritual realm. This is a step in My work that comes before I will allow you to enter the spiritual realm. You must rid yourselves of all human notions before you can be holy and unblemished and enter the spiritual realm. This is what is meant by, “I am a holy spiritual body.” However, you must act in accordance with My steps, and before you realize it, My time will come.

When My words reach a certain level of sternness, most people withdraw because of them—and it is precisely in this moment that My firstborn sons are revealed. I have said that I do not lift a finger but use only My words to achieve all things. With My words, I destroy all that I hate, and I also use them to perfect My firstborn sons. (When My words are spoken, the seven thunders shall sound, and in that moment My firstborn sons and I will change form and enter the spiritual realm.) When I said that My Spirit carries out work in person, I meant that My words achieve all, and from this it is evident that I am almighty. Therefore, one can see with even greater clarity the aim and purpose behind each sentence that I utter. As I have said before, everything I voice within My humanity is an aspect of My manifestation. Thus, those people who cannot be certain of and who do not truly believe in what I say within My normal humanity must be removed! I have repeatedly emphasized that My normal humanity is an indispensable aspect of My complete divinity, yet so many people continue to focus on the latter while ignoring the former. You are blind! You say that I do not conform with your notions, and that the human that I am does not conform with your God. Can these people remain in My kingdom? I will trample you beneath My feet! I dare you to rebel further against Me! I dare you to continue with such willfulness! My smile does not fit with your notions, My speech is not pleasant to your ears, and My actions do not benefit you—am I right? All these things must be to your liking. Is that what God is like? And do these people still want to remain in My house and receive blessings in My kingdom? Are you not daydreaming? Since when are things so wonderful! You want to disobey Me, yet you still wish to receive blessings from Me. I say to you:

Absolutely not! As I have said many times, those who enter My kingdom and receive blessings must be people whom I love. Why do I place emphasis on these words? I know and understand what everyone is thinking; there is no need for Me to point out their thoughts one by one. Their true forms will be revealed through My words of judgment, and all will cry with sorrow before My seat of judgment. This is an obvious fact that no one can change! In the end, I will have them enter the bottomless pit one by one. This is the final result I wish to achieve with My judgment of the devil Satan. I must use judgment and administrative decrees to deal with each individual, and this is how I chastise people. Do you have any true insight into this? I do not need to give Satan a reason; I simply use My iron rod to thrash it until it is within an inch of its life and repeatedly begging for mercy. Therefore, when people read My words of judgment, they cannot understand them in the slightest, but from My perspective, every line and every sentence is an implementation of My administrative decrees. This is an obvious fact.

Since I have mentioned judgment today, this topic touches upon the seat of judgment. In the past, you have often said that you will receive judgment before the seat of Christ. You have some understanding of judgment, but you cannot imagine the seat of judgment. Perhaps some people think that the seat of judgment is a physical object, or they might imagine that it is a large table, or perhaps visualize it as a judge's seat such as those in the secular world. Of course, in My explanation this time, I will not deny what you have said, but to Me, things in people's imaginations still carry symbolic meaning. Thus the gulf between what people imagine and My meaning is still as great as that between heaven and earth. In people's notions, there are many people lying prostrate before the seat of judgment, crying with sorrow and begging for mercy. In this the human imagination has reached its pinnacle, and no one can imagine anything more than that. What, then, is the seat of judgment? Before I reveal this mystery, you must reject all of your previous misconceptions; only then can My goal be reached. This is the only way that your notions and thoughts on this subject can be dispelled. Whenever I speak, you must pay attention. You must be careless no more. My seat of judgment has been established since the creation of the world. In ages and generations past, many have died before it, and many have risen before it as well, returning to life. It can also be said that from beginning to end, My judgment never ceases, and so My seat of judgment always exists. Whenever the seat of judgment is mentioned, humans all feel a trace of fear. Of course, from what I have said above, you have no idea what this seat of judgment is. The seat of judgment coexists with judgment, but they are of two different kinds of substance. (Here "substance" does not refer to a physical object, but to words. Humans cannot see this substance at all.) Judgment refers to My words. (Whether they are severe or soft, they are all included in My judgment. Thus, anything that issues from My mouth is judgment.) Before, people divided My words into many different categories, including words of judgment, words of gentleness, and words that supply life. Today, I shall clarify for you that judgment and My utterances are interconnected. That is, judgment is My words, and My words are judgment; you absolutely must not speak of them separately. People imagine that severe words are judgment, but their understanding is not complete. Everything that I say is judgment. The beginning of judgment spoken of in the past referred to when My Spirit officially began to work at every place and to implement My administrative decrees. In this sentence, “judgment” refers to actual reality. Now I shall explain the seat of judgment: Why do I say that the seat of judgment exists from eternity to eternity and goes side by side with My judgment? Have you gained some understanding of it from My explanation of judgment? The seat of judgment refers to the human being that I am. From eternity to eternity, I am always voicing and speaking. I live forever, so My seat of judgment and My judgment are in eternal coexistence. This should be clear by now! In people’s imaginations, they treat Me as an object, but in this regard, I neither blame you nor condemn you. I only hope that you will be obedient and accept My revelation, and know from it that I am the all-encompassing God Himself.

My words are completely incomprehensible to humans, My footsteps are impossible for them to find, and My will is impossible for them to grasp. Thus, the state that you are in today (being able to receive My revelation, to grasp My will from within it, and to follow My footsteps through it) is completely a result of My wondrous actions, My grace, and My compassion. One day, I shall even allow you to see My wisdom, behold what I have done with My hands, and glimpse the wonder of My work. When that time comes, the blueprints of My entire management plan will be completely revealed before your eyes. Throughout the universe world and every day, parts of My wondrous actions manifest, and all render service so that My management plan may be accomplished. When this has been completely revealed, you shall see what kind of people I have arranged to do service, what kind of people I have arranged to fulfill My will, what I have achieved through exploiting Satan, what I have accomplished by Myself, what kind of people are weeping, what kind of people are gnashing their teeth, what kind of people will suffer destruction, and what kind of people will suffer perdition. By “destruction,” I am referring to those who will be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone and will be completely burned; by “perdition,” I mean those who will be cast into the bottomless pit to languish there for all eternity. Therefore, do not mistake destruction and perdition as the same thing; on the contrary, the two are very different. Service-doers who exit My name today will suffer perdition, and those who are not of My name will suffer destruction. This is the reason I say that those who suffer perdition will give Me everlasting praise after My judgment; and yet, those people will never be rid of My chastisement, and will always accept My rule. This is the reason I say that the bottomless pit is the hand I use to chastise people. I also say that all is in My hands. Even though I have said that “the bottomless pit” refers to Satan’s influence, it is also in My hands, which I use to chastise people. Thus, all is in My hands, and there is no contradiction. My words are not irresponsible; they are all proper and coherent. They are neither made-up nor nonsensical, and everyone should believe My utterances. In the future, you will suffer because of this. Because of My words, many people become cold or they despair, or become disappointed, or cry bitterly, or weep. There will be all manner of responses. One day, when all the people I hate withdraw, My great work will be accomplished. In the future, many people will fall because of the firstborn sons, and in the end, they will all leave, one step at a time. In other words, My house will gradually become holy, and all kinds of demons will slowly retreat from My side, leaving quietly, submissively, and without a word of complaint. Afterward, all of My firstborn sons will be revealed, and I will begin the next step of My work. Only then will the firstborn sons be kings with Me and rule over the entire universe. These are the steps of My work, and they form an important part of My management plan. Do not overlook this; otherwise, you will be making a mistake.

The time when My words are revealed to you is the time that I begin My work. Not a single one of My words will be left unfulfilled. To Me, one day is like a thousand years, and a thousand years is like one day. How do you see it? Your concept of time is very different from Mine, because I control the universe world, and I accomplish all things. My work is done day by day, step by step, and stage by stage; moreover, the onward march of My work does not stop for even a single second: In every moment, it is constantly being done. My words have never been interrupted, ever since the creation of the world. I have continued to speak and voice My utterances to this day; this will remain unchanged into the future. However, My time is carefully arranged and organized, and it is very orderly. I will do what I need to do when I need to do it (with Me, all will be released; all will be free), and I am not disrupted in the slightest as regards the steps of My work. I can arrange everyone in My house; I can arrange everyone in the world—however, I am not at all busy, because My Spirit is working. My Spirit fills every place, for I am the unique God Himself, and the entire universe world is in My hands. Thus, one can see that I am almighty, I am wise, and My glory fills every corner of the universe.

Chapter 108

Within Me, all can find rest, and all can attain freedom. Those who are outside of Me can obtain neither freedom nor happiness, because My Spirit is not with them. Such people are called the spiritless dead, whereas I call those who are within Me “the living beings possessed of spirit.” They belong to Me, and they are bound to return to My throne. Those who render service and those who belong to the devil are the spiritless dead, and they must all be abolished and rendered into nothingness. This is a mystery of My management plan, and is a part of My management plan that mankind cannot fathom; however, at the same time, I have made this public to everyone. Those who do not belong to Me are against Me; those who belong to Me are the ones who are compatible with Me. This is utterly incontrovertible, and it is the principle behind My judgment of Satan. This principle should be known to all so that they can see My righteousness and justness. Everyone who comes from Satan will be judged, burned, and turned to ash. This, too, is My wrath, and from this My disposition is further made evident. From now on, My disposition will be openly announced; it will be gradually revealed to all peoples and all nations, to all religions, to all denominations, and to persons of all walks of life. Nothing will be hidden; all will be revealed. It is because My disposition and the principle behind My actions are the most hidden mysteries for mankind that I must do this (so that the firstborn sons will not violate My administrative decrees, and also in order to use My revealed disposition to judge all peoples and all nations). This is My management plan, and these are the steps of My work. Nobody shall change that lightly. I have already lived out the complete disposition of My divinity within My humanity, so I do not allow anyone to offend My humanity. (Everything I live out is the divine disposition; this is the reason I have said previously that I am the God Himself who has transcended normal humanity.) I will certainly not forgive anyone who offends Me, and I will let him perish into eternity! Remember! This is what I have decided; in other words, this is an indispensable part of My administrative decrees. Everybody should see this: The person I am is God, and moreover, God Himself. This should be clear by now! I do not say anything carelessly. I utter and point out everything clearly, until you have gained a complete understanding.

The situation is very tense; not only in My home, but even more so, outside of My house, I require that you witness My name, live Me out, and witness Me in all aspects. Because these are the end times, everything is now ready and everything retains its original appearance, and none of this will ever change. Those that should be cast away shall be cast away, and those that should be kept shall be kept. Do not try to forcefully hold on or push away; do not attempt to disrupt My management or destroy My plan. From a human perspective, I am always loving and compassionate toward mankind, but from My perspective, My disposition is differentiated according to the stages of My work, because I am the practical God Himself; I am the unique God Himself! I am both immutable and ever-changing. This is something that nobody can fathom. Only when I tell you about it and explain it to you will you have a clear understanding of it and be able to comprehend. To My sons, I am loving, compassionate, righteous, and disciplining, but not judgmental (and by that, I mean that I do not destroy the firstborn sons). To people other than My sons, I change at any time depending upon the shifting of the ages: I can be loving, compassionate, righteous, majestic, judgmental, wrathful, cursing, burning, and, finally, destructive of their flesh. Those who are destroyed will perish along with their spirits and souls. However, for those who render service, only their spirits and souls will be retained (and with regard to specifics about how I put this into practice, I will tell you later, so that you can understand). However, they will never have freedom and will never be released, because they are beneath My people, and are under the control of My people. The reason that I so abhorred the service-doers is that they are all descendants of the great red dragon, and those who are not service-doers are descendants of the great red dragon, too. In other words, all people who are not firstborn sons are descendants of the great red dragon. When I say that those in perdition offer Me everlasting praise, I mean that they will render service to Me forever. This is set in stone. Those people will always be slaves, cattle, and horses. I can slaughter them at any time, and I can dominate them as I wish, because they are descendants of the great red dragon and do not have My disposition. Also because they are descendants of the great red dragon, they have its disposition; that is, they possess the disposition of beasts. This is absolutely true, and eternally unchanging! This is because it was all predestined by Me. Nobody can change it (I mean, I will not allow anyone to act against this rule); if you try, I will strike you down!

You should look to the mysteries I have revealed to see which step My management plan and My work have reached. See what I do with My hands, and see what people My judgments and My wrath fall upon. This is My righteousness. I lay out My work and I manage My plan in accordance with the mysteries I have revealed. No one can change this; it must be done step by step, according to My desire. Mysteries are the path along which My work operates, and they are signs signifying the steps in My management plan. Nobody shall add or subtract anything from My mysteries, because if the mystery is wrong, then the path is wrong. Why am I revealing My mysteries to you? What is the reason? Who among you can say clearly? In addition, I have said that mysteries are the path, so to what does this path refer? It is the process you go through from the flesh into the body, and this is an important stage. After I reveal My mysteries, people's notions are gradually removed and their thoughts gradually weakened. This is the process of entering the spiritual realm. Thus, I say that My work takes place in steps, and it is not vague; this is the reality, and this is My way of working. Nobody can change this, nor can anyone else achieve it, for I am the unique God Himself! My work is completed by Me personally. The entire universe world is controlled by Me alone, and arranged by Me alone. Who dares not listen to Me? (By "Me alone," I mean God Himself, because the person I am is God Himself—so do not hold on so tightly to your own notions.) Who dares to go against Me? They will be severely punished! You have seen the outcome of the great red dragon! That is its end, but it is also an inevitability. The work must be done by Me Myself so that the great red dragon will be shamed. It cannot ever rise up again, and it will be destroyed for all eternity! Now I am beginning to reveal mysteries. (Remember! Most of the mysteries revealed are things you often voice but that nobody understands.) I have said that all the things that people see as unfinished have already been completed in My eyes, and the things that I see as just beginning, seem to people to be already complete. Is this paradoxical? It is not. People think in that way because they have their own notions and thoughts. The things I plan are completed through My words (they are established when I say so, and they are completed when I say so). However, it does not seem to Me that the things that I have said have been completed. This is because there is a time limit on the things that I do. Thus, I see these things as incomplete, though in people's fleshly eyes (because of differences in their concept of time), these things have already been completed. Nowadays most people are suspicious of Me because of the mysteries I reveal. Due to the onset of reality, and because My intentions do not match people's notions, they are resistant toward Me and deny Me. This is Satan ensnaring itself in its own schemes. (They want to receive blessings, but they did not expect that God would be out of line with their own notions to such an extent, so they retreat.) This is also an effect of My work. All people should praise Me, cheer for Me, and give Me glory. Absolutely everything is in My hands, and absolutely everything is within My judgment. When all peoples flow to My mountain, and when the firstborn sons return victorious, that will be the endpoint for My management plan. It will be the moment of completion for My six thousand years of management plan. Everything is arranged by Me personally; I have said this already many times. Since you still live within your notions, I must emphasize this repeatedly so that you do not make any mistakes here that would disrupt My plan. People cannot assist Me, nor can they take part in My management, because you are currently still of flesh and blood (although you belong to Me, you still live in the flesh). As such, I say that those who are of flesh and blood cannot receive My inheritance. This is also the main reason to have you enter the spiritual realm.

In the world, earthquakes are the beginning of disaster. First, I make the world—the earth, that is—change, and afterward come plagues and famines. This is My plan, and these are My steps, and I will mobilize everything to serve Me in order to complete My management plan. Thus, the entire universe world shall be destroyed, even without My direct intervention. When I first became flesh and was nailed to the cross, the earth shook tremendously, and it will be the same when the end comes. Earthquakes will begin at the very moment I enter the spiritual realm from the flesh. Thus, the firstborn sons will absolutely not suffer from disaster, whereas those who are not firstborn sons will be left to suffer amid the disasters. Therefore, from a human perspective, everyone is willing to be a firstborn son. In people's premonitions, this is not for the enjoyment of blessings, but to escape the suffering of disaster. This is the scheme of the great red dragon. However, I will never let it get away; I will cause it to suffer My severe punishment and then to stand up and render service to Me (this refers to making My sons and My people complete), causing it to forever be tricked by its own plots, forever to accept My judgment, and forever to be burned by Me. This is the true meaning of having service-doers praise Me (that is, using them to reveal My great power). I will not allow the great red dragon to sneak into My kingdom, nor will I grant it the right to praise Me! (Because it is not worthy; it will never be worthy!) I will only make the great red dragon render service to Me into eternity! I will only let it prostrate itself before Me. (Those who are destroyed are better off than those who are in perdition; destruction is only a temporary form of severe punishment, while people who are in perdition will suffer severe punishments eternally. For this reason, I use the word "prostrate." Because these people sneak into My house and enjoy much of My grace, and possess some knowledge of Me, I use severe punishments. As for those outside of My house, you could say that the ignorant will not suffer.) In people's notions, they think that people who are destroyed are worse off than those who are in perdition, but to the contrary, the latter have to be severely punished forever, and those who are destroyed will return to nothingness for all eternity.

Every day I am making utterances, speaking, and revealing My great signs and wonders. All of these things comprise the work of My Spirit. In people's eyes, I am only a human, but it is precisely in this human that I reveal My all, as well as My great power.

Because people ignore the human that I am and overlook My actions, they assume that these are things done by a human. Why, though, do you not pause to wonder whether a human would be capable of accomplishing what I do? People do not know Me to this extent; they do not understand My words, nor do they comprehend My deeds. Evil, corrupted humans! When will I swallow you up? When will I bury you in the lake of fire and brimstone? So many times have I been driven away from your group, so many times have people insulted, ridiculed, and defamed Me, and so many times have people openly judged and defied Me. Blind humans! Do you not know that you are simply a handful of mud in My palm? Do you not know that you are but objects of My creation? My wrath is being released now, and nobody can defend against it. People can only beg repeatedly for mercy. However, as My work has progressed to this extent, nobody can change it. Those who have been created must return to mud. It is not that I am unrighteous, but that you are overly corrupted and wanton, and it is because you have been seized by Satan and become its tools. I am the holy God Himself; I cannot be sullied, nor can I possess an unclean temple. From now on, My raging fury (more severe than wrath) will begin to pour down upon all nations and peoples and to chastise all the scum who come from Me but who do not know Me. I hate humans to the extreme, and I will have no further mercy; rather, I will rain down all of My curses. There will be absolutely no more compassion and love, everything will be incinerated into nothingness, and only My kingdom will remain, so that My people will praise Me in My house, give glory to Me, and cheer for Me forever (this is the function of My people). My hand will begin to officially chastise those both inside and outside of My house. No evildoers will be able to escape My grasp and judgment; everyone must undergo this ordeal and worship Me. This is My majesty and, moreover, it is an administrative decree that I proclaim to evildoers. Nobody can save anyone else. People can only tend to themselves, but no matter what they do, they will not be able to escape My hand of chastisement. Herein is revealed the reason it has been said that My administrative decrees are harsh; this is a fact that all people can see with their own eyes.

When I start to become angry, all demons, great and small, will flee in chaos, deeply afraid that My hand will strike them dead—but none can escape My hand. I hold all devices of punishment in My hand; My hand controls everything, all is within My grasp, and nobody can break free. This is My wisdom. When I came to the human realm, I had already completed all manner of preparatory work, laying the foundation for beginning My work among humans (this is because I am the wise God, and I properly deal with what should be done and what should not be done). After everything had been properly arranged, I became flesh and came to the human realm. However, nobody recognized Me. Aside from those I have enlightened, all the sons of rebellion defy Me, humiliate Me, and give Me the cold shoulder. In the end, though, I will make them become well-behaved and submissive. Although to humans it may seem as though I am not doing much, My great work has already been finished. (People all completely obey the human I am, both in word and at heart; this is a sign.) Today, I rise up and chastise all sorts of evil spirits that defy Me. Regardless of how long they have followed Me, they must leave My side. I do not want anyone who is against Me (they are those who lack spiritual understanding, those who have been temporarily possessed by evil spirits, and those who do not know Me). I do not want a single one of them! All will be removed and become sons of perdition! After doing service for Me today, they must all leave! Do not loiter in My house; stop your constant shameless freeload! Those who belong to Satan are all sons of the devil, and will perish forever. All who defy Me will quietly leave My side so that the pace of My work will become less impeded, with no further disruptions. All things will be done at My command, without any hindrances or obstructions. All will fall before My gaze and be destroyed in My incineration. This shows My almightiness and My perfect wisdom (what I did in My firstborn sons). It will add greater glory to My name, and it will add greater glory unto Me. From what I do and from My tone of voice, you all can see that I have completed all of My work in My house, and that I have begun to turn to the Gentile nations. I am beginning My work there, and executing the next step of My work.

Most of My words do not match your notions—but do not leave, My sons. That they do not match human notions does not mean that they are not My utterances. It is precisely this that proves that I did indeed utter them. If My words were in line with human notions, then that would be the work of evil spirits. Thus, you must put more effort into My words, do what I do, and love what I love. This final age is also the age in which all disasters arise again and, moreover, it is the age in which I am revealing all of My dispositions. When all of My holy trumpets begin to blow, people will be truly afraid; at that time, nobody will dare to do evil, but will instead prostrate themselves before Me, appreciating My wisdom and My almightiness. I am, after all, the wise God Himself! Who can refute Me? And who dares to rise up against Me? Who dares not admit My wisdom? Who dares not know My almightiness? When My Spirit is doing great work in all places, everyone knows My almightiness, but still My goal has not been reached. I want people, as a result of My wrath, to see My almightiness, My wisdom, and the glory of My person.

(All these are manifested in the firstborn sons; this is absolutely true. Aside from them, nobody can be a part of My person; this has been ordained by Me.) In My house, there are endless mysteries that people cannot fathom. When I speak, people say that I am too merciless. They say that so many people already love Me to a certain degree. Why, then, do I point out that those are the descendants of the great red dragon? Moreover, why will I abandon them one by one? Is it not better to have more people in My house? Nevertheless, I continue to act in this manner. There can be neither one more nor one less than the number I had predetermined. (This is My administrative decree. Not only can it not be changed by any human, but even I Myself cannot change it, because I must not yield before Satan. This is enough to make My wisdom and majesty evident. I am the one God Himself. Humans bow down before Me; I do not yield before humans.) This is exactly the point that most humiliates Satan. The humans I have selected are all humble, submissive, obedient, and honest, and they can serve Me with humility and in obscurity. (Satan wished to use this fact to humiliate Me, but I beat Satan back.) In these people, My disposition can be seen. When I have returned after being victorious in battle, I will anoint My firstborn sons to be kings in My kingdom, and only then will I begin to rest, because they will reign as kings alongside Me. My firstborn sons represent Me, and they express Me. In their humble and obscure service, they submit to Me; in their honesty, they execute My words; in their honesty, they say what I say; and in their humbleness, they bring glory to My name (with neither insolence nor savagery, but with majesty and wrath). My firstborn sons! It is time to judge the universe world! I grant you benediction, I give you authority, and I reward you with a share of blessings! Everything is already accomplished, and it is all controlled and arranged by you, for I am your Father; I am your strong tower, I am your shelter, and I am your backup. Moreover, I am your Almighty One; I am your all! Everything is in My hands, and everything is in your hands, too. This includes not only today, but also yesterday, and even tomorrow! Is this not worth celebrating? Is this not worth your cheers? All of you, accept from Me the portion you deserve! I give you My everything, without saving a single bit for Myself, because all My property is yours, and My riches are upon you. This is the reason that I said “it is very good” after creating you.

Do you know who directs what you do, think, and say today? What is the purpose behind your actions? I ask you: How do you attend the marriage feast of the Lamb? Is it today? Or is it in the future? What is the marriage feast of the Lamb? You do not know, do you? Well, then, I will explain it for you: When I came to the human realm, I had arranged all sorts of people, matters, and things to serve the human I am today. Now that everything is completed, I am tossing the service-doers aside. What does this have to do with the marriage feast? When these people render service to Me—that is, when I am made into the Lamb—I feel the taste of the marriage feast. In other words, all the pain I have suffered, all the things I have done, everything I have said, everyone I have encountered, and everything I have done in My lifetime have comprised the marriage feast. After the human I am was anointed, you began to follow Me (and at this time I became the Lamb); thus, under My leadership, you have experienced all manner of pain and disaster, been abandoned and vilified by the world, been abandoned by family, and have lived under My blessings. All these things are parts of the marriage feast of the Lamb. I use “the marriage feast” because all that I lead you into doing is for the purpose of gaining you. However, this is all part of the feast. In the future—or, one could say, today—everything you enjoy, all that you gain, and all the kingly power you share with Me is part of the feast. My love comes to all those who love Me. Those I love will remain forever, will never be removed, and will eternally be within My love. It is forever!

When everything is revealed, that will be the time when I will rest and, furthermore, when everything will be in order. I personally do My own work; I orchestrate and arrange everything Myself. When I come out from Zion and when I return, and when My firstborn sons have been made complete by Me, I will have finished My great work. In people’s notions, something that is done must be visible and palpable, but the way I see it, everything is complete at the moment when I plan it. Zion is My abode, and it is also My destination; it is there that I reveal My almightiness, and it is there that My firstborn sons and I will share our happiness as a family. It is there that I will live with them for all of eternity. Zion, that beautiful place, for which people long. Countless people have aspired to Zion over the ages, but from the beginning, not a single one has entered it. (Not even any of the saints and prophets from ages past have entered Zion; this is because I am selecting My firstborn sons in the last days, and they are all being born during this time; through this, My mercy and My grace, of which I have spoken, become more apparent.) Every single person who is now a firstborn son will enter Zion with Me and enjoy that blessing. I am elevating My firstborn sons to a certain extent because they possess My caliber and My glorious image, and because they are able to bear witness for Me, glorify Me, and live Me out. Moreover, they are capable of defeating Satan and humiliating the great red dragon. This is because My firstborn sons are pure virgins; they are the ones I love, and they are the ones I have selected and favored. The reason I elevate them is that they can stand in their own positions and are able to serve Me humbly and in obscurity, and bear powerful witness for Me. I have expended all of My energy on My firstborn sons, and I have carefully arranged all kinds of people, events, and things for their service. In the end, I will make everyone see My full glory through My firstborn sons, and I will have everyone fully convinced of Me because of them. I will not force any demon, and I am not afraid of their running rampant or of their recklessness, for I have witnesses and I have authority in My hands. Listen to Me now, people of Satan’s ilk! The purpose behind every word that I utter and everything that I do is to perfect My firstborn sons. You must therefore heed My commands and obey My firstborn sons; otherwise I will deal with you by making you suffer immediate perdition! My firstborn sons have already begun to carry out My administrative decrees, because they are the only ones worthy of upholding My throne; I have already anointed them. Those who do not submit to My firstborn sons are certainly no good, and have, without a doubt, been dispatched by the great red dragon to upset My management plan. Such scoundrels shall be pushed out of My house immediately. I do not want that kind of thing to do service for Me; they will face eternal destruction—and they will face it very soon, without delay! Those who are in My service must already have received My approval; they must be obedient without worrying about the price they might have to pay. If they are rebellious, then they are not worthy of rendering service to Me; I do not need such creatures. They should hurry up and be gone from here; I absolutely do not want them! You must be clear on this now! Those who do service for Me must do it well and not cause any problems. If you feel you have no hope, and start causing problems, then I will finish you without hesitation! Are those of you who are in My service clear about that? This is My administrative decree.

Bearing witness for Me is the duty of My firstborn sons, so I do not require that you do anything for Me; I will be satisfied as long as you perform your duties properly and enjoy the blessings that I bestow upon you. When I traveled through the entire universe and to the ends of the earth, I selected My firstborn sons and made them complete. This is something that I finished before I created the world; no one among mankind knows this, but My work was achieved in silence. This fact is not in line with human notions! However, facts are facts, and no one can change them. Demons both great and small have, through their pretenses, revealed their true forms, and have been subject to My chastisement to varying degrees. There are steps to My work, and there is wisdom in My words. From My actions and words, have you seen anything? Am I simply doing and saying things? Are My words merely harsh, judgmental, or comforting? That is far too simplistic, but for mankind, seeing this is anything but simple. There is not only wisdom, judgment, righteousness, majesty, and comfort in My words, but more than that, they contain what I have and am. Every single one of My words is a mystery that cannot be revealed by mankind; My words are utterly inscrutable, and although the mysteries have been revealed, they are still outside the scope of mankind's imagination and understanding, based on mankind's abilities. The simplest word for Me to understand is the most difficult thing for people to understand, so the difference between Me and them is like the difference between heaven and earth. This is why I want to completely change the forms of My firstborn sons and have them enter the body entirely. In the future, not only will they enter the body from the flesh, but they will change their forms to varying degrees while within it. This is My plan. It is something that humans cannot do; they absolutely have no way of doing it. Thus, even if I explained this to you in detail, you still would not understand; you could only enter into a sense of the supernatural. This is because I am the wise God Himself.

When you see mysteries, you all react in some way. Even though, deep down, you do not accept or acknowledge these mysteries, you do acknowledge them vocally. People like this are most deceitful, and when I reveal mysteries, I will cast out and forsake them one by one. However, everything I do is done in steps. I do not do things hastily, nor do I come to conclusions blindly; this is because I possess a divine disposition. People are absolutely unable to gain a clear view of what I am currently doing, or of what I will do in My next step. Only when I speak of the words of one step, the way I work moves a step forward with Me. Everything happens within My words, and everything is revealed within My words, so no one should be impatient; rendering service to Me properly is sufficient. Prior to the ages, I made a prophecy about a fig tree, but down through the ages, no one saw a fig tree and no one could explain it, and even though these words had been mentioned in earlier praises, no one knew their true meaning. These words confused people, as did the phrase, “the great catastrophe,” and this posed a mystery that I never unveiled to mankind. People thought that a fig tree was probably a good type of fruit tree, or that perhaps, taking it one step further, it referred to the saints—however, they were still very far off from the true meaning of these words. I will tell it to you when I open My scroll in the last days. (“The scroll” refers to all of the words that I have spoken—My words in the last days; it contains all of them.) “The fig tree” refers to My administrative decrees—every single one of them. But this is just one part of what it means. The sprouting of the fig tree refers to My beginning to work and speak in the flesh, but My administrative decrees had still not been made known (and this is because, at that time, no witness to My name had yet been borne and no one knew of My administrative decrees). When My name is witnessed and spread, when it is praised by all people, and when My administrative decrees achieve results, that will be when the fig tree bears fruit. This is the full explanation, with nothing omitted; all is revealed herein. (I say this because in My previous words, there was a portion that I had not yet fully revealed; you therefore needed to wait and seek patiently.)

When I make the firstborn sons complete, I will reveal My full glory and My entire appearance to the universe world. This will be done in body, and it will be above all people, in My own person; it will be on My Mount Zion and in My glory, and in particular, it will be done amidst the clamor of praises. Moreover, My enemies will retreat around Me, descending into the bottomless pit and the lake of fire and brimstone. What people today are able to imagine is limited, and is not in line with My original intention; this is the reason that I target people’s notions and thoughts every day when I speak. There will come a day (the day of entering the body) when what I tell will be entirely fitting to you, and you will offer no resistance whatsoever. At that time, you will no longer have your thoughts, and then I will stop making utterances. As you will no longer have your own thinking, I will just enlighten you directly—this is the blessing that will be enjoyed by the firstborn sons, and it will happen when they reign alongside Me as kings. Human beings do not believe in things that they cannot imagine, and even if there are some who do, they only do so due to having been specially enlightened by Me. Otherwise, no one would believe, and this is something that must be experienced. (Without going through this step, My great power could not be revealed, and this means that through the mere utterance of My words, I rid people of their notions. No one else can do this work, and no one can replace Me. I am the only One who can complete it; however, that is not absolute. I must do this work through mankind.) People feel energized after hearing My words, but in the end, they all retreat. They cannot help but do so. Meanwhile, there are mysteries that humans cannot grasp. No one can imagine what will happen, and I will allow you to see this in what I reveal. Through that, the true meaning of these words of Mine will be evident: "I will uproot all those who are not fit for My use." My firstborn sons have a variety of manifestations, as do My enemies. They will all be revealed to you, one by one. Remember! Anyone aside from the firstborn sons has the work of evil spirits; they are all lackeys of Satan. (They will soon be revealed, one at a time, but there are some who need to do service until the very end, and others who only need to do service for a period of time.) Under the work of My words, all will show their true forms.

Every nation, every place, and every denomination enjoys the riches of My name. Because the catastrophe is currently brewing, and is within My grasp, and I am preparing to gradually cause it to rain down, everyone is urgently seeking the true way, which must be sought even if the price of doing so is to give up everything. In all things, I have My own timing. Whenever I say it will be completed, it will be completed right then, to the minute, and even right down to the very second. No one can hinder it or stop it. After all, the great red dragon is My vanquished foe; it is a service-doer for Me, and it does whatever I tell it to without the slightest resistance. It truly is My beast of burden. When My work has been completed, I will cast it into the bottomless pit and into the lake of fire and brimstone (I am referring to those who are destroyed). The destroyed will not merely taste death, but they will also be severely punished for their persecution of Me. This is work that I will continue to do through service-doers. I will have Satan slaughter and destroy itself, completely obliterating the descendants of the great red dragon. This is one part of My work; after that, I will turn toward the Gentile nations. These are the steps of My work.

Chapter 111

All nations shall surely be blessed because of You; all peoples shall acclaim and praise Me because of You. My kingdom shall flourish and develop, and shall persist forever. No one shall be allowed to trample it and nothing shall be allowed to exist that does not conform to Me, because I am the majestic God Himself, who brooks no offense. I do not allow anyone to judge Me, and I do not allow anyone to be incompatible with

Me. This is sufficient to show My disposition and My majesty. When anyone resists Me, I shall punish him in My own time. Why has nobody seen Me punish anyone? It is only because My time has not yet come and My hand has not yet truly acted. Although great disasters have rained down, this has consisted only of speaking about what great disasters entail, while the reality of great disasters has not befallen any human. Have you grasped anything at all from My words? Today, I shall begin to release the reality of great disasters. After this, whosoever resists Me shall be struck down by My hand. In the past, all I have done is to expose a few people; no great disaster has yet arrived. Today is different from the past. Since I have told you all about what great disasters entail, I shall announce to the public, at a designated time, the reality of great disasters. Before this, no one has been touched by a great disaster, so most people (that is, the sons of the great red dragon) have continued to act recklessly and arbitrarily. When the reality arrives, these wretched creatures will be completely convinced. Otherwise, everyone would be uncertain of Me, and no one would be clear about Me. This is My administrative decree. From this, it can be seen that My way of working (referring to My way of working in all the people) has begun to change: I am showing My wrath, My judgment, and My curse through the descendants of the great red dragon, and My hand has begun to chastise all who resist Me. I am showing My mercy and My lovingkindness through the firstborn sons. Even more so, through the firstborn sons, I am showing My holy disposition, which brooks no offense; I am showing My authority, and I am showing My person. Service-doers have settled down to render service to Me, and, more and more, My firstborn sons are being made known. By striking down those who resist Me, I let the service-doers see My pitiless hand, so that they render service to Me with fear and trembling. Also, I let My firstborn sons see My authority and understand Me better so that they grow in life. The words I spoke in the last period (including administrative decrees, prophecy, and judgment of all kinds of people) are beginning to be fulfilled in order; that is, people will see My words realized before their eyes, see that none of My words are fruitless, but that every one of them is practical. Before My words are fulfilled, many people will leave because they have not been fulfilled. This is the way I work—it is not only the function of My iron rod, but even more so, it is the wisdom of My words. From these, one can see My omnipotence and My hatred for the great red dragon. (This can only be seen after I begin My work. Now some people are revealed—it is only a small portion of My chastisement, but it cannot be included in the great disasters. This is not hard to understand. Thus it can be seen that from now on My way of working will be even harder for people to understand. Today I am telling you so that you will not be weak because of this when the time comes. This is what I am entrusting to you, because things will take place that people have not seen since ancient times, and things which will make it difficult for people to put aside their emotions and their self-righteousness.) The reason why I use different means to punish the great red dragon is because it is My enemy and My adversary. I must destroy all of its descendants—only then can I remove the hate from My heart, and only then can I properly humiliate the great red dragon. Only this is completely destroying the great red dragon and casting it into the lake of fire and brimstone, into the bottomless pit.

It was not only yesterday that I let My firstborn sons reign with Me and join Me in governing all the nations and in enjoying blessings; I also do so today, and more importantly, I will also do so tomorrow. I have successfully accomplished My work—I have been saying so all along, and it can also be said that I began to say so from the time of the beginning of creation, but humans do not understand what I am saying. From the time of creation until now, I have not personally done work; in other words, My Spirit has never completely descended upon man to speak and work. But today is different from the past: My Spirit is working personally everywhere in the universe world. Because in the last days I want to gain a group of people who will reign in power with Me, I first obtain a person who is of one mind with Me, one who may be considerate of My burden. Afterward, My Spirit will descend completely upon Him to express My voice and to release My administrative decrees and reveal My mysteries to the universe world. My Spirit shall personally perfect Him; My Spirit shall personally discipline Him. Because He lives in normal humanity, no one can see clearly. When My firstborn sons enter into the body, it will be entirely clear whether what I do now is reality. Of course, in human eyes, in human notions, no one believes and no one can be obedient. But such is My tolerance of people. Because reality has not yet come, therefore people cannot believe or understand. There has never been anyone who, amidst their human notions, would believe My words. People are all like this: Either they only believe what My fleshly self says, or they only believe the voice of My Spirit. This is the most difficult thing to deal with in people. If they have not seen something happen with their own eyes, nobody can let go of their own notions, and nobody can believe what I say. That is why I use My administrative decrees to punish those sons of disobedience.

I have said such things before: I am the First and the Last, and I am He who is in charge of everything, from the beginning until the end. In the last days, I shall obtain 144,000 victorious male children. You have some, literal understanding of these words—“victorious male children”—but you are not clear about the number—144,000. In human notions, a number must refer to a number of people or to a number of things. Regarding the “144,000” modifying “victorious male children”—“144,000 victorious male children”—people think that there are 144,000 of the victorious male children. Furthermore, some people think that there is some symbolic meaning within the fact of this number, and they take the 140,000 and the 4,000 as separate parts. But these two interpretations are wrong. This does not refer to an actual number, and even less to some symbolic meaning. Among humanity, there is no one who can penetrate this—people of past generations all thought it might refer to a symbolic meaning. The number “144,000” is associated with the victorious male children. As such, the 144,000 refers to the group of people in the last days who will reign, and whom I love. That is, the 144,000 should be interpreted to be the group of people who came from Zion and who will return to Zion. The complete explanation of the 144,000 victorious male children is as follows: They are the people who came from Zion to the world and were corrupted by Satan, and it is they who will be finally regained by Me and will return to Zion with Me. From My words, one can see the steps of My work, meaning that the time when you shall enter the body is not so far away. That is why I have repeatedly explained this aspect to you, and given you reminders about it. You shall see clearly, and from My words you shall find out the way to practice; from My words you shall find out the pace of My work. To find out the pace of the work of the Holy Spirit, you must discern it from the mysteries I reveal (because no one can see and no one can penetrate the work of the Holy Spirit). That is why I reveal the mysteries in the last days.

In My home, there shall be nothing that does not conform to Me, and from now on I will begin to purge and to cleanse, little by little. Among people, no one can intervene, and no one can do this work. This reveals why I am working in person in the last days. And this is why I have told you many times that you just need to enjoy yourselves and do not need to move a finger. It is through this that My power is revealed, My righteousness and majesty are revealed, and all My mysteries that people cannot unlock are revealed. (Because people have never had any knowledge of My management plan or any understanding of the steps of My work, they are called “mysteries.”) What I will gain and what I will do in the last days are mysteries. Before the time when I created the world, I never did what I do today and I never showed people My glorious face or any part of My person; only My Spirit worked on some people. (Because, since the time of creation, no one has been able to manifest Me and no one has been able to express Me, I have never allowed people to see My person, and My Spirit has worked on some people.) Only today have I revealed My glorious image and My person to human beings, and only now have they seen these things. But what you see today is still incomplete, and it is still not what I want you to see. What I want you to see is only in the body, and right now no one yet meets this condition. In other words, no one can see My person before they enter into the body. Therefore, I say that I will reveal My person to the universe world on Mount Zion. From this it can be seen that entering into Mount Zion is the final part of My project. At the time of entrance into Mount Zion, My kingdom will be successfully built. In other words, My person is the kingdom. The time when the firstborn sons enter into the body is precisely the time when the kingdom will be realized, which is why I have repeatedly spoken of the matter of the firstborn sons entering into Mount Zion. This is the central point of My entire management plan, which no one has ever before grasped.

Once I change My way of working, there will be even more things that are beyond the reach of human thought, so be careful in this regard. There are things that are beyond the reach of human thought, but this does not mean that what I say is wrong. It is just that it is even more necessary for people to suffer, and it is even more necessary for people to cooperate with Me. Do not be wantonly dissolute, and do not just follow your own notions. For most of those who render service to Me fall down in this respect. I am using My words to expose human nature and to reveal human notions. (But those who render service to Me, because I do not change their notions, just fall down, whereas I change the notions of those who are My firstborn sons and remove their thinking through this.) So in the end, My firstborn sons will all be perfected because of the mysteries I have revealed.

Chapter 112

That “words and reality proceed side by side” is part of My righteous disposition. From these words, I shall certainly let everyone see My disposition in its entirety. People think this cannot be achieved, but to Me it is easy and pleasant, and takes no effort. As soon as My words come out from My mouth, there is immediately a fact that everyone can see. This is My disposition. Since I have spoken of certain things, those things will surely be accomplished. Otherwise, I would not speak. In human notions, the word “salvation” is spoken for all people, but this does not match My intention. In the past I said, “I always save those who are ignorant and who are zealous seekers.” Here, the word “save” was spoken about those who render service to Me, and it meant that I would give special treatment to such service-doers. In other words, I would reduce the penalty for those people. However, those service-doers who are crooked and deceitful would be among the objects of destruction, which is to say, I would subject them to severe punishment. (Although they are among the objects of destruction, they are much different than those who are to be destroyed: They shall receive eternal severe punishment, and the punishment those people shall receive is the punishment of the devil, Satan. This is also the true meaning of what I meant when I said that those people are the descendants of the great red dragon.) But I do not use these kinds of words about My firstborn sons; about them, I say that I will recover My firstborn sons and that they will return once more to Zion. Therefore, I have always said that My firstborn sons are My predestined and chosen ones. My firstborn sons originally belonged to Me and they came from Me, so they must come back here to Me. Comparing the sons and the people to the firstborn sons—this is truly the difference between heaven and earth: Although the sons and the people are much better than the service-doers, they in no way are the ones who belong to Me. It can also be said that the sons and the people are additionally chosen from among humankind. Therefore, I have always focused My energy on the firstborn sons, and then I shall let the firstborn sons make these sons and people complete. These are My future work steps. Now it is no use telling you, so I have rarely mentioned it to the sons and the people, but only to the firstborn sons have I repeatedly spoken and repeatedly mentioned these matters. This is the way I speak and work. No one can change this—I alone have the final say about everything.

Every day, I am fighting back against your notions, and day after day, I am dissecting each one of you. When I have spoken to a certain point, you relapse and you again separate My humanity from My divinity. At this point, the time has come for people to be revealed: People think that I still live in the flesh and am not God Himself at all, that I am still human and God is still God, and that God has nothing to do with the person that I am. How corrupt this humankind is! I have previously spoken so many words, but you have long since treated them as if they did not exist, and this fills Me with hatred for you that is etched into My bones! Truly, this makes Me loathe you! Who dares to offend Me casually, I who am the complete God Himself, I who possess both humanity and complete divinity? Who dares to resist Me in their thoughts? After My catastrophic disaster begins to descend, I shall punish them one by one, not letting anyone off, but rather punishing them all severely. My Spirit works in person. This does not mean that I am not God Himself; on the contrary, it means all the more that I am the almighty God Himself. People do not know Me—they all resist Me and do not behold My omnipotence from My words, but instead they try to find something in My words they can use against Me and to find fault with Me. When one day I appear with My firstborn sons in Zion, I will begin to deal with these wretched beings. In this period, I primarily am doing this work. When I have spoken to a certain point, a large number of service-doers will have retreated, and the firstborn sons will have also suffered all manner of hardships. With the progress of these two steps of the work, a phase of My work will come to an end. At the same time, I will take My firstborn sons back to Zion. These are the steps of My work.

My firstborn sons are an indispensable part of My kingdom, from which it can be seen that My person is in fact the kingdom—the birth of My kingdom follows on from the birth of My firstborn sons. In other words, My kingdom has been in existence since the time of the creation of the world, and to gain My firstborn sons (meaning to recover My firstborn sons) is to restore My kingdom. From this, you can see that the firstborn sons are of particular importance. It is only once My firstborn sons exist that the kingdom will come into being, the reality of reigning in power will come to be, new life will come forth, and the old era can be ended in its entirety. This is the inevitable trend. Because the firstborn sons are in this position, they symbolize the destruction of the world, the ruination of Satan, the revealing of the true colors of the service-doers, and the fact that the great red dragon will have no descendants and will descend into the lake of fire and brimstone—therefore, those who wield power and all those who are descendants of the great red dragon engage time and time again in obstruction, resistance, and destruction. Meanwhile, I elevate, bear witness for, and reveal My firstborn sons, time and time again. For only those who are from Me are eligible to bear witness for Me; they alone are qualified to live out Me, and they alone have the foundation to fight in battle and win the beautiful victory for Me. Those who are apart from Me are nothing more than a bit of clay in My hand—created things, every one of them. Those who are the sons and the people are nothing more than the better ones chosen from among the creatures of creation, but they do not belong to Me. So, there is a vast difference between the firstborn sons and the sons. The sons are unqualified to compare with the firstborn sons at all—they are governed and dominated by the firstborn sons. Now you should be crystal clear about this! Every word I have spoken is true, and in no way false. All of this is part of the expression of My person, and it is My utterance.

I have said I do not speak empty words, and I do not make mistakes; this is sufficient to show My majesty. But people are unable to tell the good from the bad, and it is only when My chastisement befalls them that they become thoroughly convinced; otherwise, they remain rebellious and headstrong. This is why I use chastisement to strike back against all humankind. In human notions, since there is only God Himself, why are there so many firstborn sons that come from Me? I could put it like this: Of My own affairs, I speak of them in whatever way I wish. What is man capable of doing to Me? I could also put it like this: Although the firstborn sons and I are not of one image, we are of the same Spirit, so they can all be of one mind with Me as they cooperate with Me. The reason why we are not of one image is so that all people may be able to see every part of My person with extraordinary clarity. This is why I let My firstborn sons hold authority together with Me over all nations and all peoples. This is the final note of My administrative decrees (this “final note” of which I speak means that My tone is mild and I have begun to speak to the sons and the people). Most people have doubts concerning this aspect, but there is no need for them to fill themselves with so much doubt. I will expose all people’s notions one by one, in order to make people feel ashamed with nowhere to hide. I travel across the universe and to the ends of the earth, and observe the whole countenance of the universe. I examine every kind of person—there is no one who can escape from My hand. I participate in every kind of thing, and there is nothing that I do not handle personally. Who dares to deny My omnipotence? Who dares not to be thoroughly convinced about Me? Who dares not to prostrate themselves completely in front of Me? All the heavens shall change because of My firstborn sons, and even more than that, all the earth shall violently quake because of Me and My firstborn sons. All people shall kneel before My person, and all things shall surely come within the control of My hands—with not the slightest error. Everyone must be thoroughly convinced and every single object shall come to My home and render service to Me. This is the last part of My administrative decrees. From now on, all of the various articles of My administrative decrees, which target different people, shall begin to produce results (because My administrative decrees are made fully public, and for every kind of person and every single thing the appropriate arrangements have been made. All people shall be in their proper place, and the true colors of every kind of person shall be exposed because of My administrative decrees). Thus shall be the arrival of the true, actual administrative decrees.

Now, in accordance with the steps of My work, I say what I want to say, and everyone must take My words seriously. Throughout the ages, every saint has spoken of the “New Jerusalem,” and everyone knows it, but no one understands the true meaning of this term. As today’s work has proceeded to this stage, I will reveal the true meaning of this term to you, so that you may understand it. But there is a limitation to My revealing—no matter how I explain it, and no matter how clearly I say it, you can never completely understand, because no human can touch upon the reality of this term. In the past, Jerusalem referred to My place of residence on earth, that is, the place where I walk and move. But the word “new” changes this term, and it is now nothing like it used to be. People cannot grasp it in the slightest. Some people think it refers to My kingdom; some people think it is the person I am; some people think it is a new heaven and earth; and some people think it is the new world that will come after I destroy this world. Even if a person’s mind is exceedingly complex and capable of rich imagination, they still cannot comprehend anything about it. Throughout the ages, people have been hoping to know or to see the true meaning of this term, but they have not been able to have their wishes fulfilled—they have all been disappointed and have died, leaving their aspirations behind; because My time had not yet come, I could not easily tell anybody. Since My work has been done up to this stage, I will tell you everything. The New Jerusalem encompasses these four things: My wrath, My administrative decrees, My kingdom, and the endless blessings I bestow upon My firstborn sons. The reason why I use the term “new” is because these four parts are hidden. Because no one knows My wrath, no one knows My administrative decrees, no one has seen My kingdom, and no one has enjoyed My blessings, “new” refers to what is hidden. No one can fully understand what I have said, because the New Jerusalem has descended to earth but no one has personally experienced the reality of the New Jerusalem. No matter how fully I speak of it, people will not fully understand. Even if someone understands, this understanding is only their words, their mind, and their notions. This is the inevitable trend; it is the only way forward, and no one can extricate themselves from it.

Chapter 113

My wisdom is within every action I take, but man is fundamentally incapable of fathoming this wisdom; man can only see My actions and My words, not My glory or the appearance of My person, as man fundamentally lacks this ability. So, without My making changes to man, My firstborn sons and I will return to Zion and change form, that man may see My wisdom and My omnipotence. The wisdom and omnipotence of Mine, which man now sees, are merely one small part of My glory—not even worth mentioning. From this, it can be seen that My wisdom and My glory are infinite—immeasurably deep—and man’s mind is fundamentally unable to consider or comprehend it. Constructing the kingdom is the duty of the firstborn sons, and this is My job as well.

That is to say, it is an item of My management plan. Construction of the kingdom is not the same as construction of the church; since My firstborn sons and I are My person and the kingdom, then when My firstborn sons and I enter Mount Zion, the construction of the kingdom will have been achieved. Put another way, construction of the kingdom is a step in the work—the step of entering the spiritual world. (However, all that I have done since creating the world has been for the sake of this step. Although I say it is a step, in reality, it is not a step at all.) Thus, I use all service-doers in service of this step, and consequently, during the last days, large numbers of people will retreat; they all render service to the firstborn sons. Whoever extends kindness to these service-doers will die by My curses. (The service-doers all represent the plots of the great red dragon and are all lackeys of Satan, so those who extend them kindness are accomplices of the great red dragon and belong to Satan.) I love all that I love, and despise all the targets of My curses and burning. Are you also able to do this? I will certainly not forgive whoever stands against Me, nor will I spare them! In doing each deed, I arrange for large numbers of service-doers to serve Me. Thus, it can be seen that throughout history, it has been for the sake of today's step that all prophets and apostles have rendered service, and that they are not after My heart, not from Me. (Although most of them are loyal to Me, none belongs to Me. Thus, their running about is meant to make the foundation of this final step for Me, but all their efforts are futile as far as they themselves are concerned.) Therefore, during the last days even more so there will be large numbers of people who retreat. (The reason I say "large numbers" is that My management plan has reached its end, the construction of My kingdom has succeeded, and the firstborn sons have sat upon the throne.) That is all due to the appearance of the firstborn sons. Because the firstborn sons have appeared, the great red dragon tries every means possible to do damage and exhausts all avenues. It sends all kinds of evil spirits who come to do service for Me, who have shown their true colors in the current period, and who have tried to interrupt My management. These cannot be seen with the naked eye; they are all things of the spiritual world. Thus, people do not believe that there will be large numbers of people who retreat, yet I know what I do, I understand My management; this is the reason not to let man interfere. (There will come a day when every kind of vile evil spirit will reveal their true selves, and all men will be sincerely convinced.)

I love My firstborn sons, but those who are descendants of the great red dragon and love Me with great sincerity, I do not love at all; in fact, I despise them all the more. (These people are not of Me, and though they demonstrate good intentions and speak pleasant words, this is all a scheme of the great red dragon, and so I hate them to the marrow of My bones.) This is My disposition, and this is My righteousness in its entirety. Man cannot fathom it at all. Why is the entirety of My righteousness revealed here? From this, one can perceive My holy disposition, which brooks no offense. I can love My firstborn sons and despise all those who are not My firstborn sons (even if they are loyal people). This is My disposition. Can you not see? In people's notions, I am always a merciful God, and I love all that love Me; is this interpretation not blasphemy against Me? Can I love animals and beasts? Can I take Satan as My firstborn son and enjoy it? Nonsense! My work is carried out upon My firstborn sons, and apart from My firstborn sons, I have nothing else to love. (The sons and the people are an addition, but not important.) People say that I used to do so much useless work, but in My view, that work was, in fact, the most valuable, and the most meaningful. (This refers entirely to the work that was done during the two incarnations; because I want to reveal My might, I must become flesh to complete My work.) The reason I say My Spirit comes to work in person is that My work is completed in the flesh. That is to say, My firstborn sons and I begin to enter into rest. War with Satan in the flesh is fiercer than war with Satan in the spiritual world; it can be seen by all men, so even the descendants of Satan can bear beautiful witness for Me, and are unwilling to leave; this is the meaning in itself of My working in the flesh. It is mainly in order to make the descendants of the devil dishonor the devil itself; this is the most powerful shame to visit on the devil Satan, so powerful that it has nowhere to hide its shame, and begs before Me repeatedly for mercy. I have won, I have prevailed over everything, I have broken through the third heaven and reached Mount Zion to enjoy familial bliss together with My firstborn sons, to be forever immersed in the great banquet of the kingdom of heaven!

For the firstborn sons, I have paid every price and taken all pains in My effort. (Man simply does not know that all I have done, all I have said, the fact that I see through every kind of evil spirit, and the fact that I have banished every kind of service-doer—it has all been for the sake of the firstborn sons.) But within much of My work, My arrangement is orderly; the work is certainly not done blindly. In My words each day, you should be able to see the method of My work and its steps; in My actions each day, you should see My wisdom and My principles in dealing with matters. As I have said, Satan has sent those who do service for Me for the purpose of interrupting My management. These service-doers are tares, yet the word “wheat” does not refer to the firstborn sons, but to all the sons and people who are not the firstborn sons. “Wheat will always be wheat, tares will always be tares”; this means the nature of those who are of Satan can never change. So, in short, they remain Satan. “Wheat” refers to the sons and the people, because I instilled My quality into these people before the creation of the world. I have already said that man’s nature does not change, and that is why wheat will always be wheat. So, what, then, are the firstborn sons? The firstborn sons come from Me; they are not created by Me, so they cannot be called wheat (because any mention of wheat is always connected to the words “to sow,” and “to sow” means “to create”; all tares are sown secretly by Satan, to act as service-doers). One can only say that the firstborn sons are the complete and bountiful manifestation of My person; they should be represented by gold and silver and precious stones. This touches on the fact that My coming is like that of a thief, and I have come to steal gold and silver and precious stones (because this gold and silver and these precious stones belonged originally to Me, and

I want to take them back to My house). When the firstborn sons and I together return to Zion, this gold, this silver, and these precious stones will have been stolen by Me. During this time, there will be Satan's obstructions and disturbances, and so I will take the gold, silver, and precious stones and launch a decisive battle with Satan. (Here, I am certainly not telling a story; this is an event in the spiritual world, so people are quite unclear about it, and can only hear it as a story. But it is yours to see from My words what My six-thousand-year management plan is, and you absolutely must not take it as a joke. Otherwise, My Spirit will depart from all of man.) Today, this battle is completely over, and I will bring My firstborn sons (bringing the gold, silver, and precious stones that belong to Me) together with Me back to My Mount Zion. Because of the scarcity of gold, silver, and precious stones, and because of their preciousness, Satan tries every means possible to wrest them away, but I say time and again that what is from Me must return to Me, the meaning of which is mentioned above. My saying that the firstborn sons are from Me and belong to Me is a proclamation to Satan. No one understands this, and it is entirely an event of the spiritual world. Thus, man does not understand why I emphasize repeatedly that the firstborn sons belong to Me; today, you should understand! I have said that My words have purpose and wisdom, but you only understand this externally—not one person can clearly see this in the spirit.

I speak more and more, and the more I speak, the sterner My words become. When it reaches a certain degree, I will use My words to work people to a degree, to make people not only convinced in heart and by word, but more than that, to make them hover between life and death; this is the method of My work and how My work proceeds in its steps. It must be so; only so can it shame Satan and make complete the firstborn sons (making use of My words to finally make perfect the firstborn sons, to allow them to break free of the flesh and enter the spiritual world). Man does not understand the method and tone of My words. Some insight should come to all of you from My explanation, and you should all follow My words to complete the work you must do. This is what I have entrusted to you. You must be aware of this, and not only from the outside world, but more importantly, from the spiritual world.

Chapter 114

I created the universe world; I made mountains, rivers, and all things; I shaped the universe and the ends of the earth; I led My sons and My people; I commanded all things and matters. Now, I will lead My firstborn sons back to My Mount Zion, to return to where I reside, and this shall be the final step in My work. All that I have done (everything done from the time of creation until now) was for today's stage of My work, and even more so, it is for tomorrow's rule, tomorrow's kingdom, and for Me and My firstborn sons to have eternal enjoyment. This is My goal in creating all things, and it is what I will ultimately achieve through My creation. There is a purpose and a plan to what I say and do; nothing is done haphazardly. Although I say that with Me all is freedom and liberty, nonetheless everything I do is principled, all I do is based on My wisdom and disposition. Have you any insight on this? From the time of creation up to today, besides My firstborn sons, none have come to know Me, and none have seen My true face. The exception I made for My firstborn sons is because they are essentially a part of My person.

When I created the world, I divided man into four ranked categories according to My requirements, which are: My sons, My people, those who render service, and those who shall be destroyed. Why are My firstborn sons not included in this list? It is because My firstborn sons are not beings of creation; they are from Me, and not of humankind. I made arrangements for My firstborn sons before I became flesh; which household they would be born into and who would be there to do service for them—all these things were planned out by Me. I also planned which of them would be regained by Me at which time. In the end, we will return to Zion together. This was all planned out before creation, so no man knows of it and it is not recorded in any book, because these are the affairs of Zion. Furthermore, when I became flesh, I did not give man this faculty, and therefore no one knew those things. When you return to Zion, you will know what you were like in the past, what you are like now, and what you have done in this life. Right now I am simply telling you these things plainly and bit by bit, otherwise you would not understand, no matter how much effort you put forth, and you would interrupt My management. Today, even though I am separated from most of My firstborn sons in terms of flesh, we are of one Spirit, and while our physical appearance may be different, we are, from beginning to end, one Spirit. However, the descendants of Satan must not use this as an opportunity to exploit. No matter how you disguise yourself, it remains superficial, and I shall not approve. Therefore, one can see from this that those who focus on the superficial and seek to imitate Me outwardly are one hundred percent certain to be Satan. Because their spirit is different and they are not of My beloved, no matter how they imitate Me, they are nothing like Me. Furthermore, because My firstborn sons are essentially of one Spirit with Me, even if they do not imitate Me, they speak and act in the same way as Me, and they are all honest, pure, and open (those people are lacking in wisdom because of their limited experience in the world, and therefore lacking wisdom is not a flaw in My firstborn sons; when they return to the body, all will be right). So it is for the reason described above that most people still do not change their old nature no matter how I deal with them. Yet My firstborn sons conform to My will without My having to deal with them. This is because we are of one Spirit. They feel in their spirit a willingness to expend wholly for Me. So apart from My firstborn sons, there is no one who is genuinely and sincerely considerate of My will; it is only after I conquer Satan that they are willing to do service for Me.

My wisdom and My firstborn sons stand above all and prevail over all, and no thing or person or matter dares to stand in the way. Furthermore, there is no person, matter, or thing that can prevail over them, and instead all submit obediently before My person. This is a fact that occurs before one's very eyes, and a fact that I have already achieved. Any who persists in disobedience (those who are disobedient still refer to Satan, and those occupied by Satan are undoubtedly none other than Satan), I shall surely destroy them root and branch, so that there will be no future trouble; they shall die immediately from My chastisement. This type of Satan are those that are not willing to render service to Me. These things have always stood in stubborn opposition to Me since creation, and today they persist in disobeying Me. (People are unable to see this because it is simply a matter regarding the spirit. This type of person represents this type of Satan.) I will destroy them first before everything else is ready, letting them forever receive the discipline of severe punishment. ("Destroy" here does not mean "to cause them to no longer exist," but instead refers to the extent of the ruthlessness they shall be subject to. The word "destroy" here is distinct from the term "destroy" used for those who will be destroyed.) They shall weep and gnash their teeth forever and ever, without any end. Man's imagination is utterly incapable of envisaging that scene. With mankind's mortal thinking, they are unable to conceive of spiritual things, and therefore there are more things that you will only understand after returning to Zion.

In My future home, there will be none except My firstborn sons and Me, and only at that time will My goal be reached and My plan come to full fruition, for all will be returned to its original state and all will be sorted in accordance with its kind. My firstborn sons shall belong to Me, My sons and people shall belong among the created beings, and the service-doers and the destroyed ones shall belong to Satan. After judging the world, I and My firstborn sons shall begin once again the divine life, and they shall never leave Me and will always be together with Me. All of the mysteries that can be understood by human minds shall, bit by bit, be revealed to you. Throughout history, there have been countless people who have been martyred because of Me, offering up themselves fully to Me, but people are created beings after all and no matter how good they are, they cannot be classified as God; this is an inevitable course of events, and it cannot be changed by anyone. After all, it is God who creates all things, while people are created beings, and Satan is, after all, the target of My destruction and My hated foe—this is the truest meaning of the words "though mountains and rivers may shift and transform, one's nature shall not change." To be in this condition and this stage now is an omen that I and My firstborn sons will enter into rest. This is because My work in the world is thoroughly complete, and the next step of My work will require Me to return to the body in order to complete it. These are the steps of My work, which I planned long ago. This point must be seen clearly, otherwise most people will violate My administrative decrees.

Because of you, My heart will rejoice greatly; because of you, My hand will dance with joy, and I will give you endless blessings, because you came from Me before the time of creation. Today you must return to My side, for you are not of the world or of the earth, but of Me. I will love you forever, I will bless you forever, and I will protect you forever. Only those who have come from Me know My will; only they will show consideration to My burden, and only they will do the things I want to do. Today, everything has been accomplished. My heart is like a ball of fire, yearning for My beloved sons to be reunited with Me soon, and for My person to return completely to Zion soon. You have some knowledge of this. Although we cannot often follow each other in spirit, we can often accompany one another in spirit and meet in the flesh. The Father and the sons are forever inseparable; they are intimately connected. No one can take you away from My side until the day of the return to Mount Zion. I love all the firstborn sons who come from Me, and I hate all the enemies who oppose Me. I will bring those I love back to Zion and cast those I hate into Hades, into hell. This is the main principle of all of My administrative decrees. Everything My firstborn sons say or do is an expression of My Spirit. It is with a clear understanding of this that everyone must bear testimony to My firstborn sons. This is the next step of My work, and if anyone resists, I will have My beloved sons deal with them. Now is different from before. If those I love speak a word of judgment, Satan dies in Hades at once, because I have already granted authority to My firstborn sons. This is to say that from now on, it is time for My firstborn sons and Me to rule together. (This is in the phase of the flesh, which is slightly different from ruling together in the body.) Anyone who disobeys in thought will suffer the same fate as those who resist the person that I am. My firstborn sons should be treated as I am treated, for we are of one body and can never be separated. As witness was borne for Me in the past, today it should likewise be borne for My firstborn sons. This is one of My administrative decrees; everyone must stand up and bear testimony.

My kingdom extends to the ends of the earth, and My firstborn sons travel to the ends of the earth with Me. Because of the hindrances of your flesh, there are many words you do not understand, though I have spoken them, so the majority of the work must be completed after returning to Zion. It can be seen from My words that this return is not far off—in fact, the moment has nearly come. That is why I am constantly speaking of Zion and matters in Zion. Do you know what the purpose of My words is? Do you know what is in My heart? My heart yearns to return to Zion soon, to end the old era in its entirety, to end our life on earth (because I abhor earthly people, matters, and things, and hate the life in the flesh even more, and the hindrances of the flesh are great; it is only upon returning to Zion that everything will prosper), and to recover our life in the kingdom. The purpose of My first incarnation was to lay the foundation for My second. This was the path that had to be traveled. Only by giving Myself completely over to Satan could I redeem you, so that you may return into My body during the final stage. (If not for My first incarnation, I would not have been able to gain glory, and I would not have been able to take back the sin offering, so you would have come into the world as sinners.) Because I have infinite wisdom, the fact that I led you out of Zion means that I will be sure to bring you back to Zion. Satan's attempts to block the way will not be successful, because My great work was accomplished long ago. My firstborn sons are the same as I—they are holy and immaculate, so I will still return to Zion with My firstborn sons, and we shall never be apart.

My entire management plan is being gradually revealed to you. I have started to carry out My work in all nations and among all peoples. This suffices to prove that My return to Zion is not too far away, because carrying out My work in all nations and among all peoples is something to be done after the return to Zion. My pace is growing faster. (Because the day of My return to Zion is approaching, I want to finish My work on earth before I return.) I am becoming ever busier with My work, and yet there is less and less work on earth for Me to do—almost none at all. (My busyness is aimed at the work in the Spirit, which cannot be seen by man with the naked eye but can only be gleaned from My words; My busyness is not as it is to be busy in the flesh, but refers to My planning of many tasks.) This is because, as I have said, My work on earth has already been thoroughly completed, and the rest of My work must wait until I return to Zion. (The reason I must return to Zion to work is that the future work cannot be accomplished in the flesh, and if this work were done in the flesh, it would dishonor My name.) When I defeat My enemies and return to Zion, life will be more beautiful and peaceful than life before the ages. (This is because I have completely overcome the world, and thanks to My first incarnation and My second incarnation, I have obtained complete glory. In My first incarnation, I have only gained one part of My glory, but in My second incarnation, My person has obtained complete glory, so there are no longer opportunities for Satan to exploit. Therefore, the future life in Zion will be even more beautiful and peaceful.) My person will appear even more gloriously before the world and Satan in order to humiliate the great red dragon; this is the center point of all My wisdom. The more I speak of external things, the more you are able to understand; the more I speak of things of Zion that humans cannot see, the more empty you will think these things are, and the more difficult it will be for you to imagine them; you will think that I am telling fairy tales. However, you must be watchful. There are no hollow words in My mouth; the words that come from My mouth are trustworthy. This is absolutely true, though it is hard to understand with your way of thinking. (Because of the limitations of the flesh, humans are unable to understand what I say completely and thoroughly, and many of the things I have said, I have not completely revealed. Yet, when we return to Zion, I will not need to explain; you will understand naturally.) This must not be treated lightly.

Although human flesh and notions have limitations, I still want to improve your fleshly thinking and fight against your notions through the revealed mysteries, because, as I have said many times, this is a step of My work (and this work will not stop until the entry into Zion). There is a “Mount Zion” in the mind of every person, and it is different for everyone. Since I keep mentioning Mount Zion, I will give you some general information about it, so that you may know a little of it. To be on Mount Zion is to return to the spiritual world. Although it refers to the spiritual world, it is not a place that humans cannot see or touch; this applies to the body. It is not absolutely invisible or intangible, because when the body appears, it has form and shape, but when the body does not appear, it has no form or shape. On Mount Zion, there will be no concerns about food, clothes, everyday needs, or shelter, nor will there be marriage or family, and there will be no division of gender (all those who are on Mount Zion are My person, in one body, so there is no marriage, family or division of gender), and everything of which My person speaks will be achieved. When people are off their guard, My person will appear among them, and when people are not paying attention, My person will disappear. (This is something people of flesh and blood cannot accomplish, so it is difficult for you to imagine now.) In the future, there will still be a sun, a moon, and a physical heaven and earth, but because My person will be in Zion, there will be no scorching of the sun, no daytime, and no suffering from natural disasters. When I said we will not need lamplight or sunlight because God will give us light, I was talking about being in Zion. According to human notions, everything in the universe must be eliminated, and all people must live in My light. They think this is the real meaning of “we will not need lamplight or sunlight because God will give us light,” but in fact, this is a misinterpretation. When I said “every month, the tree will bear twelve manner of fruits,” I was referring to matters in Zion. This sentence represents the conditions of life in Zion in their entirety. In Zion, time will not be limited, nor will there be limitations of geography and space. That is why I said “every month.” “Twelve manner of fruits” does not represent the behavior you are living out today; rather, it refers to the life of freedom in Zion. These words are a generalization of life in Zion. From this, one can see that life in Zion will be rich and varied (because here, “twelve” refers to fullness). It will be a life without grief and tears, and there will be no exploitation or oppression, so all will be emancipated and free. This is because everything exists within My person, inseparable by any person, and everything will be a scene of beauty and eternal newness. It will be a time when everything is ready, and the beginning of our life after our return to Zion.

Although My work on earth has been completed thoroughly, I still need My firstborn sons to work on earth, so I cannot return to Zion yet. I cannot return to Zion alone. I will return to Zion together with My firstborn sons after they have finished their work on earth. Thus, it may rightly be said that we are gaining glory together; this is the complete manifestation of My person. (I say that the work of My firstborn sons on earth is not yet complete because My firstborn sons have not yet been made manifest. This work must still be done by the loyal and honest service-doers.)

Among My words, there are many that make people afraid. Many of My words make people tremble with dread, and many of My words make people suffer and lose hope, and even more cause people's destruction. No one can fathom the abundance of My words or grasp it clearly. It is only when, sentence by sentence, I tell you My words and reveal them to you that you learn the general state of affairs, while remaining unclear about the true countenance of specific facts. Thus, I will use facts to reveal all My words, thereby allowing you greater understanding. Considering the style of My speech, I am not only speaking with My words, but even more so, I am acting with My words; this is the true meaning of "words and accomplishments occurring simultaneously." For with Me everything is free, and everything is released, and on this foundation, all that I do is filled with wisdom. I do not speak carelessly, nor do I act carelessly. (Whether in humanity or divinity, I speak and act with wisdom, because My humanity is an inseparable part of Myself.) Yet when I speak, no one pays attention to the tone of My speech; when I act, no one pays attention to the method of My work. This is man's shortcoming. I will reveal My might upon all men, not only upon My firstborn sons, but even more will I reveal My might within all nations and among all peoples; only doing so is powerful testimony that shames Satan. I do not act foolishly. Most people think that My witness for the firstborn sons is a mistake; they say that there are other Gods outside of Me, that I act senselessly, that I degrade Myself; and in this, man's corruption is even more exposed. Could I be mistaken in bearing witness for the firstborn sons? You say I am wrong, so can you testify? If it were not for My elevation, My testimony, you would still push My Son beneath you, still treat Him with cold indifference, and still treat Him as your servant. You herd of swine! I will dispose of each of you in turn! No one will be let off! Tell Me, what kind of things are they that are incompatible with a person possessed of normal humanity? Without a doubt, they are swine! I simply cannot stand the sight of them. Had I waited for your testimony, My work would have already been delayed! You herd of swine! You have simply no humanity at all! I do not need you to do service for Me! Get out of here, this instant! You have bullied and oppressed My Son for so long; I will trample you into pulp! See what happens if you dare to be wild again; see what happens if you dare to shame Me again! I have already accomplished My great work; I ought to turn back and dispose of this herd of beasts!

All is accomplished in My hands (as far as those whom I love are concerned), and all is also destroyed in My hands (as far as those beasts I hate are concerned, and those people, matters, and things that I despise). I let My firstborn sons see all that I will do, let them understand thoroughly and therein see all I have done since coming out from Zion. Afterward, we will enter together into Mount Zion, enter the place where we were before the eras, and live our lives anew. From then on, there will be no more contact with the world and this herd of swine, but complete freedom; all will be unimpeded and without hindrance. Who dares to resist any of My firstborn sons? Who dares to continue opposing My firstborn sons? I will not let them off easily! However you revered Me in the past, that is how you must revere My firstborn sons today. Do not be one way in front of Me and another behind Me; I see how each person is with crystal clarity. Not to be loyal to My Son is not to be filial to Me, which is an obvious fact, for We are of one body. If someone is good to Me but holds a different attitude toward My firstborn sons, then they are, without doubt, a typical descendant of the great red dragon, because they break up the body of Christ; this sin can never be pardoned! Each of you must see this. It is your duty to witness Me, and more than that, it is your obligation to witness the firstborn sons. None of you shall shirk your responsibility; I will dispose of whoever interrupts at once! Do not think yourself anything special. I tell you now: Whoever is most so, they shall be the target of My strictest punishment! Whoever is most so has the least hope, and is most a son of perdition. I will forever chastise you!

All My work is done personally by My Spirit, and I do not allow any of the ilk of Satan to interfere. This is to avoid disturbing My plans. At the end, I will let both adults and children rise and praise Me and My firstborn sons, praise My wonderful deeds, and praise the manifestation of My person. I will let the sound of praise reverberate in the whole universe and unto the ends of the earth, shaking mountains, rivers, and all things, and I will humiliate Satan thoroughly. I will use My testimony to destroy the entire filthy and vile old world, and build a holy and undefiled new world. (In saying the sun, the moon, the stars, and the celestial bodies will not change in the future, I do not mean that the old world still exists, but that the entire world will be destroyed and the old world will be replaced. I do not mean to replace the universe.) Only then will it be a world aligned with My will; within it, there will not be the kind of repression there is today, nor will there be the current phenomenon of people exploiting one another. Rather, there will be complete fairness and reasonableness within the flesh. (Although I say there will be fairness and reasonableness, it will be within the flesh; it will be very different from My kingdom—as different as heaven and earth; there is simply no way to compare the two—after all, the human world is the human world, and the spiritual world is the spiritual world.) At that time, My firstborn sons and I will exercise jurisdiction over such a world (in this world, there will be no disturbance from Satan, because Satan will have been entirely disposed of by Me), but our lives will still be lives of the kingdom, which no one can deny. Throughout the ages, there has never been any human being (no matter how loyal) who has experienced this kind of life, because throughout the ages, there has been no one to act as My firstborn son, and they will still render service for Me later. Although these service-doers are loyal, they are ultimately descendants of Satan that have been conquered by Me, so after the death of the flesh, they are still born into the human world to do service for Me; this is the true meaning of “the sons are after all the sons, and the service-doers are after all the descendants of Satan.” Throughout the ages, it is unknown how many people are there to do service for the firstborn sons of today; of all the service-doers, none can run away, and I will make them do service for Me forever. Considering their natures, they are all children of Satan, and they all resist Me, and although they do service for Me, they are forced to, and none of them has any alternative. This is because everything is controlled by My hand, and the service-doers I use must render service for Me until the end. Thus, there are still many people today who have the same nature as the prophets and apostles of the ages, because they are of one spirit. Thus, there are still many loyal service-doers who run about for Me, but in the end (for six thousand years, they have been doing service for Me constantly, so these people belong among the service-doers), no one can attain that which all throughout the ages have hoped for, because what I have prepared is not for them.

Everything of Mine has already been accomplished before the eyes; I will have My firstborn sons return to My home and return to My side, to be reunited. Because I have returned triumphant and victorious and I have fully obtained glory, I come to bring you back. In the past, some people predicted “five wise virgins and five foolish virgins.” Although this prediction is not accurate, neither is it entirely wrong—thus, I may offer you some explanation. “Five wise virgins and five foolish virgins” together represent neither a number of people nor a type of person. “Five wise virgins” refers to a number of people, and “five foolish virgins” represents one type of person, but neither refers to the firstborn sons. Rather, they represent creation. This is why they have been asked to prepare oil in the last days. (Creation does not possess My quality; if they want to be wise ones, they need to prepare oil, and thus they need to be equipped with My words.) “Five wise virgins” represent My sons and My people among the humans I created. They are called “virgins” because they are gained by Me, despite being born on earth; one might call them holy, so they are called “virgins.” The aforementioned “five” represents the number of My sons and My people that I have predestined. “Five foolish virgins” refers to the service-doers, for they do service for Me without attaching the slightest importance to life, pursuing only external things (because they do not have My quality, no matter what they do, it is an external thing), and they are unable to be My capable helpers, so they are called “foolish virgins.” The aforementioned “five” represents Satan, and the fact they are called “virgins” means they have been conquered by Me and are able to do service for Me—but such people are not holy, so they are called service-doers.

You are the One who opens the scroll, and You are the One who breaks the seven seals, because all mysteries come from You and all blessings are revealed by You. I am bound to love You for eternity, and I am bound to make all peoples worship You, because You are My person; You are a part of My bountiful and complete manifestation, an indispensable part of My body. Therefore, I must give special testimony. Who else

besides the One within My person is after My heart? It is not You Yourself who bears witness for You, but My Spirit that bears witness for You, and I will certainly not forgive whoever dares to defy You, for this concerns My administrative decrees. All that You say, I will certainly accomplish, and all that You think, I will surely accept. If someone is not loyal to You, then they are openly resisting Me, and I will certainly not forgive them. I will severely chastise all who resist My Son, and I will bless those who are compatible with You. This is the authority that I confer on You. In that which was spoken of in the past—the demands and standards placed on the firstborn sons—You are the exemplar. That is to say, as You are, so shall I demand the firstborn sons be. This is not something that humans can do, but rather it is what My Spirit Himself does. If anyone believes that it is humans who are bearing witness for You, then that creature is without doubt the ilk of Satan and My enemy! Therefore, the testimony is conclusive, eternally immutable, and it is that which the Holy Spirit confirms! No one may lightly alter it, and whosoever does, I shall not forgive! Since humans cannot bear witness for Me, I Myself bear witness for My person, and people must not interfere with My work! These are words of severe judgment, and every single person must be mindful of them!

You should consider and take note of every detail in what I say. Do not treat My words casually, but listen carefully. Why do I say that the firstborn sons are My person and an indispensable part of My kingdom? Before all ages, we lived together and were never separated. Because of Satan's disruptions, after I was incarnated the first time I returned to Zion. Proceeding from this, we all came into the world, and after I win victory in the last days—that is, after I regain you from the flesh that Satan has corrupted—I will bring you back to Zion so that My person may reunite, never to be separated. After that I will not be incarnated again, and you will surely not come out of My body. That is to say, thereafter I will not create the world again, but will remain forever inseparable from My firstborn sons in Zion, for everything has now been thoroughly completed, and I am about to conclude the entire old age. It is only in Zion that there is the life of the new heaven and earth, for My person exists in Zion. There will be no more new heavens or new earths that exist apart from this. I am the new heaven, and I am also the new earth, because My person fills all Zion. It may also be said that My firstborn sons are the new heaven, My firstborn sons are the new earth. My firstborn sons and I are of one body, inseparable. To speak of Me necessarily includes the firstborn sons, and I will surely not forgive anyone who tries to separate us. When I make all nations and peoples return before My throne, all Satans will be thoroughly disgraced and all foul demons will back away from Me. Then it is certain that righteousness will exist among all peoples (meaning among My sons and people), and it is certain that there will be none of Satan's disruptions among all nations, for I will be governing all nations and peoples, I will be wielding power over the entire universe world, and all Satans will be thoroughly devastated, entirely defeated, and receiving the punishment of My administrative decrees.

I am proceeding with My work among all peoples, but they have only the enlightenment of My Spirit, and there is no one among them qualified to unveil My mysteries, no one qualified to express Me. Only the One who comes from Me is qualified to do My work—as for the rest, I only use them temporarily. My Spirit will not descend upon a person arbitrarily, for everything in Me is precious. For My Spirit to descend upon someone and for My Spirit to work on someone are completely different things. My Spirit works on people who are outside of Me, but My Spirit descends upon the One who comes from Me. These are two completely unconnected matters. For the One who comes from Me is holy, but those who are outside of Me are not holy, no matter how good they may be. My Spirit will not descend upon someone for any small reason. People should not be worried. I make no mistakes, and I am one hundred percent certain about what I do! As I have testified for Him, I will surely also protect Him; that One definitely comes from Me and is indispensable to My person. Therefore, I hope people set aside their own notions, relinquish any ideas given by Satan, believe My every utterance to be true, and do not give way to doubts in their minds. This is My commission to humanity, My exhortation to humanity. Everyone must adhere to these things, everyone must sincerely obey them, and everyone must take what I say to be the standard.

I am not only to start My work among all nations and peoples, but also to start My work everywhere in the universe world, and this shows even more that the day for My return to Zion is not far off (because it is necessary for Me to return to Zion before I can start the work among all peoples and throughout the universe world). Is there anyone who can fathom the steps of My work and the way that I work? The reasons I say I will meet with foreigners in the spirit are because this fundamentally cannot be done in the flesh, and because I am unwilling to risk dangers for the second time. These are the reasons for communing with foreigners in the spirit. This is to be in the true spiritual world, not some vague spiritual world as imagined by those<sup>a</sup> living in the flesh. What I say at that time will be different merely in the way I speak, as I will be speaking within a different age. Therefore, I am reminding humanity again and again to take notice of the way that I speak, and I remind humanity also that there are mysteries in what I say that people cannot unveil. But no one understands why I say these things, and it is only because I tell you this today that you are able to understand a little, but still not completely. After this stage in My work, I will inform you step by step. (I still want to cast out some people through this, so I will not say anything for now.) This is the method of the next step in My work. Everyone should take notice and see clearly that I am God Himself who is wise.

Whosoever rises up to bear witness for My Son, I shall bestow grace upon them; whosoever does not rise up to bear witness for My Son, but instead resists and uses the human notions to make their own assessments, I shall destroy them. All must see clearly! Bearing witness for My Son is an act of reverence for Me, and it satisfies My will. Do not only respect the Father, while bullying and oppressing the Son. Those who do so are the descendants of the great red dragon. I do not need wretches like this to bear witness for My Son; I shall destroy them in the bottomless pit. I want the loyal and honest service-doers to render service to My Son; as for the rest, I do not need them. This is My righteous disposition, and it serves to show that I am the holy and unblemished God Himself. I will not forgive anyone who offends My administrative decrees. Whoever defied You or persecuted You in the past, whether in the family or in the world, I shall chastise them one by one, and no one shall be let off, for there is no part of Me that is of flesh and blood. Bearing witness for You today shows that those service-doers have finished rendering service for Me, so do not have any scruples or concerns whatsoever. They are Your service-doers, after all, and when all is said and done You are of heaven, and You will return to My body in the end, for My body cannot be without You. Those who defied You and who were not compatible with You in the past (this is something others cannot see; only You know it in Your heart) have now revealed their original forms and have fallen, for You are God Himself and You shall not tolerate anyone to defy You or offend You. Though it cannot be seen at all from the outside, My Spirit is within You; this is beyond question. All people must believe it, lest My iron rod strike down all who defy Me! Since I bear witness for You, You surely carry authority, and everything You say is My expression, and everything You do is My manifestation, for You are My beloved and You are a part that My person cannot be without. So, Your every action, what You wear, what You use, and where You live—they are surely also My deeds. No one must try to find something against You, and no one must pick faults with You. If anyone does this, I shall not forgive them!

I shall cast all evil servants out from My house, and within My house I shall make all loyal servants bear witness for My firstborn sons; this is My plan, and this is the way in which I work. When evil servants bear witness for My Son, there is a smell of dead people, and this is loathsome to Me. When loyal servants bear witness for My Son, it is earnest and sincere, and it is acceptable to Me. So, whoever is unwilling to bear witness for My Son, get out of here right now! I shall not force you to do so—if I ask you to leave, then you must leave! Look at what the consequences for you are and what awaits you; the ones who render service understand this more than anyone else. My judgment, My wrath, My curses, My burning and My raging fury will at any time befall any who defy Me. My hand shows no mercy to anyone; no matter how loyal one who renders service was before, if they defy My Son today then I shall destroy them immediately, and I shall not allow them to stay before Me. From this, one can see My unmerciful hand. Because people do not know Me, and because their natures defy Me, even those who are loyal to Me are only loyal for the sake of their own pleasure. If something happens that affects them adversely, their hearts change at once and they want to retreat from My side. This is the nature of Satan. You must not be opinionated, believing yourselves to be loyal! If there is nothing in it for them, this herd of beasts is simply incapable of being loyal to Me. If I did not proclaim My administrative decrees, you would have retreated long ago. You are all now caught between the frying pan and the fire, unwilling to render service for Me but unwilling to be struck down by My hand. If I did not proclaim that great disasters will befall any who defy Me at any time, you would have retreated long ago. Do I not know of the ruses people can resort to? Most people now harbor a small hope, but when that hope turns to disappointment, they become unwilling to go any further, and they ask to turn back. I have said before that I do not keep anyone here against their will, but take care to think about what the consequences will be for you. This is not Me threatening you; this is about facts. No one can fathom the nature of man except Me; people all think that they are loyal to Me, not knowing that their loyalty is impure. These impurities will ruin people, for they are a scheme of the great red dragon. It was long ago laid bare by Me; I am the almighty God, so how could I not understand something so simple? I am able to penetrate your blood and your flesh to see your intentions. It is not hard for Me to fathom man's nature, but people think themselves clever, believing that no one but themselves knows their intentions. Do they not know that the almighty God exists within the heavens and earth and all things?

I will love My Son to the very end, and I will hate the great red dragon and Satan forever and ever. My chastisement will befall all those who defy Me and not one enemy will be let off. I have said before, "I lay in Zion a big stone. To believers, this stone is the foundation of their construction. To those that do not believe, this is a rock upon which they stumble. To the sons of the devil, this is the stone that crushes them to death." Not only have I spoken these words before, but they have been prophesied by many people, and many people have read this passage of words in this age. Furthermore, some people have tried to explain these words, but no one has ever unraveled this mystery before, because this work is only done during the current time of the last days. So, even though some people have tried to explain these words, their explanations are all fallacies. Today, I reveal the whole meaning to you so that you may know the seriousness of My bearing witness for My firstborn sons, and My purpose in doing so. I lay in Zion a big stone, and this stone refers to My firstborn sons being borne witness to. The word "big" does not mean that this witness is borne on some gigantic scale, but rather that in bearing witness for My firstborn sons, a great many service-doers will retreat. Here, "those that do not believe" refer to those who retreat because My Son is borne witness to. Therefore, the stone is a stumbling rock to this kind of person. I say it is a rock because this kind of person will be struck down by My hand, and therefore the "rock that causes people to stumble" is not said in relation to falling or becoming weak, but in relation to being struck down by My hand. The “believers” in “to believers, this stone is the foundation of their construction” refer to those service-doers who are loyal, and “foundation of their construction” refers to the grace and blessings that they will receive after they have rendered loyal service to Me. That the firstborn sons have been borne witness to indicates that this entire old era will soon pass away; that is, it symbolizes the destruction of the kingdom of Satan; therefore, for the Gentiles, it is the rock that crushes them to death. So, shattering all nations to pieces refers to the complete renewal of the entire world; the old will pass away and the new shall be established—this is the true meaning of “shattering.” Do you understand? The work I do in this last stage can be summarized just with these few words. This is My wondrous deed, and you should grasp My will within My words.

All of you should comprehend My intentions, and all of you ought to understand My mood. Now is the time to prepare to return to Zion. I have no mind to do anything but this. I only hope to reunite with you one day soon, and spend every minute and every second together with you in Zion. I loathe the world, I loathe the flesh, and even more do I loathe every human on earth. I am not willing to see them, because they are all as demons, without even the slightest trace of human nature. I am not willing to live on the earth; I loathe all creatures, I loathe all that are of flesh and blood. The whole earth reeks of corpses; I want to return to Zion at once, to remove all the corpse stench from the earth and fill all the earth with the sound of praise for Me. I shall return to Zion, I shall break away from the flesh and the world, and no one may stand in My way. My hand that slays man has no emotion! From now on, no one may speak of the construction of the church. If anyone does, I will not forgive them. (This is because now is the time to bear witness for My firstborn sons, and it is the time to build the kingdom; whoever speaks of the construction of the church is tearing down the construction of the kingdom and interrupting My management.) All is ready, all is prepared; the only thing that remains is for the firstborn sons to be exalted and witnessed. When that happens, I shall, without a moment’s delay and without considering form, return at once to Zion—the place you hold in your minds, night and day. Do not look only at how the current world continues on, smooth and steady. All of this work is the work of returning to Zion, so pay no heed to these things now; when the day of return to Zion comes, all will be complete. Who does not wish to return to Zion soon? Who does not wish for the Father and the sons to reunite soon? No matter how enjoyable the earthly pleasures, they cannot keep a hold on our flesh; we will transcend our flesh and together return to Zion. Who dares to hinder this? Who dares to put up obstacles? I will certainly not forgive them! I will sweep away all stumbling blocks. (This is the reason I say I cannot return straight away to Zion. I am carrying out this cleansing work, and I am simultaneously bearing witness for My firstborn sons; these two jobs are progressing at the same time. When the cleansing work is complete, it will be time for Me to reveal the firstborn sons. The “stumbling blocks” are the large number of service-doers, which is why I say that these two jobs are happening simultaneously.) I will have My firstborn sons tread with Me throughout the universe and to the ends of the earth, across mountains and rivers and all things; who dares to impede this? Who dares to hinder this? My hand does not easily let go of any man; with the exception of My firstborn sons, I rage against all and curse all. In all the land, there is not a single mortal who receives My blessings; all meet My curse. Since the world’s creation, I have blessed no one; even when I have given blessings, they have been mere words, never reality, for I hate Satan utterly; I will never bless it, only punish it. Only at the end, after I have thoroughly conquered Satan and complete victory is Mine, will I give to all loyal service-doers material blessings, and let them take joy in praising Me, for all My work will have been accomplished.

Indeed, My time is not far away. The six-thousand-year management plan is nearing completion before your eyes. (It is indeed before your eyes. It is not some prefiguration; you can see this from My mood.) I will take My firstborn sons home to Zion at once. Some people will say, “As it is only for the firstborn sons, why does it take six thousand years? And why were so many people created?” I have said before that everything of Mine is precious. How can My firstborn sons not be even more so? I will mobilize all to serve Me, and moreover, I will reveal My power, so that every man can see that in the whole universe world, not a single object is not in our hands, not a single person is not in our service, and not a single thing is not for our accomplishment. I shall achieve everything. For Me, there is no concept of time; although I mean to complete the plan and My work in six thousand years, to Me all is emancipated and free. Even if it is less than six thousand years, as long as, in My view, the time has come, who would dare to utter a word of opposition? Who would dare to stand and judge at will? My work, I do Myself; My time, I arrange Myself. No person, no matter, and no thing dares to act willfully; I will make all follow Me. For Me, there is no right or wrong; if I say something is right, it is surely right; if I say something is wrong, that is also so. You must not always measure Me with human notions! I say the firstborn sons and I together are blessed—who dares to refuse to submit? I will destroy you on the spot! You refuse to submit! You are rebellious! I am simply without mercy for any of mankind, and My hate has already reached its limit; I simply cannot be any more tolerant. As far as I am concerned, the whole universe world must be exterminated immediately—only then will My great work be fulfilled; only then will My management plan be completed; and only then will the hatred in My heart be dispelled. Now, I care only about witnessing My firstborn sons. I will put all other affairs to the side; I will do the important things first, and then I will do the secondary things. These are the steps of My work, which no one should violate; all must do as I say, lest they become targets of My curse.

Now that My work is accomplished, I can rest. From now on, I will work no more, but will bid My firstborn sons do all that I want done, because My firstborn sons are Me; My firstborn sons are My person. This is not wrong in the slightest; do not use notions to make judgments. To see the firstborn sons is to see Me, for we are one and the same. Anyone who separates us is thus resisting Me, and I will not forgive them. In My words, there are mysteries that are incomprehensible to man. Only those whom I love can express Me, and no others; this has been determined by Me, and no one can change it. My words are rich, comprehensive, and unfathomable. All should expend great effort on My words, try to ponder them often, and not omit a single word or sentence—otherwise, people will labor under error, and My words will be misunderstood. I have said that My disposition does not brook offense, meaning that My witnessed firstborn sons cannot be opposed. My firstborn sons represent every aspect of My disposition, so when the sacred trumpet is sounded, that is when I begin to witness the firstborn sons, and thus, the sacred trumpet will hereafter be the gradual announcement of My disposition to the masses. In other words, when the firstborn sons are revealed, that will be when My disposition is revealed. Who can fathom this? I say that even within the mysteries I have revealed, there remain mysteries that people cannot untangle. Who among you has really tried to figure out the true meaning of these words? Is My disposition the personality of a person, as you have imagined? To think so is a grave mistake! Today, whosoever sees My firstborn sons is an object of blessing, and they see My disposition—this is absolutely true. My firstborn sons represent all of Me; they are My person, without any doubt. No one may have any doubt about this! The obedient are blessed with grace, and the rebellious are cursed. This is what I command, and no person can change it!

Chapter 120

Zion! Rejoice! Zion! Sing out! I have returned in triumph, I have returned victorious! All peoples! Hurry to line up in order! All things of creation! Come now to a halt, for My person faces the whole universe and appears in the East of the world! Who dares not to kneel down in worship? Who dares not to call Me the true God? Who dares not to look up in reverence? Who dares not to give praise? Who dares not to rejoice? My people will hear My voice, and My sons will survive in My kingdom! Mountains, rivers, and all things will cheer unendingly, and leap about without cease. At this time, none will dare to fall back, and none will dare to rise up in resistance. This is My wonderful deed, and even more than that, it is My great power! I will make everything revere Me in its heart and, beyond even this, I will have everything praise Me! This is the ultimate aim of My management plan of six thousand years, and it is what I have ordained. Not one person nor object nor event dares to rise up to resist Me or oppose Me. All My people will flow to My mountain (in other words, the world that I will later create) and they will submit before Me, because I have majesty and judgment, and I carry authority. (This refers to when I am in the body. I also have authority in the flesh, but because the limitations of time and space cannot be transcended in the flesh, it cannot be said that I have obtained complete glory. Although I obtain the firstborn sons in the flesh, it cannot be said that I have obtained glory. It is only when I return to Zion and change My appearance that I may be said to carry authority—that is, that I have obtained glory.) Nothing will be difficult for Me. By the words of My mouth, all shall be destroyed, and by the words of My mouth, all will come into being and be made complete. Such is My great power and such is My authority. Because I am full of power and replete with authority, no person could dare obstruct Me. I have already triumphed over everything, and I have already won victory over all of the sons of rebellion. I am bringing My firstborn sons together with Me to return to Zion. I am not returning to Zion alone. Therefore, all will see My firstborn sons and thus develop a heart of reverence for Me. This is My aim in obtaining the firstborn sons, and this has been My plan since the creation of the world.

When all is ready, that will be the day of My return to Zion, and this day will be commemorated by all peoples. When I return to Zion, all things on earth will be silent, and all upon the earth will be at peace. When I return to Zion, everything will resume its original appearance. Then, I will commence My work in Zion. I will punish the wicked and reward the good, and I will bring into force My righteousness, and I will carry out My judgment. I will use My words to accomplish everything, making all people and all things experience My chastising hand, and I will make all people see My full glory, My full wisdom, and My full bounty. No person will dare to rise up in judgment, for in Me, all things are accomplished; and here, let every man see My full dignity, and taste My full victory, for in Me all things are manifested. From this, it is possible to see My great power and My authority. No one will dare offend Me, and no one will dare obstruct Me. In Me, all is made open. Who would dare hide anything? I am certain to show that person no mercy! Such wretches must receive My severe punishment, and such scum must be purged from My sight. I will rule them with an iron rod and I will use My authority to judge them, without the slightest mercy and without sparing their feelings at all, for I am God Himself, who is without emotion and majestic and cannot be offended. All should understand and see this, lest they come to be struck down and annihilated by Me “without cause or reason,” for My rod will strike down all who offend Me. I do not care whether they know My administrative decrees; that will be of no consequence to Me, as My person does not tolerate being offended by anyone. This is the reason why it is said that I am a lion; whomever I touch, I strike down. That is why it is said that it is now blasphemy to say that I am the God of compassion and lovingkindness. In essence, I am not a lamb, but a lion. No one dares offend Me; whosoever offends Me, I will punish with death, immediately and without mercy. This suffices to show My disposition. Therefore, in the final age a large group of people shall withdraw, and this will be difficult for people to bear, but for My part, I am relaxed and happy, and I do not see this as a difficult task at all. Such is My disposition.

I hope that all people will have a submissive heart to obey all that is of Me; if they do, I will certainly bless mankind greatly, for, as I have said, those who are compatible with Me will be preserved, while those who are hostile to Me will be cursed. I have ordained this, and none can change it. The things I have determined are things I have accomplished, and whosoever goes against them will be chastised immediately. I have everything I need in Zion and everything I desire. There is no hint of the world in Zion, and compared to the world, it is a palace, rich and grand; but no one has ever entered it, and therefore, in man's imagination, it does not exist at all. Life in Zion is unlike life on earth; on earth, life is eating, wearing clothes, playing, and seeking pleasure, while in Zion it is greatly different. It is the life of the Father and sons immersed in joy, always filling the whole space of the universe, but always coming also together in unison. Now that it has come to this, I will tell you where Zion is situated. Zion is where I reside; it is the location of My person. Therefore, Zion must be a holy place, and it must be far away from earth. That is why I say that I despise the people, things, and matters of earth, and I detest the eating, drinking, playing and pleasure-seeking of the flesh, because no matter how enjoyable the earthly pleasures, they cannot compare with life in Zion; it is the difference between heaven and earth, and there is no way of comparing the two. The reason there are many puzzles on earth that man cannot solve is that people have heard nothing of Zion. Well, where is Zion, exactly? Is it on another planet, as people imagine it to be? No! That is merely a fantasy in the mind of man. The third heaven, which I have mentioned, is regarded by man as having prefigurative meaning, but what men understand in their notions is exactly opposed to My meaning. The third heaven here mentioned is not false in the slightest. That is why I say I will not destroy the sun, the moon, the stars, and the celestial bodies, and I will not eliminate heaven and earth. Could I destroy My dwelling place? Could I eliminate Mount Zion? Is this not laughable? The third heaven is My dwelling place; it is Mount Zion, and this is absolute. (Why do I say it is absolute? It is because what I say now cannot be understood by man at all; he can only hear it. The scope of man's thinking simply cannot encompass it, and therefore I will now say no more about Zion, lest people regard it as a fiction.)

After I return to Zion, those on earth will continue to praise Me as in the past. Those loyal service-doers will wait as ever to render service to Me, but their function will have come to an end. The best they can do is to contemplate the circumstances of My presence on earth. At that time, I will begin to bring disaster down onto those who will suffer calamity; yet everyone believes that I am a righteous God. I will certainly not punish those loyal service-doers, but only let them receive My grace. For I have said that I will punish all evil-doers, and that those who perform good deeds will receive the material enjoyment that I bestow, demonstrating that I am the God of righteousness and faithfulness Himself. Upon My return to Zion, I will begin to turn toward each nation in the world; I will bring to salvation the Israelites and chastise the Egyptians. This is the next step of My work. My work then will not be the same as it is in the present day: It will not be work in the flesh, but will transcend the flesh completely—and as I have spoken, so will it be done; and as I have commanded, so will it stand. Whatever is spoken, so long as it is spoken from My mouth, it will be fulfilled immediately in reality; this is the true meaning of My word being spoken and its fulfillment taking place at the same time, for My word itself is authority. I am now speaking of some general things, as a way to give people on earth a few clues, so that they may not grasp wildly about. When that time comes, everything will be arranged by Me, and none should act willfully, lest they be struck down by My hand. In the imaginations of men, all that I speak of is vague, because, after all, man's way of thinking is limited, and man's thought is as far from that of which I have spoken as earth is from heaven. Therefore, none can comprehend this. The only thing to do is to come into alignment with what I say; this is the inevitable course of things. I have said: "In the last days, the beast will emerge to persecute My people, and those who are fearful of death will be marked with a seal to be carried off by the beast. Those that have seen Me will be killed by the beast." The "beast" in these words undoubtedly refers to Satan, the deceiver of mankind. This is to say, when I return to Zion, a large group of service-doers will withdraw; that is, they will be carried off by the beast. These creatures will all go to the bottomless pit to receive My eternal chastisement. "Those that have seen Me" refers to those loyal service-doers who have been conquered by Me. "Having seen Me" refers to their having been conquered by Me. "Killed by the beast" refers to Satan, having been conquered by Me, not daring to rise up to resist Me. In other words, Satan will not dare to perform any work upon these service-doers, and therefore, the souls of these people will have been saved; this is said due to their ability to be loyal to Me, and it means that those loyal service-doers will be able to receive My grace and My blessing. Therefore, I say that their souls will have been saved. (This does not refer to ascension to the third heaven, which is only a notion of man.) But those evil servants will be bound up again by Satan and then thrown into the bottomless pit. This is My punishment of them; this is their retribution, and it is the reward for their sins.

As the pace of My work quickens, My time on the earth gradually diminishes. The date of My return to Zion draws near. When My work on earth has come to an end, it will be time for My return to Zion. I do not wish to live on earth at all, but for the sake of My management, for the sake of My plan, I have endured all suffering. Today, the time has already come. I will quicken My pace, and no one will be able to keep up with Me. Whether man can understand it or not, I will tell you in detail all that man is unable to comprehend, yet must be known by you on earth. Therefore, I say that I am God Himself, who transcends time and space. Were it not for My purpose of obtaining the firstborn sons and thus defeating Satan, I would already have returned to Zion; were it otherwise, I would simply never have created mankind. I despise the world of man, and I detest people who are apart from Me, to the extent of considering destroying the whole of mankind in one fell swoop. However, My work has order and structure, a sense of proportion and moderation, and it is not haphazard. All I do is meant to defeat Satan, and even more is it meant to enable Me to be together with My firstborn sons as soon as possible. This is My aim.

PART TWO
TO THE ENTIRE UNIVERSE

(FEBRUARY 20, 1992 TO JUNE 1, 1992)

Introduction

“God’s Words to the Entire Universe” is the second part of the utterances expressed by Christ in the identity of God Himself. They cover the period from February 20, 1992 to June 1, 1992, and are comprised of a total of forty-seven chapters. The manner, content, and perspective of God’s words in these utterances are completely unlike “Utterances of Christ in the Beginning.” “Utterances of Christ in the Beginning” exposes and guides people’s external behavior and their simple spiritual lives. Ultimately, it ends with “the trial of the service-doers.” “God’s Words to the Entire Universe,” however, opens with the conclusion of people’s identity as service-doers and the beginning of their lives as God’s people. It guides people into the second pinnacle of God’s work, during the course of which they undergo the trial of the lake of fire, the trial of death, and the time of loving God. These several steps fully expose man’s ugliness before God as well as man’s true face. Ultimately, God finishes with a chapter in which He parts with man, thus concluding all steps of this incarnation of God’s conquest of the first group of people.

In “God’s Words to the Entire Universe,” God expresses His words from the perspective of the Spirit. The manner in which He speaks is unattainable by created mankind. Moreover, the vocabulary and style of His words are beautiful and moving, and no form of human literature could take their place. The words with which He exposes man are accurate, they are irrefutable by any philosophy, and they bring all people into submission. Like a sharp sword, the words with which God judges man cut straight to the depths of people’s souls, cutting so deep as to leave them with no place to hide. The words with which He comforts people carry mercy and lovingkindness, they are warm as a loving mother’s embrace, and they make people feel secure as never before. The single greatest characteristic of these utterances is that, during this stage, God does not speak using the identity of Jehovah or Jesus Christ, nor of Christ of the last days. Instead, using His inherent identity—the Creator—He speaks to and teaches all those who follow Him and all those who are yet to follow Him. It is fair to say that this is the first time since the creation of the world that God has addressed all mankind. Never before has God spoken to created mankind in such detail and so systematically. Of course, this is also the first time He has spoken so much, and for so long, to all mankind. It is totally unprecedented. What’s more, these utterances form the first text expressed by God among mankind in which He exposes people, guides them, judges them, and speaks heart-to-heart to them and so, too, are they the first utterances in which God lets people know His footsteps, the place in which He lies, God’s disposition, what God has and is, God’s thoughts, and His concern for mankind. It can be said that these are the first utterances that God has spoken to mankind from the third heaven since the creation, and the first time that God has used His inherent identity to appear and express the voice of His heart to mankind amid words.

These utterances are profound and unfathomable; they are not easy to understand, nor is it possible to grasp the origins and purposes of God’s words. Thus, Christ has added an explanation after each chapter, using language that is easy for man to comprehend to bring clarity to the greater part of the utterances. This, combined with the utterances themselves, makes it easier for everyone to understand and know God's words. We have made these words an appendix to "God's Words to the Entire Universe." In them, Christ provides explanations using wording that is the simplest to understand. The combination of the two is the perfect marrying of divinity and God in humanity. Although God speaks in the perspective of the third person in the appendix, no one can deny that these words were personally uttered by God, for no human can explain God's words clearly; only God Himself can elucidate the origins and purposes of His utterances. Thus, although God speaks using many means, the aims of His work never change, nor does the objective of His plan ever alter.

Although "God's Words to the Entire Universe" ends with a chapter in which God parts with man, in fact, this is when God's work of conquest and salvation among man, and His work of making people perfect, is officially unveiled. Thus, it is more suitable for us to regard "God's Words to the Entire Universe" as the prophecy of God's work of the last days. For only after this point did the incarnate Son of man officially begin to work and speak using the identity of Christ, walking among the churches and providing life, and watering and shepherding all His people, which in turn gave rise to the many utterances in "The Words of Christ As He Walked in the Churches."

Chapter 1

Do those who have seen My words truly accept them? Do you truly know Me? Have you truly learned to obey? Do you sincerely expend yourselves for Me? Have you truly borne strong and unyielding witness to Me in the face of the great red dragon? Does your devotion truly shame the great red dragon? Only through the trial of My words can I achieve My goal of purifying the church and choosing those who sincerely love Me. If I did not work in this way, would anyone be able to know Me? Who could come to know My majesty, My wrath, and My wisdom through My words? Having started My work, I will surely finish it, but still it is I who plumb men's hearts to their depths. To tell the truth, there is no one among men who fully knows Me, so I use words to guide all men, to lead them all into a new era. In the end I will use words to accomplish all of My work, causing all those who sincerely love Me to return in submission to My kingdom, to live before My throne. The situation now is not what it once was, and My work has entered on a new starting point. That being so, there will be a new approach: All those who see My word and accept it as their very life are people in My kingdom, and being in My kingdom, they are people of My kingdom. Because they accept the guidance of My words, even though they are referred to as My people, this title is in no way secondary to being called My "sons." Having been made into God's people, then all must serve with the utmost devotion in My kingdom and fulfill their duties in My kingdom. Whosoever commits offense against My administrative decrees must receive My punishment. This is My advice to all.

A new approach has now been entered, and the past need not be mentioned again. However, as I have said before: I stand by what I say, and what I stand by I always bring to completion, and no one can change this—it is absolute. Whether they are words I have said in the past or words I will say in the future, I will make them all come true, one by one, and allow all of mankind to see them come true. This is the principle behind My words and work. Since the construction of the church has already been achieved, it is now no longer the era of church building, but rather the era in which the kingdom is successfully built. However, as you are still on earth, the assemblies of men on earth will remain known as “the church.” Nevertheless, the substance of the church is not the same as it once was—it is a church that has been successfully built. Therefore, I say My kingdom has already descended to earth. None can grasp the root of My words, nor do they know My purpose in speaking them. From the way I speak today, you will experience an epiphany. Some may burst out in loud and bitter weeping; some may feel afraid that this is the way I speak; some may cling to their conservative views as they watch My each and every move; some may regret having expressed their grievances or resisted Me at that time; some may secretly rejoice that, having never veered aside from My name, they are revived. There may be some who, “tormented” by My words long ago until they were half dead, dispirited and downcast, no longer have the heart to heed the words I speak, even though I have changed My manner of expression; or others who, having served Me with devotion up to a certain point, never complaining, never doubting, are today fortunate enough to gain release and feel a gratitude beyond words toward Me in their hearts. All of the above circumstances apply, to varying degrees, to every human being. But as the past is the past, and the present is already here, there is no need to long nostalgically for yesterday anymore, or to take thought for the future. Being human, whoever goes against reality and does not do things according to My guidance will not come to a good end, but will only bring trouble upon themselves. Of everything that occurs in the universe, there is nothing in which I do not have the final say. Is there anything that is not in My hands? Whatever I say is done, and who among human beings can change My mind? Could it be the covenant I made on the earth? Nothing can hinder My plan from going forward; I am ever present in My work as well as in the plan of My management. Who among human beings can put his hand in to meddle? Is it not I who have personally made these arrangements? Entering into this realm today does not stray outside My plan or what I have foreseen; it was all determined by Me long ago. Who among you can fathom this step of My plan? My people will assuredly listen to My voice, and each and every one of those who sincerely love Me shall assuredly return before My throne.

Chapter 2

Along with entering into the new approach, there will be new steps in My work. As it is in the kingdom, I will do things directly through divinity, leading every step of the way, precise to the finest detail, absolutely unadulterated by human intentions. What follows is an outline of the ways of actual practice: As it is through hardship and refinement that they have earned the title of the “people,” and as they are the people of My kingdom, I must hold them to stringent requirements whose standard is higher than that of the methods of My work of previous generations. It is not only the reality of words; more importantly, it is the reality of practice. These must be achieved first. In all words and deeds, they must meet the standards required of the people of the kingdom, and any offenders must immediately be removed, lest they bring shame onto My name. However, those ignorant ones who cannot see clearly or understand are an exception. In constructing My kingdom, focus on eating and drinking of My words, recognizing My wisdom, and finding confirmation through My work. If one pays attention to books other than those that contain My words, I assuredly do not want them; such people are harlots who defy Me. As an apostle, one must not dwell at home too long. If one does, I will not force them, but discard and no longer use that person. Since apostles are not home for long, they spend long periods of time in the church to be edified. Apostles must participate in at least one of every two assemblies of the churches. Thus, co-workers’ assemblies (including all apostle assemblies, all church leader assemblies, and all assemblies for saints with clear insight) must become frequent. At least some of you must attend each assembly, and apostles must focus only on watching over the churches. The requirements previously made of saints are now more profound. For those who had committed offenses before I bore witness to My name, due to their devotion to Me, I will still use them after I have tested them. However, for those who have committed further offenses after My testimony yet are determined to take pains to repent and begin afresh, such people are only to remain within the church. Still, they cannot be careless and wanton, but rather must be more constrained than others. As for those who do not mend their ways after I have spoken, My Spirit will leave them immediately, and the church will have the right to carry out My judgment and expel them. This is absolute, and there can be no room for deliberation. If one collapses during the trials—that is, if one leaves—then no one should pay any mind to that person, to avoid testing Me and allowing Satan to rush madly into the church. This is My judgment of such a person. If anyone acts without righteousness and out of emotion toward a person who leaves, then not only will the one who left lose their place, but the former, too, will be cast out from among My people. Another function of apostles is to focus on spreading the gospel. Of course, saints can do this work, too, but they must be wise in doing so, and must refrain from causing trouble. The aforementioned are the current ways of practice. Also, as a reminder, you must pay attention to making your sermons more profound, so that all may enter into the reality of My words. You must closely follow My words, making it so all people may understand them clearly and unambiguously. This is most crucial. Those among My people who harbor thoughts of betrayal must be expelled, and must not be allowed to stay long in My house, lest they bring shame onto My name.

Chapter 3

Since you are called My people, things are not as they used to be; you should heed and obey the utterances of My Spirit, and closely follow My work; you may not separate My Spirit and My flesh, for We are inherently one, and by nature undivided. Whosoever would divide the Spirit and the person and focus either on the person or the Spirit shall suffer loss, and shall only be able to drink from their own bitter cup, without any alternative. Only those who are able to look upon the Spirit and the person as an inseparable whole have a sufficient knowledge of Me; the life within them will undergo gradual change. In order that the next step of My work may proceed smoothly and without hindrance, I employ the refinement of words to test all those in My house, and use methods of work to test those who follow Me. Under these circumstances, it may be said they all lose hope; as people, there is not one among them whose conditions are not negative and passive, as if the entire space had changed. Some people rail against Heaven and earth; some, in their despair, steel themselves and accept the test of My words; some look to the skies and sigh deeply, eyes filled with tears, as if distraught by the untimely demise of a newborn infant; some even feel there is shame in living thus, and pray for God to take them away soon; some spend all day in a daze, as if they had just fallen gravely ill and had yet to come to their senses; some, after complaining, quietly leave; and some yet praise Me from their own place, though they remain somewhat negative. Today, when all is revealed, I need speak no more of the past; of greater importance is that you should still be capable of the utmost loyalty from the station I give you today, so that all you do meets My approval, and all you say is the product of My enlightenment and illumination, that what you live out may ultimately be My image, and entirely My manifestation.

My words are released and expressed at any time or place, and so, too, should you know yourselves before Me at all times. For today, after all, is unlike what came before, and you can no longer accomplish whatever you wish. Instead, under the guidance of My words, you must be capable of subduing your body; you must use My words as your mainstay, and you may not act recklessly. All the paths to real practice for the church can be found in My words. Those who do not act by My words give direct offense to My Spirit, and I shall destroy them. Since things have come to such a situation as today's, you need not feel too aggrieved and regretful about your deeds and actions of the past. My magnanimity is as boundless as the seas and the sky—how could man’s capabilities and knowledge of Me not be as familiar to Me as the back of My own hand? Who among man is not in My hands? Do you think I know nothing of how great your stature is, that I am entirely ignorant of this? That is impossible! Thus, when all people are at their most despairing, when they can wait no longer and wish to start anew, when they want to ask Me what is happening, when some indulge in dissipation and it occurs to some to revolt, when some are yet doing loyal service, I begin the second part of the era of judgment: purifying and judging My people. This is also to say that I begin officially to train My people, allowing you to not only bear beautiful testimony to Me, but, more than that, to achieve beautiful victory in battle for Me from the seat of My people.

At all times, My people should be on guard against the cunning schemes of Satan, guarding the gate of My house for Me; they should be able to support each other and provide for each other, so as to avoid falling into Satan’s trap, at which time it would be too late for regrets. Why am I training you with such urgency? Why do I tell you the facts of the spiritual world? Why do I remind and exhort you time and again? Have you ever given this any thought? Has your pondering ever yielded clarity? So, you must not only be able to season yourselves by building on the foundation of the past, but, more than that, to expel the impurities within you under the guidance of the words of today, allowing each of My words to take root and blossom within your spirits, and, more importantly, to bear more fruit. This is because what I ask for is not bright, lush flowers, but bounteous fruit, fruit that does not lose its ripeness. Do you understand the true meaning of My words? Although the flowers in a greenhouse are as innumerable as the stars, and draw all the admiring crowd, once they have wilted, they become as tattered as the deceitful schemes of Satan, and no one shows any interest in them. Yet all those buffeted by the winds and scorched by the sun who bear testimony to Me, though not beautiful of bloom, will bear fruit once the flowers have withered, for I require that they be so. When I speak these words, how much do you understand? Once the flowers have wilted and borne fruit, and once all of this fruit can be provided for My enjoyment, I shall conclude all of My work on earth, and shall begin enjoying the crystallization of My wisdom!

Chapter 4

All of My people who serve before Me should think back on the past: Was your love for Me tainted by impurity? Was your loyalty to Me pure and wholehearted? Was your knowledge of Me true? How much of a place did I hold within your hearts? Did I fill your hearts entirely? How much did My words accomplish within you? Do not take Me for a fool! These things are perfectly clear to Me! Today, as the voice of My salvation is uttered forth, has there been some increase in your love for Me? Has part of your loyalty to Me become pure? Has your knowledge of Me deepened? Did praise offered in the past lay a solid foundation for your knowledge today? How much of you is occupied by My Spirit? How much of a place does My image hold within you? Have My utterances hit home within you? Do you truly feel that you have nowhere to hide your shame? Do you truly believe that you are unqualified to be My people? If you are completely oblivious to the questions above, then this shows that you are fishing in murky waters, that you are only present to make up the numbers, and at the time preordained by Me, you will surely be cast out and knocked into the bottomless pit for a second time. These are My words of warning, and any who take them lightly will be struck by My judgment, and, at the appointed time, will meet with disaster. Is this not so? Do I still need to provide examples to illustrate this? Must I speak more plainly to provide an exemplar for you? From the time of creation until today, many people have disobeyed My words and thus have been skimmed off and cast out from My stream of recovery; ultimately, their bodies perish and their spirits are cast into Hades, and even today they are still subjected to grievous punishment. Many people have followed My words, but they have gone against My enlightenment and illumination, and have thus been kicked aside by Me, falling under the domain of Satan and becoming one of those who oppose Me. (Today all those who directly oppose Me obey only the superficialities of My words, and disobey the essence of My words.) There have been many, too, who have merely listened to the words I spoke yesterday, who have held on to the “junk” of the past and not treasured the “produce” of the present day. These people have not only been taken captive by Satan, but have become eternal sinners and become My enemies, and they directly oppose Me. Such people are the objects of My judgment at the height of My wrath, and today they are still blind, still within the dark dungeons (which is to say, such people are rotten, benumbed corpses that are controlled by Satan; because their eyes have been veiled by Me, I say that they are blind). It would be well to provide an example for your reference, so that you can learn from it:

At the mention of Paul, you will think of his history, and of some of the stories about him that are inaccurate and out of line with reality. He was taught by his parents from a young age, and received My life, and as a result of My predestination he was possessed of the caliber that I require. At the age of 19, he read various books about life; thus I do not need to go into detail about how, because of his caliber, and because of My enlightenment and illumination, he could not only speak with some insight about spiritual matters, but was also able to grasp My intentions. Of course, this does not exclude the combination of internal and external factors. Nevertheless, his one imperfection was that, because of his talents, he would often be glib and boastful. As a result, due to his disobedience, part of which directly represented the archangel, when I became flesh for the first time, he made every effort to defy Me. He was one of those who do not know

My words, and My place in his heart had already vanished. Such people directly oppose My divinity, and are struck down by Me, and only bow down and confess their sins at the very end. Hence, after I had utilized his strong points—which is to say, after he had worked for Me for a period of time—he once more fell into his old ways, and although he did not disobey My words directly, he disobeyed My inner guidance and enlightenment, and thus all that he had done in the past was futile; in other words, the crown of glory he spoke of had become empty words, a product of his own imagination, for even today he is still subjected to My judgment within the captivity of My bonds.

From the example above it can be seen that whoever opposes Me (by opposing not only My fleshly self but more importantly, My words and My Spirit—which is to say, My divinity), receives My judgment in their flesh. When My Spirit leaves you, you plummet downward, descending directly into Hades. And although your fleshly body is upon earth, you are like someone suffering from mental illness: You have lost your reason, and immediately feel as if you are a corpse, such that you beg Me to terminate your flesh without delay. Most of you who are possessed of the spirit have a deep appreciation of these circumstances, and I need not go into further detail. In the past, when I worked in normal humanity, most people had already measured themselves against My wrath and majesty, and already knew a little of My wisdom and disposition. Today, I speak and act directly in divinity, and there are still some people who will see My wrath and judgment with their own eyes; moreover, the main work of the second part of the era of judgment is to make all of My people know My deeds in the flesh directly, and to make all of you behold My disposition directly. Yet because I am in the flesh, I am considerate of your weaknesses. My hope is that you do not treat your spirit, soul and body as playthings, unthinkingly dedicating them to Satan. It is better to treasure all that you have, and to not treat it like a game, for such things relate to your fate. Are you really able to understand the true meaning of My words? Are you really capable of being considerate of My true feelings?

Are you willing to enjoy My blessings on earth, blessings that are akin to those in heaven? Are you willing to treasure understanding of Me, enjoyment of My words, and knowledge of Me as the most valuable and meaningful things in your life? Are you truly able to fully submit to Me, without thought to your own prospects? Are you truly able to allow yourselves to be put to death by Me, and led by Me, like a sheep? Are there any among you capable of achieving such things? Could it be that all who are accepted by Me and receive My promises are the ones who gain My blessings? Have you understood anything from these words? If I test you, can you truly put yourselves at My mercy, and, in the midst of these trials, search for My intentions and perceive My heart? I do not wish for you to be able to speak many touching words, or tell many exciting stories; rather, I ask that you are able to bear fine testimony to Me, and that you can fully and deeply enter into reality. If I did not speak directly, could you forsake everything around you and allow yourself to be used by Me? Is this not the reality that I require? Who is able to grasp the meaning in My words? Yet I ask that you no longer be weighed down by misgivings, that you be proactive in your entry and grasp the essence of My words. This will prevent you from misunderstanding My words, and from being unclear as to My meaning, and thus violating My administrative decrees. I hope that you grasp My intentions for you in My words. Think no more of your own prospects, and act as you have resolved before Me to submit to God's orchestrations in all things. All of those who stand within My household should do as much as they possibly can; you should offer the best of yourself to the last section of My work on earth. Are you truly willing to put such things into practice?

Chapter 5

The voice of My Spirit is an expression of the whole of My disposition. Do you understand? To be unclear on this point would be tantamount to resisting Me directly. Have you genuinely seen the importance that lies herein? Do you really know how much effort, how much energy, I expend on you? Do you really dare to lay bare what you have done and how you have behaved before Me? And you have the nerve to call yourselves My people to My face—you have no shame, much less any sense! Sooner or later, people like you will be cast out from My house! Do not come the old soldier with Me, assuming that you have stood testimony for Me! Is this something that humanity is capable of doing? If nothing remained of your intentions and your goals, you would long since have struck out on a different path. Do you think I do not know how much the human heart can hold? From this time forth, in all things, you must enter into the reality of practice; merely flapping your gums, as you have done in the past, will no longer get you by. In the past, most of you managed to freeload under My roof; the fact that you are able to stand firm today is entirely due to the severity of My words. Do you think I speak randomly and without purpose? Impossible! I look down upon all things from on high, and exercise dominion over all things from on high. In the same way, I have put in place My salvation upon the earth. There is never a moment when I am not watching, from My secret place, humans' every move and everything they say and do. Humans are to Me open books: I see and know them one and all. The secret place is My abode, and the entire vault of heaven is the bed on which I lie. Satan's forces cannot reach Me, for I am overflowing with majesty, righteousness, and judgment. An ineffable mystery resides in My words. When I am speaking, you become like fowls that have just been cast into water, overwhelmed with confusion, or babies who have just had a fright, seeming to know nothing, because your spirit has fallen into a state of stupefaction. Why do I say that the secret place is My abode? Do you know the deeper meaning of My words? Who among humans are capable of knowing Me? Who are capable of knowing

Me as they know their own father and mother? Resting in My abode, I observe closely: All the people on earth bustle about, “traveling around the world” and rushing back and forth, all for the sake of their destiny and their future. Not a single one, though, has the energy to spare for building My kingdom, not even so much as the effort it takes to draw breath. I created humans, and I have rescued them many times from tribulation; however, these humans are all ingrates: Not a single one among them is able to enumerate all the instances of My salvation. It has been so many years—so many centuries—from the creation of the world down to the present day; I have worked so many miracles and made My wisdom manifest so many times. Nevertheless, humans are as demented and numb as the mentally ill, and even sometimes like wild beasts flailing about in the forest, without the slightest intention of paying heed to My affairs. Many times, I have given humans the death sentence and condemned them to die, but My management plan cannot be altered by anyone. And therefore, in My hands, humans continue to reveal the old things to which they cling. Because of the steps of My work, I have, once again, rescued you beings who were born into a big family that is degenerate, depraved, filthy, and sordid.

My planned work keeps pressing forward without a moment’s surcease. Having moved into the Age of Kingdom, and having carried you into My kingdom as My people, I will have other demands to make of you; that is to say, I will begin to promulgate before you the constitution with which I will govern this era:

Since you are called My people, you should be able to glorify My name; that is, stand testimony in the midst of trial. If anyone attempts to wheedle Me and conceal the truth from Me, or engage in disreputable dealings behind My back, such people will, without exception, be chased out and removed from My house to wait for Me to deal with them. Those who have been unfaithful and unfilial to Me in the past, and who rise up again today to judge Me openly—they, too, will be chased out of My house. Those who are My people must constantly show consideration for My burdens as well as seek to know My words. Only people like this will I enlighten, and they will surely live under My guidance and enlightenment, never meeting with chastisement. Those who, failing to show consideration for My burdens, concentrate on planning for their own futures—that is, those who do not aim with their actions to satisfy My heart, but rather who look for handouts—these beggar-like creatures I absolutely refuse to use, because from the time they were born, they have known nothing of what it means to show consideration for My burdens. They are people who lack normal sense; such people are suffering from “malnutrition” of the brain, and need to go home for some “nourishment.” I have no use for such people. Among My people, everyone will be required to regard knowing Me as an obligatory duty to be seen through to the end, like eating, dressing, and sleeping, something that one never forgets about for a moment, so that in the end, knowing Me will become as familiar as eating—something you do effortlessly, with a practiced hand. As for the words I speak, every single one must be taken with the utmost faith and fully assimilated; there can be no perfunctory half-measures. Anyone who does not pay attention to My words will be regarded as directly resisting Me; anyone who does not eat of My words, or does not seek to know them, will be regarded as not paying attention to Me, and will directly be swept out the door of My house. This is because, as I have said in the past, what I want is not a great number of people, but excellence. Out of a hundred people, if only one is able to know Me through My words, then I will willingly throw away all the others to focus on enlightening and illuminating this single one. From this you can see that it is not necessarily true that greater numbers alone can manifest Me and live Me out. What I want is wheat (even though the kernels may not be full) and not tares (even when the kernels are full enough to be admired). As for those who give no regard to seeking, but who instead behave in a slack manner, they should leave of their own accord; I do not wish to see them anymore, lest they continue to bring disgrace to My name. Regarding what I require of My people, I will stop at these precepts for now, and will wait to make further sanctions, depending on how circumstances change.

In days past, the great majority of people thought I was the God Himself of wisdom, that I was the very God who saw deep into the hearts of humans; however, this was just superficial talk. If humans had truly known Me, they would not have presumed to leap to conclusions, but would instead have kept on trying to know Me through My words. Only when they had arrived at a stage where they truly saw My deeds would they have been worthy to call Me Wise and Wonderful. Your knowledge of Me is too shallow. Throughout the ages, so many people have served Me for so many years and, having seen My deeds, genuinely come to know something of Me. For this reason, they always used to have a submissive heart toward Me, not daring to harbor the least intention of opposing Me due to how difficult it is to seek out My footprints. If My guidance were absent among these people, they would not dare to act rashly. Therefore, after living through many years of experience, they eventually generalized a portion of knowledge about Me, calling Me Wise, Wonderful, and Counselor, that My words are like a double-edged sword, that My deeds are great, astounding, and wondrous, that I am robed in majesty, that My wisdom reaches higher than the firmament, and other insights. Today, however, your knowledge of Me is merely based on the foundation they have laid, so the great majority of you—like parrots—are just mouthing the words that they have spoken. It is only because I take into account how shallow is the way in which you know Me and how poor your “education” is that I have spared you so much chastisement. Even so, the great majority of you still do not know yourselves, or think you have already aspired to My will in your deeds, and for this reason have escaped judgment; or that, after having become flesh, I have completely lost track of humanity’s doings, and that for this reason you have also escaped chastisement; or that the God you believe in does not exist in the wide spaces of the universe, and so you have relegated knowing God to a chore to be done in your spare time rather than something to hold in your hearts as a duty that must be fulfilled, using belief in God as a way of beguiling the time that otherwise would be spent in idleness. If I did not take pity on your lack of qualifications, reason, and insights, then all of you would perish in the midst of My chastisement, wiped out from existence. Nevertheless, until My work on earth is finished, I will remain lenient to humankind. This is something you must all have knowledge of, and stop getting good and bad confused.

Be perceptive toward matters of the spirit, attentive toward My word, and truly capable of regarding My Spirit and My being, and My word and My being, as an inseparable whole, so that all people can satisfy Me in My presence. I have set foot upon all there is, I have looked out across the vast expanse of the universe, and I have walked among all people, tasting the sweetness and bitterness among man—yet never has man truly known Me, never has he paid Me any heed during My travels. Because I was silent, and never performed supernatural acts, no one ever truly saw Me. Today is unlike the past: I shall do things never beheld since the time of creation, shall speak words never heard throughout the ages, for I ask that all people come to know Me in the flesh. These are the steps of My management, but man has not the slightest inkling. Though I have spoken plainly, people remain addled; it is difficult to get through to them. Is this not the lowliness of man? Is it not precisely what I wish to remedy? For years, I did nothing in man; for years, despite being in direct contact with My incarnate flesh, no one ever heard the voice that issued directly from My divinity. Thus do people inevitably lack knowledge of Me, though this has not affected their love for Me through the ages. Today, however, I have performed in you miraculous work, work that is unfathomable and without measure, and I have spoken many words. And yet, under such circumstances, there are still many who resist Me directly in My presence. Let Me now give you a few examples.

Daily you pray to a vague God, trying to grasp My will and get a sense of life. Yet when faced with My words, you look at them differently; you regard My words and Spirit as a whole, yet kick aside My being, believing the person that I am fundamentally incapable of uttering such words, that they are directed by My Spirit. What of your knowledge in such circumstances? You believe in My words to a point yet have notions of varying severity toward the flesh with which I clothe Myself. You spend every day studying it, and say, “Why does He do things in that way? Do they really come from God? Impossible! He is not much different from me—He is a normal, ordinary person as well.” How can such circumstances be explained?

Who among you does not possess the above? Who is not occupied by such things? They appear to be things you hold onto like pieces of personal property, never willing to let them go. Still less do you pursue subjective efforts; instead, you wait for Me to do it Myself. Truth be told, not a single person who does not seek comes to know Me with ease. These are not frivolous words that I teach you. For I can give you another example from another perspective for your reference.

At the mention of Peter, people have no end of good things to say about him. They immediately recall the three times that he disowned God, how he tested God by giving service to Satan, and how he was ultimately crucified upside down for God, and so on. Now I am going to focus on describing to you how Peter knew Me and what his final end was. Peter was of good caliber, but his circumstances were not like those of Paul: His parents persecuted Me, they were demons that had been possessed by Satan and, as a result, they taught nothing of God to Peter. Peter was clever, gifted, and doted on by his parents from a young age. Yet as an adult, he became their enemy because he never stopped pursuing the knowledge of Me, and subsequently turned his back on them. This was because, above all else, he believed that heaven and earth and all things are in the hands of the Almighty and that all positive things come from God and are directly issued from Him without being processed by Satan. The contradistinction of Peter's parents gave him a greater knowledge of My lovingkindness and mercy, thus heightening his desire to seek Me. He focused not just on eating and drinking My words, but, moreover, on grasping My will, and was ever vigilant in his heart. As a result, he was always sensitive in his spirit, and hence he was after My own heart in all he did. He maintained a constant focus on the failures of people in the past to spur himself on, profoundly fearful of becoming ensnared in failure. So, too, did he concentrate on assimilating the faith and love of all those who had loved God throughout the ages. In this way—not only in negative aspects, but much more importantly, in positive aspects—he grew more quickly, such that his knowledge became the greatest of all in My presence. It is not difficult to imagine, then, how he put everything he had in My hands, how he even surrendered making decisions about food, clothing, sleeping and where he lived, and instead enjoyed My riches upon the basis of satisfying Me in all things. I subjected him to countless trials—trials, naturally, that left him half-dead—but amidst these hundreds of trials, he never once lost faith in Me or felt disappointed in Me. Even when I said I had forsaken him, still he was not discouraged, and continued to love Me in a practical way and in accordance with past principles of practice. I told him that I would not praise him even though he loved Me, that I would ultimately cast him into Satan's hands. But amid such trials, trials that did not come upon his flesh, but were of words, he still prayed to Me and said, "O God! Among heaven and earth and all things, is there any human, any creature, or any thing that is not in the hands of You, the Almighty? When You are merciful toward me, my heart greatly rejoices with Your mercy. When You judge me, unworthy though I may be, I gain a greater sense of the unfathomableness of Your deeds, because You are filled with authority and wisdom. Though my flesh suffers hardship, my spirit is comforted. How could I not give praise to Your wisdom and deeds?"

Even if I were to die after knowing You, how could I not do so gladly and happily? Almighty One! Do You really not wish to let me see You? Am I really unfit to receive Your judgment? Could it be that there is something in me You do not wish to see?" During such trials, even though Peter was not able to accurately grasp My will, it was evident that he was proud and honored to be used by Me (even though he received My judgment so that humanity might see My majesty and wrath), and that he was not distressed by these trials. Because of his loyalty before Me, and because of My blessing of him, he has been an exemplar and model to man for thousands of years. Is this not precisely what you should emulate? Think long and hard about why I have given such a lengthy account of Peter; these should be the principles by which you act.

Though few people know Me, I do not unleash My wrath upon man, for people are too lacking, and it is hard for them to attain the level that I ask of them. Thus, I have been tolerant of man for thousands of years, right up until today, yet I hope that you will not go easy on yourselves on account of My tolerance. Through Peter, you should come to know Me and seek after Me; from all of his exploits, you should be enlightened as never before, and thus attain realms never before reached by man. Throughout the cosmos and the firmament, among everything in heaven and on earth, all things upon the earth and in heaven give their every effort to My final stage of work. Surely you do not wish to be spectators, ordered about by the forces of Satan? Satan is ever present devouring the knowledge of Me in people's hearts, gnashing its teeth and flexing its claws in its final death throes. Do you wish to fall prey to its cunning schemes at this time? Do you wish to ruin your life at the time when My work is finally completed? Are you waiting for Me to show My tolerance once more? Pursuing knowledge of Me is key, but focusing on practice is indispensable. My words are revealed to you directly, and I hope that you can follow My guidance, and no longer have plans and ambitions for yourselves.

Chapter 7

All of the western branches should listen to My voice:

In the past, have you been faithful to Me? Have you listened to My excellent words of counsel? Are your hopes realistic and not vague and uncertain? Humanity's loyalty, humanity's love, humanity's faith—there is none but what comes from Me, none but what is bestowed by Me. My people, when you listen to My words, do you understand My will? Do you see My heart? Despite the fact that, in the past, while on the path of service, you met with ups and downs, advances and setbacks, and occasions in which you were in danger of falling down and even of betraying Me, did you know that at every moment I was constantly saving you? That at every moment I was constantly uttering

My voice to call and rescue you? So many times, you have fallen into Satan's nets; so many times, you have been entangled in the snares of humanity; so many times you have failed to let go of yourselves and lapsed into endless contention with one another. So many times, your bodies have been in My house while your hearts were nowhere to be found. Nevertheless, so many times I have reached out My saving hand to prop you up, and so many times I have cast among you the grains of mercy. So many times I have been unable to bear the sight of your misery after suffering; so many times.... Do you know this?

Today, however, in My keeping, you have at last overcome all difficulties, and I rejoice along with you; this is the crystallization of My wisdom. Nevertheless, remember this well! Who has fallen, while you yourselves remained strong? Who has been strong, without ever having moments of weakness? Among humans, who has enjoyed any blessing that did not come from Me? Who has experienced any misfortune that did not come from Me? Could it be that all those who love Me receive only benediction? Could it be that misfortunes befell Job because he failed to love Me, choosing to resist Me instead? Could it be that Paul managed to serve Me with loyalty in My presence because he was genuinely able to love Me? Though you may hold fast to My testimony, can there be any among you whose testimony is as unadulterated by impurities as pure gold? Are humans capable of true loyalty? That your testimony brings Me enjoyment does not conflict with your "loyalty," because I have never demanded much from anyone. Going by the original intention behind My plan, you would all be "defective goods"—not up to par. Is this not an example of what I told you about "casting grains of mercy"? Is what you see My salvation?

You should all think back and recall: Since returning to My house, have any of you come to know Me in the way that Peter did, without giving any consideration to your gains or losses? You have gotten the superficial parts of the Bible down pat, but have you imbibed its essence? As such, you are still holding onto your "capital," refusing to truly let go of yourselves. When I make an utterance, when I speak to you face to face, who among you has ever put down your closed scroll to receive the words of life that I disclose? You have no regard for My words, nor do you cherish them. Rather, you use them to fire upon your enemies like a machine gun in order to maintain your own position; not in the slightest degree do you attempt to accept My judgment in order to know Me. Every one of you points a weapon at someone else; you are all "unselfish" and you "think for the sake of others" in every situation. Is this not precisely what you were doing yesterday? And today? Your "loyalty" has gone up by a few points, and you are all a bit more seasoned and a bit more mature; because of this, your "fear" of Me has increased somewhat, and no one "acts lightly." Why do you exist in this state of perpetual passivity? Why is it that the positive aspects are never anywhere to be found in you? Oh, My people! The past is long gone; you must not cling to it any longer. Having stood fast yesterday, today you should give Me your sincere loyalty; moreover, you should bear good testimony for Me tomorrow, and you will inherit My benediction in the future. This is what you should understand.

Though I am not present before you, My Spirit will surely confer grace upon you. I hope that you will treasure My blessings and, relying on them, be able to know yourselves. Do not take them to be your capital; rather, you should use My words to fill what is lacking in you, and from this derive your positive elements. This is the message I bequeath to you!

Chapter 8

When My revelations reach their climax, and when My judgment draws to an end, it will be the time when all My people are revealed and made complete. I journey to all corners of the universe world in perpetual search of those who align with My intention and are fit for My use. Who can rise up and cooperate with Me? Humans' love of Me is minuscule, and their faith in Me is also pitifully small. If I did not direct the brunt of My words at people's weaknesses, they would boast and exaggerate, pontificating and coming up with bombastic theories, as if they were omniscient and all-knowing with regard to earthly matters. Of those who were "loyal" to Me in the past, and of those who today "stand fast" before Me, who still dares to speak boastfully? Who is not secretly delighted for their own prospects? When I did not expose people directly, they had nowhere to hide and were tormented by shame. How much more would that be so if I spoke in a different manner? People would have an even greater sense of indebtedness, believe that nothing could cure them, and would all be tightly bound by their passivity. When people lose hope, the kingdom's salute formally rings out, which is, as people have said, "the time when the sevenfold intensified Spirit begins to work." In other words, this is when the life of the kingdom officially begins on earth; it is when My divinity comes forth to act directly (without any mental "processing"). All people rush busily about, as though they had been revived or roused from a dream, and, on awakening, are astonished to find themselves in such circumstances. In the past, I said much about the building of the church; I revealed many mysteries, but when that work reached its peak, it came to an abrupt end. The building of the kingdom, however, is different. Only when the war in the spiritual realm reaches its final stage do I begin My work anew on earth. That is to say, it is only when all humans are on the verge of retreat that I formally begin and raise up My new work. The difference between the building of the kingdom and the building of the church is that in building the church, I worked through a humanity that was governed by divinity; I dealt directly with humans' old nature, revealing directly their ugly selves and exposing their substance. As a result, they came to know themselves on this basis, and so were convinced in their hearts and in their words. In building the kingdom, I act directly through My divinity, and allow all people to know what I have and am on the foundation of their knowledge of My words, ultimately allowing them to attain knowledge of Me as flesh incarnate. Thus ends all humankind's pursuit of the vague God, and thus do they cease holding a place in their hearts for the God in heaven; that is, I let humanity know the deeds I do while I am flesh incarnate, and so shall conclude My time on earth.

The building of the kingdom is aimed directly at the spiritual realm. That is, the state of battle of the spiritual realm is made plain directly among all My people, and this suffices to show that not only within the church, but also and more so in the Age of Kingdom, every person is constantly at war. Despite their physical bodies, the spiritual realm is revealed directly, and they come in contact with the life of the spiritual realm. Thus, when you begin to be faithful, you must prepare properly for the next part of My work. You should give over the entirety of your heart; only then can you satisfy My heart. I care nothing for what happened previously in the church; today, it is in the kingdom. In My plan, Satan has, all along, been stalking behind each step and, as the foil of My wisdom, has always been trying to find ways and means to disrupt My original plan. Yet could I succumb to its deceitful schemes? Everything in heaven and on earth serves Me; could the deceitful schemes of Satan be any different? This is precisely where My wisdom intersects; it is precisely that which is wondrous about My deeds, and it is the principle of operation for My entire management plan. During the era of the building of the kingdom, still I do not avoid the deceitful schemes of Satan, but continue to do the work I must. Among the universe and all things, I have chosen the deeds of Satan as My foil. Is this not a manifestation of My wisdom? Is this not precisely that which is wondrous about My work? On the occasion of entry into the Age of Kingdom, all things in heaven and on earth are utterly transformed, and they celebrate and rejoice. Are you any different? In whose heart is there not the sweetness of honey? Who is not bursting for joy? Who does not dance with delight? Who does not speak words of praise?

Do you grasp the aims and origin of all I have talked of and discussed above, or do you not? If I did not ask this, most people would believe I were merely prattling on, and would be unable to fathom the source of My words. If you ponder them carefully, you will know their importance. You would do well to read them closely: Which of My words are not of benefit to you? Which are not meant to cause your life to grow? Which do not speak of the reality of the spiritual realm? Most people believe there is no rhyme or reason to My words, that they lack explanation and interpretation. Are My words really so abstract and inscrutable? Do you truly submit to My words? Do you truly accept My words? Do you not treat them as toys? Do you not use them as clothing to cover your ugly appearance? In this vast world, who has personally been examined by Me? Who has personally heard the words of My Spirit? So many people grope and search in the darkness; so many pray amid adversity; so many, hungry and cold, watch in hope; and so many are bound by Satan; yet so many know not where to turn, so many betray Me in the midst of their happiness, so many are ungrateful, and so many are loyal to the deceitful schemes of Satan. Who among you is Job? Who is Peter? Why have I repeatedly mentioned Job? Why have I referred to Peter so many times? Have you ever ascertained what My hopes for you are? You should spend more time pondering such things.

Peter was faithful to Me for many years, yet he never grumbled nor had any complaint; even Job was not his equal, and, throughout the ages, the saints have all fallen far short of Peter. He not only sought to know Me, but also came to know Me during a time when Satan was enacting its deceitful schemes. This led Peter to serve Me for many years, always in line with My will, and for this reason, he was never exploited by Satan. Peter drew lessons from the faith of Job, yet also clearly perceived Job's shortcomings. Although Job had been of great faith, he lacked knowledge of matters in the spiritual realm, so he said many words that did not correspond to reality; this shows that Job's knowledge was shallow and incapable of perfection. Therefore, Peter focused always on gaining a sense of the spirit, and always paid attention to observing the dynamics of the spiritual realm. As a result, he not only was able to ascertain something of My wishes, but also had a modicum of knowledge of the deceitful schemes of Satan. Because of this, his knowledge of Me grew to be greater than anyone else's throughout the ages.

From Peter's experience, it is not hard to see that if humans wish to know Me, they must focus on giving careful consideration within their spirits. I do not ask that you "dedicate" a certain amount to Me externally; this is of secondary concern. If you do not know Me, then all the faith, love, and loyalty of which you speak are but illusions; they are froth, and you are sure to become someone who makes great boasts before Me but does not know himself. As such, you will once more be ensnared by Satan and unable to extricate yourself; you will become a son of perdition and an object of destruction. However, if you are cold and uncaring toward My words, then you undoubtedly oppose Me. This is fact, and you would do well to look through the gate of the spiritual realm at the many and varied spirits that have been chastised by Me. Which of them, faced with My words, was not passive, uncaring, and unaccepting? Which of them was not cynical about My words? Which of them did not try to find fault with My words? Which of them did not use My words as "defensive weapons" with which to "protect" themselves? They did not use the contents of My words as a way to know Me, but merely as toys to play with. In this, were they not resisting Me directly? Who are My words? Who is My Spirit? I have asked you such questions so many times, yet have you ever gotten any higher and clear insights about them? Have you ever truly experienced them? I remind you once again: If you do not know My words, nor accept them, nor put them into practice, then you will inevitably become objects of My chastisement! You will surely become victims of Satan!

Chapter 9

Since you are among the people of My household, and since you are faithful in My kingdom, you must adhere to the standards of My requirements in all that you do. I do not ask that you be nothing more than a drifting cloud, but that you be gleaming snow, and possessed of its essence and, even more, its value. Because I come from the holy land, I am not like the lotus, which has only a name and no essence, for it comes from the mire and not the holy land. The time that a new heaven descends upon the earth and a new earth spreads over the skies is also precisely the time that I am formally at work among humans. Who among humanity knows Me? Who beheld the moment of My arrival? Who has seen that I not only have a name, but, moreover, am also possessed of essence? I sweep away the white clouds with My hand and closely observe the skies; nothing in space is not arranged by My hand, and beneath it, no one does not contribute his or her own tiny effort toward the accomplishment of My mighty enterprise. I do not make onerous demands of the people on earth, for I have always been the practical God and because I am the Almighty that created humans and knows them well. All people are before the eyes of the Almighty. How could even those in the remotest corners of the earth avoid the scrutiny of My Spirit? Although people “know” My Spirit, they still offend My Spirit. My words lay bare the ugly faces of all people, as well as their innermost thoughts, and cause all upon earth to be made plain by My light and fall down in the midst of My scrutiny. However, despite falling down, their hearts do not dare to stray far from Me. Among the objects of creation, who does not come to love Me as a result of My deeds? Who does not yearn for Me as a result of My words? In whom are not born feelings of attachment as a result of My love? It is only due to the corruption of Satan that humans have been unable to reach the state that I require. Even the lowest standards that I require produce misgivings in people, to say nothing of today—this era in which Satan runs riot and is madly despotic—or the time when humans have been so trampled by Satan that their bodies are entirely caked in filth. When has the failure of humans to care for My heart as a result of their depravity not caused Me grief? Could it be that I pity Satan? Could it be that I am mistaken in My love? When people disobey Me, My heart secretly weeps; when they resist Me, I chastise them; when they are saved by Me and resurrected from the dead, I nourish them with the utmost care; when they submit to Me, My heart rests easy and I immediately sense great changes in heaven and earth and all things. When humans praise Me, how could I not enjoy it? When they witness Me and are gained by Me, how could I not gain glory? Could it be that however humans act and behave is not governed and supplied by Me? When I do not provide direction, people are idle and quiescent; furthermore, behind My back, they engage in those “laudable” dirty dealings. Do you think the flesh, with which I clothe Myself, knows nothing of your actions, your behavior, and your words? Many years have I endured the wind and rain, and so too have I experienced the bitterness of the human world; however, upon closer reflection, no amount of suffering can make fleshly humanity lose hope in Me, much less can any sweetness cause humans of flesh to grow cold, downhearted, or dismissive toward Me. Is their love for Me really limited to either a lack of suffering or a lack of sweetness?

Today, I inhabit the flesh, and have officially begun to carry out the work that I must do. Though humans fear the voice of My Spirit, they go against the essence of My Spirit. I need not elaborate upon how difficult it is for humanity to know the Me of the flesh in My words. As I have said before, I am not exacting in My requirements, and it is not necessary for you to achieve a full knowledge of Me (for humans are lacking; this is an inherent condition, and no acquired condition can make up for it). You need only know all that is done and said by the Me in fleshly form. Since My requirements are not exacting, it is My hope that you can all come to know these deeds and words, and achieve attainment. You must rid yourselves of your impurities in this filthy world, you must strive to make progress in this backward “family of emperors,” and you must never cut yourselves any slack. You should not be the slightest bit lenient with yourselves. You would need to devote great time and effort in order to know that which I utter in a single day, and it would take an entire lifetime to experience and gain knowledge from even a single sentence spoken by Me. The words I speak are not vague and abstract; they are not empty talk. Many people hope to gain My words, but I pay them no heed; many people thirst for My fatness, but I do not give them even a bit; many people wish to see My face, yet I have ever hidden it; many people listen intently to My voice, but I close My eyes and tilt back My head, unmoved by their “yearning”; many people fear the sound of My voice, but My words are always on the offensive; many people are terrified of seeing My visage, but I deliberately appear so as to strike them down. Humans have never truly seen My face, nor have they ever truly heard My voice; this is because they do not truly know Me. Though they might be struck down by Me, though they might leave Me, and though they might be chastised by My hand, they still do not know whether all that they do is truly after My own heart, and are still ignorant of to whom it is exactly that I reveal My heart. Ever since the world’s creation, no one has ever truly known Me or truly seen Me, and though I have become flesh today, you still do not know Me. Is this not a fact? Have you ever beheld even a little of My actions and disposition in the flesh?

In heaven is where I recline, and beneath heaven is where I find rest. I have somewhere to dwell, and I have a time for when I display My powers. If I were not on earth, if I did not conceal Myself within flesh, and if I were not humble and hidden, would heaven and earth not have already been changed long ago? Would you, My people, not have already been used by Me? However, there is wisdom to My actions, and although I am fully aware of the deceptiveness of humans, I do not follow their example, but instead give them something in exchange. My wisdom in the spiritual realm is inexhaustible, and My wisdom in the flesh is everlasting. Is this not the very moment at which My deeds are made plain? I have forgiven and pardoned humans many times, right up to this day, in the Age of Kingdom. Could I really delay My time any longer? Although I have been somewhat more merciful toward fragile humans, once My work is complete, could I still bring trouble upon Myself by doing old work? Would I wittingly allow Satan to accuse Me? I do not need humans to do anything but accept the reality of My words and their original meaning. Though My words are simple, in essence they are complex, for you are too small and have grown too numb. When I reveal My mysteries directly and make plain My will in the flesh, you take no notice; you listen to the sounds, but do not understand their meaning. I am overcome with sadness. Although I am in the flesh, I am unable to do the work of the ministry of the flesh.

Who has come to know My deeds in the flesh from My words and actions? When I reveal My mysteries in writing, or speak them aloud, people are all dumbstruck; they close their eyes in silence. Why is what I say incomprehensible to humans? Why are My words so unfathomable to them? Why are they so blind to My deeds? Who is able to see Me and never forget? Who among them are able to hear My voice and not allow it to pass them by? Who is able to sense My will and please My heart? I live and move among people; I have come to experience their lives—and though I felt that everything was good after I created them for humanity, I take no joy from life among humans, and am not gladdened by any happiness among them. I do not detest and reject them, but neither am I sentimental toward them—for humans do not know Me, they find it hard to see My face in the darkness; amidst all the clamor, they have a hard time hearing My voice and are unable to discern what I say. Thus, superficially, all that you do is in submission to Me, but in your hearts, you still disobey Me. It can be said that this is what the entirety of humankind's old nature is like. Who is an exception? Who is not an object of My chastisement? However, who does not live under My tolerance? If humanity were all destroyed by My wrath, what would be the significance of My creation of the heavens and earth? I once warned many people, exhorted many people, and openly judged many people—is this not much better than directly destroying humanity? My aim is not to put people to death, but to cause them to know all My deeds amid My judgment. When you ascend from the bottomless pit—which is to say, when you free yourselves from My judgment—your personal considerations and plans will all disappear, and everyone will aspire to satisfy Me. In this, will I not have achieved My goal?

Chapter 10

The Age of Kingdom is, after all, different from times past. It does not concern how humanity acts; rather, I have descended upon the earth to personally carry out My work, which is something that human beings can neither conceive of nor accomplish. For so many years, ever since the creation of the world, the work has only been about building the church, but one never hears of building the kingdom. Even though I speak of this with My own mouth, is there anyone who knows the substance of it? I once descended into the world of humans and experienced and observed their suffering, but did so without fulfilling the purpose of My incarnation. Once the building of the kingdom got under way, My incarnate flesh formally began to perform My ministry; that is, the King of the kingdom formally took up His sovereign power. From this it is evident that the descent of the kingdom into the human world—far from being merely a literal manifestation—is one of actual reality; this is one aspect of the meaning of “the reality of practice.” Humans have never seen a single one of My acts, nor have they ever heard a single one of My utterances. Even if they had seen My acts, what would they have discovered? And should they have heard Me speak, what would they have comprehended? Throughout the world, everyone exists within My mercy and lovingkindness, but so does all humanity lie under My judgment, and likewise is subject to My trials. I have been merciful and loving to people, even when they had all been corrupted to a certain degree; I have meted out chastisement to them, even when they all had submitted before My throne. However, is there any human being who is not in the midst of the suffering and refinement that I have dispatched? So many people are groping through the darkness for the light, and so many are struggling bitterly through their trials. Job had faith, but was he not seeking a way out for himself? Although My people can stand firm in the face of trials, is there anyone who, without uttering it aloud, deep down also has faith? Is it not rather that people voice their beliefs while still harboring doubts in their hearts? There are no human beings who have stood fast in trial or who genuinely submit when being tried. If I did not cover My face to avoid looking at this world, the entire human race would topple under My burning gaze, for I ask nothing of humanity.

When the salute to the kingdom rings out—which is also when the seven thunders peal—this sound convulses heaven and earth, shaking up the empyrean and causing the heartstrings of every human being to vibrate. The anthem to the kingdom ceremoniously rises up in the land of the great red dragon, proving that I have destroyed that nation and established My kingdom. Even more importantly, My kingdom is established upon the earth. At this moment, I begin sending My angels out to every one of the world’s nations so that they may shepherd My sons, My people; this is also to meet the requirements of the next step of My work. However, I personally come to the place where the great red dragon lies coiled, and compete with it. Once all of humanity comes to know Me in the flesh and is able to see My deeds in the flesh, the great red dragon’s lair will turn to ashes and vanish without a trace. As the people of My kingdom, since you hate the great red dragon to the bone, you must satisfy My heart with your actions, and in this way bring shame upon the dragon. Do you genuinely sense that the great red dragon is hateful? Do you truly feel that it is the enemy of the kingdom’s King? Do you really have faith that you can bear wonderful testimony for Me? Are you actually confident that you can defeat the great red dragon? This is what I ask of you; all I need is for you to be able to reach this step. Will you be able to do this? Do you have faith that you can achieve this? What exactly are humans capable of doing? Is it not rather that I do it Myself? Why do I say that I personally descend upon the location in which the battle is joined? What I want is your faith, not your deeds. Human beings are all incapable of accepting My words in a straightforward manner, and instead just give a sideways glance at them. Has this helped you to achieve your goals? Have you come to know Me in this way? To be honest, of the humans on earth, not one is capable of looking Me straight in the face, and not one is able to receive the pure and unadulterated meaning of My words. I therefore have set in motion an unprecedented project upon the earth, in order to attain My goals and establish the true image of Myself in people's hearts. In this way, I will bring to an end the era in which notions wield power over people.

Today, not only am I descending upon the nation of the great red dragon, I am also turning to face the entire universe, causing the entire empyrean to quake. Is there a single place anywhere that is not subject to My judgment? Is there a single place that does not exist under calamities that I rain down upon it? Everywhere I go, I have scattered all sorts of "seeds of disaster." This is one of the ways in which I work, and is without doubt an act of salvation for humanity, and what I extend to them is still a kind of love. I wish to allow even more people to get to know Me and be able to see Me, and in this way, come to revere a God whom they could not see for so many years but who, right now, is real. For what reason did I create the world? Why, after humans had become corrupt, did I not completely annihilate them? For what reason does the whole of the human race live amidst disasters? What was My purpose in donning the flesh? When I am performing My work, humanity learns the taste not only of the bitter, but also of the sweet. Of all the people in the world, who does not live within My grace? If I had not endowed human beings with material blessings, who in the world would be able to enjoy plenty? Could it be that allowing you to take up your place as My people is a blessing? Were you not My people, but rather service-doers, would you not be existing within My blessings? Not one among you is capable of fathoming the origin of My words. Humanity—far from treasuring the titles that I have conferred upon them, so many of them, on account of the title "service-doer," nurse resentment in their hearts, and so many, on account of the title "My people," breed love for Me in their hearts. No one should try to fool Me; My eyes are all-seeing! Who among you receives willingly, who among you gives complete obedience? If the salute to the kingdom did not ring out, would you truly be able to submit to the end? What humans are capable of doing and thinking, and how far they are able to go—all these things I predetermined long ago.

The vast majority of people accept My burning in the light of My countenance. The vast majority of people, inspired by My encouragement, stir themselves to forge ahead in seeking. When the forces of Satan attack My people, I am there to fend them off; when Satan's plots wreak havoc in their lives, I send it scampering away in a rout, once gone never to return. On earth, all manner of evil spirits are forever on the prowl for a place to rest, and are endlessly searching for human corpses that can be consumed. My people! You must remain within My care and protection. Never be dissolute! Never behave recklessly! You should offer up your loyalty in My house, and only with loyalty can you mount a countercharge against the devil's trickery. Under no circumstances should you behave as you did in the past, doing one thing in front of Me and another behind My back; if you act this way, then you are already beyond redemption. Have I not uttered more than enough words such as these? It is precisely because humanity's old nature is incorrigible that I have had to give people repeated reminders. Do not get bored! All that I say is for the sake of ensuring your destiny! A foul and filthy place is precisely what Satan needs; the more hopelessly irredeemable and the more dissolute you are, refusing to submit to restraint, then the more those unclean spirits will avail themselves of any opportunity to infiltrate you. If you have gotten to this point, then your loyalty will be nothing but idle chatter, without any reality to it whatsoever, and the unclean spirits will gulp down your resolution and transform it into disobedience and satanic plots to be used to disrupt My work. From there, you could be smitten by Me at any time. No one understands the gravity of this situation; people all simply turn a deaf ear to what they hear, and are not the least bit cautious. I remember not what was done in the past; are you actually still waiting for Me to be lenient toward you by "forgetting" once more? Though humans have opposed Me, I will not hold it against them, for they are too small of stature, and so I have not made overly high demands of them. All I require is that they not be dissolute, and that they submit to restraint. Surely it is not beyond your capacity to meet this one stipulation, is it? Most people are waiting for Me to reveal even more mysteries for them to feast their eyes upon. However, even if you came to understand all the mysteries of heaven, exactly what could you do with that knowledge? Would it increase your love for Me? Would it arouse your love for Me? I do not underestimate humans, nor do I arrive at a verdict about them lightly. If these were not the actual circumstances of humans, I would never crown them with such labels so casually. Think back upon the past: How many times have I slandered you? How many times have I underestimated you? How many times have I looked upon you without regard for your actual circumstances? How many times have My utterances failed to win you over wholeheartedly? How many times have I spoken without striking a deeply resonant chord within you? Who among you has read My words without fear and trembling, deeply afraid that I will strike you down into the bottomless pit? Who does not endure trials from My words? Within My utterances resides authority, but this is not for passing casual judgment on humans; rather, mindful of their actual circumstances, I constantly manifest to them the meaning inherent in My words. In point of fact, is there anyone who is capable of recognizing My omnipotent might in My words? Is there anyone who can receive the purest gold of which My words are made? Just how many words have I spoken? Has anyone ever treasured them?

Kingdom Anthem

The multitudes cheer Me, the multitudes praise Me; all mouths name the one true God, all people lift their eyes to watch My deeds. The kingdom descends upon the world of men, My person is rich and bountiful. Who would not rejoice at this? Who would not dance for joy? Oh, Zion! Raise your triumphant banner to celebrate Me! Sing your triumphant song of victory to spread My holy name! All creation unto the ends of the earth! Hasten to cleanse yourselves that you may be made as offerings to Me! Constellations of the heavens! Hasten back to your places to show My mighty power in the firmament! I lend My ear to the voices of the people on earth, who pour out their infinite love and reverence for Me in song! On this day, when all creation returns to life, I come down into the world of men. At this moment, at this very juncture, all flowers burst into riotous bloom, all birds sing as with one voice, all things palpitate with joy! In the sound of the kingdom's salute, Satan's kingdom topples down, annihilated in the thundering of the kingdom anthem, never to rise again!

Who on the earth dares to rise and resist? As I descend to earth, I bring burning, bring wrath, bring catastrophes of all kinds. The earthly kingdoms are now My kingdom! Up in the sky, the clouds tumble and billow; under the sky, lakes and rivers surge and joyously churn out a stirring melody. Resting animals emerge from their dens, and all peoples are aroused from their slumbers by Me. The day awaited by the multitudinous peoples has come at last! They offer up the most beautiful songs to Me!

At this beautiful moment, at this exhilarating time, praise rings out everywhere, in the heavens above and earth below. Who would not be excited at this?

Whose heart would not lighten? Who would not weep at this scene?

The sky is not the sky of old, now it is the sky of the kingdom.

The earth is not the earth it was, now it is the holy land.

After a heavy rain has passed, the filthy old world is wholly made anew.

The mountains are changing ... the waters changing ...

Ah, ye silent mountains! Arise and dance for Me!

Ah, ye still waters! Go on flowing freely!

You men dreaming dreams! Rouse yourselves and give chase!

I am come ... I am King....

All mankind shall see with their own eyes My face, shall hear with their own ears My voice, shall live for themselves the life of the kingdom....
How sweet ... how beautiful....
Unforgettable ... impossible to forget....

In the burning of My wrath, the great red dragon struggles;
in My majestic judgment, devils show their true forms;
at My stern words, people all feel deep shame, and have nowhere to hide themselves.
They recall the past, how they mocked and derided Me.
There was never a time when they did not show off themselves, never a time when they did not defy Me.
Today, who does not weep? Who does not feel remorse?
The entire universe world is filled with weeping ... filled with the sounds of rejoicing ... filled with laughing voices....
Incomparable joy ... joy without compare....

A small rain pattering ... heavy flakes of fluttering snow....
Inside people, sorrow and joy commingling ... some laughing ... some sobbing ... and some cheering....
As if everyone's forgotten ... whether this is a spring rife with rain and clouds, a summer of flowers bursting into bloom, an autumn of rich harvests, or a winter cold as frost and ice, no one knows....
In the sky clouds are drifting, on the earth the oceans roil.
The sons wave their arms ... the people move their feet in dance....
The angels are at work ... the angels are shepherding....
The people on earth are all a-bustle, and all the things on earth multiply.

Chapter 11

Every person in mankind should accept being scrutinized by My Spirit, should closely inspect their every word and action, and, moreover, should look upon My wondrous deeds. How do you feel at the time of the kingdom's arrival on earth? When My sons and people stream to My throne, I formally commence judgment before the great white throne. This is to say, when I begin My work on earth in person, and when the era of judgment nears its end, I start to direct My words to the entire universe, and release the voice of My Spirit to the entire universe. Through My words, I will wash clean all the people and things among all that is in heaven and on earth, so that the land is no longer filthy and licentious, but is a holy kingdom. I will renew all things, so that they will be provided for My use, so that they will no longer bear the earthy breath, and no longer be stained with the flavor of the ground. On earth, man has groped for the goal and origins of My words, and has observed My deeds, yet no one has ever truly known the origins of My words, and no one has ever truly beheld the wondrousness in My deeds. It is only today, when I personally come among man and speak My words, that man has a little knowledge of Me, removing the place occupied by “Me” in their thoughts, and instead creating a place for the practical God in their consciousness. Man has notions and is full of curiosity; who would not want to see God? Who would not wish to encounter God? Yet the only thing that occupies a definite place in man’s heart is the God that man feels is vague and abstract. Who would realize this if I did not tell them plainly? Who would truly believe, with certainty and not even a hint of doubt, that I indeed exist? There is a vast difference between the “Me” in man’s heart and the “Me” of reality, and no one is capable of drawing comparisons between them. If I did not become flesh, man would never know Me, and even if he came to know Me, would not such knowledge still be a notion? Each day I walk among the unceasing flow of people, and each day I operate within every person. When man truly sees Me, he will be able to know Me in My words, and will grasp the means by which I speak as well as My intentions.

When the kingdom formally arrives on earth, what, among all things, is not silent? Who, among all people, is not afraid? I walk everywhere throughout the universe world, and everything is personally arranged by Me. At this time, who does not know that My deeds are wonderful? My hands uphold all things, yet I am also above all things. Today, is not My incarnation and My personal presence among man the true meaning of My humility and hiddenness? Outwardly, many people applaud Me as good and praise Me as beautiful, but who truly knows Me? Today, why do I ask that you know Me? Is My aim not to shame the great red dragon? I do not wish to force man to praise Me, but to make him know Me, through which he will come to love Me, and thus praise Me. Such praise is worthy of its name, and is not empty talk; only praise such as this can reach My throne and soar into the skies. Because man has been tempted and corrupted by Satan, because he has been taken over by notions and thinking, I have become flesh in order to personally conquer all of mankind, to expose all the notions of man, and to tear apart the thinking of man. As a result, man no longer parades about in front of Me, and no longer serves Me using his own notions, and thus the “Me” in man’s notions is completely dispelled. When the kingdom comes, the first thing I do is begin this stage of work, and I do so among My people. As My people who are born in the country of the great red dragon, surely there is not only a little, or a part, of the great red dragon’s venom within you. Thus, this stage of My work is primarily focused on you, and this is one aspect of the significance of My incarnation in China. Most people are unable to grasp even a fragment of the words I speak, and when they do, their understanding is hazy and muddled. This is a turning point in the method by which I speak. If all people were able to read My words and understand their meaning, then who among man could be saved, and not cast down into Hades? When man knows Me and obeys Me, that will be the time when I rest, and that will be the very time that man is able to grasp the meaning of My words. Today, your stature is too small—it is almost pitifully small, not even worthy to be lifted up—to say nothing of your knowledge of Me.

Though I say the angels have begun to be sent forth to shepherd My sons and people, no one is able to understand the meaning of My words. When I personally come among man, the angels simultaneously begin the work of shepherding, and during the time of the angels' shepherding, all the sons and people not only receive trials and shepherding, but are also able to behold, with their own eyes, the occurrence of all kinds of visions. Because I work directly in divinity, everything enters into a new beginning, and because this divinity works directly, it is not the slightest bit constrained by humanity, and seems to man to operate freely under supernatural circumstances. Yet, to Me, it is entirely normal (man believes it is supernatural because he has never encountered divinity directly); it is possessed of none of the notions of man, and is untainted by human ideas. People will only see this when they all enter onto the right track; because now is the beginning, when it comes to his entry man has many shortcomings, and failings and opacity can hardly be avoided. Today, since I have led you to this point, I have made fitting arrangements, and have My own aims. If I were to tell you of them today, would you truly be able to know them? I am well acquainted with the thoughts of man's mind and the wishes of man's heart: Who has never looked for a way out for themselves? Who has never thought of their own prospects? Yet even though man is possessed of a rich and dazzling intellect, who was able to predict that, following the ages, the present would turn out as it has? Is this really the fruit of your own subjective efforts? Is this the payment for your tireless industry? Is this the beautiful tableau envisaged by your mind? If I did not guide all mankind, who would be able to separate themselves from My arrangements and find another way out? Is it the imaginings and wishes of man that have brought him to today? Many people go their whole lives without having their wishes fulfilled. Is this really because of a fault in their thinking? Many people's lives are filled with unexpected happiness and satisfaction. Is this really because they expect too little? Who of the whole of mankind is not cared for in the eyes of the Almighty? Who does not live in the midst of the Almighty's predestination? Does man's life and death happen by his own choice? Does man control his own fate? Many people cry out for death, yet it is far away from them; many people want to be those who are strong in life and fear death, yet unbeknownst to them, the day of their demise draws near, plunging them into the abyss of death; many people look to the skies and sigh deeply; many people cry great, wailing sobs; many people fall amidst trials; and many people become prisoners of temptation. Though I do not appear in person to allow man to behold Me clearly, many people fear seeing My face, deeply afraid that I will strike them down, that I will snuff them out. Does man truly know Me, or does he not? No one can say for sure. Is this not so? You fear both Me and My chastisement, yet you also stand up and openly oppose Me and pass judgment on Me. Is this not the case? That man has never known Me is because he has never seen My face or heard My voice. Thus, even though I am within man's heart, are there any in whose heart I am not hazy and indistinct? Are there any in whose heart I am perfectly clear? I do not wish for those who are My people to also see Me vaguely and opaquely, and thus I embark upon this great work.

I quietly come among man, and then I drift away. Has anyone ever seen Me? Is the sun able to see Me because of its burning flames? Is the moon able to see Me because of its lustrous clarity? Can the constellations see Me because of their place in the sky? When I come, man does not know, and all things remain ignorant, and when I depart, still man is unaware. Who can bear testimony to Me? Could it be the praise of the people on earth? Could it be the lilies blossoming in the wild? Is it the birds flying in the sky? Is it the lions roaring in the mountains? No one can fully witness Me! No one can do the work that I will do! Even if they did do this work, what effect would it have? Each day I observe every action of many people, and each day I search the hearts and minds of many people; never has anyone escaped My judgment, and never has anyone divested themselves of the reality of My judgment. I stand above the skies and look into the distance: Innumerable people have been struck down by Me, yet so, too, do countless people live amid My mercy and lovingkindness. Do you also not live under such circumstances?

Chapter 12

When lightning issues from the East, which is also precisely the moment that I begin to utter My words—when the lightning issues, the whole universe is illuminated, and a transformation occurs in all the stars. The entire human race is as if it had been sorted out. Under the glow of this shaft of light from the East, all of mankind is revealed in their original form, their eyes dazzled, unsure what to do, and less sure still how to conceal their ugly features. They are also like unto animals that flee from My light and take refuge in mountain caves—yet not one among them can be effaced from within My light. All humans are astounded, all are waiting, all are watching; with the advent of My light, all rejoice at the day they were born, and likewise all curse the day they were born. Conflicting emotions are impossible to articulate; tears of self-castigation form rivers, and are borne away in the sweeping torrent, gone without trace in an instant. Once again, My day presses close upon all humanity, once again arousing the human race, giving humanity another new beginning. My heart beats and, following the rhythms of My heartbeat, the mountains leap for joy, the waters dance with joy, and the waves beat upon the rocky reefs. It is difficult to express what is in My heart. I want to make all unclean things burn into ashes under My gaze; I want to make all the sons of disobedience disappear from before My eyes, never more to tarry in existence. Not only have I made a new beginning in the dwelling place of the great red dragon, I have also embarked on new work in the universe. Soon, the kingdoms of the earth will become My kingdom; soon, the kingdoms of the earth will forever cease to exist because of My kingdom, because I have already achieved victory, because I have returned triumphant. The great red dragon has exhausted every conceivable means to disrupt My plan, hoping to erase My work on the earth, but can I grow disheartened by its deceitful stratagems? Can I be frightened into losing confidence by its threats? There has never been a single being in heaven or on earth that I have not held in the palm of My hand; how much the more is this true of the great red dragon, this device that serves as a foil to Me? Is it not also an object to be manipulated in My hands?

During My incarnation in the human world, mankind has come, under My guidance, unwittingly to this day and has come unwittingly to know Me. But, as for how to walk the path that lies ahead, no one has an inkling, no one is aware—and less still does anyone have a clue in what direction that path will take them. Only with the Almighty watching over them will anyone be able to walk the path to the end; only guided by the lightning in the East will anyone be able to cross the threshold that leads to My kingdom. Among men, there has never been one who has seen My face, one who has seen the lightning in the East; how much the less has there been one who has heard the utterances from My throne? In fact, from ancient times, not one human being has come into direct contact with My person; only today, now that I have come into the world, do men have a chance to see Me. But even now, men still do not know Me, just as they only look upon My face and only hear My voice yet do not understand My meaning. All human beings are like this. Being one of My people, do you not feel deep pride when you see My face? And do you not feel abject shame because you do not know Me? I walk among men and I live among men, for I have become flesh and I have come into the human world. My aim is not merely to enable humanity to look upon My flesh; more importantly, it is to enable humanity to know Me. What is more, I will, through My incarnate flesh, convict humanity of their sins; I will, through My incarnate flesh, vanquish the great red dragon and annihilate its lair.

Although the human beings that populate the earth are as numerous as the stars, I know them all as clearly as the palm of My own hand. And, though the human beings that “love” Me are also as innumerable as grains of sand in the sea, only a few are chosen by Me: only those who pursue the bright light, who are apart from those who “love” Me. I do not overestimate man, nor do I underestimate him; rather, I make demands of man according to his natural attributes, and so what I require is the kind of person who seeks Me sincerely, that I may achieve My goal of choosing people. There are wild beasts without number in the mountains, but they are all as tame as sheep before Me; unfathomable mysteries lie beneath the waves, but they present themselves to Me as clearly as all things upon the face of the earth; in the heavens above are realms that man can never reach, yet I walk about freely in those inaccessible realms. Man has never recognized Me in the light, but has only seen Me in the world of darkness. Are you not in exactly the same situation today? It was at the climax of the great red dragon's rampages that I formally assumed the flesh to do My work. When the great red dragon revealed its true form for the first time, I bore witness to My name. When I walked about on the roads of mankind, not one being nor one person was startled into wakefulness, and so when I came incarnate into the human world, nobody knew it. But when, in My incarnate flesh, I began to take up My work, humanity awoke and was startled out of their dreams by My thunderous voice, and from this moment, they commenced their life under My guidance. Among My people, I have once again begun new work. Having said My work on earth is not finished suffices to show that My people of whom I spoke are not those I require in My heart, but nevertheless, I still choose some from among them. It is evident from this that I am not only enabling My people to know the incarnate God, but also cleansing them. Due to the severity of My administrative decrees, a great majority of people are still in danger of being cast out by Me. Unless you make every effort to deal with yourself, to subdue your own body—unless you do this, you will assuredly become an object that I despise and reject, to be cast down into hell, just as Paul received chastisement directly from My hands, from which there was no escape. Have you gleaned something from My words? As before, it is My intention to cleanse the church, to continue to purify the people I need, because I am God Himself, who is all-holy and immaculate. I will make My temple not just iridescent with the colors of the rainbow, but also spotlessly clean, with an interior to match its exterior. In My presence, you, one and all, should think back on what you have done in the past, and decide whether today you can resolve to give Me perfect satisfaction in My heart.

Man does not merely not know Me in My flesh; more than that, he has failed to understand his own self that resides in a fleshly body. For so many years, human beings have been deceiving Me, treating Me as a guest from outside. So many times, they have shut Me outside the "doors to their homes"; so many times, they have, standing before Me, paid Me no heed; so many times they have renounced Me in the midst of other men; so many times, they have denied Me in front of the devil; and so many times, they have attacked Me with their bickering mouths. Yet I do not keep account of man's weaknesses, nor do I, on account of his disobedience, ask for a tooth for a tooth. All I have done is apply medicine to his illnesses, in order to cure his incurable diseases, thereby restoring him to health, that he may come to know Me. Has not all I have done been for the sake of humanity's survival, for the sake of giving humanity a chance at life? Many times have I come into the world of men, but men did not, because I had come in My own person into the world, pay Me any regard; instead, each acted as he saw fit and sought a way out for himself. Little do they know that every single road below the heavens comes from My hands! Little do they know that every single thing below the heavens is subject to My ordination! Which one of you dares to harbor resentment in their heart? Which one of you dares lightly to come to a settlement? I have just been quietly going about My work in humanity's midst—that is all. If, during the period of My incarnation, I had not sympathized with man's weakness, then all of humanity would, solely on account of My incarnation, have been frightened out of their wits and, as a result, fallen into Hades. It is only because I humbled Myself and hid Myself away that humanity has escaped catastrophe, met deliverance from My chastisement, and, in this way, arrived at today. Mindful of how difficult it was to arrive at today, should you not cherish all the more the tomorrow that is still to come?

Within My words and utterances are hidden a number of My intentions, but people know and understand nothing of these; they keep receiving My words from the outside and following them from the outside, and they cannot understand My heart or intuit My will from within My words. Though I make My words clear, who is there who understands them? From Zion I came into mankind. Because I have clothed Myself in normal humanity and in human skin, people merely come to know My appearance from the outside—but they do not know the life that lies within Me, nor do they recognize the God of the Spirit, and only know the man of flesh. Could the real God Himself be unworthy of your trying to know Him? Could the real God Himself be unworthy of your effort to “dissect” Him? I detest the corruption of the whole human race, but I feel compassion for their weakness. I am also dealing with the old nature of the whole human race. As one of My people in China, are you not also a part of the human race? Among all My people, and among all My sons, that is, among the ones that I have chosen out of the whole human race, you belong to the lowest group. For this reason, I have expended the most energy on you, the greatest effort. Do you still not cherish the blessed life you enjoy today? Are you still hardening your hearts to rebel against Me and set upon your own designs? Were it not for My continuing pity and love, the whole of humanity would long ago have fallen captive to Satan and turned into “delectable morsels” in its mouth. Today, amidst all people, those who genuinely expend themselves for Me and genuinely love Me are still rare enough to be counted on the fingers of one hand. Today, could the title of “My people” be your personal property? Has your conscience simply grown cold as ice? Are you truly worthy of becoming the people I require? Think back on the past, and look again at today—which of you has satisfied My heart? Which of you has shown genuine solicitude for My intentions? Had I not prompted you, you would still not have awakened, but would have remained as if frozen, and again, as if in hibernation.

In the midst of the roiling waves, man sees My wrath; in the tumbling welter of dark clouds, man is awestruck and terrified, and knows not where to flee, as though in fear that the thunder and rain will sweep them away. Then, after the swirling snowstorm has drifted past, their mood grows easy and light as they delight in nature's beautiful scenery. But, at such moments, which one among them has ever experienced the boundless love I bear for humanity? In their hearts is only My figure, but not the essence of My Spirit: Is man not defying Me openly? When the tempest has blown over, all mankind is as if renewed; as if, following refinement through tribulations, they have regained light and life. Did you not also, after enduring the blows I struck, have the good fortune to arrive at today? But, when today is gone and tomorrow comes, will you be able to maintain the purity that followed the downpour? Will you be able to maintain the devotion that followed your refinement? Will you be able to maintain the obedience of today? Can your devotion remain steadfast and unchanging? Is this a demand that lies beyond man's capacity to fulfill? I live every day among mankind, and act together with mankind, in their midst, yet no one has ever noticed this. If not for the guidance of My Spirit, who, out of the entire human race, would still exist in the present age? When I say I live and act in the company of men, am I exaggerating? In the past, I said "I created humanity, and guided the whole of humanity, and commanded the whole of humanity"; was this not actually so? Is it possible that your experience of these things is insufficient? The mere phrase "service-doer" would take your whole lives to explicate. Without actual experience, a human being will never come to know Me—they will never be able to come to know Me through My words. Today, however, I have come personally into your midst—will this not be of more benefit to your understanding? Is My incarnation not also salvation for you? If I did not descend into mankind in My own person, the entire human race would long ago have been permeated with notions, which is to have become Satan's possessions, for what you believe in is merely Satan's image and has nothing whatever to do with God Himself. Is this not My salvation?

When Satan comes before Me, I do not recoil from its wild ferocity, nor am I frightened by its hideousness: I simply ignore it. When Satan tempts Me, I see through its trickery, causing it to slink away in shame and humiliation. When Satan fights with Me and tries to wrest away My chosen people, I wage war with it in My flesh; and in My flesh I sustain and shepherd My people so that they may not easily fall down or get lost, and I lead them every step of the way. And when Satan retires in defeat, I will have gained glory from My people, and My people will have borne beautiful and resounding witness to Me. Hence, I will take the foils in My plan of management and cast them once and for all into the bottomless pit. This is My plan; this is My work. In your lives, there may come a day when you will meet with such a situation: Would you willingly allow yourself to fall captive to Satan, or will you let Me obtain you? This is your own fate, and you must consider it carefully.

Life in the kingdom is the life of the people and God Himself. All humanity lies under My care and protection, and all are engaged in a fight to the death with the great red dragon. In order to win this final battle, in order to finish off the great red dragon, all people should offer their whole beings to Me in My kingdom. The "kingdom" spoken of here refers to a life that is lived under the direct governance of divinity, in which I am shepherd to all humankind, who accept My training directly, so that their lives, though still on earth, are as if in heaven—a true realization of life in the third heaven. Although I am in My flesh, I do not suffer the limitations of the flesh. So many times have I come into man's midst to listen to his prayers, and so many times have I, walking among men, enjoyed their praises; though human beings have never been aware of My existence, I still go about My work in this way. In My dwelling place, which is the place where I am hidden—nevertheless, in My dwelling place, I have defeated all My enemies; in My dwelling place, I have gained real experience of living on earth; in My dwelling place, I am observing man's every word and action, and watching over and conducting the whole of the human race. If humanity could feel solicitude for My intentions, thereby satisfying My heart and giving Me pleasure, I would then surely bless all mankind. Is this not what I intend for humanity?

As mankind lies comatose, only the peals of My thunder arouse them from their dreams. And when they open their eyes, these blasts of cold radiance hurt many of their eyes, such that they lose their sense of direction, and know not from where they have come nor where they are going. Most people are struck by the laser-like beams and collapse in a heap under the tempest, their bodies swept away by the gushing torrents, leaving behind no trace. In the light, the survivors are finally able to see My face clearly, and only then do they come to know something of My external appearance, such that they no longer dare to look Me directly in the face, deeply fearful lest I visit My chastisement and curses once more upon their flesh. So many people cry out and weep bitterly; so many fall into despair; so many form rivers with their blood; so many become corpses, drifting aimlessly this way and that; so many people, finding their own place in the light, feel a sudden pang of heartache and shed tears for their long years of unhappiness. So many people, compelled by the light, confess their uncleanness and resolve to reform themselves. So many people, being blinded, have already lost the joy of living and in consequence have no mind to take notice of the light, and thus continue to stagnate, waiting for their end. And so many people are hoisting up the sails of life and, under the guidance of the light, eagerly anticipate their tomorrow. ... Today, who among mankind does not exist in this state? Who does not exist within My light? Even if you are strong, or though you may be weak, how can you avoid the coming of My light?

Chapter 14

Throughout the ages, no human has entered the kingdom, and thus none has enjoyed the grace of the Age of Kingdom nor seen the King of the kingdom. Despite the fact that under the illumination of My Spirit many people have prophesied the kingdom's beauty, they know only its exterior, and not its intrinsic significance. Today, as the kingdom comes into formal existence on earth, most of humanity still knows not what exactly is to be accomplished or what realm people are ultimately to be brought to during the Age of Kingdom. I fear that everyone is in a state of confusion about this. Because the day of the kingdom's complete realization has not yet fully come, all humans are befuddled and unable to comprehend it clearly. My work in divinity begins formally with the Age of Kingdom, and it is with this formal commencement of the Age of Kingdom that My disposition is beginning to progressively manifest itself to humanity. Therefore, it is at this very moment that the holy trumpet formally begins to sound, proclaiming to all. When I formally take My power and reign as King in the kingdom, all My people shall, over time, be made complete by Me. When all the nations of the world are disrupted, that is precisely when My kingdom will be established and shaped, as well as when I will transform and turn to face the entire universe. At that time, all people shall see My glorious face and witness My true countenance. Ever since the creation of the world, from Satan's corruption of people to the extent to which they are corrupt today, it has been due to their corruption that I have become, from their point of view, more and more hidden and increasingly unfathomable. Humanity has never seen My true face and never directly interacted with Me. Only in hearsay and myth has there been a "Me" in the human imagination. I therefore accord with this human imagination—that is, with human notions—to tackle the "Me" in people's minds, that I might change the state of "Me" that they have harbored for so many years. This is the principle of My work. Not a single person has been able to know it through and through. Although humans have prostrated themselves to Me and come before Me to worship Me, I do not enjoy such human acts, for in their hearts, people hold not My image, but an image other than Mine. Therefore, because they lack an understanding of My disposition, people do not at all recognize My true face. As a result, when they believe they have resisted Me or violated My administrative decrees, I still turn a blind eye—and therefore, in their memories, I am either a God who shows mercy to people rather than chastising them, or am the God Himself who does not mean what He says. These are all imaginings born of human thought, and they do not accord with the facts.

Day after day I stand in observance over the universe, and I humbly hide Myself in My dwelling place, experiencing human life and closely studying humanity's every deed. No one has ever truly offered up themselves to Me; no one has ever pursued the truth. No one has ever been conscientious toward Me or made resolutions before Me and then kept to their duty. No one has ever allowed Me to dwell in them, nor valued Me as people would their own lives. No one has ever seen, in practical reality, all that My divinity is; no one has ever been willing to be in contact with the practical God Himself. When the waters swallow humans whole, I save them from those stagnant waters and give them a chance to live anew. When people lose their confidence to live, I pull them up from the brink of death, granting them the courage to go on so that they can use Me as a foundation for their existence. When people disobey Me, I cause them to know Me from within their disobedience. In light of humanity's old nature, and in light of My mercy, rather than putting humans to death, I allow them to repent and make a fresh start. When they suffer famine, even though they have a single breath left in their bodies, I wrest them from death, preventing them from falling prey to Satan's trickery. So many times people have seen My hand, so many times they have witnessed My kind countenance and smiling face, and so many times they have seen My majesty and wrath. Though humans have never known Me, I do not seize upon their weaknesses as opportunities for being deliberately provocative. Experiencing humanity's hardships has enabled Me to sympathize with human weakness. It is only in response to people's disobedience and ingratitude that I mete out varying degrees of chastisements.

I conceal Myself when people are busy, and reveal Myself in their free time. People imagine Me to know all things; they regard Me as God Himself who accedes to all supplications. Most, therefore, come before Me only to seek God's help, not because of any desire to know Me. When in the throes of illness, people urgently plead for My aid. In times of adversity, they confide their difficulties to Me with all their might, the better to shed their suffering. However, not a single human being has been able to also love Me whilst in a state of comfort; not a single person has reached out in times of peace and happiness, that I might partake of their joy. When their little families are happy and well, people have long since cast Me aside or shut the door on Me, prohibiting Me from entering so that they can enjoy their families' blessed happiness. The human mind is too narrow; it is too narrow even to hold a God as loving, merciful, and approachable as I. So many times I have been rejected by humans in their times of joyous laughter; so many times I have been leaned upon as a crutch by humans as they stumbled; so many times I have been forced into the role of doctor by people who were suffering from illness. How cruel humans are! They are utterly unreasonable and immoral. Not even the feelings with which humans are supposedly equipped can be perceived in them; they are almost completely devoid of any trace of humanity. Ponder the past, and compare it to the present: Are any changes taking place within you? Have you done away with some of the things from your past? Or has that past yet to be replaced?

I have traversed mountain ranges and river valleys, experiencing the ups and downs of the world of humans. Among them I have roamed, and among them I have lived for many a year, yet it appears that humanity's disposition has changed little. And it is as if people's old nature has taken root and sprouted in them. Never are they able to change that old nature; they merely improve it somewhat upon its original foundation. As people say, the substance has not changed, but the form has changed much. People all seem to be trying to fool Me and dazzle Me, that they might bluff it out and win My appreciation. I neither admire nor pay attention to human trickery. Rather than flying into a rage, I adopt an attitude of looking but not seeing. I plan to grant humanity a certain degree of leeway and, thereafter, deal with all humans together. As humans are all worthless wretches who do not love themselves, and who do not cherish themselves at all, why, then, would they even need Me to show mercy and love once again? Without exception, humans do not know themselves, nor do they know just how much they are worth. They should put themselves on a scale to be weighed. Humans pay Me no heed, so I do not take them seriously, either. They pay no attention to Me, so neither do I need to work any harder on them. Is this not the best of both worlds? Does this not describe you, My people? Who among you has made resolutions in front of Me and not discarded them afterward? Who has made long-term resolutions before Me instead of frequently setting their minds on things? Always, humans make resolutions before Me in times of ease, and then write them all off in times of adversity; then, later, they pick their resolve back up and set it before Me. Am I so disrespectable that I would casually accept this junk that humanity has picked up from the garbage heap? Few humans hold fast to their resolutions, few are chaste, and few offer things that are most precious to them in sacrifice to Me. Are all of you not the same? If you are unable to keep to your duties as members of My people in the kingdom, then you will be detested and rejected by Me!

Humans are all creatures who lack self-knowledge, and they are unable to know themselves. Nevertheless, they know everyone else like the backs of their hands, as though everything others have done and said has first been “inspected” by them, right in front of them, and received their approval before being done. As a result, it is as if they have even taken full measure of everyone else, right down to their psychological states. Human beings are all like this. Even though they have entered into the Age of Kingdom today, their nature remains unchanged. They still do what I do in front of Me, whereas behind My back they begin to get up to their own unique “business.” However, afterward, when they come before Me, they are like completely different people, apparently calm and undaunted, with composed visages and a steady pulse. Is this not precisely what makes humans so despicable? So many people wear two completely different faces—one while in front of Me, and another when behind My back. So many of them act like newborn lambs when before Me, but when behind My back, they turn into fierce tigers and later act like little birds flitting merrily about the hills. So many show purpose and resolve to My face. So many come before Me seeking My words with thirst and longing, but when behind My back, they grow sick of them and renounce them, as though My utterances were an encumbrance. So many times, upon seeing the human race corrupted by My enemy, I have given up placing My hopes in humans. So many times, upon seeing them come before Me, tearfully seeking pardon, I have nevertheless, due to their lack of self-respect and stubborn incorrigibility, closed My eyes to their actions in anger, even when their hearts are genuine and their intentions sincere. So many times, I have seen people confident enough to cooperate with Me, who, when before Me, seem to be in My embrace, tasting of its warmth. So many times, having witnessed the innocence, liveliness, and adorability of My chosen people, how could I not take great pleasure on account of these things? Human beings know not how to enjoy their predestined blessings in My hands, for they do not understand what exactly is meant by both “blessings” and “suffering.” For this reason, humans are far from sincere in their seeking of Me. If tomorrow did not exist, then which of you standing before Me would be as pure as the driven snow and as unblemished as jade? Could it be that your love for Me is just something that can be exchanged for a delicious meal, a classy suit of clothing, or a high office with handsome emoluments? Can it be exchanged for the love that others have for you? Could it actually be that undergoing trials will spur people into abandoning their love for Me? Will suffering and tribulations cause them to complain about My arrangements? No one has ever truly appreciated the sharp sword that is in My mouth: They know only its superficial meaning without truly grasping what it entails. If human beings were genuinely able to see the sharpness of My sword, they would go scurrying like rats into their holes. Because of their numbness, humans understand nothing of the true meaning of My words, and so they have no clue as to how formidable My utterances are or just how much they reveal of human nature and how much of their own corruption has been judged by those words. For this reason, as a result of their half-baked ideas about what I say, most people have adopted a lukewarm attitude.

Within the kingdom, not only do utterances issue forth from My mouth, but My feet tread ceremoniously everywhere across all lands. In this way, I have triumphed over all unclean and filthy places, so that not only is heaven changing, but earth is also in the process of transformation, and is subsequently renewed. Within the cosmos, everything shines like new in the radiance of My glory, presenting a heartwarming aspect that ravishes the senses and lifts people’s spirits, as if it now exists in a heaven beyond the heavens, as conceived in the human imagination, unmolested by Satan and free from the assaults of external enemies. In the topmost reaches of the universe, the myriad stars take up their appointed places at My command, beaming their light through the astral regions in hours of darkness. Not one single being dares to harbor thoughts of recalcitrance, and so, in accordance with the substance of My administrative decrees, the entire universe is well regulated and in perfect order: No disturbance has ever arisen, nor has the cosmos ever been divided. I execute flying leaps above the stars, and when the sun shoots forth its rays, I blot out their warmth, sending giant flurries of snowflakes as big as goose feathers drifting down from My hands. When I change My mind, though, all that snow melts into a river, and in an instant, spring has sprung everywhere beneath the skies and emerald green has transformed the entire landscape upon the earth. I go wandering above the firmament, and immediately, the earth is shrouded in pitch-black darkness because of My form: Without warning, “night” has arrived, and throughout the world it grows so dark that one cannot see one’s hand in front of one’s face. Once the light is extinguished, humans seize this moment to embark upon a rampage of mutual destruction, snatching and plundering one from another. The nations of earth then fall into chaotic disunity and enter a state of muddy turbulence, until they are beyond all redemption. People struggle in the throes of suffering, moan and groan in the midst of their pain, and wail piteously in their anguish, yearning for the light to suddenly come to the human world once more and thus end the days of darkness and restore the vitality that once was in existence. However, I have long since left humanity, with a flick of My sleeves, never again to take pity on them for the wrongs of the world: Long have I detested and rejected the people of the entire earth, closed My eyes to the conditions there, turned My face away from humanity’s every move and gesture, and ceased to take pleasure in its immaturity and innocence. I have embarked upon another plan to make the world anew, so that this new world may find rebirth sooner, never again to be submerged. In humanity’s midst, so many outlandish states are waiting for Me to set them to rights, there are so many mistakes for Me to personally prevent from happening, there is so much dust for Me to sweep away, and there are so many mysteries for Me to unveil. All humanity awaits Me, and longs for My coming.

On earth, I am the practical God Himself who abides in the hearts of humans; in heaven, I am the Master of all creation. I have climbed mountains and forded rivers, and I have drifted in and out of humanity’s midst. Who dares to openly oppose the practical God Himself? Who dares to break away from the sovereignty of the Almighty? Who dares to assert that I am, beyond the shadow of a doubt, in heaven? Moreover, who dares to assert that I am incontrovertibly on earth? There is no one among all of humanity capable of articulating in every detail the places where I reside. Could it be that whenever I am in heaven, I am the supernatural God Himself, and that whenever I am on earth, I am the practical God Himself? Surely whether or not I am the practical God Himself cannot be determined by My being the Ruler of all creation or the fact that I experience the sufferings of the human world, can it? If that were the case, then would humans not be ignorant beyond all hope? I am in heaven, but I am also on earth; I am among the myriad objects of creation, and also among the masses. Humans can touch Me every day; moreover, they can see Me every day. As far as humanity is concerned, I seem to be sometimes hidden and sometimes visible; I seem to actually exist, yet I also seem to not exist. In Me lie mysteries unfathomable to humanity. It is as though all humans are peering at Me through a microscope in order to discover even more mysteries in Me, hoping thereby to dispel that uncomfortable feeling in their hearts. However, even if they were to use X-rays, how could humanity uncover any of the secrets I hold?

In the very moment that My people, as a result of My work, gain glory alongside Me, the great red dragon's lair will be unearthed, all the mud and dirt will be swept clean away, and all the polluted water, accumulated over countless years, will dry up in My burning fires, to exist no more. Thereupon, the great red dragon will perish in the lake of fire and brimstone. Are you genuinely willing to remain under My loving care so as not to be snatched away by the dragon? Do you really hate its deceitful stratagems? Who is able to bear staunch witness for Me? For the sake of My name, for the sake of My Spirit, and for the sake of My entire management plan, who can make an offering of all their strength? Today, when the kingdom is in the human world, is the time in which I have come in person among humanity. If this were not so, is there anyone who could venture forth into the battlefield on My behalf without any trepidation? So that the kingdom may take shape, so that My heart may be content, and furthermore, so that My day may come, so that the time may come when the myriad objects of creation are reborn and grow abundant, so that humans may be rescued from their sea of suffering, so that tomorrow may come, and so that it may be wondrous, and blossom and flourish and, moreover, so that the enjoyment of the future may come to pass, all humans are striving with all their might, sparing nothing in sacrificing themselves for Me. Is this not a sign that victory is already Mine? Is it not a mark of the completion of My plan?

The more that people exist in the last days, the more they will feel the emptiness of the world, and the less courage they will have for living life. For this reason, countless people have died in disappointment, countless others have been disappointed in their quests, and countless others suffer themselves to be manipulated by Satan's hand. I have rescued so many people and supported so many of them, and, so often, when human beings have lost the light, I have moved them back into a place of light so that they might know Me within the light and enjoy Me amidst happiness. Because of the coming of My light, adoration grows in the hearts of the people who dwell in My kingdom, for I am a God for humans to love—a God to whom humanity clings in fond attachment—and they are filled with an abiding impression of My form. Nevertheless, when all is said and done, there is no one who understands whether this is the working of the Spirit or a function of the flesh. It would take people an entire lifetime just to experience this one thing in detail. Humans have never despised Me in their hearts' innermost reaches; rather, they cling to Me in the depths of their spirits. My wisdom raises their admiration, the wonders that I work are a feast for their eyes, and My words boggle their minds, yet they cherish them dearly. My reality renders humans at a loss, dumbfounded and perplexed, and yet they are willing to accept it. Is this not precisely the measure of humans as they truly are?

Chapter 16

There is so much that I wish to say to man, so many things that I must tell him. But man is too lacking in the ability to accept; man is incapable of fully grasping My words according to that which I provide, and only understands one aspect, while remaining ignorant of the other. Yet I do not put man to death because of his powerlessness, nor am I aggrieved by his weakness. I merely do My work, and speak as I have always done, even though man does not understand My will; when the day comes, people will know Me in the depths of their hearts, and will remember Me in their thoughts. When I depart from this earth will be the exact time when I ascend to the throne in man's heart, which is to say, it will be when all men know Me. So, too, will it be when My sons and people rule over the earth. Those who know Me will assuredly become the pillars of My kingdom, and none but they will be qualified to rule and wield power in My kingdom. All those who know Me are possessed of My being, and able to live out Me among all men. I care not to what extent man knows Me: No one can hinder My work in any way, and man can offer Me no assistance and do nothing for Me. Man can only follow My guidance in My light, and seek My will in this light. Today, people have qualifications, and believe they can strut about in front of Me, and laugh and joke with Me without the slightest inhibition, and address Me as an equal. Still man does not know Me, still he believes that we are similar in nature, that we are both of flesh and blood, and both dwell in the human world. His reverence for Me is too meager; he reveres Me when he is before Me, but is incapable of serving Me before the Spirit. It is as if, for man, the Spirit does not exist at all. As a result, no man has ever known the Spirit; in My incarnation, people see only a body of flesh and blood, and do not perceive the Spirit of God. Can My will really be accomplished in such a way? People are experts at deceiving Me; they seem to have been specially trained by Satan in order to fool Me. Yet I am untroubled by Satan. I will still use My wisdom to conquer the whole of mankind and to defeat the corrupter of all mankind, in order that My kingdom may be established on earth.

Among man, there are those who have attempted to ascertain the size of the stars, or the magnitude of space. Yet never has their research proved fruitful, and all they can do is hang their heads in dismay and resign themselves to failure. Looking up among all men and observing the dynamics of man in his failures, I see none who are utterly convinced of Me, none who obey Me and submit to Me. How wild are the ambitions of man! When the entire face of the deep was murky, among man I began to taste the bitterness of the world. My Spirit travels throughout the world and looks upon the hearts of all people, yet so, too, do I conquer mankind in My incarnate flesh. Man does not see Me, for he is blind; man does not know Me, for he has grown numb; man opposes Me, for he is disobedient; man comes to bow down before Me, for he has been conquered by Me; man comes to love Me, for I am inherently worthy of man's love; man lives out Me and manifests Me, because My power and My wisdom make him after My heart. I have a place in man's heart, but never have I received love for Me from man that resides in his spirit. There are indeed things in man's spirit that he loves above all else, but I am not one of them, and so man's love is like a soap bubble: When the wind blows, it pops and is gone, never to be seen again. I have always been constant and unchanging in My attitude toward man. Could anyone among mankind have done the same? In the eyes of man, I am as impalpable and invisible as air, and for this reason the great majority of people seek only in the boundless sky, or upon the rolling sea, or upon the placid lake, or among empty letters and doctrines. There is not a single person who knows the essence of mankind, much less is there one who can say anything of the mystery within Me, and so I do not ask that man achieve the highest of standards that he imagines I require of him.

Amid My words, mountains topple, waters flow in reverse, man becomes submissive, and lakes begin to flow without cease. Though the roiling seas surge angrily toward the sky, amid My words such seas are becalmed like the surface of a lake. With the slightest wave of My hand, fierce gales immediately dissipate and depart from Me, and the human world is immediately returned to tranquility. But when I unleash My wrath, the mountains are immediately torn asunder, the ground immediately begins to convulse, water immediately dries up, and man is immediately beset by disaster. Because of My wrath, I pay no heed to the screams of man, provide no assistance in answer to his cries, for My anger is rising. When I am among the heavens, never have the stars been thrown into panic by My presence. Instead, they put their hearts into their work for Me, and so I bestow more light upon them and make them shine more brilliantly, so that they gain greater glory for Me. The brighter the heavens, the darker the world beneath; so many people have complained that My arrangements are unbecoming, so many have left Me to make their own kingdom, which they employ to betray Me, and reverse the state of darkness. Yet who has achieved this by their resolve? And who has been successful in their resolution? Who can reverse that which has been arranged by My hand? When spring spreads across the land, I secretly and quietly send light to the world, so that, on earth, man has a sudden sense of freshness in the air. Yet at that very moment, I obscure the eyes of man, so that he sees only a fog cloaking the ground, and all people and things are rendered indistinct. All that people can do is sigh to themselves and think, "Why did the light last only for a moment? Why does God give man only fog and haziness?" Amid people's despair, the fog disappears in an instant, but when they spy a glimmer of light, I unleash a torrent of rain upon them, and their eardrums are shattered by the thunderstorm as they sleep. Seized by panic, they have no time to take shelter, and are engulfed by the downpour. In an instant, all things beneath the heavens are washed clean in the midst of My wrathful ire. People no longer complain about the onset of heavy rain, and in them all is born reverence. Because of this sudden onslaught of rain, the great majority of people are drowned by the water that rains down from the sky, becoming corpses in the water. I look upon the entire earth and see that many are awakening, that many are repenting, that many are searching for the source of the waters in little boats, that many are bowing down to Me to ask for My forgiveness, that many have seen the light, that many have seen My face, that many have the courage to live, and that the whole world has been transformed. Following this great torrent of rain, all things have returned to what they were in My mind, and are no longer disobedient. Before long, the whole land is filled with the sound of laughter, everywhere on earth there is an atmosphere of praise, and nowhere is without My glory. My wisdom is everywhere on earth, and throughout the entire universe. Among all things are the fruits of My wisdom, among all people teem the masterworks of My wisdom; everything is like all things in My kingdom, and all people dwell in rest beneath My heavens like the sheep upon My pastures. I move above all men and am watching everywhere. Nothing ever looks old, and no person is as he used to be. I rest upon the throne, I recline above the whole universe, and I am fully satisfied, for all things have recovered their holiness, and I can peacefully reside within Zion once again, and the people on earth can lead serene, contented lives under My guidance. All peoples are managing everything in My hand, all peoples have regained their former intelligence and original appearance; they are no longer covered with dust, but, in My kingdom, are as holy as jade, each with a face like that of the holy one within man's heart, for My kingdom has been established among man.

Chapter 17

My utterances ring out like thunder, casting light in all directions and on the whole earth, and in the midst of thunder and lightning, humanity is struck down. No man has ever stayed firm in the midst of thunder and lightning; most men are terrified out of their wits at the coming of My light and know not what to do. When a faint glimmer of light begins to show in the East, many people, moved by this faint luminescence, are instantaneously roused from their illusions. Yet no one has ever realized that the day has come when My light descends upon the earth. The majority of men are dumbstruck by the sudden advent of the light, and some, with a gaze of curious fascination, observe the light's movements and the direction of its approach, while some stand at the ready as they face the light, that they might more clearly understand its source. Be this as it may, has anyone ever discovered how precious is the light of today? Has anyone ever awakened to the uniqueness of today's light? The majority of men are merely bewildered; they are wounded in the eyes and cast down into the mud by the light. Under this nebulous light, one may say the disorder covers the earth, an unbearably sorry sight that, examined closely, assails one with an overwhelming melancholy. One gathers from this that, when the light is strongest, the state of the earth will be less able to allow mankind to stand before Me.

Humanity lies in the radiance of the light; again, all humanity lies in the salvation of the light, yet also in its wounding: Is there anyone who is not amidst the light's killing blows? Is there anyone who can escape the burning of the light? I have walked all over the universe, strewing with My hands the seeds of My Spirit, so that all humanity upon the earth will on this account be moved by Me. From heaven's highest height, I look down upon the whole earth, watching the grotesque and fantastic phenomena of the creatures on earth. The surface of the ocean seems to be suffering the shock of an earthquake: Seabirds fly this way and that, looking for fish to swallow up. Meanwhile, the bottom of the sea remains in ignorance, and the surface conditions are utterly unable to rouse it into consciousness, because the ocean's bottom is as serene as the third heaven: Here, living things, great and small, coexist in harmony, never once engaging in "conflicts of mouth and tongue." Among the myriad bizarre and whimsical phenomena, it is hardest for humanity to please Me. The position I have given man is too high, and his ambition is thus too great, and in his eyes, there is always a measure of disobedience. In My discipline of man, within My judgment of him, there has been much that is painstaking, much that is benevolent, but of these things, mankind has not the least inkling. I have never treated any human being harshly; I have only administered suitable corrections when mankind had been disobedient, and only proffered suitable help when he is weak. But, when humanity keeps aloof from Me and moreover makes use of Satan's deceitful stratagems to rebel against Me, I will exterminate mankind forthwith, leaving them without another chance to make grand displays of their skills before Me, so that they will no longer be able to swagger about pompously, bullying others, upon the face of the earth.

I wield My authority upon the earth, unfolding My work in its entirety. All that is in My work is reflected upon the face of the earth; mankind has never, on earth, been able to grasp My movements in heaven, nor to ponder exhaustively the orbits and trajectories of My Spirit. The majority of human beings grasp only the minutiae that lie outside the spirit, unable to comprehend the actual state of the spirit. The demands that I make of humanity do not issue from My vague self that is in heaven, or from the imponderable self that I am on the earth; I make suitable demands according to the stature of man on earth. I have never put anyone in difficulties, nor have I ever asked anyone to "squeeze out his blood" for My pleasure—could My demands be limited only to such conditions? Of the myriad creatures on earth, which one does not submit to the dispositions of the words in My mouth? Which of these creatures, coming before Me, is not incinerated completely by My words and My burning fire? Which of these creatures dares to "strut about" in proud exultation before Me? Which of these creatures does not bow down before Me? Am I the God that merely imposes silence on creation? Of the myriad things in creation, I choose those that satisfy My intention; of the myriad human beings of mankind, I choose those who care for My heart. I choose the best of all the stars, thereby adding a faint gleam of light to My kingdom. I go walking upon the earth, dispersing My fragrance everywhere, and, in every place, I leave behind My form. Each place reverberates with the sound of My voice. People everywhere linger on the beautiful scenes of yesterday, for all humanity is remembering the past ...

All humanity longs to see My face, but when I descend in person upon the earth, they are all averse to My arrival, and they banish the light's arrival, as if I were man's enemy in heaven. Man greets Me with a defensive light in his eyes, and remains constantly alert, deeply afraid that I might have other plans for him. Because human beings regard Me as an unfamiliar friend, they feel as if I harbor the intent of killing them indiscriminately. In man's eyes, I am a deadly antagonist. Having tasted My warmth in the midst of calamity, man nevertheless remains unaware of My love, and is still bent on fending Me off and defying Me. Far from taking advantage of his condition to take action against him, I enfold man in the warmth of embrace, fill his mouth with sweetness, and put needful food into his stomach. But, when My wrathful ire shakes the mountains and rivers, I will no longer, on account of man's cowardice, bestow on him these different forms of succor. At this moment, I will wax furious, refusing all living things a chance to repent and, abandoning all My hopes for man, I will mete out the retribution he so richly deserves. At this time, thunder and lightning flash and roar, like the ocean's waves raging in anger, like tens of thousands of mountains crashing down. For his rebelliousness, man is felled by the thunder and lightning, and other creatures are wiped out in the blasts of thunder and lightning, and the whole universe descends abruptly into chaos, and creation is unable to recover the primal breath of life. The myriad hosts of humanity cannot escape the thunder's roar; in the midst of flashes of lightning, human beings, horde upon horde, topple over into the swift flow, to be swept away by torrents that cascade down from the mountains. All of a sudden, the world of "men" converges in the place of man's "destination." Corpses drift about on the ocean's surface. All of humanity goes far away from Me on account of My wrath, for man has sinned against the essence of My Spirit, and his rebellion has offended Me. But, in the places empty of water, other men still enjoy, amid laughter and song, the promises that I have vouchsafed unto them.

When all people are silent, I emit a gleam of light before their eyes. Thereupon, men become clear of mind and bright of eye, no longer willing to keep silent; thus, spiritual feeling is summoned up in their hearts immediately. As this happens, all humanity is resurrected. Casting aside their unspoken grievances, all men come before Me, having won another chance at survival through the words I proclaim. This is because human beings all wish to live on the face of the earth. Yet who among them has ever had the intention of living for My sake? Who among them has ever uncovered splendid things in himself that he offers for My enjoyment? Who among them has ever detected My alluring scent? All human beings are coarse and unrefined things: On the outside, they seem to dazzle the eyes, but their essence is not to love Me sincerely, because, in the deep recesses of the human heart, there has never been any element of Me. Man is too lacking: Comparing him to Me seems to reveal a gulf as great as that between heaven and earth. Even so, I do not strike man's weak and vulnerable spots, nor do I deride him on account of his deficiencies. My hands have been at work on earth for thousands of years, and all the while, My eyes have kept watch over all of humanity. Yet I have never casually taken up a single human life to play with as if it were a toy. I observe the pains man has taken and understand the price he has paid. As he stands before Me, I do not wish to catch man off guard in order to chastise him, nor do I wish to bestow on him undesirable things. Instead, all this time, I have only provided for man and given unto him. So, all man enjoys is My grace, it is all the bounty that comes from My hand. Because I am on earth, man has never had to suffer the torments of hunger. Rather, I allow man to receive the things in My hands he may enjoy, and I allow mankind to live within My blessings. Does not all mankind live under My chastisement? Just as there is abundance in the depths of the mountains, and a profusion of things to enjoy in the waters, do not the people living within My words today have, all the more, food to appreciate and taste? I am on earth, and mankind enjoys My blessings on earth. When I leave the earth behind, at which time My work also reaches its completion, humankind will no longer receive My indulgence on account of their weakness.

Chapter 18

In a flash of lightning, every animal is revealed in its true form. So too, illuminated by My light, man has regained the sanctity he once possessed. Oh, corrupt world of old! At last, it has toppled over into the filthy water and, sinking below the surface, has dissolved into mud! Oh, all mankind, of My own creation! At last they have come back to life again in the light, found the foundation for existence, and ceased to struggle in the mud! Oh, the myriad things of creation that I hold in My hands! How can they not, through My words, be renewed? How can they not, in the light, give play to their functions? Earth is no longer deathly still and silent, heaven no longer desolate and sad. Heaven and earth, no longer separated by a void, are united as one, never to be sundered again. On this jubilant occasion, at this moment of exultation, My righteousness and My holiness have extended throughout the universe, and all mankind extols them without ceasing. The cities of heaven are laughing with joy, and the kingdom of earth is dancing with joy. At this time, who is not rejoicing, and who is not also weeping? Earth in its primordial state belongs to heaven, and heaven is united with earth. Man is the cord uniting heaven and earth, and because of man's sanctity, because of man's renewal, heaven is no longer concealed from earth, and earth is no longer silent toward heaven. The faces of mankind are wreathed in smiles of gratification, and hidden in all their hearts is a sweetness that knows no bounds. Man does not quarrel with man, nor do men come to blows with one another. Are there any who, in My light, do not live peacefully with others? Are there any who, in My day, disgrace My name? All men direct their reverential gaze toward Me, and in their hearts, they secretly cry out to Me. I have searched mankind's every action: Among the men who have been cleansed, there are none who are disobedient to Me, none who pass judgment on Me. All mankind is suffused with My disposition. All men are coming to know Me, are drawing closer to Me and adoring Me. I stand fast in the spirit of man, am exalted to the highest pinnacle in man's eyes, and flow through the blood in man's veins. The joyous exaltation in man's heart fills every place on the face of the earth, the air is brisk and fresh, dense fogs no longer blanket the ground, and the sun shines resplendent.

Now, look upon My kingdom, where I am King over all, and where I wield power over all. From the beginning of creation until the present day, My sons have, guided by Me, undergone so many of life's hardships, so many of the world's injustices, so many vicissitudes of the human realm, but now they dwell in My light. Who does not weep for yesterday's injustices? Who does not shed tears for the hardships withstood to reach today? And again, are there any who do not take this occasion to dedicate themselves to Me? Are there any who do not take this opportunity to express the passion swelling in their hearts? Are there any who, at this moment, do not give voice to what they have experienced? At this time, all human beings are consecrating the best part of themselves to Me. How many are tormented with regret for their follies of yesterday, how many abominate themselves for yesterday's pursuits! Human beings have all come to know themselves, they have all seen Satan's deeds and My wonderfulness, and inside their hearts, there is now a place for Me. No longer will I meet with aversion or rejection among men, for My great work has already been accomplished, and is hindered no more. Today, among the sons of My kingdom, are there any who have not given thought to their own concerns? Are there any who do not have more considerations on account of the ways in which My work is done? Are there any who have sincerely offered themselves up for My sake? Have the impurities inside your hearts lessened? Or have they increased? If the impure elements in your hearts have not decreased, and neither have they increased, then I will assuredly throw away such people as you. What I want are holy people after My own heart, not unclean demons that rebel against Me. Even though My demands of mankind are not high, the inner world of men's hearts is so complicated that mankind cannot readily accord with My will or immediately fulfill My intentions. The great majority of human beings are secretly exerting themselves in hopes of seizing the final garland of victory. The great majority of men are striving with all their might, not daring to slacken for even a moment, deeply afraid of falling captive to Satan a second time. They dare no longer presume to harbor grievances against Me, but are constant in showing their loyalty before Me. I have heard heartfelt words spoken by so many people, accounts from so many people about their painful experiences in the midst of suffering; I have seen so many, in the direst straits, unflinchingly offer up their loyalty to Me, and I have watched so many, as they walked the rocky path, search for a way out. In these circumstances, they have never complained; even when, unable to find the light, they grew somewhat dispirited, they never once complained. But I have also heard so many people giving vent to curses from the depths of their hearts, imprecating Heaven and accusing earth, and I have seen, too, so many people abandon themselves to despair in the midst of their distress, throwing themselves away like trash into a garbage can, to be coated with filth and grime. I have heard so many people quarreling one with another, because of a change in position, which leads to a change in their countenances, thus changing their relationships with their fellow men, so that friends cease to be friends and become enemies, attacking each other with their tongues. The great majority of people use My words like bullets from a machine gun, opening fire on others unawares, until the world of men is everywhere filled with a noisy clamor that shatters the tranquil calm. Fortunately, this day has now come; otherwise who knows how many might have perished under the relentless sweep of this machine gun fire.

Following the issuance of My words, and keeping pace with the conditions of all mankind, My kingdom, step by step, descends onto the earth. No longer does man harbor worrisome thoughts, or “preoccupy” himself with other people, or “take thought” on their behalf. And so, contentious disputes on earth are no more, and, following the issuance of My words, the various “weapons” of the modern age are withdrawn. Man finds peace again with man, the human heart once more radiates a spirit of harmony, and no longer is anyone defending themselves against covert attack. All mankind has returned to a normal state and embarked upon a new life. Dwelling in new surroundings, a goodly number of people look around them, feeling as if they have entered into an entirely new world, and because of this, they are not able to adapt to their present environment right away or to enter at once onto the right track. And so, it is a case of “the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak” as far as mankind is concerned. Although I have not, like man, tasted the bitterness of adversity Myself, I nonetheless know all there is to know about man’s inadequacies. I am intimately acquainted with man’s needs, and My understanding of his weaknesses is complete. For this reason, I do not make fun of man for his shortcomings; I only administer, depending on his unrighteousness, a fitting measure of “education,” the better to enable everyone to get onto the right track, so that mankind will cease to be wandering orphans and instead become babies with a place to call home. Nevertheless, My actions are governed by principles. If men are unwilling to enjoy the bliss that is in Me, I can only go along with what they have set their hearts upon and send them into the bottomless pit. At this point, no one should harbor grievances in their heart anymore, but all should be able to see My righteousness in the arrangements I have made. I do not compel mankind to love Me, nor do I strike any man for loving Me. In Me is total freedom, total release. Though man’s fate rests in My hands, I have given man a free will, which is not subject to My control. In this way, human beings will not invent ways of getting into “trouble” on account of My administrative decrees, but will rather, relying on My magnanimity, obtain “release.” And so, many people seek within their liberation for their own way out, rather than being held in restraint to Me.

I have always treated mankind with a liberal hand, never encumbering men with insoluble problems, never putting any single person in difficulty. Is this not so? Although a great many people do not love Me, far from being vexed by this kind of attitude, I have given them freedom, allowing them leeway to the extent of letting them swim about freely in the sea of bitterness and suffering. For man is a dishonorable vessel; though he sees the blessing that I hold in My hand, he has no interest in enjoying it, but would rather pluck the scourge from the hand of Satan, thereby dooming himself to be consumed by Satan as “nourishment.” Of course, there are some who have seen My light with their eyes, and so, even though they are living in the obscuring mists of the present time, they have not, on account of these mists, lost faith in the light, but continue to grope and seek through those mists—albeit along a path strewn with obstacles. When man rebels against Me, I hurl My wrathful ire upon him, and so man may perish by his disobedience. When he obeys Me, I remain hidden from him, in this way exciting a love in the depth of his heart, a love that seeks not to wheedle Me, but to afford Me enjoyment. So many times, in man’s quest for Me, have I closed My eyes and kept silent, in order to elicit his true faith. But when I do not speak, man’s faith changes in an instant, and all I see are his “false goods,” for man has never sincerely loved Me. It is only when I manifest Myself that men all make a tremendous show of “faith”; but when I am hidden in My secret place, they grow weak and faint of heart, as if afraid of offending Me; there are even some who, unable to see My face, subject Me to a “deep processing,” thus negating the truth of My existence. So many people remain in this state; so many have this mentality. It is no more than the predilection of all men to cover up what is ugly in themselves. Because of this, they are reluctant to call attention to their own inadequacies, and only admit to the truth of My words with gritted teeth and concealed faces.

Chapter 19

Taking My words as the basis for their survival—this is humanity’s obligation. People must establish their own share in each and every part of My words; not to do so would be seeking their own destruction and inviting contempt. Humanity does not know Me, and because of this, instead of bringing their own lives to Me to offer in exchange, all they do is parade in front of Me with the trash in their hands, trying thereby to give Me satisfaction. However, far from being satisfied with things as they are, I continue to make demands on humanity. I love people’s contributions, but hate their demands. All humans have hearts full of greed; it is as if the human heart is held in thrall by the devil, and no one can break free and offer their heart up to Me. When I speak, people listen to My voice with rapt attention; when I fall silent, though, they again begin their own “enterprises” and cease entirely to heed My words, as if My words were simply an adjunct to their “enterprises.” I have never been lax with humanity, and yet I have been patient with and tolerant toward humanity. And so, as a result of My leniency, human beings all overestimate themselves and are incapable of self-knowledge and self-reflection; they merely take advantage of My patience to deceive Me. Not a single one among them has ever sincerely cared for Me, and not a single one has truly treasured Me as an object dear to their heart; only when they have idle moments to spare do they give Me their perfunctory regard. The effort I have expended on humanity is already beyond measure; furthermore, I have worked on humans in unprecedented ways, and apart from this, I have given them an additional burden, in order that, out of what I have and what I am, they might gain some knowledge and undergo some change. I do not ask people to be mere “consumers”; I also ask them to be “producers” who defeat Satan. Though I may not demand that humanity do anything, nonetheless, I do have standards for the demands I make, for there is a purpose in what I do, as well as a basis for My actions: I do not, as people imagine, play around haphazardly, nor did I fashion the heaven and earth and the myriad objects of creation howsoever I wished. In My work, humans should see something, and gain something. They should not squander away the springtime of their youth, or treat their own lives like garments on which dust is carelessly allowed to gather; rather, they should stand strict guard over themselves, taking from My bounty to provide for their own enjoyment, until, because of Me, they cannot turn back toward Satan, and, because of Me, they mount attacks against Satan. Are not My demands of humanity so simple?

When a faint glimmer of light begins to show in the East, all the people within the universe pay a bit more attention to it. No longer steeped in slumber, humans venture forth to observe the source of this eastern light. Due to their limited capability, no one has yet been able to see the place whence the light originates. When all within the universe is fully illuminated, humans rouse from sleep and dream, and only then do they realize that My day has gradually come upon them. All humanity celebrates because of the coming of the light, and therefore no longer lies sound asleep or is in a stupor. Under the radiance of My light, all humanity becomes clear of mind and sight, and suddenly awakens to the joy of living. Under cover of a shrouding mist, I look out over the world. The animals are all at rest; because of the arrival of a faint glimmer of light, everything has become conscious that a new life is approaching. For this reason, the animals, too, are all crawling out from their burrows, looking for food. Plants, of course, are no exception, and in the light’s radiance their green leaves glisten with a lustrous sheen, waiting to play their own part for Me while I am on earth. All human beings wish for the coming of the light, and yet they fear its advent, deeply anxious that their own ugliness will no longer find concealment. This is because humans are stark naked, and lack anything to cover them. Thus, so many people have fallen into panic as a result of the light's coming, and are in a state of shock because of its appearance. So many people, upon seeing the light, are filled with boundless remorse, abhorring their own uncleanness, yet, powerless to alter the facts, can do nothing but wait for Me to pronounce sentence. So many people, refined by suffering in the darkness are, upon seeing the light, suddenly struck by its profound meaning, and thenceforth hug the light close to their bosoms, deeply afraid of losing it again. So many people, instead of being thrown out of orbit by the light's sudden appearance, simply go about the daily work in hand because they have been blind for long years and therefore not only do not notice that the light has come, but are also not gratified by it. In humans' hearts, I am neither lofty nor lowly. As far as they are concerned, it makes no difference if I exist or not; it is as though people's lives would not get any lonelier if I did not exist, and if I did exist, their lives would not become any more joyful. Because human beings do not cherish Me, the enjoyments that I afford them are few. However, as soon as humans give Me even just an ounce more adoration, I will also make a change in the attitude I bear toward them. For this reason, only when humans have grasped this law will they be fortunate enough to dedicate themselves to Me and ask for the things that I hold in My hand. Surely their love for Me is not bound solely to their own interests? Surely their faith in Me is not bound solely to the things that I give? Could it be that, unless they see My light, humans are unable to love Me sincerely by means of their faith? Surely their strength and vigor are not really restricted to the conditions of today? Could it be that humanity needs courage in order to love Me?

As a result of My existence, the myriad objects of creation make obedient submission in the places where they reside, and do not, in the absence of My discipline, indulge in licentious abandon. Therefore, the mountains become boundaries between nations upon the land, the waters become barriers to keep people of different lands apart, and the air becomes that which flows from person to person in the spaces above the earth. Only humanity is incapable of truly obeying the requirements of My will; this is the reason I say that, out of all creation, humans alone belong in the category of the disobedient. Humanity has never truly submitted to Me, and for this reason I have, all along, kept humans under strict discipline. If, in the midst of humanity, it should come to pass that My glory extends across the entire universe, then I will surely take all of My glory and make it manifest before humankind. Because in their defilement humans are unfit to look upon My glory, for thousands of years I have never come into the open, remaining hidden instead; for this reason, My glory has never been manifest before them, and they have always fallen into the abyss of sin. I have forgiven humans for their unrighteousness, but they all know not how to preserve themselves, and are instead always leaving themselves open to sin, allowing it to harm them. Does this not show humanity's lack of self-respect and self-love? In humanity's midst, can anyone truly love? How many ounces can humanity's devotion weigh? Are there not adulterated goods mixed into people's so-called authenticity? Is their devotion not a complete mishmash? What I require is their undivided love. Humans do not know Me, and though they may seek to know Me, they will not give Me their true and earnest hearts. From humans I do not exact what they are unwilling to give. If they give Me their devotion, I will accept it without a polite demurrer. If they do not trust Me, however, and refuse to offer up even one iota of themselves to Me, then, rather than growing more vexed on that account, I will simply dispose of them in some other way and arrange a suitable destination for them. The thunder, rolling across the skies, will strike humans down; the high mountains, as they topple, will bury them; the wild beasts in their hunger will devour them; and the oceans, surging, will close over their heads. As humanity engages in fratricidal conflict, all humans will seek their own destruction in the calamities arising from amongst them.

The kingdom is expanding in humanity's midst, it is forming in humanity's midst, and it is standing up in humanity's midst; there is no force that can destroy My kingdom. Of My people who are in the kingdom of today, which of you is not a human being among human beings? Which of you lies outside the human condition? When My new starting point is announced to the multitude, how will humanity react? You have seen with your own eyes the state of humankind; surely you do not still harbor hopes of enduring forever in this world? I am now walking abroad amongst My people and I live in their midst. Today, those who bear genuine love for Me—such people are blessed. Blessed are those who submit to Me, they will surely stay in My kingdom. Blessed are those who know Me, they will surely wield power in My kingdom. Blessed are those who seek after Me, they will surely escape from Satan's bonds and enjoy My blessings. Blessed are those who are able to forsake themselves, they will surely enter into My possession and inherit My kingdom's bounty. Those who run around for Me I will remember, those who make expenditures for Me I will joyfully embrace, and to those who make offerings to Me I will grant enjoyments. Those who find enjoyment in My words I will bless; they will surely be the pillars that hold up the ridgepole in My kingdom, they will surely have matchless abundance in My house, and no one can compare with them. Have you ever accepted the blessings that you were given? Have you ever sought the promises that were made for you? You will surely, under the guidance of My light, break through the stranglehold of the forces of darkness. You will surely not, in the midst of darkness, lose the light guiding you. You will surely be the master of all creation. You will surely be an overcomer before Satan. You will surely, at the downfall of the kingdom of the great red dragon, stand up amid the myriad throngs to bear witness to My victory. You will surely stand firm and unwavering in the land of Sinim. Through the sufferings you endure, you will inherit My blessings, and will surely radiate My glory throughout the entire universe.

Chapter 20

The riches of My household are beyond counting and unfathomable, yet man has never come to Me to enjoy them. Man is incapable of enjoying himself alone, nor of protecting himself using his own efforts; instead, he has always placed his trust in others. Of all those I look upon, no one has ever sought Me deliberately and directly. They all come before Me at the urging of others, following the majority, and they are unwilling to pay the price or spend the time to enrich their lives. Hence, among man, no one has ever lived in reality, and all people live lives that are without meaning. Because of the long-established ways and customs of man, the bodies of all people are suffused with the odor of earthly soil. As a result, man has grown numb, insensitive to the world's desolation, and he instead busies himself with the work of enjoying himself in this frozen world. Man's life has not the slightest warmth, and is devoid of any trace of humanity or light—yet he has been ever self-indulgent, abiding a lifetime bereft of value in which he rushes about without achieving anything. In the blink of an eye, the day of death draws near, and man dies a bitter death. In this world, he has never accomplished anything, or gained anything—he arrives here in a hurry, and departs in a hurry. None of those in My eyes have ever brought anything, or taken anything away, and so man feels that the world is unfair. Yet none are willing to hurry away. They merely await the day when My promise from heaven will suddenly come among man, allowing them, at the time when they have gone astray, to once more behold the way of eternal life. Thus, man fixates upon My every deed and action to see whether I have really kept My promise to him. When he is in the midst of affliction, or in extreme pain, or beset by trials and about to fall, man curses the day of his birth so that he may sooner escape his troubles and move to another ideal place. But when the trials have passed, man is filled with joy. He celebrates the day of his birth on earth and asks that I bless his day of birth; at this time, man no longer mentions the oaths of the past, deeply fearful that death will come upon him a second time. When My hands raise up the world, people dance with joy, they are no longer sorrowful, and they all depend on Me. When I cover My face with My hands, and press people beneath the ground, they immediately feel short of breath, and are barely able to survive. They all cry out to Me, terrified that I will destroy them, for they all wish to behold the day when I gain glory. Man takes My day as the capital of his existence, and it is only because people long for the day when My glory will arrive that mankind has survived until today. The blessing decreed by My mouth is that those who are born during the last days are fortunate enough to behold all of My glory.

Throughout the ages, many have departed from this world in disappointment, and with reluctance, and many have come into it with hope and faith. I have arranged for many to come, and have sent many away. Countless people have passed through My hands. Many spirits have been cast into Hades, many have lived in the flesh, and many have died and been reborn on earth. Yet never have any of them had the opportunity to enjoy the blessings of the kingdom today. I have given man so much, yet he has gained little, for the onslaught of Satan's forces has left him unable to enjoy all of My riches. He has only had the good fortune to look upon them, but has never been able to fully enjoy them. Man has never discovered the treasure house in his body to receive the riches of heaven, and so he has lost the blessings that I have bestowed upon him. Is man's spirit not the very faculty that connects him to My Spirit? Why has man never engaged Me with his spirit? Why does he draw near to Me in the flesh, yet is incapable of doing so in spirit? Is My true face a face of the flesh? Why does man not know My essence? Has there really never been any trace of Me in the spirit of man? Have I completely disappeared from the spirit of man? If man does not enter into the spiritual realm, how can he grasp My intentions? In the eyes of man, is there that which can directly penetrate the spiritual realm? Many are the times that I have called out to man with My Spirit, yet man acts as if he has been pricked by Me, regarding Me from a distance, in great fear that I will lead him into another world. Many are the times that I have inquired in the spirit of man, yet he remains utterly oblivious, profoundly afraid that I will enter into his home and seize the opportunity to strip him of all his belongings. Thus, he shuts Me outside, leaving Me faced with nothing but a cold, tightly-closed door. Many are the times that man has fallen and I have saved him, yet after waking he immediately leaves Me and, untouched by My love, shoots Me a guarded look; never have I warmed the heart of man. Man is an emotionless, cold-blooded animal. Even though he is warmed by My embrace, never has he been deeply moved by it. Man is like a mountain savage. Never has he treasured all of My cherishment of mankind. He is unwilling to approach Me, preferring to dwell among the mountains, where he endures the threat of wild beasts—yet still he is unwilling to take refuge in Me. I do not compel any man: I merely do My work. The day will come when man swims to My side from amid the mighty ocean, so that he might enjoy all the riches on earth and leave behind the risk of being swallowed by the sea.

As My words are consummated, the kingdom is gradually formed on earth and man is gradually returned to normality, and thus there is established on earth the kingdom in My heart. In the kingdom, all the people of God recover the life of normal man. Gone is the frosty winter, replaced by a world of cities of spring, where spring lasts all year. No longer are people faced with the gloomy, miserable world of man, and no longer do they endure the cold chill of the world of man. People do not fight with each other, countries do not go to war against each other, no longer is there carnage and the blood that flows from carnage; all lands are filled with happiness, and everywhere teems with warmth between men. I move throughout the world, I enjoy from atop My throne, and I live among the stars. The angels offer unto Me new songs and new dances. No longer does their own fragility cause tears to run down their faces. No longer do I hear, before Me, the sound of the angels weeping, and no longer does anyone complain of hardship to Me. Today, you all live before Me; tomorrow, you will all exist in My kingdom. Is this not the greatest blessing that I bestow upon man? Because of the price you pay today, you will inherit the blessings of the future and will live among My glory. Do you still not wish to engage with the essence of My Spirit? Do you still wish to slay yourselves? People are willing to pursue the promises that they can see, even though they are ephemeral, yet none are willing to accept the promises of tomorrow, even though they will last for eternity. The things that are visible to man are the things that I will annihilate, and the things that are impalpable to man are the things that I will accomplish. This is the difference between God and man.

Man has calculated when My day will come, yet no one has ever known the exact date, and thus man can live only in the midst of stupor. Because man's longings resound across the limitless skies and then disappear, man has lost hope over and over again, such that he has descended to his current circumstances. The goal of My utterances is not to make man pursue dates, nor to drive him to his own destruction as a result of his despair. I wish to make man accept My promise, and I wish for people all over the world to have a share of My promise. What I want are living creatures that are full of life, not corpses that have been steeped in death. Since I recline at the table of the kingdom, I will command all people on earth to receive My inspection. I do not allow the presence of any unclean thing before Me. I do not brook any man's interference in My work; all those who interfere in My work are cast into dungeons, and after they are released they are still beset by catastrophe, receiving the scorching flames of earth. When I am in My incarnate flesh, whosoever debates My work with My flesh will be loathed by Me. Many are the times that I have reminded all men that I am without kin on earth, and whosoever looks upon Me as an equal, and pulls Me to them so that they may reminisce about times past with Me, will be subject to destruction. This is what I command. In such matters I am not in the least bit lenient toward man. All those who interfere in My work and offer counsel to Me are chastised by Me, and will never be forgiven by Me. If I do not speak plainly, man will never come to his senses, and will unwittingly fall into My chastisement—for man does not know Me in My flesh.

Chapter 21

Man falls down in the midst of My light, and stands fast because of My salvation. When I bring salvation to the entire universe, man tries to find ways to enter among the flow of My restoration, yet there are many who are washed away without trace by this torrent of restoration; there are many who are drowned and engulfed by the torrential waters; and there are many, too, who stand fast amid the torrent, who have never lost their sense of direction, and who have thus followed the torrent until today. I advance in step with man, yet still, man has never known Me; he knows only the clothes that I wear on the outside, but is ignorant of the riches hidden within Me. Though I provide to man and give to him each day, he is incapable of true acceptance, is unable to receive all the riches given by Me. Nothing of man's corruption escapes My notice; to Me, his inner world is as clear as the bright moon on the water. I do not treat man in a slipshod manner, nor go through the motions with him; it is just that man is unable to take responsibility for himself, and thus the whole of mankind has always been depraved, and even today remains incapable of extricating itself from such depravity. Poor, pitiable mankind! Why is it that man loves Me, but is unable to follow the intentions of My Spirit? Have I really not revealed Myself to mankind? Has mankind really never seen My face? Could it be that I have shown too little mercy toward mankind? O the rebels of all mankind! They must be crushed beneath My feet; they must vanish amid My chastisement, and they must, on the day on which My great enterprise is completed, be cast out from among mankind, so that the whole of mankind knows their ugly face. The fact that man rarely sees My face or hears My voice is because the whole world is too turbid, and its clamor is too great, and thus man is too lazy to search for My face and to try to understand My heart. Is this not the cause of man's corruption? Is this not why man is in need? The whole of mankind has always been among My provision; if it were not so, if I were not merciful, who would have survived until today? The riches in Me are without equal, yet all disaster is also held within My hands—and who is able to escape from disaster whenever they please? Do the prayers of man, or the weeping within his heart allow him to do so? Man has never truly prayed to Me, and so among all of mankind, no one has ever lived their entire life amid the light of truth; people only live in light that flickers fitfully in and out of appearance. It is this that has led to mankind's deficiency today.

Everyone is chomping at the bit, willing to go all out for Me in order to get something from Me, and so, in keeping with man's psychology, I give him promises to inspire true love in him. Is it really man's true love that gives him strength? Is it man's loyalty to Me that has moved My Spirit in heaven? Heaven has never been the slightest bit affected by the actions of man, and if My treatment of man were based on his every action, then the whole of mankind would live amid My chastisement. I have seen many people with tears coursing down their cheeks, and I have seen many people offer up their hearts in exchange for My riches. Despite such "piousness," I have never freely given My all to man as a result of his sudden urges, for man has never been gladly willing to devote himself before Me. I have plucked off the masks of all people and thrown these masks into the lake of fire, and as a result, man's supposed loyalty and pleas have never held firm before Me. Man is like a cloud in the sky: When the wind howls, he fears the mightiness of its force and so floats hurriedly after it, deeply fearful that he will be struck down for his disobedience. Is this not the ugly face of man? Is this not the so-called obedience of man? Is this not the "true feeling" and phony goodwill of man? Many people refuse to be convinced by all the utterances that issue from My mouth, and many do not accept My evaluation, and hence their words and actions reveal their rebellious intentions. Is what I speak of contrary to the old nature of man? Have I not given man a fitting definition according to the “laws of nature”? Man does not truly obey Me; if he truly searched for Me, I would not have to say so much. Man is worthless trash, and I must use My chastisement to force him onward; if I did not do so, how—even though the promises I give him are sufficient for his enjoyment—could his heart be moved? Man has always lived amid painful struggle for many years; he has, it can be said, always lived in despair. As a result, he has been left despondent, and physically and mentally exhausted, and so he does not joyfully accept the riches that I give him. Even today, no one is able to accept all the sweetness of the spirit from Me. People can only remain poor, and await the last day.

Many people wish to truly love Me, but because their hearts are not their own, they have no control over themselves; many people truly love Me as they experience the trials given by Me, yet they are incapable of grasping that I really exist, and merely love Me in emptiness, and not because of My actual existence; many people lay their hearts before Me and then pay no attention to their hearts, and thus their hearts are snatched away by Satan whenever it gets the chance, and then they leave Me; many people genuinely love Me when I provide My words, yet do not cherish My words in their spirits, instead casually using them like public property and tossing them back to where they came from whenever they feel like it. Man searches for Me amidst pain, and he looks unto Me among trials. During times of peace he enjoys Me, when in peril he denies Me, when he is busy he forgets Me, and when he is idle he goes through the motions for Me—yet never has anyone loved Me throughout their whole life. I wish for man to be earnest before Me: I do not ask that he give Me anything, but only that all people take Me seriously, that, instead of wheedling Me, they allow Me to bring back the sincerity of man. My enlightenment, illumination, and the cost of My efforts pervade all people, yet so too does the true fact of man’s every action pervade all people, as does their deception of Me. It is as if the ingredients of man’s deception have been with him since the womb, as if he has possessed these special skills of trickery since birth. Furthermore, he has never given the game away; no one has ever seen through to the source of these deceitful skills. As a result, man lives amid deception without realizing it, and it is as if he forgives himself, as if it is the arrangements of God rather than his deliberate deception of Me. Is this not the very source of man’s deception of Me? Is this not his cunning scheme? Never have I been befuddled by the blandishments and chicanery of man, for I figured out his substance long ago. Who knows how much impurity is in his blood, and how much of Satan’s venom is within his marrow? Man grows more accustomed to it with each passing day, such that he does not feel the harm done by Satan, and thus has no interest in finding out the “art of a healthy existence.”

When man is distant from Me, and when he tests Me, I hide Myself from him among the clouds. As a result, he is unable to find any trace of Me, and lives only by the hand of the wicked, doing all that they ask. When man is close to Me, I appear to him and I do not hide My face from him, and at this time, man sees My kind countenance. He suddenly comes to his senses, and though he does not realize it, in him is born love for Me. In his heart, he suddenly feels an incomparable sweetness, and wonders how he could not have known of My existence in the universe. Thus man has a greater sense of My loveliness, and, moreover, of My preciousness. As a result, he wishes to never leave Me again, he sees Me as the light of his survival, and, deeply fearful that I will leave him, he hugs Me tight. I am not moved by man's zeal, but am merciful to him because of his love. At this time, man instantly lives amid My trials. My face disappears from his heart, and he immediately feels that his life is empty, and his thoughts turn to escaping. At this moment, man's heart is laid bare. He does not embrace Me because of My disposition, but asks that I protect him because of My love. Yet when My love hits back at man, he immediately changes his mind; he tears up his covenant with Me and breaks away from My judgment, unwilling to look upon My merciful face ever again, and so he changes his view of Me, and says that I have never saved man. Does true love really involve nothing but mercy? Does man only love Me if he lives beneath My shining light? He looks back to yesterday but lives in today—is this not the human condition? Will you really still be like this tomorrow? What I want is for man to have a heart that yearns for Me in its very depths, not one that satisfies Me with superficialities.

Chapter 22

Man lives amid the light, yet he is unaware of the preciousness of the light. He is ignorant of the essence of the light, and the source of the light, and, moreover, to whom the light belongs. When I confer the light among man, I immediately examine the conditions among man: Because of the light, all people are changing and growing, and have left the darkness. I look upon every corner of the universe, and see that the mountains are engulfed in fog, that the waters have frozen in the cold, and that, because of the coming of the light, people look to the East, that they might discover something more precious—yet man remains incapable of discerning a clear direction within the mist. Because the whole world is blanketed by fog, when I look on from among the clouds, there is never a man who discovers My existence. Man is searching on earth for something; he seems to be foraging; he intends, it seems, to await My arrival—yet he does not know My day, and can only look often to the glimmer of light in the East. Among all peoples, I seek those who accord truly with My own heart. I walk among all peoples, and live among all peoples, but man on earth is safe and sound, and so there are none who accord truly with My own heart. People do not know how to care for My will, they cannot see My actions, and they cannot move within the light and be shone on by the light. Although man ever treasures My words, he is incapable of seeing through the deceitful schemes of Satan; because man's stature is too small, he is unable to do as his heart wishes. Man has never loved Me sincerely. When I exalt him, he feels himself unworthy, but this does not make him try to satisfy Me. He merely holds the "station" I have given him in his hands and scrutinizes it; insensible to My loveliness, he instead persists in engorging himself on the benefits of his station. Is this not the deficiency of man? When the mountains move, could they make a detour for the sake of your station? When the waters flow, could they cease before man's station? Could the heavens and the earth be reversed by man's station? I was once merciful toward man, over and over again—yet no one cherishes or treasures this. They merely listened to it as a story, or read it as a novel. Do My words really not touch the heart of man? Do My utterances really have no effect? Could it be that no one believes in My existence? Man does not love himself; instead, he unites with Satan to attack Me, and uses Satan as an "asset" with which to serve Me. I will penetrate all the deceitful schemes of Satan, and stop the people of earth from accepting the deceptions of Satan, so that they do not oppose Me because of its existence.

In the kingdom, I am King—but instead of treating Me as its King, man treats Me as the "Savior that has descended from heaven." As a result, he longs for Me to give him alms and does not pursue knowledge of Me. So many have pleaded before Me like beggars; so many have opened their "sacks" to Me and implored Me to give them food to survive; so many have fixed greedy eyes upon Me like hungry wolves, wishing they could gobble Me up and fill their bellies; so many have bowed their heads in silence because of their transgressions and felt ashamed, praying for My clemency, or willingly accepting My chastisement. When I issue My utterances, the various follies of man appear preposterous, and his true form is revealed within the light; and in the shining light, man is unable to forgive himself. Thus, he hurries before Me to bow down and confess his sins. Because of man's "honesty," I draw him once more atop the chariot of salvation, and hence he is grateful to Me, and casts Me a loving look. Yet he remains unwilling truly to take refuge in Me, and has not given his heart to Me fully. He merely boasts of Me, yet he does not truly love Me, for he has not turned his mind to Me; his body is before Me, yet his heart is behind Me. Because man's understanding of rules is too poor and he has no interest in coming before Me, I provide him with appropriate support, so that he may turn toward Me from amid his pertinacious ignorance. This is precisely the mercy that I give unto man, and the method by which I strive to save him.

People throughout the universe celebrate the arrival of My day, and angels walk among all My people. When Satan causes trouble, the angels, because of their service in heaven, always help My people. They are not deceived by the devil because of human weakness but, because of the onslaught of the forces of darkness, endeavor all the more to experience the life of man through the fog. All My people submit beneath My name, and never does anyone rise up to oppose Me openly. Because of the labors of the angels, man accepts My name, and all are amid the stream of My work. The world is falling! Babylon is in paralysis! Oh, the religious world! How could it not be destroyed by My authority on earth? Who still dares to disobey and oppose Me? The scribes? Every religious official? The rulers and authorities on earth? The angels? Who does not celebrate the perfection and fullness of My body? Among all peoples, who does not sing My praises without cease, who is not unfailingly happy? I live in the land of the great red dragon's lair, yet this does not cause Me to tremble with fear or run away, for all of its people have already begun to loathe it. Never has anything done its "duty" before the dragon for the dragon's sake; instead, all things act as they see fit, and each goes its own way. How could the countries on earth not perish? How could the countries on earth not fall? How could My people not cheer? How could they not sing with joy? Is this the work of man? Is it the doing of man's hands? I gave man the root of his existence, and provided him with material things, yet he is dissatisfied with his current circumstances and asks to enter My kingdom. But how could he enter My kingdom so easily, without having paid a price, unwilling to offer his selfless devotion? Instead of exacting anything from man, I make requirements of him, so that My kingdom on earth may be filled with glory. Man has been guided by Me into the present age, he exists in this condition, and he lives amid the guidance of My light. If it were not thus, who among the people on earth would know their prospects? Who would understand My will? I add My provisions to the requirements of man; is this not in line with the laws of nature?

Yesterday, you lived amid wind and rain; today, you have entered into My kingdom and become its people; and tomorrow, you will enjoy My blessings. Who ever imagined such things? How much adversity and hardship will you experience in your life—do you know? I advance amid wind and rain, and have spent year after year among man, and have come in time to the present day. Are these not precisely the steps of My management plan? Who has ever added to My plan? Who can break away from the steps of My plan? I live in the hearts of hundreds of millions of people, I am King among hundreds of millions of people, and I have been rejected and slandered by hundreds of millions of people. My image is not truly within the heart of man. Man only perceives My glorious countenance dimly in My words, but because of the interference of his thoughts, he does not trust his own feelings; there is only a vague Me in his heart, but it does not remain there long. And so, his love of Me is also thus: His love before Me appears fitfully, as if each man loved Me according to his own temperament, as if his love winked in and out of view beneath hazy moonlight. Today, it is only because of My love that man remains and has had the good fortune to survive. If it were not thus, who among man would not, as a result of their emaciated body, be cut down by the laser? Man still does not know himself. He shows off before Me, and brags behind My back, yet no one dares to oppose Me before Me. However, man does not know the meaning of the opposition of which I speak; instead, he continues trying to fool Me, and continues exalting himself—in this, does he not openly oppose Me? I tolerate the weakness of man, but I am not lenient in the slightest toward opposition of his own making. Although he knows its meaning, he is unwilling to act in accordance with this meaning and merely acts according to his preferences, deceiving Me. I make plain My disposition in My words at all times, yet man is not reconciled to defeat—at the same time, he reveals his disposition. Amid My judgment, man will be utterly convinced, and amid My chastisement, he will finally live out My image and become My manifestation on earth!

Chapter 23

As My voice sounds out, as My eyes shoot forth fire, I am watching over the whole earth, I am observing the entire universe. All humanity is praying to Me, turning their gaze up to Me, beseeching Me to cease My anger, and swearing to rebel against Me no more. But this is no longer the past; it is now. Who can turn back My will? Surely not the prayers within men's hearts, nor the words in their mouths? Who has been able to survive until the present, if not because of Me? Who survives except by the words in My mouth? Who is not supervised by My eye? I carry out My new work on the whole earth, and who has ever been able to escape from it? Can the mountains evade it by dint of their height? Can the waters, by their multitudinous vastness, fend it off? In My plan, I have never lightly let any thing go, and so there has never been any person, nor any thing, that has eluded the grasp of My hands. Today, My holy name is extolled throughout humanity, and again, words of protest rise up against Me throughout humanity, and legends about My being on earth are rife throughout humanity. I do not tolerate men's judging Me, nor do I tolerate their dividing up My body, and still less do I tolerate their vituperations against Me. Because he has never truly known Me, man has always resisted and deceived Me, failing to cherish My Spirit or treasure My words. For his every deed and action, and for the attitude he bears toward Me, I give man the "reward" that is his due. And so, all men act with an eye to their reward, and not a single one has ever done any work involving self-sacrifice. Human beings are unwilling to render selfless dedication, but instead delight in rewards that can be got for nothing. Though Peter consecrated himself before Me, it was not for the sake of tomorrow's reward, but for the sake of the knowledge of today. Humanity has never genuinely communed with Me, but time and time again has dealt with Me in a superficial manner, thinking thereby to win My approval effortlessly. I have looked deep into man's heart, so I have unearthed in its innermost recesses "a mine of many riches," something of which even man himself is not yet aware, yet I have discovered anew. And so, only when they have seen "material evidence" do human beings cease their sanctimonious self-abasement and, with palms outstretched, admit to their own unclean state. Among men, there is much more that is new waiting for Me to "extract" it for the enjoyment of all humanity. Far from stopping My work on account of man's incapacitation, I prune him in accordance with My original plan. Man is like a fruit tree: Without pruning, the tree will fail to bear fruit and, in the end, all one sees are withered branches and fallen leaves, with no fruit dropping to the ground.

As I decorate the "inner chamber" of My kingdom day by day, no one has ever suddenly burst into My "workroom" to disrupt My work. All people are doing their utmost to cooperate with Me, deeply afraid of "being dismissed" and "losing their position" and thus reaching a dead end in their lives, where they may even fall into the "desert" that Satan has occupied. Because of man's fears, I comfort him every day, move him to love every day, and furthermore give him instruction amidst his daily life. It is as if human beings are all babies who have just been born; unless supplied with milk, they will soon depart this earth, to be seen no more. Amidst humanity's supplications, I come into the world of men and, straight away, humanity lives in a world of light, no longer sealed up inside a "room" from which they cry out their prayers to heaven. As soon as they see Me, men insistently make plaint of the "grievances" stored in their hearts, opening their mouths before Me to beg that food be dropped into them. But afterward, their fears allayed and composure restored, they no longer ask anything of Me, but fall soundly asleep, or else, denying My existence, they go off to mind their own affairs. In mankind's "abandonment" it is clearly evident how human beings, devoid of "feeling," carry out their "impartial justice" toward Me. Therefore, seeing man in his unlovely aspect, I depart silently and will no longer come down again readily at his earnest supplication. Unbeknownst to him, man's troubles grow day by day, and so, in the midst of his toil and moil, when he suddenly discovers My existence, he refuses to take "no" for answer and grabs hold of My lapels and ushers Me into his house as a guest. But, though he may set forth a sumptuous meal for My enjoyment, he has never once considered Me to be one of his own, instead treating Me as a guest in order to obtain a modicum of help from Me. And so, at this time, man unceremoniously presents his sorry condition before Me, hoping to get My "signature," and, like one in need of a loan for his business, he "tackles" Me with all his might. In his every gesture and motion, I catch a fleeting glimpse of man's intent: It is as though, in his view, I do not know how to read the meaning hidden in a person's facial expression or tucked away behind his words, or how to look deep into a person's heart. And so man confides in Me every experience in every encounter he has ever had, without error or omission, and afterward sets out his demands before Me. I hate and despise man's every deed and action. Among humanity, there has never been a single one who has done work that I love, as if humanity is intentionally antagonizing Me, and purposefully attracting My wrath: They all parade back and forth in front of Me, indulging their own will before My eyes. There is not a single one among humanity who lives for My sake, and in consequence, the existence of the entire human race has neither value nor meaning, causing humanity to live in an empty void. Even so, humanity still refuses to awaken, but continues to rebel against Me, persisting in its vanity.

In all the trials they have passed through, human beings have never once pleased Me. Because of their cruel iniquity, mankind does not aim to bear witness to My name; rather, they “run the other way” while relying on Me for sustenance. Man’s heart does not wholly turn to Me, and so Satan lays waste to him until he is a mass of wounds, his body covered in filth. But man still does not realize how repulsive is his countenance: All along he has kept venerating Satan behind My back. For this reason, with wrath I cast man down into the bottomless pit, making it so that he will never be able to free himself. Even so, in the midst of his piteous wailing, man still refuses to reform his mind, intent on opposing Me to the bitter end, and hoping thereby willfully to stir up My wrath. On account of what he has done, I treat him as the sinner he is and deny him the warmth of My embrace. From the first, the angels have served Me and obeyed Me without change or surcease, but man has always done the exact opposite, as if he came not from Me, but was born of Satan. The angels in their respective places all give Me their utmost devotion; they are unswayed by Satan’s forces, and only fulfill their duty. Suckled and nourished by the angels, the multitudes of My sons and My people all grow strong and healthy, not one among them weak or feeble. This is My doing, My miracle. As salvo after salvo of cannon fire inaugurates the founding of My kingdom, the angels, walking to the rhythmic accompaniment, come before My rostrum to submit to My inspection, because their hearts are free of impurity and idols, and they do not shy away from My inspection.

At the howling of the gale, the heavens come pressing down in an instant, suffocating all mankind so that they are no longer able to call upon Me as they wish. Without knowing it, all humanity has collapsed. The trees sway back and forth in the wind, from time to time branches are heard to snap, and all the withered leaves are blown away. The earth feels bleak and desolate all of a sudden, and people hug themselves tight, braced for the disaster that follows upon the autumn to strike them at any moment. The birds on the hills fly hither and thither, as if crying out their sorrow to someone; in mountain caves, lions roar, terrifying people with the sound, freezing their marrow and making their hair stand on end, and it is as if there is an ominous feeling, a presage of the end of mankind. Unwilling to await My pleasure in disposing of them, all men pray silently to the Sovereign Lord in heaven. But how can a gale be blocked by the noise of water flowing in a little brook? How can it suddenly be stopped by the sound of men’s invocations? How can the rage in the heart of the thunderclap be stilled for the sake of man’s timidity? Man sways back and forth in the wind; he runs hither and thither to hide himself from the rain; and amidst My wrath, human beings quake and tremble, deeply afraid that I will place My hand on their bodies, as if I am the muzzle of a gun pointed at all times at man’s breast, and again, as if he is My enemy, and yet he is My friend. Man has never discovered My true intentions for him, has never understood My true aims, and so, unawares, he offends against Me; unawares, he opposes Me; and yet, without meaning to, he has also seen My love. It is difficult for man to see My face in the midst of My wrath. I am hidden in the black clouds of My anger, and I stand, amid thunderclaps, above the entire universe, sending

My mercy down to man. Because man does not know Me, I do not chastise him for failing to understand My intent. In the eyes of men, I vent My wrath from time to time, I show My smile from time to time, but even when he sees Me, man has never truly seen the whole of My disposition and is still unable to hear the mellifluous noise of the clarion, for he has grown too numb and insensate. It is as if My image exists in man's memories, and My form in his thoughts. However, through humanity's progress unto the present day, there has never been a single person who has truly seen Me, because man's brain is too impoverished. For all that man has "dissected" Me, because his science is so inadequately developed, his scientific research has yielded no results as yet. And so, the subject of "My image" has always been a complete blank, with no one to fill it in, no one to break a world record, for even mankind's maintenance of his foothold in the present is already an inestimable consolation in the midst of great misfortune.

Chapter 24

My chastisement comes upon all people, yet it also remains distant from all people. The whole life of every person is filled with love and hate toward Me, and no one has ever known Me—and so man's attitude toward Me blows hot and cold, and is incapable of being normal. Yet I have always cared for and protected man, and it is only because of his dull-wittedness that he is incapable of seeing all of My deeds and understanding My eager intentions. I am the leading One among all nations, and I am the Most High among all people; it is simply that man does not know Me. For many years I have lived among man and experienced life in the world of man, yet he has always ignored Me and treated Me like a being from outer space. In consequence, because of differences in disposition and language, people treat Me like a stranger in the street. My clothing, it seems, is also too idiosyncratic, as a result of which man lacks the confidence to approach Me. Only then do I feel the desolation of life among man, and only then do I sense the injustice of the world of man. I walk among passers-by, observing all their faces. It is as if they live amidst an illness, an illness that fills their faces with melancholy; and it is as if they live also amidst chastisement, which prevents their release. Man shackles himself, and makes a show of modesty. Most people create a false impression of themselves before Me so that I might applaud them, and most people deliberately make themselves appear pitiable before Me so that they might gain My help. Behind My back, people all wheedle and disobey Me. Am I not right? Is this not man's survival strategy? Who has ever lived Me out in their lives? Who has ever exalted Me among others? Who has ever been bound before the Spirit? Who has ever stood firm in their testimony to Me before Satan? Who has ever added truthfulness to the "loyalty" they have toward Me? Who has ever been cast out by the great red dragon because of Me? People have cast their lot in with Satan and now wallow with it in the mire; they are experts at defying Me, they are the inventors of opposition to Me, and they are “advanced students” in their perfunctory ways of dealing with Me. For the sake of his own destiny, man searches here and there on earth, and when I beckon him, he remains unable to feel My preciousness, and continues to have “faith” in his reliance upon himself, unwilling to be a “burden” on others. Man’s “aspirations” are precious, yet never have anyone’s aspirations achieved full marks: They all crumble before Me, toppling without sound.

I speak each and every day, and each day I do new things. If man does not draw upon all of his strength, then he will have difficulty hearing My voice, and he will find it hard to see My face. The beloved may be extremely fine, and His speech of the utmost gentleness, but man is incapable of easily beholding His glorious face and hearing His voice. Throughout the ages, no one has ever easily beheld My face. I once spoke to Peter and “appeared” to Paul, but no one else—with the exception of the Israelites—has ever truly seen My face. Today, I have personally come among man to live together with him. Could it be that this does not seem rare and precious to you? Do you not wish to make the best use of your time? Do you want to let it pass you by in this way? Could the hands of the clock of time suddenly stop in people’s minds? Or could time flow backward? Or could man become young again? Could the blessed life of today ever come again? I do not give man an appropriate “reward” for his “waste.” I merely persist in doing My work, detached from all else, and do not stop the flow of time because man is busy, or because of the sound of his cries. For several thousand years, no one has been able to divide My strength, and no one has been able to upset My original plan. I will transcend space, and span the ages, and embark upon the core of My entire plan both above and among all things. Not a single person has been able to receive special treatment from Me or “rewards” from My hands, even though they open their mouths and pray for these things, and even though they stretch out their hands, and forgetting everything else, demand these things of Me. Not a single one of these people ever caused Me to be moved, and they have all been pushed back by My “heartless” voice. Most people still believe that they are “too young,” and so wait for Me to show great mercy, to be compassionate toward them for a second time, and they ask that I allow them to come in through the back door. Yet how could I casually meddle with My plan? Could I stop the earth rotating for the sake of man’s youth, so that he could live a few more years on earth? Man’s brain is so complex, yet it seems that there are also things it lacks. In consequence, in man’s mind there often appear “wonderful ways” to deliberately interrupt My work.

Although many are the times that I have forgiven man his sins and shown him special favor because of his weakness, many are also the times that I have given him appropriate treatment because of his ignorance. It is simply that man has never known how to appreciate My kindness, such that he has sunk to his present situation: covered in dust, his clothes in tatters, his hair covering his head like a growth of weeds, his face caked in grime, his feet shod in crude, self-made shoes, his hands like the claws of a dead eagle hanging weakly at his sides. When I open My eyes and look, it is as if man has just climbed out of the bottomless pit. I cannot help but be angry: I have always been tolerant of man, yet how could I allow the devil to come and go as it pleases from My holy kingdom? How could I allow a beggar to eat for free in My household? How could I tolerate having an unclean demon as a guest of My household? Man has always been “strict with himself” and “lenient toward others,” yet he has never been the least bit courteous toward Me, for I am the God in heaven, and so he treats Me differently, and has never had the slightest affection for Me. It is as if man’s eyes are especially astute: As soon as he encounters Me, the look on his face immediately changes and he adds a little more expression to his cold, impassive visage. I do not impose appropriate sanctions on man because of his attitude toward Me, but merely look upon the skies from above the universes and thence carry out My work on earth. In the memories of man, I have never shown kindness to any person, but neither have I ever mistreated anyone. Because man does not leave an “empty seat” for Me in his heart, when I fling caution to the wind and reside within him, he unceremoniously forces Me out, and then uses smooth talk and flattery to make excuses, saying he is too lacking and incapable to provide himself for My enjoyment. As he talks, his face frequently becomes overcast with “dark clouds,” as if disaster might come among man at any time. Yet still he asks Me to leave, without any consideration of the dangers involved. Even though I give to man with My words and the warmth of My embrace, he seems to have no hearing organ, and so he pays not the slightest attention to My voice, instead clutching his head as he swiftly makes his exit. I depart from man feeling a little disappointed, but also a little wrathful. Man, meanwhile, immediately vanishes amid the onslaught of great gales and mighty waves. Soon after, he cries out to Me, but how could he affect the movement of the wind and waves? Gradually, all trace of man is lost, until he is nowhere to be found.

Before the ages, I looked upon all lands from above the universes. I planned a great undertaking on earth: the creation of a mankind that was after My own heart, and the building of a kingdom on earth like the one in heaven, allowing My power to fill the skies and My wisdom to spread throughout the entire universe. And so today, thousands of years later, I continue with My plan. Yet no one knows of My plan or management on earth, and much less do they see My kingdom on earth. Hence, man chases shadows, and comes before Me to try to fool Me, wanting to pay a “silent price” for My blessings in heaven. In consequence, he provokes My wrath and I bring judgment upon him, but still he does not awaken. It is as if he is working underground, completely ignorant of that which is above ground as he pursues nothing other than his own prospects. Among all people, I have never seen anyone who lives beneath My shining light. They live in a world of darkness, and they seem to have become used to living amid the gloom. When the light comes they stay far away, and it is as if the light has disturbed their work; as a result, they look a little annoyed, as if the light has shattered all their peace and left them unable to sleep soundly. In consequence, man summons all his strength to drive away the light. The light, too, seems to lack awareness, and so rouses man from his sleep, and when man awakens, he closes his eyes, overcome with anger. He is somewhat displeased with Me, yet in My heart I know the score. I gradually intensify the light, causing all people to live amid My light, such that before long they become adept at associating with the light, and, furthermore, all treasure the light. At this time, My kingdom has come among man, all people dance with joy and celebrate, the earth is suddenly filled with jubilation, and several thousand years of silence is broken by the arrival of the light ...

Time passes, and in the blink of an eye, the present day has arrived. Under the guidance of My Spirit, all people live amid My light, and no longer does anyone think of the past or pay any attention to yesterday. Who has not ever lived and existed in the present day? Who has not spent wonderful days and months in the kingdom? Who has not lived beneath the sun? Though the kingdom has descended among man, no one has truly experienced its warmth; man only regards it from the outside, uncomprehending of its essence. During the time that My kingdom is formed, who does not rejoice because of it? Can the countries on earth really escape? Is the great red dragon really able to escape with its cunning? My administrative decrees are announced throughout the universe, they institute My authority among all people, and they come into effect across the cosmos; nevertheless, man has never truly known this. When My administrative decrees are revealed to the universe, that is also the time when My work on earth is about to be completed. When I rule and wield power among all men and when I am recognized as the one God Himself, My kingdom will fully descend to earth. Today, all people have a new beginning upon a new path. They have begun a new life, yet no one has ever truly experienced a life on earth akin to heaven. Do you truly live amid My light? Do you truly live among My words? Who does not give thought to their own prospects? Who is not distressed by their own fate? Who does not struggle amid a sea of affliction? Who does not wish to free themselves? Are the blessings of the kingdom given in exchange for man's hard work on earth? Could all of man's desires be fulfilled just as he wishes? I once presented the beautiful sight of the kingdom before man, yet he merely stared at it with greedy eyes, and there were none who truly aspired to enter it. I once "reported" the true situation on earth to man, but he did no more than listen, and did not face the words that came from My mouth with his heart; I once told man of the circumstances in heaven, yet he treated My words as wonderful tales, and did not truly accept that which My mouth described. Today, scenes of the kingdom flash among man, but has anyone ever “crossed peak and vale” in search of it? Without My urging, man would still not have awoken from his dreams. Is he really so enthralled by his life on earth? Are there really no high standards in his heart?

Those whom I predestined as My people are able to dedicate themselves to Me and live in harmony with Me. They are precious in My sight, and shine with love for Me in My kingdom. Among the people of today, who fulfills such conditions? Who is able to make the grade as per My requirements? Do My requirements really cause difficulties for man? Do I deliberately cause him to make mistakes? I am lenient toward all people, and give them preferential treatment. However, this is only toward My people in China. It is not that I underestimate you, nor that I look at you askance, but that I am practical and realistic toward you. People inevitably encounter setbacks in their lives, whether in regard to their families or the wider world. Yet whose hardship has been arranged by their own hand? Man is incapable of knowing Me. He has some understanding of My external appearance, yet he is ignorant of My essence; he does not know the ingredients of the food he eats. Who is able to carefully perceive My heart? Who is able to truly understand My will in My presence? When I come down to earth, it is cloaked in darkness and man is “fast asleep.” I walk among all places, and all that I see is torn and tattered and unbearable to look at. It is as if man is only willing to enjoy, and has no desire to heed “things from the outside world.” Unbeknownst to all people, I survey the entire earth, yet I see nowhere that is filled with life. Straight away, I blaze forth light and heat and look upon the earth from the third heaven. Although the light falls upon the land and the heat spreads over it, only the light and heat seem to be rejoicing; they arouse nothing in man, who is reveling in comfort. Seeing this, I immediately bestow among man the “rod” that I have prepared. As the rod falls, the light and the heat are gradually dispersed and the earth immediately becomes desolate and dark—and because of the darkness, man seizes the opportunity to carry on enjoying himself. Man has some, dim awareness of the arrival of My rod, but he does not react, and carries on enjoying his “blessings on earth.” Next, My mouth proclaims the chastisement of all men, and people throughout the universe are nailed to the cross upside down. When My chastisement comes, man is shaken by the noise of the mountains toppling and the earth tearing apart, after which he is startled awake. Shocked and terrified, he wishes to run away, but it is too late. As My chastisement falls, My kingdom descends upon earth and all countries are smashed to pieces, disappearing without trace and leaving nothing behind.

Each day I look upon the face of the universe, and each day I do My new work among man. Yet people all lose themselves in their work, and no one pays attention to the dynamics of My work or takes notice of the state of things beyond themselves. It is as if people live in a new heaven and a new earth of their own making, and want no one else to interfere. They all are engaged in the work of enjoying themselves, and admiring themselves as they do their “physical training exercises.” Is there really no place at all for Me in man's heart? Am I really incapable of being the Ruler of man's heart? Has man's spirit really left him? Who has ever carefully pondered the words from My mouth? Who has ever perceived the desire of My heart? Has man's heart really been taken over by some other thing? Many are the times that I have cried out to man, yet has anyone ever felt compassion? Has anyone ever lived in humanity? Man may live in the flesh, but he is without humanity. Was he born in the animal kingdom? Or was he born in heaven, and is possessed of divinity? I make My requirements of man, yet it is as if he does not understand My words, as if I am an unapproachable monster that is alien to him. So many times have I been disappointed by man, so many times have I become enraged by his poor performance, and so many times have I been aggrieved by his weakness. Why am I unable to arouse the spiritual feeling in man's heart? Why am I unable to inspire love in man's heart? Why is man unwilling to treat Me as the apple of his eye? Is man's heart not his own? Has some other thing taken up residence in his spirit? Why does man wail without cease? Why is he miserable? Why, when he is sorrowful, does he ignore My existence? Could it be that I have pricked him? Could it be that I have intentionally abandoned him?

In My eyes, man is the ruler of all things. I have given him no small amount of authority, allowing him to manage all things on earth—the grass upon the mountains, the animals among the forests, and the fish in the water. Yet instead of being happy because of this, man is beset by anxiety. His entire life is one of anguish and rushing about, of fun added to emptiness; in his whole life there are no new inventions and creations. No one is able to extricate themselves from this hollow life, no one has ever discovered a life of meaning, and no one has ever experienced a real life. Although the people of today all live beneath My shining light, they know nothing of life in heaven. If I am not merciful toward man and do not save mankind, then all people have come in vain, their lives on earth are without meaning, and they will depart in vain, with nothing to be proud of. The people of every religion, every sector of society, every nation, and every denomination all know the emptiness on earth, and they all seek Me and await My return—yet who is capable of knowing Me when I arrive? I made all things, I created mankind, and today I have descended among man. Man, however, hits back at Me, and takes revenge on Me. Is the work I do upon man of no benefit to him? Am I really incapable of satisfying man? Why does man reject Me? Why is man so cold and indifferent toward Me? Why is earth covered with corpses? Is this really the state of the world I made for man? Why is it that I have given man incomparable riches, yet he offers Me two empty hands in return? Why does man not truly love Me? Why does he never come before Me? Have all My words really been for nothing? Have My words vanished like heat from water? Why is man unwilling to cooperate with Me? Is the arrival of My day really the moment of man's death? Could I really destroy man at the time when My kingdom is formed? Why, during My entire management plan, has no one ever grasped My intentions? Why, instead of cherishing the utterances from My mouth, does man loathe and reject them? I condemn no one, but merely cause all people to return to calmness and carry out the work of self-reflection.

Rejoice, All Ye People!

In My light, people see the light again. In My word, people find the things that they enjoy. I have come from the East, I hail from the East. When My glory shines forth, all nations are lighted, all is brought into the light, not one thing remains in darkness. In the kingdom, the life that God's people live with God is happy beyond measure. The waters dance with joy at the blessed lives of the people, the mountains enjoy with the people My abundance. All men are striving, working hard, showing their loyalty in My kingdom. In the kingdom, rebellion is no more, resistance no more; the heavens and the earth depend on each other, man and I draw close in deep feeling, through life's sweet felicities, leaning one against the other.... At this time, I formally begin My life in heaven. Satan's disturbance is no more, and the people enter into rest. Throughout the universe, My chosen people live within My glory, blessed beyond compare, not as people living among people, but as people living with God. All humanity has gone through Satan's corruption, and drunk the bitter and the sweet of life to the lees. Now, living in My light, how can one not rejoice? How can one lightly forgo this beautiful moment and let it slip away? Ye People! Sing the song in your hearts and dance with joy for Me! Lift your sincere hearts and offer them up to Me! Beat your drums and play joyfully for Me! I radiate My delight through all the universe! To the people I reveal My glorious face! I shall call out in a loud voice! I shall transcend the universe! Already I reign among the people! I am exalted by the people! I drift in the blue heavens above and the people go walking along with Me. I walk among the people and My people surround Me! The people's hearts are joyous, their songs shake the universe, cracking the empyrean! The universe is no longer shrouded in fog; there is no more mud, no more sewage gathering. Holy people of the universe! Under My inspection you show your true countenance. You are not men covered in filth, but saints pure as jade, you are all My beloved, you are all My delight! All things come back to life! The saints have all returned to serve Me in heaven, entering My warm embrace, no longer weeping, no longer anxious, offering themselves up to Me, coming back to My home, and in their homeland they will love Me without surcease! Never changing in all eternity! Where is the sorrow! Where are the tears! Where is the flesh! The earth passes away, but the heavens are forever. I appear to all peoples, and all peoples praise Me. This life, this beauty, from time immemorial till the end of time, shall not change. This is the life of the kingdom.

Chapter 26

Who has abided in My home? Who has stood up for My sake? Who has suffered on My behalf? Who has pledged his word before Me? Who has followed Me to the present and yet has not become indifferent? Why are all human beings cold and unfeeling? Why has mankind abandoned Me? Why has humanity grown weary of Me? Why is there no warmth in the human world? While in Zion, I have tasted the warmth that is in heaven, and while in Zion I have enjoyed the blessing that is in heaven. Again, I have lived in mankind's midst, I have tasted the bitterness of the human world, and I have seen with My own eyes all the different states that exist amongst men. Unawares, man has changed as I have "changed," and only in this way has he arrived at the present day. I do not require that man be able to do anything for My sake, nor do I require that he make any increase on My account. I only want him to be able to act in accordance with My plan, and not to disobey Me or be a mark of shame to Me, but to bear resounding witness unto Me. Among men, there have been those who have borne Me good witness and glorified My name, but how can man's practices or conduct possibly satisfy My heart? How can he possibly align with My heart or satisfy My will? Of the mountains and waters on the earth, and of the flowers, grasses, and trees on the earth, all show the work of My hands, all exist for My name. Yet why can man not achieve the standard of My demand? Could this be due to his abject lowliness? Could it be due to My exaltation of him? Could it be that I am too cruel to him? Why is man always fearful of My demands? Today, among the multitudes in the kingdom, why is it you only listen to My voice but do not wish to see My face? Why do you look only at My words without matching them to My Spirit? Why do you separate Me so, to heaven and to earth? Could it be that I, when on earth, am not the same as I am in heaven? Could it be that I, when in heaven, cannot come down to the earth? Could it be that I, when on earth, am unworthy to be borne up to heaven? It is as though I, when on earth, am a lowly creature, as though I, when in heaven, am an exalted being, and as though there lies between heaven and earth an unbridgeable chasm. Yet in the world of man they seem to know nothing of the origins of these things, but have been running always against Me, as though My words have only sound and no meaning. All mankind spends effort on My words, undertaking investigations of their own into My outward semblance, but they all meet with failure, their efforts bearing no fruit, and instead are struck down by My words and dare not get up again.

When I try mankind's faith, not one human being bears true witness, not one is capable of offering his all; rather, man continues to hide and refuses to open himself, as if I were going to ravish his heart. Even Job never truly stood firm during his trial, nor did he emanate sweetness in the midst of suffering. All people produce a faint hint of green in the warmth of springtime; they never stay green in the cold blasts of winter. With his bony and emaciated stature, man cannot fulfill My intention. In all of humanity, there is no one who can serve as a model for others, because all men are basically alike and are no different from each other, with little to distinguish them one from another. For this reason, even today men are still unable to know My works fully. Only when My chastisement descends on all mankind will they, unbeknownst to themselves, become aware of My works, and without My doing anything or compelling anyone, man will come to know Me, and thereby witness My works. This is My plan, it is the aspect of My works that is made manifest, and it is what man should know. In the kingdom, the myriad things of creation begin to revive and regain their life force. Due to changes in the state of the earth, the boundaries between one land and another also begin to shift. I have prophesied that when land is divided from land, and land unites with land, this will be the time I will smash all nations to pieces. At this time, I will renew all of creation and repartition the entire universe, thereby putting the universe in order and transforming the old into the new—this is My plan and these are My works. When the nations and the peoples of the world all return before My throne, I will then take all the bounty of heaven and confer it upon the human world, so that, thanks to Me, that world will brim with matchless bounty. But so long as the old world continues to exist, I will hurl forth My rage upon its nations, openly promulgate My administrative decrees throughout the universe, and visit chastisement upon whosoever violates them:

As I turn My face to the universe to speak, all mankind hears My voice, and thereupon sees all the works I have wrought throughout the universe. Those who set themselves against My will, that is to say, who oppose Me with the deeds of man, will fall under My chastisement. I will take the multitudinous stars in the heavens and make them anew and, thanks to Me, the sun and the moon will be renewed—the skies will no longer be as they were and the myriad things on the earth will be renewed. All will become complete through My words. The many nations within the universe will be partitioned afresh and replaced by My kingdom, so that the nations upon the earth will disappear forever and all will become a kingdom that worships Me; all the nations of the earth will be destroyed and cease to exist. Of the human beings within the universe, all those belonging to the devil will be exterminated, and all who worship Satan will be laid low by My burning fire—that is, except for those now within the stream, all will be turned to ashes. When I chastise the many peoples, those in the religious world will, to varying extents, return to My kingdom, conquered by My works, because they will have seen the advent of the Holy One riding on a white cloud. All people will be separated according to their own kind, and will receive chastisements commensurate with their actions. All those who have stood against Me will perish; as for those whose deeds on earth have not involved Me, they will, because of how they have acquitted themselves, continue to exist on the earth under the governance of My sons and My people. I will reveal Myself to the myriad peoples and the myriad nations, and with My own voice, I will sound forth upon the earth, proclaiming the completion of My great work for all mankind to see with their own eyes.

As My voice deepens in intensity, I also observe the state of the universe. Through My words, the myriad things of creation are all made new. Heaven changes, as does the earth. Humanity is exposed in its original form and, slowly, each person is separated according to their kind, and finds their way unawares back into the bosom of their families. This will please Me greatly. I am free from disruption and, imperceptibly, My great work is accomplished, and all the myriad things of creation are transformed. When I created the world, I fashioned all things according to their kind, placing all things with forms together with their kind. As the end of My management plan draws near, I will restore the former state of creation; I will restore everything to the way it originally was, profoundly changing everything, so that everything will return to the bosom of My plan. The time has come! The last stage of My plan is about to be accomplished. Ah, unclean old world! You shall surely fall beneath My words! You shall surely be reduced to nothingness by My plan! Ah, the myriad things of creation! You will all gain new life within My words—you shall have your sovereign Lord! Ah, pure and unblemished new world! You shall surely revive within My glory! Ah, Mount Zion! Be silent no more—I have returned in triumph! From the midst of creation, I scrutinize the whole earth. On earth, mankind has begun a new life and has won new hope. Ah, My people! How can you not come back to life within My light? How can you not jump for joy under My guidance? The lands are shouting in jubilation, the waters are raucous with gleeful laughter! Ah, the resurrected Israel! How can you not feel pride on account of My predestination? Who has wept? Who has wailed? The Israel of old has ceased to be, and today's Israel has risen up, erect and towering in the world, and has stood up in the hearts of all humanity. Today's Israel shall surely attain the source of existence through My people! Ah, hateful Egypt! Surely you do not still stand against Me? How can you take advantage of My mercy and try to escape My chastisement? How can you not exist within My chastisement? All those I love will surely live for eternity, and all those who stand against Me will surely be chastised by Me for eternity. For I am a jealous God and will not lightly spare men for all that they have done. I will watch over the whole earth and, appearing in the East of the world with righteousness, majesty, wrath, and chastisement, I shall reveal Myself to the myriad hosts of humanity!

Chapter 27

Never has human conduct touched My heart, nor has it ever struck Me as precious. In the eyes of man, I am always strict toward him, and am always exercising authority over him. In all of man's actions, there is scarcely anything that is done for My sake, scarcely anything that stands firm before My eyes. Ultimately, everything of man topples before Me without a whisper; only afterward do I make My actions manifest, making everyone know Me through their own failure. Human nature remains unchanged. What is in their hearts is not in accordance with My will—it is not what I need. What I detest most is man’s obduracy and recidivism, but what is the force that provokes humanity to keep on failing to know Me, to keep Me always at a distance, and never to act according to My will before Me but rather to oppose Me behind My back? Is this their loyalty? Is this their love for Me? Why can they not repent and be born again? Why are people forever willing to live in the swamp instead of a place free of mud? Could it be that I have mistreated them? Could it be that I have pointed them in the wrong direction? Could it be that I am leading them to hell? Everyone is willing to live in “hell.” When the light comes, their eyes go instantly blind, for everything in them comes from hell. Yet people are ignorant of this, and simply enjoy these “infernal blessings.” They even clutch them to their chests as treasures, terrified that I will snatch these treasures away, leaving them without the “root of their existence.” People fear Me, which is why, when I come to the earth, they stay far away from Me, hating to draw near to Me, for they are unwilling to “bring trouble on themselves,” but wish instead to maintain harmony within their family so that they might enjoy “happiness on earth.” But I cannot allow humanity to do as they want, since destroying the family of man is precisely what I am here to do. From the moment I arrive, peace is gone from their homes. I intend to smash all nations to smithereens, to say nothing of the family of man. Who can escape My grasp? Can it be that those who receive blessings may escape by virtue of their unwillingness? Can it ever be that those who suffer chastisement may gain My sympathy by virtue of their fear? In all of My words, people have seen My will and My actions, but who can ever break free of the entanglement of their own thoughts? Who can ever find a way out either from within or from without My words?

Man has experienced My warmth, man has earnestly served Me, and man has earnestly submitted before Me, doing everything for Me in My presence. Yet this is unachievable by people today; they do nothing but weep in their spirit as if they have been snatched by a hungry wolf, and they can only look at Me helplessly, crying out to Me without cease. But in the end, they are unable to escape their predicament. I think back to how people in the past made promises in My presence, swearing on heaven and earth in My presence to repay My kindness with their affection. They wept sorrowfully before Me, and the sound of their cries was heartbreaking, hard to bear. Because of their resolve, I would often provide aid to people. Countless times, people have come before Me to submit to Me, their lovely manner hard to forget. Countless times, they have loved Me, unwavering in their loyalty, their earnestness admirable. Countless times, they have loved Me to the point of sacrificing their very lives, they have loved Me more than their own selves—and seeing their sincerity, I have accepted their love. Countless times, they have offered themselves up in My presence, for My sake indifferent in the face of death, and I have smoothed the worry from their brows and carefully taken stock of their countenances. There have been countless times where I have loved them like a cherished treasure, and there have been countless times where I have hated them as My own enemy. Nonetheless, what is in My mind remains beyond man's grasp. When people are sad, I come to comfort them, and when they are weak, I come to help them along. When they are lost, I give them direction. When they weep, I wipe away their tears. But when I am sad, who can comfort Me with their hearts? When I am worried sick, who is considerate of My feelings? When I am sorrowful, who can remedy the wounds in My heart? When I need someone, who volunteers to cooperate with Me? Can it be that people's former attitude toward Me is now lost, never to return? Why is it that nothing of it remains in their memories? How is it that people have forgotten all these things? Is this not all because of mankind's corruption by his enemy?

When the angels play music in praise of Me, this cannot but stir up My sympathy for man. My heart is instantly filled with sadness, and it is impossible to rid Myself of this painful emotion. In the joys and sorrows of being sundered from and then reunited with man, we are unable to exchange sentiments. Separated in heaven above and on earth below, rare are the times that man and I can meet. Who can break free from nostalgia for former feelings? Who can stop reminiscing about the past? Who would not hope for the continuance of the sentiments of the past? Who would not pine for My return? Who would not long for My reunion with man? My heart is deeply troubled, and man's spirit is deeply worried. Though alike in spirit, we cannot often be together, and we cannot often see each other. Thus the life of all mankind is fraught with grief and lacking in vitality, for man has always yearned for Me. It is as if human beings were objects knocked down out of heaven; they cry out My name upon the earth, lifting up their gaze to Me from the ground—but how can they escape the jaws of the ravaging wolf? How can they free themselves from its threats and its temptations? How can human beings not sacrifice themselves because of obedience to the arrangement of My plan? When they loudly entreat, I turn My face away from them, I cannot bear to look on any longer; but how could I not hear their tearful cries? I will correct the injustices of the human world. I will do My work with My own hands throughout the world, forbidding Satan from harming My people again, forbidding the enemies from doing whatever they please again. I will become King on earth and move My throne there, making all My enemies fall to the ground and confess their crimes before Me. In My sadness, anger is commingled, I will trample the whole universe flat, sparing no one, and striking terror into the hearts of My enemies. I will reduce the whole earth to ruins, and make My enemies fall into the ruins, that henceforth they may corrupt mankind no more. My plan is already fixed, and no one, no matter who they are, must change it. As I roam in majestic pomp above the universe, all humanity will be made new, and everything will be revived. Man will no longer weep, no longer cry out to Me for help. Then My heart will rejoice, and the people will return in celebration to Me. The whole universe, from top to bottom, will roil in jubilation ...

Today, among the nations of the world, I am doing the work that I have set out to accomplish. I move about in the midst of humankind, doing all the work within My plan, and all humanity is breaking up the sundry nations according to My will. The people on the earth have their attention fixed on their own destination, for the day is indeed drawing closer and the angels are sounding their trumpets. There will be no more delays, and all creation will thereupon begin to dance in jubilation. Who can extend My day at their will? An earthling? Or the stars in the sky? Or the angels? When I make an utterance to initiate the salvation of Israel's people, My day presses in upon all of mankind. Every man fears the return of Israel. When Israel returns, that will be My day of glory, and so, too, will it be the day when everything changes and becomes renewed. As righteous judgment imminently approaches the whole universe, all men grow timid and fearful, because in the human world, righteousness is unheard of. When the Sun of righteousness appears, the East will be illuminated, and then it will in turn illuminate the whole universe, reaching everyone. If man can really carry out My righteousness, what would there be to fear? My people all await the arrival of My day, they all long for the coming of My day. They wait for Me to bring retribution upon all mankind and to arrange mankind's destination in My role as the Sun of righteousness. My kingdom is coming into shape above the whole universe, and My throne holds sway in the hearts of hundreds of millions of people. With the angels' assistance, My great accomplishment will soon be brought to fruition. All My sons and My people eagerly await My return, longing for Me to reunite with them, never to be separated again. How could the multitudinous populace of My kingdom not race toward one another in joyful celebration because of My being together with them? Can this be a reunion for which no price need be paid? I am honorable in all men's eyes, I am proclaimed in the words of all. When I return, moreover, I shall conquer all enemy forces. The time has come! I will put My work in motion, I will reign as King among men! I am on the point of return! And I am about to depart! This is what everyone is hoping for, it is what they wish. I shall let the whole of humanity behold the arrival of My day, and they shall all welcome the coming of My day with joy!

Chapter 28

When I came from Zion, I was awaited by all things, and when I returned to Zion, I was greeted by all men. As I came and went, never were My steps hindered by things that were hostile to Me, and hence My work progressed smoothly. Today, when I come among all creatures, all things greet Me with silence, deeply fearful that I will depart once more and that they will thus lose that which they rely upon for support. All things follow My guidance, and all watch the direction indicated by My hand. The words from My mouth have made perfect many creatures and chastised many sons of disobedience. Thus, all men gaze intently upon My words, and listen closely to the utterances from My mouth, and are profoundly afraid of missing this good opportunity. It is for this reason that I have continued to speak, so that My work may be carried out more quickly, and so that gratifying conditions may appear sooner on earth and remedy the scenes of desolation on earth. When I look upon the skies, that is the time when I once more turn to face mankind; all lands are instantly filled with life, dust no longer hangs in the air, and silt no longer blankets the ground. My eyes at once shine forth, causing the people of all lands to look up to Me and take refuge in Me. Among the people of today's world—including all those who are present in My household—who truly takes refuge in Me? Who gives their heart in exchange for the price I have paid? Who has ever dwelt in peace inside My household? Who has ever truly offered themselves before Me? When I make requirements of man, he immediately closes up his "little storehouse." When I give to man, he quickly opens his mouth to sneakily take My riches, and in his heart he often trembles, deeply fearful that I will strike back at him. Thus the mouth of man is half open and half closed, and he is incapable of truly enjoying the riches that I bestow. I do not easily condemn man, yet he always pulls at My hand and asks Me to bestow mercy upon him; only when man entreats Me do I once again bestow "mercy" upon him, and I give unto him the harshest words of My mouth, such that he immediately feels ashamed, and, being incapable of directly receiving My "mercy," instead makes others pass it on to him. When he has thoroughly grasped all of My words, man's stature is commensurate with My wishes, and his pleas are fruitful, and not in vain or futile; I bless the pleas of mankind that are sincere, those that are not a pretense.

I have been acting and speaking throughout the ages, yet never has man heard such utterances as I speak today, and never has he had a taste of My majesty and judgment. Although some people in the world of the past have heard legends of Me, no one has ever truly discovered the extent of My riches. Though the people of today hear the words from My mouth, they remain ignorant of how many mysteries are in My mouth, and thus consider My mouth to be a cornucopia. All people wish to acquire something from My mouth. Whether it be the secrets of state, or the mysteries of heaven, or the dynamics of the spiritual world, or the destination of mankind, all people wish to receive such things. Thus, if I were to assemble people together and tell "stories" to them, they would immediately rise from their "sickbed" to hear My way. Too much is lacking within man: He requires not just "nutritional supplements," but more than that, he needs "mental support" and a "spiritual supply." This is what is lacking in all people; this is the "sickness" of all men. I provide a cure for man's sickness in order that better effects may be achieved, so that all may be restored to health, and so that, thanks to My cure, they may return to normality. Do you truly hate the great red dragon? Do you truly, sincerely hate it? Why have I asked you so many times? Why do I keep asking you this question, again and again? What image is there of the great red dragon in your hearts? Has it really been removed? Do you truly not consider it to be your father? All people should perceive My intention in My questions. It is not to provoke the anger of the people, nor to incite rebellion among man, nor that man may find his own way out, but is to allow all people to liberate themselves from the bondage of the great red dragon. Yet no one should be anxious. All will be accomplished by My words; no man may partake, and no man can do the work that I will carry out. I will wipe clean the air of all lands and eradicate all trace of the demons on earth. I have already begun, and I will commence the first step of My work of chastisement in the dwelling place of the great red dragon. Thus it can be seen that My chastisement has befallen the entire universe, and that the great red dragon and all kinds of unclean spirits will be powerless to escape My chastisement, for I look upon all lands. When My work on earth is completed, that is, when the era of judgment comes to an end, I will formally chastise the great red dragon. My people will surely see My righteous chastisement of the great red dragon, will surely pour forth praise because of My righteousness, and will surely forever extol My holy name because of My righteousness. Hence you will formally perform your duty, and will formally praise Me throughout the lands, forever and ever!

When the era of judgment reaches its peak, I will not hasten to conclude My work, but will integrate into it the evidence of the era of chastisement and allow this evidence to be seen by all My people; in this will be borne greater fruit. This evidence is the means by which I chastise the great red dragon, and I will cause My people to behold it with their own eyes so that they will know more of My disposition. The time when My people enjoy Me is when the great red dragon is chastised. Causing the people of the great red dragon to rise up and revolt against it is My plan, and this is the method by which I make perfect My people, and it is a great opportunity for all My people to grow in life. When the bright moon rises, the tranquil night is at once shattered. Though the moon is in tatters, man is in fine spirits, and sits peacefully under the moonlight, admiring the beautiful scene by the moonlight. Man cannot describe his emotions; it is as if he wishes to cast his thoughts back to the past, as if he wishes to look ahead to the future, as if he is enjoying the present. A smile appears on his face, and amidst the pleasant air there permeates a crisp scent; as a gentle breeze begins to blow, man detects the rich fragrance, and he seems intoxicated by it, unable to rouse himself. This is the very time that I have personally come among man, and man has a heightened sense of the rich aroma, and thus all men live amid this fragrance. I am at peace with man, man lives in harmony with Me, no longer is he deviant in his regard of Me, no longer do I prune the deficiencies of man, no longer is there a distressed look upon the face of man, and no longer does death threaten the whole of mankind. Today, I advance together with man into the era of chastisement, going forth with him side by side. I am doing My work, which is to say, I strike down My rod among man and it falls upon that which is rebellious in man. In the eyes of man, My rod seems to have special powers: It comes upon all those who are My enemies and does not easily spare them; among all who oppose Me, the rod performs its inherent function; all those who are in My hands perform their duty according to My intention, and never have they defied My wishes or changed their substance. As a result, the waters will roar, the mountains will topple, the great rivers will disintegrate, man will be ever given to change, the sun will grow dim, the moon will darken, man will have no more days of living in peace, there will be no more times of tranquility upon the land, the heavens will never again remain calm and quiet, and will endure no longer. All things will be renewed and will recover their original appearance. All households upon earth will be torn apart, and all nations on earth will be rent asunder; gone will be the days of reunions between husband and wife, no more will mother and son meet again, never again will there be the coming together of father and daughter. All that used to be on earth will be smashed by Me. I do not give people the opportunity to release their emotions, for I am without emotions, and have grown to detest the emotions of people to an extreme degree. It is because of the emotions between people that I have been cast to one side, and thus I have become an “other” in their eyes; it is because of the emotions between people that I have been forgotten; it is because of the emotions of man that he seizes the opportunity to pick up his “conscience”; it is because of the emotions of man that he is always weary of My chastisement; it is because of the emotions of man that he calls Me unfair and unjust, and says that I am heedless of man’s feelings in My handling of things. Do I also have kin upon earth? Who has ever, like Me, worked day and night, without thought for food or sleep, for the sake of My entire management plan? How could man be comparable to God? How could man be compatible with God? How could God, who creates, be of the same kind as man, who is created? How could I always live and act together with man on earth? Who is able to feel concern for My heart? Is it the prayers of man? I once agreed to join man and walk together with him—and yes, unto this day man has lived under My care and protection, but will there ever come a day when man can separate himself from My care? Though man has never laden himself with concern for My heart, who can keep living in a land without light? It is only because of My blessings that man has lived until today.

Chapter 29

On the day that all things were resurrected, I came among man, and I have spent wonderful days and nights with him. Only at this point does man sense a little of My approachability, and as his interaction with Me becomes more frequent, he sees some of what I have and am—as a result, he gains some knowledge of Me. Among all people, I raise My head and watch, and they all see Me. Yet when disaster befalls the world, they immediately grow anxious, and My image vanishes from their hearts; panic-stricken by the arrival of the disaster, they pay no regard to My exhortations. Many years have I passed among man, yet he has always remained unaware, and has never known Me.

Today I tell him this with My own mouth, and I make all people come before Me to receive something from Me, but still they keep their distance from Me, and so they do not know Me. When My footsteps tread across the universe and to the ends of the earth, man will begin to reflect upon himself, and all people will come to Me and bow down before Me and worship Me. This will be the day I gain glory, the day of My return, and also the day of My departure. Now, I have begun My work among all mankind, have formally embarked throughout the entire universe upon the finale of My management plan. From this moment onward, any who are not cautious are liable to be plunged amid merciless chastisement, and this could happen at any moment. This is not because I am heartless; rather, it is a step of My management plan; all must proceed according to the steps of My plan, and no man can change this. When I formally begin My work, all people move as I move, such that people throughout the universe occupy themselves in step with Me, there is “jubilation” across the universe, and man is spurred onward by Me. In consequence, the great red dragon itself is whipped into a state of frenzy and bewilderment by Me, and it serves My work, and, despite being unwilling, it is unable to follow its own desires, but is left with no choice but to submit to My control. In all of My plans, the great red dragon is My foil, My enemy, and also My servant; as such, I have never relaxed My “requirements” of it. Therefore, the final stage of the work of My incarnation is completed in its household. In this way, the great red dragon is more able to do service for Me properly, through which I will conquer it and complete My plan. As I work, all angels embark upon the decisive battle with Me and resolve to fulfill My wishes in the final stage, so that the people on earth yield before Me like the angels, and have no desire to oppose Me, and do nothing that rebels against Me. These are the dynamics of My work throughout the universe.

The purpose and significance of My arrival among man is to save all mankind, to bring all mankind back to My household, to reunite heaven with earth, and to make man convey the “signals” between heaven and earth, for such is the inherent function of man. At the time when I created mankind, I had made all things ready for mankind, and later, I allowed mankind to receive, according to My requirements, the riches I gave him. Thus, I say that it is under My guidance that all mankind has reached today. And this is all My plan. Among all mankind, countless numbers of people exist under the protection of My love, and countless numbers live under the chastisement of My hate. Though people all pray to Me, still they are unable to change their present circumstances; once they have lost hope, they can only let nature take its course and cease to disobey Me, for this is all that can be accomplished by man. When it comes to the state of man’s life, man has yet to find the real life, he still has not seen through to the injustice, desolation, and miserable conditions of the world—and so, were it not for the advent of disaster, most people would still embrace Mother Nature, and would still engross themselves in the flavors of “life.” Is this not the reality of the world? Is this not the voice of salvation that I speak forth to man? Why, among mankind, has no one ever truly loved Me? Why does man love Me only when amidst chastisement and trials, yet no one loves Me while being under My protection? I have bestowed My chastisement many times upon mankind. They take a look at it, but then they ignore it, and they do not study and contemplate it at this time, and so all that comes upon man is merciless judgment. This is only one of My methods of working, but it is still in order to change man and make him love Me.

I reign in the kingdom, and, moreover, I reign throughout the entire universe; I am both the King of the kingdom and the Head of the universe. From this time onward, I will assemble all those who are not the chosen ones and will begin My work among the Gentiles, and I will announce My administrative decrees to the whole universe, so that I may successfully embark upon the next step of My work. I will use chastisement to spread My work among the Gentiles, which is to say, I will use force against all those who are Gentiles. Naturally, this work will be carried out at the same time as My work among the chosen ones. When My people rule and wield power on earth, that will also be the day that all people on earth have been conquered, and, moreover, it will be the time when I rest—and only then will I appear to all those who have been conquered. I appear to the holy kingdom, and hide Myself from the land of filth. All who have been conquered and become obedient before Me are able to see My face with their own eyes, and able to hear My voice with their own ears. This is the blessing of those who are born during the last days, this is the blessing predestined by Me, and this is unalterable by any man. Today, I work in this way for the sake of the work of the future. All of My work is interrelated, in all of it, there is a call and response: Never has any step halted suddenly, and never has any step been carried out independently of any other. Is this not so? Is the work of the past not the foundation of the work of today? Are the words of the past not the precursor to the words today? Are the steps of the past not the origin of the steps of today? When I formally open the scroll, that is when people throughout the universe are chastised, when people all over the world are subjected to trials, and it is the climax of My work; all people live in a land without light, and all people live amid the threats posed by their environment. In other words, it is the life that man has never experienced from the time of creation until the present day, and no one throughout the ages has ever “enjoyed” this kind of life, and so I say that I have done work that has never been done before. This is the true state of affairs, and this is the inner meaning. Because My day draws near to all mankind, because it does not appear distant but is right before man’s eyes, who could not be fearful as a result? And who could not be delighted in this? The filthy city of Babylon has finally come to its end; man has met with a brand-new world again, and heaven and earth have been changed and renewed.

When I appear to all nations and all peoples, the white clouds churn in the sky and enshroud Me. So, too, do the birds on earth sing out and dance with joy for Me, highlighting the atmosphere on earth, and thus causing all things on earth to come alive, to no longer “drift slowly downward,” but to instead live amid an atmosphere of vitality. When I am among the clouds, man dimly perceives My face and My eyes, and at this time he feels a little fearful. In the past, he has heard historical records about Me in legends, and as a result he is only half believing and half doubtful toward Me. He knows not where I am, or just how large My face is—is it as wide as the sea, or as boundless as the green pastures? No one knows these things. It is only when man sees My face in the clouds today that man feels that the Me of legend is real, and so he becomes a little more favorably disposed toward Me, and it is only because of My deeds that his admiration for Me becomes a little greater. But man still does not know Me, and he only sees one part of Me in the clouds. Thereafter, I stretch out My arms and show them to man. Man is astonished, and claps his hands over his mouth, deeply fearful of being struck down by My hand, and so he adds a little reverence to his admiration. Man fixes his eyes upon My every move, profoundly afraid that he will be struck down by Me when he is not paying attention—yet I am not restricted because of being watched by man, and I continue to do the work on My hands. It is only in all the deeds I do that man has some favor toward Me, and thus gradually comes before Me to associate with Me. When I am revealed to man in My entirety, man will see My face, and from then on I will no longer hide or obscure Myself from man. Throughout the universe, I will appear publicly to all people, and all those who are of flesh and blood will behold all of My deeds. All those who are of the spirit will surely dwell in peace in My household, and will assuredly enjoy wonderful blessings together with Me. All those whom I care for will surely escape chastisement and will certainly avoid the pain of the spirit and the agony of the flesh. I will appear publicly to all peoples and rule and wield power, so that the smell of corpses no longer will pervade the universe; instead, My crisp fragrance will spread across the whole world, because My day is drawing near, man is awakening, everything on earth is in order, and the days of survival of the earth are no more, for I have arrived!

Chapter 30

Among man, I once summarized man's disobedience and weakness, and thus I understood man's weakness and knew his disobedience. Prior to arriving among man, I had long since come to understand the joys and sorrows of man—and because of this, I am capable of doing that which man cannot, and of saying that which man cannot, and I do so easily. Is this not the difference between Me and man? And is this not a clear difference? Could it be that My work is achievable by people of flesh and blood? Could it be that I am of the same kind as created beings? People have ranked Me as being a "like term"—and is this not because they do not know Me? Why, instead of rising high among man, must I humble Myself? Why does mankind keep renouncing Me, why is mankind incapable of proclaiming My name? There is great sorrow in My heart, but how could people know? How could they see? Never treating that which concerns Me as being of the utmost importance in all their lives has left people dazed and confused, as if they have just taken a sleeping pill; when I call out to them, they simply carry on dreaming, and so no one has ever been aware of My deeds. Today, most people are still fast asleep. Only when the kingdom anthem sounds do they open their sleepy eyes and feel a little melancholy in their hearts. When My rod strikes among mankind, they still pay scant attention, as if their fate is as worthless as the sand in the sea. Although most of them have some awareness, they still do not know how far My steps have come—for people do not care to understand My heart, and so have never been able to free themselves from Satan’s bondage. I move above all things, and live among all things, and at the same time, I take center stage in the hearts of all people. For this reason, people look upon Me as different, believing that I am extraordinary, or else that I am unfathomable—and as a result, their trust in Me becomes stronger each day. I once reclined in the third heaven, observing all people and things in the universe. When I sleep, people fall quiet, deeply fearful of disturbing My rest. When I awake, they immediately grow animated, as if they are doing the work of expressly bringing Me joy. Is this not people on earth’s attitude toward Me? Who among the people of today sees the Me in heaven and on earth as one? Who does not venerate the Me in heaven? And who does not look down on the Me on earth? Why does man always tear Me apart? Why does man always have two different attitudes toward Me? Is the incarnate God on earth not the God who commands all in heaven? Is the Me in heaven not now on earth? Why do people see Me but do not know Me? Why is there such a great distance between heaven and earth? Are these things not worthy of deeper examination by man?

When I do My work, and during the times that I make utterances, people always wish to add “flavoring” to it, as if their sense of smell is more acute than Mine, as if they prefer strong flavor, and as if I am unaware of what man needs, and thus must “trouble” man to “supplement” My work. I do not deliberately dampen people’s positivity, but ask them to cleanse themselves based on the foundation of knowing Me. Because they lack too much, I suggest that they make more effort, and so offset their deficiencies in order to satisfy My heart. People once knew Me in their notions, yet were utterly unaware of this, and thus their cherishment was like treating sand as gold. When I reminded them, they only dispensed with part of this, but instead of replacing the part that had gone with things of silver and gold, they have continued enjoying the part that still remains in their hands—and as a result, they are always humble and patient before Me; they are incapable of being compatible with Me, for they have too many notions. Thus, I made up My mind to seize all that man has and is and hurl it far away, so that all can live with Me and no longer be apart from Me. It is because of My work that man does not understand My will. Some believe that I will conclude My work for a second time and cast them into hell. Some believe I will adopt a new way of speaking, and most of them tremble with fear: They are deeply fearful that I will finish My work and leave them with nowhere to go, and are profoundly afraid that I will abandon them once more. People always use old notions to measure My new work. I said people had never grasped the method by which I work—could they give a good account of themselves this time? Are people’s old notions not the weapons that disrupt My work? When I speak to people, they always avoid My gaze, deeply afraid that My eyes will settle on them. Thus, they lower their heads, as if accepting an inspection from Me—and is this not caused by their notions? Why is it that I have humbled Myself until today, but no one has ever noticed? Must I bow down for man? I came from heaven to earth, I descended from upon high to a secret place, and came among man and revealed all that I have and am to him. My words are sincere and earnest, patient and kind—but who has ever seen what I am and have? Am I still hidden to man? Why is it so difficult for Me to meet with man? Is it because people are too busy in their work? Is it because I am neglecting My duties and people are all intent on pursuing success?

In people’s minds, God is God, and is not easily engaged with, while man is man, and should not easily become dissolute—yet people’s deeds still cannot be brought before Me. Could it be that My requirements are too high? Could it be that man is too weak? Why do people always look upon the standards that I require from afar? Are they really unattainable by man? My requirements are calculated based on people’s “constitution,” and so have never exceeded man’s stature—but even so, people remain incapable of achieving the standards I require. Countless times have I been forsaken among man, countless times have people looked at Me with mocking eyes, as if My body were covered in thorns and loathsome to them, and thus people abhor Me, and believe that I am without worth. In this way, I am shoved back and forth by man. Countless times have people brought Me home for a low price, and countless times have they sold Me for a high price, and it is because of this that I find Myself in the situation I am in today. It is as if people are still cooking up schemes for Me; most of them still want to sell Me for a profit of hundreds of millions of dollars, for man has never cherished Me. It is as if I have become an intermediary between people, or a nuclear weapon with which they fight amongst each other, or an agreement signed between them—and as a result, I am, in sum, utterly without value in man’s heart, I am a dispensable household item. Yet I do not condemn man because of this; I do nothing but save man, and have always been compassionate toward man.

People believe that I will feel at ease when I cast people into hell, as if I am specially doing a deal with hell, and as if I am some sort of department that specializes in selling people, as if I am a specialist in swindling people and will sell them at a high price once I have them in My hands. People’s mouths do not say it, but in their hearts this is what they believe. Although they all love Me, they do so secretly. Have I paid such a great price and expended so much in return for this little bit of love from them? People are tricksters, and I always play the role of the tricked. It is as if I am too guileless: Once they have seen this weak point, they keep tricking Me. The words from My mouth do not mean to put people to death or to stick random labels on them—they are the reality of man. Perhaps some of My words “go too far,” in which case I can only “beg” for people’s forgiveness; because I am not “skilled” in the language of man, much of what I say is incapable of satisfying people’s demands. Perhaps some of My words pierce people’s hearts, so I can only “beg” that they be tolerant; because I am not proficient in the philosophy for living of man and not particular about the way I speak, many of My words may evoke embarrassment in people. Perhaps some of My words speak to the root of people’s illness and expose their sickness, and so I advise taking some of the medicine I have prepared for you, for I have no intention of hurting you and this medicine has no side effects. Perhaps some of My words do not sound “realistic,” but I “beg” people not to panic—I am not “nimble” of hand and foot, so My words have yet to be carried out. I ask that people be “forbearing” toward Me. Are these words of help to man? I hope that people can gain something from these words, so that My words are not always in vain!

Chapter 31

I have never had a place in people’s hearts. When I truly search for people, they squeeze their eyes shut and ignore My actions, as if all I do is an attempt to please them, as a result of which they are always disgusted by My doings. It is as if I lack any self-awareness, as if I am always flaunting Myself before man, thereby infuriating them who are “upstanding and righteous.” Yet I endure even under such adverse conditions, and I continue My work. Thus, I say that I have tasted the sweet, sour, bitter, and pungent flavors of human experience, and I come in the wind and go with the rain; I say that I have experienced the persecution of family, have experienced the ups and downs of life, and have experienced the pain of parting from the body. However, when I came to earth, instead of welcoming Me because of the hardship I had suffered for them, people “politely” declined My good intentions. How could I not be pained by this? How could I not be aggrieved? Could it be that I became flesh only for it to all end like this? Why does man not love Me? Why has My love been repaid with man’s hate? Could it be that I am supposed to suffer in this way? People have shed tears of sympathy because of My hardship on earth, and people have railed at the injustice of My misfortune. Yet who has ever truly known My heart? Who can ever perceive My feelings? Man once had a profound affection toward Me, and he once longed for Me often in his dreams—but how could the people on earth understand My will in heaven? Though people once perceived My feelings of sorrow, who has ever had sympathy, as a fellow sufferer, for My afflictions? Could it be that the conscience of people on earth can move and change My sorrowful heart? Are the people on earth unable to tell Me of the unspeakable hardship within their hearts? The spirits and the Spirit are dependent upon one another, but because of the barriers of the flesh, people’s brains have “lost control.” I once reminded people to come before Me, but My calls did not cause people to fulfill what I asked; they merely looked into the sky, eyes filled with tears, as if they were bearing unspeakable hardship, as if there was something standing in their way. Thus, they clasped their hands and bowed down beneath heaven in supplication to Me. Because I am merciful, I bestow My blessings among man, and in the blink of an eye, the moment of My personal advent among man arrives—yet man has long since forgotten his oath to Heaven. Is this not the very disobedience of man? Why does man always suffer from “amnesia”? Have I stabbed him? Have I struck down his body? I tell man of the feelings within My heart; why does he always avoid Me? In people’s memories, it is as if they have lost something and it is nowhere to be found, but it is also as if their memories are inaccurate. Thus, people always suffer forgetfulness in their lives, and the days of the lives of all mankind are in disarray. Yet no one does anything to address this; people do nothing but trample and murder each other, which has led to a state of disastrous defeat today, and caused everything in the universe to collapse into the filthy water and the mire, with no chance of salvation.

When I arrived among all people, that was the very moment when people became loyal to Me. At this time, the great red dragon also began to lay its murderous hands on people. I accepted the “invitation,” and I came to “sit at the banquet table” among man, holding the “letter of invitation” given to Me by mankind. When they saw Me, people paid Me no heed, for I did not adorn Myself with opulent clothes and had brought only My “identity card” to sit at table with man. There was no expensive make-up upon My face, no crown upon My head, and I wore but a pair of ordinary home-made shoes upon My feet. What disappointed people most was the lack of lipstick upon My mouth. Furthermore, I did not speak polite words, and My tongue was not the pen of a ready writer; instead, each of My words pierced the innermost heart of man, which added somewhat to people’s “favorable” impression of My mouth. The aforementioned appearance was sufficient for people to give Me “special treatment,” and thus they treated Me as a simple bumpkin from the countryside who was without knowledge of the world, and no wisdom. Yet when everyone handed over “gifts of money,” people still did not regard Me as honorable, but merely came before Me without any respect, dragging their heels and with short tempers. When My hand reached out, they were immediately astonished, and they knelt down and let out great shouts. They collected up all My “monetary gifts.” Because the amount was great, they instantly thought Me a millionaire and tore the ragged clothes from My body without My consent, replacing them with new clothes—yet this did not make Me happy. Because I was not accustomed to such an easy life and despised this “first-class” treatment, because I was born of the holy house, and, it can be said, because I was born into “poverty,” I was not used to a life of luxury with people waiting on hand and foot. I wish only that people might be able to understand the feelings in My heart, that they might be able to endure a little hardship in order to accept the uncomfortable truths from My mouth. Because I have never been able to talk of theory, nor capable of using mankind's secret ways of conducting oneself in society in order to engage with people, and because I am incapable of tailoring My words according to people's countenance or their psychology, people have always loathed Me, have believed Me to be unworthy of interaction, and have said that I have a sharp tongue and always hurt people. Yet I have no choice: I once "studied" the psychology of man, once "emulated" man's philosophy for living, and once went to "language college" to learn the language of man, so that I might master the means by which people talk, and speak as befits their countenance—but although I expended much effort and visited many "experts," it all came to nothing. Never has there been anything of humanity in Me. For all these years, My efforts have never yielded the slightest effect, and I have never had the slightest faculty in the language of man. Thus, the words of man that "hard work pays off" have "ricocheted" away from Me, and as a result, these words come to an end on earth. Without people realizing it, this aphorism has been disproved by the God from heaven, sufficiently verifying that such words are untenable. Thus I apologize to man, but there is nothing to be done—that is what I get for being so "stupid." I am incapable of learning the language of man, of becoming proficient in philosophy for living, of socializing with people. I only advise people to be forbearing, to suppress the anger within their hearts, to not hurt themselves because of Me. Who made us interact with each other? Who made us meet at this moment? Who made us share the same ideals?

My disposition runs throughout all of My words, yet people are incapable of grasping it in My words. They merely split hairs about what I say—what use is that? Can their notions about Me make them perfect? Could things on earth accomplish My will? I kept trying to teach people how to speak My words, but it was as if man was tongue-tied, and he was never able to learn how to speak My words as I would wish. I taught him mouth-to-mouth, yet he has never been able to learn. Only after this did I make a new discovery: How could the people on earth speak the words of heaven? Does this not violate the laws of nature? But, because of people's zeal and inquisitiveness toward Me, I embarked on another part of work on man. I have never shamed man because of his deficiencies, but instead provide for man in accordance with what he lacks. It is only because of this that people have a somewhat favorable impression of Me, and I use this opportunity to gather people together once again, that they might enjoy another part of My riches. At this moment, people are once more immersed in happiness, cheers and laughter drifting around the many-hued clouds in the sky. I open up man's heart, and man immediately has new vitality, and he is unwilling to hide from Me anymore, for he has sampled the sweet taste of honey, and so he brings out all of his junk to be exchanged—as if I have become a garbage collection point, or a waste management station. Thus, after seeing the "advertisements" that have been posted, people come before Me and take part eagerly, for they seem to think they can acquire a few "souvenirs," so they all send Me "letters," that they might partake in the events I have set out. At this moment they are not fearful of losses, because the "capital" involved in these activities is not great, and so they dare to risk participation. If there were no souvenirs to be gained from taking part, people would leave the arena and ask for their money back, and they would also work out the “interest” I owed them. It is because today’s living standards have increased, reaching a “modest level of prosperity” and achieving “modernization,” with the “senior official” personally “going to the countryside” to arrange work, that people’s faith has immediately multiplied many times—and because their “constitution” is becoming better and better, they look upon Me with admiration, and are willing to engage with Me in order to gain My trust.

Chapter 32

When people gather together with Me, My heart is filled with joy. Immediately, I bestow the blessings in My hand among man, that people may convene with Me, and not be enemies who disobey Me but friends who are compatible with Me. Thus, I also treat man in a heartfelt way. In My work, man is seen as a member of a high-level organization, so I pay more attention to him, for he has always been the object of My work. I have established My place in people’s hearts, so that their hearts may look up to Me—yet they remain totally ignorant of why I do this, and they do nothing but wait. Although there is a place I have established in people’s hearts, they do not require that I reside there. Instead, they wait for the “Holy One” in their hearts to suddenly arrive. Because My identity is too “lowly,” I do not match up to people’s demands and am thus cast out by them. What they want is the “Me” that is high and mighty, but when I came I did not appear in this way to man, and so they kept looking off into the distance, waiting for the one in their hearts. When I came before people, they rejected Me in front of the masses. I could only stand to one side, waiting to be “dealt with” by man, watching to see what people would end up doing with Me, this deficient “product.” I do not look at people’s scars, but at the part of them that is unscarred, and from this I gain gratification. In people’s eyes, I am but a “little star” that has descended from the sky; I am merely the least in heaven, and My arrival on earth today was commissioned by God. As a result, people have come up with more interpretations of the words “Me” and “God,” deeply fearful of considering God and Me to be one and the same. Because My image bears nothing of the appearance of God, people all believe that I am a servant who is not of God’s family, and they say that this is not the image of God. Perhaps there are people who have seen God—but because of My lack of insight on earth, God has never “appeared” to Me. Perhaps I have too little “faith,” and so people see Me as lowly. People imagine that if someone really is God, then he will surely be proficient in the language of man, for God is the Creator. But the facts are precisely the opposite: Not only am I no expert in the language of man, but there are times when I cannot even “provide” for the “deficiencies” of man. As a result, I feel a little “guilty,” for I do not act as people “demand,” but merely prepare the materials and work in accordance with what they “lack.” The demands I make of man are by no means great, yet people believe otherwise. Thus, their “humility” is revealed in their every move. They are always liable to walk before Me, leading the way for Me, profoundly afraid that I will get lost, terrified that I will wander into the ancient forests deep within the mountains. As a result, people have always led Me onward, deeply fearful that I will walk into the dungeon. I have a somewhat “favorable impression” of people’s faith, for they have “toiled” for Me without thought for food or sleep, to the extent that their labors for Me have left them sleepless day and night and even white-haired—this is enough to show that their faith has “transcended” the universes, and “surpassed” the apostles and prophets throughout the ages.

I do not clap with glee because of people’s great skill, and nor do I look upon them coldly because of their shortcomings. I merely do that which is within My hands. I do not give anyone special treatment, but simply work according to My plan. Yet people are unknowing of My will and keep praying for things from Me, as if the riches I have bestowed upon them are incapable of meeting their requirements, as if demand outstrips supply. But in today’s age, people all sense there is “inflation”—as a result, their hands are full of what I have given them to enjoy. It is because of this that they grow weary of Me, and so their lives are filled with chaos and they are ignorant of what they should and should not eat. Some even clutch the things I have given them to enjoy, watching them closely. Because people used to suffer from famine, and it is no easy thing for them to have come by the enjoyments of today, they are all “endlessly grateful,” and there has been some change in their attitude toward Me. They keep crying before Me; because I have given them so much, they keep taking My hand and making “sounds of gratitude.” I move above the universes, and as I walk I observe the people of the entire universe. Amongst the throngs of people on earth, never have there been any who are suitable for My work or who truly love Me. Thus, at this moment I sigh in dismay, and people immediately disperse, to assemble no more, deeply fearful that I will “catch them all in one net.” I use this chance to come among man, to do My work—work which is appropriate—among these dispersed people, selecting those who are suitable for Me to work within them. I do not wish to “detain” people amid My chastisement so that they may never escape. I simply do the work that I must. I have come to ask for man’s “help”; because My management lacks the deeds of man, it is not possible to successfully complete My work, which prevents My work from proceeding effectively. I hope only that people have the resolve to cooperate with Me. I do not ask that they cook Me nice food, or that they arrange somewhere suitable for Me to lay My head, or that they make pretty clothes for Me—I have not the slightest regard for these things. When people can understand My will and advance with Me, side by side, I will be satisfied in My heart.

Who on the earth has ever received Me with their heart? Who has ever loved Me with their heart? People's love is always diluted; even I "do not know" why their love cannot be dried and undiluted. Thus, there are also many "mysteries" contained within man. Among created beings, man is seen as the one who is "miraculous" and "unfathomable," and so he has "qualifications" before Me, as if he is of equal status with Me—but he sees nothing strange about this "status" of his. In this, it is not that I do not allow people to stand in this position and enjoy it, but that I wish for them to have a sense of propriety, for them to not think too highly of themselves; there is a distance between heaven and earth, to say nothing of that between God and man. Is the distance between God and man not even greater? On earth, man and I are "in the same boat," and we "weather the storm together." My identity does not exempt Me from experiencing the hardship of the human world, and it is because of this that I have fallen into the circumstance I am in today. Never have I had a place to peacefully reside on earth, which is why people say, "The Son of man has never had a place to lay His head." As a result, people have also cried tears of compassion for Me and put aside a few dozen yuan for a "relief fund" for Me. Only because of this do I have a place of rest; if it were not for people's "help," who knows where I would have ended up!

When My work ends, no longer shall I seek this "financial relief" from man; instead, I shall perform My inherent function, and shall bring down all of the "things of My house" to people for their enjoyment. Today, everyone is tested amid My trials. When My hand formally comes upon man, people will no longer look upon Me with admiring eyes, but will treat Me with hatred, and at this moment their hearts will immediately be gouged out by Me to serve as a sample. I scrutinize man's heart beneath a "microscope"—there is no true love for Me there. For years, people have been deceiving Me and fooling Me—it turns out both their left atrium and right ventricle contain the venom of hate toward Me. No wonder, then, that I have such an attitude toward them. And yet they remain utterly ignorant of this, and do not even acknowledge it. When I show them the results of My investigation, still they do not awaken; it is as if, in their minds, these are all matters of the past, and ought not to be brought up again today. Thus, people just look upon the "laboratory results" with indifference. They hand the spreadsheet back and stride off. Furthermore, they say things like, "These aren't important, they don't have any effect on my health." They give a small smile of contempt, and then there is a slight threatening look in their eyes, as if implying that I should not be so ingenuous, that I must be perfunctory. It is as if My revelation of their inner secrets has broken the "laws" of man, and so they become more hateful toward Me. Only then do I see the source of people's hate. This is because when I am watching, their blood is flowing, and after passing through the arteries in their bodies it enters the heart, and only at this time do I have a new "discovery." Yet people think nothing of this. They are completely careless and they give no thought to what they gain or lose, which is enough to show their spirit of "selfless" devotion. They give no consideration to the state of their own health, and "rush about" for Me. This is also their "faithfulness," and what is "commendable" about them, so I once more send a letter of “praise” to them, that they may be made happy by this. But when they read this “letter,” they immediately feel a little irked, for all that they do has been rejected by My silent letter. Always have I directed people as they act, yet it seems they abhor My words; thus, as soon as I open My mouth, they squeeze their eyes shut and clap their hands over their ears. They do not look upon Me with respect because of My love, but have ever hated Me, for I pointed out their deficiencies, exposing all the goods in their possession, and thus they have suffered losses in their business, and their livelihood has disappeared. As such, their hate for Me therefore increases.

Chapter 33

In My house, there were once those who extolled My holy name, who worked tirelessly so that My glory on earth would fill the firmament. Because of this, I was overjoyed, and My heart was filled with delight—yet who could work in My stead, forgoing sleep night and day? Man’s resolve before Me gives Me pleasure, but his rebelliousness provokes My anger, and thus, because man can never abide by his duty, My sorrow for him grows greater. Why are people always incapable of devoting themselves to Me? Why do they always try to bargain with Me? Am I the general manager of a trade center? Why is it that I wholeheartedly fulfill what people demand of Me, yet what I ask of man comes to nothing? Could it be that I am not proficient in the ways of business, but man is? Why do people always deceive Me with smooth talk and flattery? Why do people always come bearing “gifts,” asking for a back way in? Is this what I have taught man to do? Why do people do such things quickly and cleanly? Why are people always motivated to deceive Me? When I am among man, people look upon Me as a created being; when I am in the third heaven, they regard Me as the Almighty, who holds dominion over all things; when I am in the firmament, they see Me as the Spirit that fills all things. In sum, there is no suitable place for Me in people’s hearts. It is as if I am an uninvited guest, people loathe Me, and thus when I pick up a ticket and take My seat, they drive Me out, and say that there is nowhere for Me to sit here and that I have come to the wrong place, and so I have no choice but to leave, infuriated. I resolve to engage with man no more, for people are too small-minded, their magnanimity is too meager. I will eat at the same table as them no longer, I will pass no more time with them on earth. But when I speak, people are astonished; they are afraid I will depart, and so they keep detaining Me. Seeing their affectations, I immediately feel somewhat gloomy and forlorn in My heart. People are afraid I will leave them, and thus when I part ways with them, the sound of crying immediately fills the land, and people’s faces are covered in tears. I wipe away their tears, I lift them up once more, and they gaze at Me, their pleading eyes seemingly begging Me not to go, and because of their “sincerity,” I am with them. Yet who can understand the pain within My heart? Who is mindful of My things which cannot be spoken about? In people’s eyes, it is as if I am without emotions, and so we have always been from two different families. How could they see the feeling of sorrow within My heart? People only covet their own pleasures, and they are not mindful of My will, because, up until the present, people have remained ignorant of the purpose of My management plan, and so today they still make silent pleas—and of what benefit is this?

When I live among man, I hold a certain place in people’s hearts; because I have appeared in the flesh and people live in the old flesh, they always treat Me with the flesh. Because people possess only flesh and have no further adjuncts, they have given “all they have” to Me. Yet they know nothing; they merely “offer their devotion” before Me. What I reap is worthless trash—yet people do not think so. When I compare the “gifts” they have given to My things, people instantly recognize My preciousness, and only then do they see My immeasurability. I do not feel proud because of their praise, but continue to appear to man, that people might all know Me fully. When I show My entirety to them, they look upon Me with wide eyes, standing before Me motionless, like a pillar of salt. And when I behold their oddness, I can hardly stop Myself from laughing. Because they are reaching out to ask for things from Me, I give them the things in My hand, and they hold them to their breast, cherishing them like a newborn baby, a motion they engage in but momentarily. When I change the environment in which they reside, they immediately toss the “baby” to one side and run off with their heads in their hands. In people’s eyes, I am the assistance that is present regardless of time or place; it is as if I am a waiter who comes as soon as he is called. Thus, people have always “looked up” to Me, as if I am possessed of limitless power to fight catastrophe, and so they have always held My hand, leading Me on travels across the land, that all things may see that they have a Ruler, so that none dare to deceive them. I have long since seen through people’s trick of the “fox assuming the majesty of the tiger,” for they are all “hanging out their shingles,” wishing to profit through trickery. I have long since seen through their insidious, malicious scheme, and it is merely that I do not wish to hurt our relationship. I do not make trouble out of nothing—there is no value or importance in that. I merely do the work that I must in view of people’s weaknesses; if not, I would turn them to ashes and allow them to exist no longer. But the work I do has meaning, and so I do not chastise man lightly. It is for this reason that people have always given free rein to their flesh. They do not observe My will, but have ever wheedled Me before My seat of judgment. People are so brave: When all the “torture devices” threaten them, they do not waver in the least. Before the facts, they remain incapable of coming up providing any facts, and do nothing but stubbornly resist Me. When I ask that they bring out all that is filthy, they still show Me two empty hands—how could others not use this as an “exemplar”? It is because people’s “faith” is so great that they are “admirable.”

I have embarked upon My work across the universe; the people of the universe

suddenly awaken and move around a core, which is My work, and when I “travel” within them, all escape Satan’s bondage, and are not tormented amid Satan’s affliction. Because of the arrival of My day, people are filled with happiness, the sorrow within their hearts vanishes, the clouds of sadness in the sky turn to oxygen in the air and float there, and at this moment, I enjoy the happiness of being together with man. Man’s actions give Me something to savor, and thus I am no longer aggrieved. And, accompanying the arrival of My day, things of the earth that are possessed of vitality regain the root of their existence, all things upon the earth come alive again, and they take Me as the fundament of their existence, for I cause all things to shine forth with life, and so, too, do I cause them to silently disappear. Thus, all things await the commands from My mouth, and are pleased by that which I do and say. Among all things, I am the Most High—yet I also live among all people, and I use the deeds of man as manifestations of My creation of heaven and earth. When people give great praise before Me, I am exalted among all things, and thus the flowers on earth grow more beautiful beneath the hot sun, the grass becomes more verdant, and the clouds in the sky seem more blue. Because of My voice, people run hither and thither; today the faces of the people in My kingdom are filled with joy, and their life grows. I work among all My chosen people, and do not allow My work to be tainted with human ideas, for I personally carry out My own work. When I work, the heavens and earth and everything in them change and are renewed, and when I complete My work, man is completely renewed, he no longer lives in distress because of what I ask, for the sounds of happiness can be heard across the earth, and I take this opportunity to bestow among man the blessings I give unto him. When I am the King of the kingdom, people fear Me, yet when I am the King among man, and live among man, people find no joy in Me, for their notions of Me are too grievous, such that they are so deeply embedded as to be difficult to remove. Because of man’s manifestation, I do My work, which is appropriate, and when I rise high into the sky and unleash My wrath upon man, people’s various opinions toward Me immediately turn to ashes. I ask that they speak several more of their notions toward Me, but they are dumbstruck, as if they have nothing, and as if they are humble. The more I live in people’s notions, the more they come to love Me, and the more I live outside of people’s notions, the more they move away from Me, and they have more opinions about Me, for, from when I created the world until today, I have always lived in people’s notions. When I come among man today, I dispel all people’s notions, and so people simply refuse—yet I have suitable methods by which to deal with their notions. People should not be worried or anxious; I shall save all mankind by My own methods, making all people love Me, and allowing them to enjoy My blessings in heaven.

Chapter 34

I once invited man as a guest to My house, yet he ran hither and thither because of My calls—as if, rather than inviting him as a guest, I had brought him to the execution ground. Thus, My house was left empty, for man always shunned Me, and was always on his guard against Me. This left Me with no means of carrying out part of My work, which is to say, it is such that I took back the feast I had prepared for him, for man was unwilling to enjoy this feast, and so I did not force him to. Yet man suddenly finds himself beset by hunger, so he comes knocking on My door asking for My help—seeing him in such dire straits, how could I not save him? Thus, I once more lay out a feast for man, that he may enjoy it, and only then does he feel how admirable I am, and thus he comes to depend on Me. Gradually, because of My attitude toward him, he comes to love Me “without reservations,” and he no longer suspects that I will send him into the “land of cremation,” for this is not My will. And so, only after seeing My heart does man truly depend on Me, which shows just how “cautious” he is. Yet I am not wary of man because of his deceit, but rather I move the hearts of people with My warm embrace. Is this not what I am doing at present? Is this not what is manifested in people in the present stage? Why are they capable of doing such things? Why are they possessed of such a sentiment? Is it because they truly know Me? Is it because they really have boundless love for Me? I do not force anyone to love Me, but merely give them the free will to make their own choice; in this, I do not interfere, nor do I help them to make choices about their fate. People have set their resolve before Me, they have brought it before Me for Me to inspect, and when I pulled open the bag containing “man’s resolve,” I saw things inside, which although jumbled, were nonetheless quite “bounteous.” People looked at Me with wide eyes, deeply afraid that I would pluck out their resolve. But because of man’s weakness, I did not make a judgment at the very start, and instead closed the bag and continued to do the work that I must do. Man, however, does not enter My guidance in the wake of My work, but continues to concern himself with whether his resolve has been praised by Me. I have done so much work and spoken so many words, but to date, man remains incapable of grasping My will, and thus his every bewildering action leaves My head spinning. Why is he always incapable of grasping My will, and does things rashly as he pleases? Has his brain suffered a shock? Could it be that he does not understand the words I speak? Why does he always act with his eyes looking straight ahead, but is incapable of beating a path and setting an exemplar for the people of the future? Was there anyone to set an exemplar before Peter? Was it not under My guidance that Peter survived? Why are the people of today incapable of this? Why, after having an exemplar to follow, are they still unable to satisfy My will? This shows that man still has no trust in Me, which is what has led to the miserable circumstances of today.

I delight in observing the little birds flying in the sky. Though they have not set their resolve before Me and have no words to “provide” to Me, they find enjoyment in the world

I have given unto them. Man, however, is incapable of this, and his face is full of melancholy—could it be that I owe him an unpayable debt? Why is his face always streaked with tears? I admire the lilies blooming in the hills; the flowers and grasses stretch across the slopes, but the lilies add luster to My glory on earth before the arrival of spring—can man achieve such things? Could he testify to Me on earth prior to My return? Could he dedicate himself for the sake of My name in the country of the great red dragon? It is as if My utterances are suffused with requirements toward man—he loathes Me as a result of these requirements; he fears My words because his body is too weak, and he is fundamentally incapable of attaining what I ask. When I open My mouth, I see the people on earth fleeing in every direction, as if trying to escape famine. When I cover My face and when I turn My body, people are immediately stricken by panic. They do not know what to do, for they fear My departure; in their notions, the day when I will leave shall be the day upon which disaster descends from heaven, the day on which their punishment begins. Yet what I do is precisely the opposite of man’s notions; I have never acted according to the notions of man, and have never allowed his notions to be consonant with Me. The time when I act is precisely when man is laid bare. In other words, My actions cannot be measured by human notions. From the time of creation until today, no one has ever discovered a “new continent” in the things I do; no one has ever grasped the laws by which I act, and no one has ever opened up a new way out. Thus, people today remain incapable of entering onto the right track—this is precisely what they lack, and this is what they ought to enter into. From the time of creation until today, I have never before embarked upon such an enterprise. I have merely added several new pieces to My work in the last days. Yet even under such obvious circumstances, people are still incapable of grasping My will—is this precisely not what they lack?

After I enter into the new work, I have new requirements of man. For man, it is as if the requirements of the past have had no effect, which is why he forgets them. What is the new means by which I work? What do I ask of man? People themselves are able to measure whether what they did in the past was in accordance with My will, and whether their actions were within the bounds of what I asked. There is no need for Me to inspect everything individually; they have a grasp of their own stature, and so in their minds, they are clear about how far they can act, and there is no need for Me to tell them explicitly. When I speak, perhaps, some people will stumble; thus, I have avoided speaking this part of My words to prevent people from becoming weak as a result. Is this not of greater benefit to man’s pursuit? Is it not of greater benefit to man’s progress? Who does not wish to forget their past and strive onward? Because of My “thoughtlessness,” I am ignorant of whether people understand that the means by which I speak has already entered a new realm. In addition, because My work “occupies” Me so, I have not had time to inquire whether people understand the tone by which I speak. Thus, I ask only that people are more understanding toward Me. Because My work “occupies” Me so, I am unable to personally visit the bases of My work to direct people, and so I have “little understanding” of them. In sum, regardless of anything else, I have now begun leading man to formally enter into a new start and into a new method. In all My utterances, people have seen that there is drollness, humor, and a particularly strong tone of mockery in what I say. Thus, the harmony between Myself and man is disrupted unwittingly, causing a dense covering of clouds to come upon people’s faces. I am, however, not constrained by this, but continue My work, for all that I say and do is a necessary part of My plan; all that is spoken from My mouth helps man, and nothing I do is trivial; all that I do is edifying to all people. It is because man is lacking that I let loose and keep on speaking. Some people, perhaps, are desperately waiting for Me to make new requirements of them. If so, then I satisfy their needs. But there is one thing I must remind you: When I speak, I hope that people gain more insight. I hope that they become more discerning, so that they can gain more from My words and thus fulfill My requirements. Previously, in the churches, people’s focus was on being dealt with and broken. Eating and drinking My words was done upon the foundation of understanding their aims and source—but today is unlike the past, and people are utterly incapable of grasping the source of My utterances, and thus they have no chance of being dealt with and broken by Me, for they have expended all of their energy merely in eating and drinking My words. But even under these circumstances, they remain incapable of satisfying My demands, and so I make new demands of them: I ask that they enter trials together with Me, that they enter chastisement. Yet let Me remind you of one thing: This is not putting man to death, but rather this is what is required by My work, for, in the current stage, My words are too incomprehensible to man, and man is incapable of cooperating with Me—there is nothing to be done! I can but make man enter into the new method together with Me. What else is there to do? Because of man’s deficiencies, I too must enter the stream that man enters into—am I not the one who shall make people perfect? Am I not the one who devised this plan? Though the other requirement is not difficult, it is not secondary to the first. My work among the group of people of the last days is an unprecedented enterprise, and thus, so that My glory may fill the cosmos, all people must suffer the last hardship for Me. Do you understand My will? This is the final requirement I make of man, which is to say, I hope that all people can bear strong, resounding testimony to Me before the great red dragon, that they can offer themselves up for Me a final time, and fulfill My requirements one last instance. Can you truly do this? You were incapable of satisfying My heart in the past—could you break this pattern in the final instance? I give people the chance to reflect; I let them ponder carefully before finally giving Me an answer—is it wrong to do this? I wait for man’s response, I await his “letter of reply”—do you have the faith to fulfill My requirements?

Chapter 35

I have begun carrying out My work among mankind, allowing people to live in the same stream as I. When I complete My work, I will still be among mankind, for they are what is managed throughout My entire management plan, and it is My wish that they become masters of all things. For this reason, I continue to walk among mankind. As mankind and I enter the current era, I feel quite at ease, because the pace of My work has quickened. How can humans keep up? I have done much work on numb and dull-witted people, yet they have gained next to nothing because they do not cherish Me. I have dwelled among all people and observed their every move wherever they may be, both above ground and below. All those categorized as “humans” are resisting Me, as if “resisting Me” were man’s job, as if not doing this job would cause them to become vagrant orphans, adopted by no one. However, I do not sentence people arbitrarily on the basis of their actions and behavior. Rather, I support and provide for them in accordance with their stature. Because humans are the central characters of My entire management plan, I give more guidance to those who have been cast in the role of “human,” so that they may play that role wholeheartedly and to the best of their ability, and so that this play that I am directing will be a rousing success. This is My appeal to humankind. If I did not pray for mankind, would they be unable to play their role? Would it then be the case that I can accomplish what people ask of Me, but they cannot accomplish what I ask of them? It can be said that I do not use My might to oppress mankind. Instead, this is My final request, which I implore of them in all earnestness and sincerity. Are they truly unable to do what I ask? I have been giving to people for many years, yet have received nothing in return. Who has ever given Me anything? Are My blood, sweat, and tears to be like mountain mist? I have given people “vaccinations” many times, and told them that My requirements of them were not exacting. Why, then, do people constantly avoid Me? Is it because I will treat them like baby chicks, to be killed as soon as they are caught? Am I really so brutal and inhumane? Humans always measure Me with their own notions. Am I, as I am in their notions, the same as I am in heaven? I do not consider people’s notions to be objects for My enjoyment. Rather, I see their hearts as things to be appreciated. However, I do feel quite exasperated with their consciences, because, according to them, I Myself do not possess one. I therefore have several more opinions about the consciences of them. However, I refuse to criticize their consciences directly; rather, I continue to guide them patiently and systematically. After all, humans are weak, and unable to do any work.

Today, I officially step into the realm of boundless chastisement, which I enjoy alongside humankind. With My hand, I also issue command, and under My command, mankind is well-behaved; no one dares oppose Me. All are under My guidance, carrying out the work I have assigned, for this is their “job.” Among all things in heaven and under heaven, who does not submit to My plans? Who is not in My grasp? Who does not utter praise and extolment for My words and My work? Humans admire My deeds and actions, and so, because of My every move, they pour themselves into the stream of My work. Who can extricate themselves? Who can escape the work I have arranged? By My administrative decree, humans are compelled to stay; without it, they would all have sneaked back from the “front line” and become “deserters.” Who is unafraid of death? Can people truly put their lives on the line? I do not impose on anyone, because I gained a thorough understanding of human nature long ago. Thus, I have always been undertaking projects that people have never done before. Because no one could carry out My work, I have set foot upon the battleground in person to engage in a struggle of life and death with Satan. Nowadays, Satan is rampant in the extreme. Why do I not take this opportunity to show off the focus of My work and reveal My power? As I have said before, I use Satan’s ruse as My foil; is this not the best opportunity? Only now do I reveal a gratified smile, for I have achieved My goal. I will no longer run about and ask humans for “help.” I have stopped bustling about, and no longer live the life of a vagrant. From now on, I will live in peace. Humans will likewise be safe and sound, for My day has come. On earth, I have led the busy life of a man, a life in which many injustices seem to have occurred. In humans’ eyes, I have shared their joys and sorrows, as well as their adversities. Like humans, I, too, have lived on earth and under heaven. They have therefore always seen Me as a created being. Because humans have not seen Me as I am in heaven, they have never expended much effort on My behalf. However, given today’s situation, people have no choice but to admit that I am Master of their fate and the speaker orating from the clouds. Humans have therefore touched their heads to the ground before Me in worship. Is this not the proof of My triumphant return? Is this not a portrayal of My victory over all hostile forces? All people have had premonitions that the world is coming to an end, that humanity will undergo a great cleansing. However, they cannot in truth do what I ask of them consciously, so they have no choice but to weep under My chastisement. What can be done? Who told humans to be disobedient? Who told them to enter into the final age? Why were they born into the human world in the last days? Every single thing is arranged and planned by Me personally. Who can utter a complaint?

Since the world’s creation, I have roved among mankind, keeping them company in their earthly existence. In previous generations, however, not a single person was ever chosen by Me; all were rebuffed by My silent letter. This is because people in the past did not serve Me exclusively, so I, in return, did not love them exclusively. They took Satan’s “presents” and then turned around and offered them to Me. Was this not slander against Me? And as they made their offerings, I did not reveal My disgust; rather, I turned their scheme to My own use by adding these “presents” to the materials of My management. Later, once they had been processed by machine, I would burn the dross within. In the current age, humans have not offered Me many “presents,” yet I do not reproach them for this. These people have always been destitute and empty-handed;

thus, having observed the reality of their situation, I have never subjected them to any unreasonable demands since I came to the human world. Rather, after giving them “materials,” I have sought the “finished product” that I want, for this is the extent of what humans can achieve. I spent so many years in hardship, learning what it means to live as a human, before making an appropriate demand. Had I not experienced human life, how could I have understood the matters that people find difficult to discuss? Nevertheless, humans do not see it thus; they say I am the all-powerful, supernatural God Himself. Is this not precisely the notion all humans have harbored throughout history, that they harbor even today? I said that on earth, there is no one who can truly and fully know Me. This remark has its implications; it is not mere empty talk. I have experienced and observed this Myself, so I have an understanding of the details. Had I not come down to the human world, who would have a chance to know Me? Who could listen to My words in person? Who could see My figure among them? Throughout the ages, I have always remained hidden in the clouds. Early on, I made a prediction: “I will come down to the human world in the last days to serve as their exemplar.” This is why only the people of today have the good fortune of being able to broaden their horizons. Is this not a kindness I have bestowed upon them? Could they really not understand My grace at all? Why are humans so numb and dull-witted? They have come so far; why have they still not awoken? I have been in this world for many years, but who knows Me? It is no wonder I chastise people. It seems they are the objects on which to exercise My authority; it seems that they are bullets in My gun, which, having been fired, will all “escape.” People imagine it so. I have always respected humans; I have never arbitrarily exploited them or traded them like slaves. This is because I cannot leave them, nor can they leave Me. Thus, a bond of life and death has formed between us. I have always cherished mankind. Although mankind has never cherished Me, they have always looked to Me, which is why I continue to expend efforts on them. I love people like My own treasure, because they are the “capital” of My management on earth; I therefore will certainly not cast them out. My will toward humans will never change. Can they truly trust in My oath? How can they satisfy Me for My sake? This is the task that has been set for all humankind; it is the “homework” I have assigned them. It is My hope they will all work hard to complete it.

Chapter 36

Everything is arranged by My hand. Who dares to do as they please? Who can easily change it? People float about in the air, moving as the dust moves, their faces begrimed, making them repulsive from head to toe. I watch from among the clouds with a heavy heart: Why has man, who was once full of vitality, become like this? And why is he unaware of this, and insensible to this? Why does he “let himself go” and allow himself to become covered in filth? Such is his lack of love and respect for himself. Why does man always avoid what I ask? Am I really cruel and inhumane toward him? Am I truly peremptory and unreasonable? So why do people always look at Me with glaring eyes? Why do they always hate Me? Have I brought them to the end of the road? Man has never discovered anything in My chastisement, for he does nothing but grasp the yoke around his neck with both hands, both eyes fixed on Me, as if watching an enemy—and only at this moment do I sense how emaciated he is. It is because of this that I say none has ever stood firm amid trials. Is man’s stature not precisely thus? Do I need to tell him the figures for his “measurements”? Man’s “height” is no greater than that of a little worm wriggling along the ground, and his “chest” is but the width of a snake’s. In this, I am not belittling man—are these not the exact figures of his stature? Have I degraded man? Man is like a frolicking child. There are even times when he plays with animals, yet he remains happy; and he is like a cat, living a life without care or worry. Maybe it is because of the sway of the Spirit, or the role of God in heaven, that I feel profoundly weary of the extravagant lifestyles of people on earth. Because of the life of man—which is like that of a parasite—My “interest” in the words “human life” has increased somewhat, and so I have become a little more “reverential” toward human life. For it would seem that only man is capable of creating a life that has meaning, whereas I am incapable of this. So I can but retreat to the “mountains,” for I am not able to experience and observe the hardship among man. Yet man urgently forces Me to—I have no choice! I can but obey the arrangements of man, summarizing experience together with him and undergoing human life alongside him. In heaven, I once toured the whole city, and beneath heaven, I once toured all countries. Yet no one ever discovered Me; they merely heard the sound of My moving around. In people’s eyes, I come and go without trace or shadow. It is as if I have become an invisible idol in their hearts, yet people do not believe so. Could it be that all of this is not facts confessed by the mouth of man? At this point, who does not acknowledge that they should be chastised? Could people still hold their heads high before concrete proof?

I am doing a “business deal” among man, I wipe away all of his impurity and unrighteousness, and thus “process” him so that he may be after My own heart. Yet man’s cooperation is indispensable to this stage of work, for he is always leaping and jumping about like a fish that has just been caught. So, to prevent any accidents, I killed all the “fish” that had been caught, after which the fish became obedient, and had not the slightest complaint. When I need man, he is always hidden. It is as if he has never seen astonishing scenes, as if he was born in the countryside and knows nothing of city matters. I add My wisdom to the parts of man that are lacking, and cause him to know Me; because man is too poor, I personally come among man and give him “the path to riches,” making him open his eyes. In this, am I not saving him? Is this not My compassion for man? Is love giving unconditionally? Is hate then chastisement? I have explained to man from different perspectives, but he treats this as but words and doctrines. It is as if My utterances are defective goods, which are sold as write-offs in the hands of man. Thus, when I tell people that a great storm is coming to engulf the mountain village, no one thinks anything of it, only a few of them move their homes, their hearts doubtful. The rest do not move, as if indifferent, as if I am a swallow from the sky—they understand nothing of what I say. Only when the mountains topple and the earth is rent asunder do people think of My words, only then are they awoken from their dreams, but the time has already come, they are engulfed in the great flood, their corpses floating on the surface of the water. Seeing the misery in the world, I let out a sigh for man's misfortune. I expended much time, and paid a great price, for the sake of man's fate. In people's minds, I have no tear ducts—but I, this "freak" without tear ducts, have cried many tears for man. Man, however, knows nothing of this, he merely plays with the toys in his hands in the earth, as if I do not exist. Thus, in today's circumstances, people remain numbed and dull-witted; they are still "frozen" in the basements, as if they are still lying in a cave. Seeing man's actions, My only choice is to leave ...

In people's eyes, I have done much that is good for man, and thus they look upon Me as a role model for the present age. Yet never have they regarded Me as the Sovereign of man's fate and the Creator of all things. It is as if they do not understand Me. Although people once cried "Long live the understanding," no one has spent much time analyzing the word "understanding," showing that people have no desire to love Me. In today's times, people have never treasured Me, I have no place in their hearts. Could they show a true love for Me in the days of suffering to come? Man's righteousness remains something without form, something that cannot be seen or touched. What I want is man's heart, for in the human body, the heart is what is most precious. Are My deeds not fit to be repaid with man's heart? Why do people not give Me their hearts? Why do they always hug them to their own breasts, unwilling to let them go? Can the heart of man ensure peace and happiness throughout people's lives? Why, when I make demands of people, do they always grab a handful of dust from the ground and fling it at Me? Is this man's crafty scheme? It is as if they are trying to trick a passerby who has nowhere to go, enticing them back to their home, where they turn nasty and murder them. People have also wanted to do such things to Me. It is as if they are an executioner who will kill someone without blinking an eye, as if they are the king of devils, for whom it is second nature to kill people. But now people come before Me, still wishing to employ such means—yet they have their plans, and I have My countermeasures. Even though people do not love Me, how could I not make My countermeasures public to man at this time? I have infinite, immeasurable skill in handling man; every part of him is personally handled by Me, and personally processed by Me. Ultimately, I shall make man endure the pain to part from what he loves, and make him submit to My arrangements, and at that time, what will people have to complain about? Is all that I do not for the sake of man? In times gone by, I never told man of the steps of My work—but today, in a time that is unlike the past, because the content of My work is different, I have told people of My work in advance to prevent them falling down as a result of this. Is this not the vaccination that I have injected into man? For whatever reason, people have never seriously considered My words; it is as if there is hunger in their bellies and they are not particular about what they eat, which has weakened their stomachs. But people take their “healthy constitution” as capital and take no notice of the “doctor’s” admonishments. Seeing their imperviousness, I find Myself concerned for man. Because people are immature, and have yet to experience human life, they have no fear; in their hearts, the words “human life” do not exist, they have no regard for them, and merely tire of My words, as if I have become a rambling old lady. In sum, whatever the case, I hope that people can understand My heart, for I have no desire to send man into the land of death. I hope that man can understand what My mood is at this moment, and be considerate of the burden I carry at precisely this time.

Chapter 37

Throughout the ages, in all the work I have done, every stage of it has involved My appropriate work methods. For this reason, My beloved people have been made purer and purer and more and more suitable for My use. For the same reason, however, the “unfortunate thing” is that as My methods of work increase, the number of people decreases, and this causes them to sink into deep contemplation. Of course, this work of today is still no exception, and most people have once again been caught up in contemplation; as such, due to changes to My methods, there are still some who will have to withdraw. It may be described this way: This was something predestined by Me, but not something I did. Since creation, so many people have fallen, and so many have lost their way, as a result of the methods of My work. However, I care not what people do—whether they feel that I am not affectionate or too cruel—regardless of whether their understanding is correct or not, I avoid providing an explanation. Let us first have fellowship about the main point of this discussion so that everyone may gain a thorough understanding, to prevent them from not understanding why they suffer. I will not compel people to suffer in silence like mutes; rather, I will describe everything clearly to keep them from complaining against Me. One day, I will cause everyone to utter sincere praise in the midst of their chastisement. Is this method agreeable to you? Does that meet people’s requirements?

In the prologue to the era of chastisement, I shall first tell people the general meaning behind this “era” so that they do not offend Me. Namely, I will make arrangements for

My work that shall be changed by no one, and I will absolutely not let off lightly anyone who alters them: I will condemn them. Will you remember that? These are all “vaccinations.” In the new methods, all people must first comprehend that the first and foremost goal to achieve is to gain an understanding of their own actual conditions. Before having gained some understanding of oneself, no one will be allowed to speak carelessly in the church, and I shall surely chastise anyone who violates this rule. From this day forward, all apostles shall be listed in the churches and forbidden from moving here and there at will—that will bear little fruit. They all seemed to be fulfilling their duties, but were actually deceiving Me. Despite what happened, today it is all in the past, and must not be brought up again. Henceforth, the term “apostle” shall be abolished and never used again, so that all people may come down from their “positions” and get to know themselves. This is, of course, for the sake of their salvation. A “position” is not a crown; it is merely a term of address. Do you get My meaning? Those who lead the churches will still live the church life within their own churches, though of course this is not a rigid rule. When necessary, they may visit churches in coordination with other former apostles. The most crucial thing is that the fellowship of the churches must be increased—unless none of their members is actually living the life of the church. Nevertheless, I must emphasize that you must all be united in self-knowledge and in rebellion against the great red dragon: This is My will. How much people say is not important; rather, it is most vital that all My people be able to come together as one, for that is the only way to truly bear witness. In the past, people all said they would come to know themselves, yet I have uttered countless words—and how much have you come to understand of yourselves? The higher one’s position, the harder it is for one to put oneself aside, the greater one’s hopes, and the more one will suffer when being chastised. This is My salvation of humankind. Do you understand? Do not simply take this at face value; doing so would be too shallow and have no value. Do you understand the underlying connotations here? If members of the church are truly capable of understanding themselves, then this will demonstrate that those types of people truly love Me. That is to say, if you do not break bread with the people, you will not understand their hardships. How do you interpret this saying? In the end, I will cause all people to know themselves during their time of chastisement, and make them sing and laugh while it is happening. Will you truly have the faith to satisfy Me? So, what should you do in your practice? From now on, the affairs of each church will be handled by the appropriate persons in that church, and apostles will merely live the life of the church. This is called “experiencing life.” Do you understand?

Before chastisement has officially come upon humanity, I shall first do the “work of greeting” on people so that in the end, they may all satisfy Me. Even for those who are going to withdraw, they must suffer and finish bearing testimony before leaving, otherwise I will not let them off lightly. This shows My disposition of intolerance of people’s offenses, as well as My disposition of accomplishing what I say. As such, I will have fulfilled My promise that “I mean what I say, what I say shall be done, and what I do shall last forever.” As the words leave My mouth, so does My Spirit begin His work. Who would dare to willfully play with the “toys” they hold in their hands? Everyone must deferentially and obediently accept My chastisement. Who could escape it? Could there be another path but Mine? Today I have allowed you to be upon the earth, and you rejoice; tomorrow I shall allow you into heaven, and you will give praise. The day after that, I shall put you below the ground, where you will be chastised. Are these not all requirements of My work? Who does not suffer misfortune and receive blessings for the sake of My requirements? Could you be the exceptions? As My people upon the earth, what should you do for the sake of My requirements and My will? Can it be that you verbally praise My holy name while detesting Me in your heart? Doing work for Me and satisfying My heart, as well as understanding yourselves and rebelling against the great red dragon—these are no easy tasks, and you must pay the price of doing so. When I say “price,” what do you think I mean? I will not discuss this now and I will not give direct answers to people. Rather, I allow them to mull it over by themselves, and afterward, to answer My questions practically by way of their actions and behavior. Are you able to do that?

Chapter 38

Never has there been any trace of Me, never has there been the guidance of My words, in what is experienced by man. As a result, I always kept man at a distance and, later on, left him. I despise mankind’s disobedience. I do not know why; it seems as if I have hated man since the beginning, and yet I feel deep sympathy for him. Thus have people always had two attitudes toward Me—for I love man, and I also hate him. Who among men is truly mindful of My love? And who is mindful of My hate? In My eyes, man is a dead thing, devoid of life, like a clay statue in the midst of all things. Because of his disobedience, man provokes My anger from time to time. When I live among men, they give a faint smile when I suddenly arrive, because they are always consciously “seeking” Me, as if I were playing with humanity on earth. They never take Me seriously, and because of their attitude toward Me, I have no choice but to “retire” from the “work unit” of mankind. Nevertheless, I wish to state that, although I “retire,” My “pension” cannot be lacking by a single penny. Because of My “seniority” in the “work unit” of mankind, I continue to demand from them the payment still owing to Me. Although they have left Me, how can they escape My grasp? I once loosened My grip on people to a certain extent, allowing them to freely indulge in their fleshly desires—and because of this they dared to behave in an unbridled manner, without any restraint, from which it can be seen that they do not truly love Me, for they are all living in the flesh. Can it be that true love is given in return for the flesh? Can it be that what I ask of man is merely the “love” of the flesh? If this were truly the case, then what value would man have? Human beings are all worthless trash! Were it not for My “special powers” of endurance, I would have left mankind long ago—why bother staying with them to be “bullied”? Still I endure. I want to get to the bottom of man’s “business.” Once My work on earth is finished, I will ascend high into the sky to judge the “master” of all things; this is My primary work, for My detestation toward man has already reached a certain degree. Who would not hate his enemy? Who would not exterminate his enemy? In heaven, Satan is My enemy; on earth, man is My foe. Because of the union between the heaven and earth, I hold them all guilty, unto the ninth degree of kinship, and not a single one will be pardoned. Who told them to resist Me? Who told them to disobey Me? Why is it that people are incapable of severing their lingering ties to their old nature? Why is it that their flesh is always burgeoning within them? All of this is evidence of My judgment of man. Who dares not to submit to the facts? Who dares to say My judgment is colored by emotion? I am different from man, and so I leave him, for I am simply not one of the human race.

There is a basis, a foundation, for all that I do; when man “reveals” the “true facts” to Me with his mouth, I escort him to the “execution ground,” for mankind’s offense is sufficient to merit My chastisement. And so I do not blindly mete out chastisement, but chastise people according to the true circumstances of their offense. If not, because of their rebelliousness, humanity would never bow down and admit their guilt to Me. It is only because they have arrived at the present state of affairs that people all reluctantly bow their heads—but in their hearts, they remain unconvinced. I have given people a “barium meal” to drink, and so their internal organs show up nice and clear under the “fluoroscope.” The filth and impurity have not been expunged from people’s bellies; all sorts of dirty things flow through their veins, and so the poison within their bodies grows ever more. Because people have lived in such circumstances for so many years, they have grown accustomed to them and no longer find them strange. As a result, the germs within their bodies mature, becoming their nature, and everyone lives under their domination. This is why people go running about all over the place like wild horses. Yet they never fully acknowledge this; they merely nod their heads to indicate their acquiescence. The truth is that humanity does not take My words to heart. If they took My words as a good remedy, then they would “follow the doctor’s orders,” and allow this remedy to cure the sickness inside them. However, to My mind, the way they behave cannot fulfill this wish, and so all I can do is “bite the bullet” and continue speaking to them regardless of whether they listen or not: I am only doing My duty. Humanity is not willing to enjoy My blessings, but would rather undergo the torments of hell—so all I can do is to accede to their request. However, so that My name and My Spirit are not shamed in hell, I will first discipline them, and then “submit” to their wishes, making it so they are “filled with delight.” I am not willing to allow man at any time or in any place to shame Me while flying My banner, which is why I discipline him time and time again. Without the constraints of My stern utterances, how would man have been able to continue standing before Me until today? Do people not refrain from sin only because they fear I will go away? Is it not true that they do not complain only because they fear chastisement? Are there any whose resolutions are made entirely for the sake of My plan? People all think that Mine is a divine nature that lacks “quality of intellect,” but who can grasp that I am able to see through everything in My humanity? As people say, “Why use a sledgehammer to hit a nail?” Men “love” Me, not because their love for Me is inborn, but because they fear chastisement. Who among men was born loving Me? Is there anyone who treats Me as they treat their own heart? And so I sum this up with a maxim for the human world: Among men, there is no one who loves Me.

It is only because I wish to bring My work on earth to an end that I have thus accelerated the pace of My work, lest people be flung far away by Me, so far that they fall into the boundless ocean. It is precisely because I have told them the truth of the matter in advance that they are somewhat on guard. If not for this, is there anyone who would raise the sails on the brink of stormy weather? Everyone is at work taking precautions. It is as though, in their hearts, I have become a robber. They fear that I will seize everything from their homes, and so they push against their doors with all the strength they can muster, deathly afraid that I will suddenly burst in. Seeing them behave like cowardly rats, I depart in silence. In people’s imagination, it seems the world is about to undergo an apocalypse, and so they all flee in disarray, scared out of their wits. Only at this time do I see the ghosts wandering everywhere upon the earth. I cannot help but laugh, and amid the sounds of My laughter man is astonished and terror-struck. Only then do I realize the truth of the matter, and so I hold back My smile and cease to look upon what is happening on earth, instead returning to work according to My original plan. No longer do I regard humanity as a model that serves as a specimen for My research, because they are nothing more than scraps. Once I discard them, they no longer have any use—they are bits of waste. At this juncture, I annihilate them and cast them into the fire. In the mind of humanity, My mercy and lovingkindness are contained within My judgment, majesty, and wrath. But little do they know that I have long disregarded their weaknesses, and that I have long since retracted My mercy and lovingkindness, and that is why they are in the state they are in now. No one is able to know Me, nor can they understand My words or see My face, or make sense of My will. Are these not the states in which man now finds himself? Then how can it be said that I have mercy and lovingkindness? I do not take man’s weakness into consideration, nor do I “take care” of his inadequacies. Could this still be My mercy and lovingkindness? Or could it still be My love for humanity? People all think that I am speaking “empty pleasantries,” and so they do not believe the words I speak. But is there anyone who knows this: “This being a different era, My mercy and lovingkindness do not exist in the present day; nevertheless, I am forever a God who does as He says He will do”? When I am in mankind’s midst, people see Me in their minds as the Most High, and so they believe that I love to speak from within My wisdom. This causes them always to take My word with a grain of salt. But is there anyone who can grasp the rules behind My speech? Or the origins of My words? Is there anyone who can fathom what it is that I actually wish to accomplish? Or who can penetrate the details of the conclusion of My management plan? Who is able to become a confidant to Me? Among all things, who apart from Me can know what exactly I am doing? And who can know what is My ultimate purpose?

Each day I move above the universes, observing all the things created by My hand. Above the heavens is My place of rest, and below is the land in which I move. I rule everything among all that there is, I command everything among all things, causing all that there is to follow the course of nature and to submit to the command of nature. Because I despise those who are disobedient, and loathe those who oppose Me and do not fall into their own classification, I shall make everything submit to My arrangements, without resistance, I shall make all above and within the universe orderly. Who will still dare to arbitrarily resist Me? Who will dare not obey the arrangements of My hand? How could man have any "interest" in rebelling against Me? I shall bring people before their "ancestors," shall make their ancestors lead them back to their families, and they shall not be allowed to rebel against their ancestors and return to My side. Such is My plan. Today, My Spirit moves across the earth, assigning numbers for all kinds of people, making different marks on every sort of person, so that their ancestors can successfully guide them back to their families and I need not continue "worrying" about them, which is too bothersome; thus, I also divide the labor, and distribute the efforts. This is part of My plan, and can be disrupted by no man. I shall select suitable representatives from all that there is to manage all things, bringing about the orderly submission of all before Me. I frequently wander above the heavens, and often walk beneath them. Watching the great world in which people come and go, observing mankind, densely packed upon the earth, and seeing the birds and the beasts that live upon the planet, I cannot help but feel emotional in My heart. Because, at the time of the creation, I made all things, and the entirety of everything performs its duty in its own place under My arrangements, I laugh from up high, and when all things beneath the heavens hear the sound of My laughter, they are immediately inspired, for at this moment My great enterprise is completed. I add the wisdom of heaven within man, causing him to represent Me among all things, for I created man in order for him to be My representative, not disobeying Me but praising Me in the depths of his heart. And who is able to achieve these simple words? Why does man always keep his heart for himself? Is his heart not for Me? It is not that I ask things of man unconditionally, but that he has always belonged to Me. How could I casually give away to others the things that belong to Me? How could I give “clothing” I have made to someone else to wear? In people’s eyes, it is as if I have lost My mind, suffering from a mental illness, and understand nothing of human ways; it is as if I am an imbecile. And so, people always look upon Me as a naif, but they never truly love Me. Because all that man does is in order to deliberately fool Me, I eradicate all mankind in a fit of wrath. Among all the things I created, only mankind is always trying to come up with ways to trick Me, and it is only because of this that I say that man is “ruler” of all things.

Today, I cast all people into the “great furnace” to be refined. I stand up high watching closely as people burn in the fire and, forced by the flames, people offer forth the facts. This is one of the means by which I work. If it were not thus, people would profess themselves to be “humble,” and no one would be willing to be the first to open their mouths to speak of their own experiences, but all would just look at each other. Precisely this is the crystallization of My wisdom, for I predestined the matters of today before the ages. Thus, people unwittingly enter the furnace, as if they have been pulled in by a rope, as if they have grown numb. None can escape the onslaught of the blaze, they “attack” each other, they “rush about rejoicing,” still fretting about their own destiny in the furnace, deeply afraid that they will be burnt to death. When I stoke the fire, it instantly grows, surging into the sky, and the flames frequently lick at My robes, as if trying to pull them into the furnace. People watch Me with wide eyes. Straight away, I follow the fire into the furnace, and at this moment, the flames grow, and people cry out. I wander amidst the blaze. The flames abound, but they have no intention of harming Me, and I hand over the robes upon My body to the flames once again—yet they keep their distance from Me. Only then do people clearly see My true face by the light of the flames. Because they are amidst the scorching of the furnace, they flee in all directions because of My face, and the furnace immediately begins to “boil.” All who are in the flames behold the Son of man, who is refined in the blaze. Though the clothes on His body are ordinary, they are of the utmost beauty; though the shoes upon His feet are unremarkable, they provoke great envy; a fiery luster radiates from His face, His eyes glitter, and it seems that it is because of the light in His eyes that people see His true face clearly. People are awestruck, and they see a white garment upon His body, and His hair, white as wool, hangs down to His shoulders. Notably, a gold girdle about His breast shines with a blinding light, while the shoes upon His feet are even more impressive. And because the shoes worn by the Son of man remain amidst the fire, people believe them wondrous. Only during bursts of pain do people behold the mouth of the Son of man. Although they are amidst the refinement of fire, they do not understand any words from the mouth of the Son of man, and thus, at this moment, they hear nothing more of the pleasing voice of the Son of man, but see a sharp sword contained within His mouth, and He utters no more, but His sword hurts man. Besieged by the flames, people endure pain. Because of their curiosity, they continue to look upon the Son of man's extraordinary appearance, and only at this moment do they discover that the seven stars in His hand have disappeared. Because the Son of man is in the furnace, and not upon earth, the seven stars in His hand are taken away, for they are but a metaphor. At this moment, they are no longer mentioned, but are allocated to the various parts of the Son of man. In people's memories, the existence of the seven stars brings discomfort. Today, I no longer make things hard for man, I take away the seven stars from the Son of man, and combine all parts of the Son of man into a whole. Only at this moment does man see My entire appearance. No more will people separate My Spirit from My flesh, for I have ascended from earth to upon high. People have beheld My true face, they no longer break Me apart, and I no longer endure the vilification of man. Because I walk into the great furnace alongside man, he still relies on Me, he senses My existence in his consciousness. Thus, all that is pure gold gradually amasses with Me amidst the burning of fire, which is the very moment when each is classed according to kind. I categorize each type of "metal," causing them all to return to their families, and only now do all things begin to be rejuvenated ...

It is because man is so tainted that I throw him into the furnace to be burnt. Yet he is not eradicated by the flames, but refined, that I might take pleasure in him—for what I want is something made of pure gold, without impurities, not dirty, contaminated things. People do not understand My mood, so before climbing on the "operating table" they are beset by anxiety, as if, after dissecting them, I am going to murder them there and then as they lie on the operating table. I understand people's mood, and thus I seem to be a member of mankind. I have great compassion for man's "misfortune," and I do not know why man has "fallen ill." If he were healthy, and without disability, what need would there be to pay a price, and to spend time upon the operating table? But the facts cannot be retracted—who told man to pay no attention to "food hygiene"? Who told him to pay no attention to being healthy? Today, what other means do I have? To show My compassion for man, I enter the "operating room" together with him—and who told Me to love man? Thus, I personally pick up the "surgeon's knife" and begin to "operate" on man to prevent any sequelae. Because of My loyalty to man, people shed tears amidst the pain to show their gratitude to Me. People believe that I value righteousness, that I shall lend a hand when My "friends" are in difficulty, and people are even more grateful for My kindness, and say they will send Me "gifts" when the illness is cured—but I pay no heed to such expressions of intent, and instead focus on operating on man. Because of man's physical weakness, under the effect of knife, he screws shut his eyes and lies shocked on the operating table—yet I take no notice, I simply continue to do the work at hand. When the operation has finished, people have escaped from the "tiger's jaws" and I nourish them with rich nutrients, and though they do not know it, the nutrients within them gradually increase. Then I smile at them, and they only see My true face clearly after they have recovered their health, and so they love Me more, they take Me as their father—and is this not the connection between heaven and earth?

Chapter 40

People fixate upon My every move, as if I am about to bring down the heavens, and they are always bewildered by My doings, as if My deeds are utterly unfathomable to them. Thus, they take their cue from Me in all they do, deeply afraid that they will offend Heaven and be cast into the “world of mortals.” I do not try to find anything that I can use against people, or make their deficiencies the target of My work. At this moment, they are very happy, and come to rely on Me. When I give to man, people love Me as they love their own lives, but when I ask for things from them, they shun Me. Why is this? Can they not bring the “fairness and reasonableness” of the human world into practice? Why do I make such demands of people over and over again? Is it really the case that I have nothing? People treat Me like a beggar. When I ask for things from them, they hold up their “leftovers” before Me for Me to “enjoy,” and even say they are taking special care of Me. I look at their ugly faces and weird states, and I once again depart from man. Under such circumstances, people remain uncomprehending, and once more take back the things I have denied them, awaiting My return. I have expended much time and paid a great price for the sake of man—but at this time, for an unknown reason, people’s consciences remain ever incapable of performing their original function. As a result, I list this “persistent doubt” among the “words of mystery,” to serve as “reference” for future generations, because these are the “scientific research results” born of people’s “toil”; how could I casually delete them? Would this not be “failing” people’s good intentions? I do, after all, have a conscience, so I do not engage in cunning, conniving acts with man—are My deeds not thus? Is this not the “fairness and reasonableness” spoken of by man? Among man, I have worked unceasingly up to the present. With the arrival of times like today, people still do not know Me, they still treat Me like a stranger, and even, because I have taken them to a “dead end,” grow more hateful toward Me. At this time, the love in their hearts has long since disappeared without a trace. I am not boasting, much less am I belittling man. I can love man for eternity, and I can also hate him for eternity, and this will never change, for I have perseverance. Yet man is not possessed of this perseverance, he always blows hot and cold toward Me, he only ever pays scant attention to Me when I open My mouth, and when I shut My mouth and say nothing, he soon becomes lost among the waves of the big world. Thus, I condense this into another aphorism: People lack perseverance, and thus they are incapable of fulfilling My heart.

Whilst people are dreaming, I travel the countries of the world spreading the “odor of death” in My hands among man. All people immediately leave behind vitality and enter the next tier of human life. Amongst mankind, no longer can any living things be seen, corpses are scattered everywhere, things that are filled with vitality immediately disappear without a trace, and the suffocating smell of corpses pervades the land. I immediately cover My face and depart from man, for I am beginning the next step of work, giving those who have come alive a place to live and causing all people to live in an ideal land. This is the blessed land—a land without sorrow or sighs—that I prepared for man. The water gushing from the valley springs is crystal clear to the bottom, it flows without cease and never runs dry; people live in harmony with God, the birds sing, and amidst the gentle breeze and warm sun, heaven and earth are both at rest. Today, here, the corpses of all people lie about in disarray. Without people knowing, I release the pestilence in My hands, and the bodies of man decay, leaving not a trace of flesh from head to toe, and I go far away from man. Never again will I congregate with man, never again will I come among man, for the final stage of My entire management has come to an end, and I will not create mankind again, will not pay any heed to man again. After reading the words from My mouth, people all lose hope, for they do not want to die—but who does not “die” for the sake of “coming alive”? When I tell people I lack the magic to make them come alive, they burst out crying in pain; indeed, although I am the Creator, I only have the power to make people die, and lack the capability to make them come alive. In this, I apologize to man. Thus, I told man in advance that “I owe him an unpayable debt”—yet he thought I was being polite. Today, with the advent of the facts, I still say this. I will not go against the facts when I speak. In their notions, people believe there are too many ways by which I speak, and so they always clutch the words I give them whilst hoping for something else. Are these not the erroneous motivations of man? It is under these circumstances that I dare to “boldly” say that man does not truly love Me. I would not turn My back on conscience and distort the facts, for I would not take people into their ideal land; in the end, when My work finishes, I shall lead them to the land of death. So people had best not complain about Me. Is it not because people “love” Me? Is it not because their desire for blessings is too strong? If people did not want to seek blessings, how could there be this “misfortune”? Because of people’s “loyalty” toward Me, because they have followed Me for many years, working hard despite never making any contribution, I reveal to them a little of what is going on in the “secret chamber”: Given that, today, My work has yet to reach a certain point and people have yet to be cast into the fiery pit, I advise them to leave as soon as they can—all who remain will likely suffer misfortune and little luck, and they still will not be able to avoid death in the end. I open wide the “door to riches” for them; whosoever is willing to leave should strike out on the road as soon as they can—if they wait until the arrival of chastisement, it will be too late. These words are not mockery—they are true facts. My words are uttered to man in good conscience, and if you do not go now, when will you? Are people truly able to trust in My words?

I have never given much thought to the fate of man; I simply follow My own will, unconstrained by people. How could I withdraw My hand because of their fears? Throughout the whole of My management plan, never have I made any extra arrangements for the experiences of man. I merely act according to My original plan. In the past, people “offered up” themselves for Me and I was neither hot nor cold toward them. Today, they have “sacrificed” themselves for Me, and I remain neither hot nor cold toward them. I am not complacent because people sacrifice their lives for Me, nor am I overcome with tremendous joy, but continue to send them to the execution ground in accordance with My plan. I pay no heed to their attitude during confession—how could My frosty, cold heart be touched by the hearts of man? Am I one of the emotional animals among mankind? Many times have I reminded people that I am without emotion, but they merely smile, believing I am only being polite. I have said that “I am ignorant of mankind’s philosophies for living,” but people have never thought so, and said that the means by which I speak are so many. Because of the constraints of this notion of man, I know not with what tone, and by what means, to speak to people—and so, with no other choice, I can but bluntly speak. What else can I do? The means by which people speak are so many—they say “We should not rely on emotions but practice righteousness,” which is the kind of slogan they have cried for many years, but they are unable to act in accordance with their words, their words are empty—so I say that people lack the ability to make “their words and accomplishments occur simultaneously.” In their hearts, people believe that acting thus is emulating Me—yet I have no interest in their emulation, I am sick and tired of it. Why do people always turn against the One who feeds them? Have I given man too little? Why do people always secretly worship Satan behind My back? It is as if they work for Me and the monthly salary I give them is insufficient to cover their living costs, because of which they look for another job outside working hours in order to double their wages—for people’s expenditure is too great, and they do not seem to know how to get by. If it were really thus, I would ask them to leave My “factory.” Long ago, I explained to man that working for Me does not involve any special treatment: Without exception, I treat people fairly and reasonably, adopting a system of “work hard, gain more, work less, gain less, and do no work, gain nothing.” When I speak, I hold nothing back; if anyone believes My “factory rules” to be too strict, they should get out immediately, I will pay their “fare” out of town. I am “lenient” in My handling of such people, I do not force them to stay. Among these innumerable people, could I not find a “worker” who is after My own heart? People should not underestimate Me! If people still disobey Me and want to seek “employment” elsewhere, I will not force them—I would welcome it, I have no choice! Is it not because I have too many “rules and regulations”?

Chapter 41

I once undertook a great endeavor among men, but they did not notice, so I had to use My word to reveal it to them, step by step. Still, man could not understand My words, and he remained ignorant of the purpose of My plan. And so, due to their deficiencies and shortcomings, men did things to disrupt My management, and this gave all manner of unclean spirits the opportunity to enter, so that mankind became their victims and were tortured by these unclean spirits until they were wholly polluted. Only then did I see clearly man's intentions and goals. I sighed from within the clouds: Why do men always act for themselves? Are My chastisements not meant to make them perfect? Am I deliberately striking at their positive attitude? The language of man is very beautiful and gentle, whereas his actions are in complete disarray. Why do the demands I make of man always come to nothing? Could it be that I am asking a dog to climb a tree? That I am making much ado about nothing? In the course of My entire management plan, I have hewn a variety of "experimental plots"; however, the terrain, on account of its poor condition and its lacking sunlight for many years, is constantly changing, which leads to a "breakdown" in the land. And so, within My memory, I have abandoned countless such parcels of land. Even now, much of the land continues to change. If, someday, the land truly changes into another type, I will cast it aside with a flick of My hand—is this not exactly My work in the current stage? But humanity is not aware of this in the least; they are merely "chastised" under My "guidance." What good is that? Could I be a God who comes expressly to chastise man? In the heavens above, I once planned that, when I came among men, I would become one with them, so that all those I love could be close to Me. Now, however, having arrived at this stage today, not only is man not in contact with Me, but instead keeps Me at a distance because of My chastisement. I do not weep for his avoidance. What can be done about it? Men are all performers who sing along with whatever tune is being played. I am confident in My ability to let men "slip" from My grasp, and I am even more confident in My ability to bring them back to My "factory" from "other parts." At this juncture, what grievance could man possibly have? And what can man possibly do to Me? Are men not the grass growing atop a wall? And yet, I do not harm men for this fault, but rather give them My nutrients. Men are weak, powerless, and lacking in nutrients; that is just how they are. I transform the cold hearts of men with My warm embrace: Who else can do such a thing? Why have I undertaken such work among man? Can man truly understand My heart?

Among all whom I have chosen, I have engaged in a "business," so there is always a coming and going of people in My home, in an unending flow. They all engage in various formalities at My place, as if they were discussing business with Me, which makes My work overwhelmingly hectic, sometimes so much so that I have no chance to handle the squabbles among them. I urge people not to add to My burdens; they had better chart their own course rather than constantly relying on Me. They cannot always be children in My house; what benefit would there be in that? What I do is important business; I do not run some “neighborhood snack shop,” or some other little “convenience store.” Men all fail to understand My frame of mind, as if they were deliberately jesting with Me, as if they were all naughty children with an insatiable appetite for play, never considering serious matters, thus causing many to fail to complete the “homework” I have assigned them. How could people like these have the gall to show their faces to their “teacher”? Why do they never attend to what they should be doing? What kind of an object is the heart of man? Unto this day, I remain unclear on this. Why does the heart of man change without cease? It is like a day in June: Now the sun is scorching, now the clouds are thick, and now a fierce wind howls. So, why is man unable to learn from experience? Perhaps what I have said is an exaggeration. Men do not even know to bring an umbrella along during the rainy season, and so, due to their ignorance, they have been soaked to the skin countless times by sudden downpours, as if I were deliberately teasing them and they were always being assaulted by rain from heaven. Or, perhaps it is that I am too “cruel,” making men distracted and thus always scatterbrained, never knowing what to do. No man has ever truly grasped the goal or significance of My work. This being so, they are all doing this work of disrupting and chastising themselves. Do I really set out to chastise man? Why do men make trouble for themselves? Why do they always walk into traps? Why do they not negotiate with Me, but instead find ways of making work for themselves? Could it be that all I give to man is not enough?

I published My “maiden work” among all humanity, and because My publication arouses great admiration in men, they all subject it to detailed and careful study, and through this attentive study, they have gained much. My written work seems to be an amazing, highly convoluted novel; it seems to be a romantic prose poem; it seems to be a discussion of a political program; it seems to be a compendium of economic wisdom. As My written work is so rich, there are many differing opinions about it, and no one could provide a preface that summarizes this work of Mine. Men may have “outstanding” knowledge and talent, but this work of Mine is enough to baffle all those able and talented fellows. Even as they say, “Blood may flow, tears may be shed, but one is not to bow one’s head,” they have already unconsciously bowed their heads to express their surrender before My written work. From the lessons of his experience, man has summarized My written work as being like a heavenly book that fell from the sky. Yet I urge man not to be too sensitive. In My view, what I have said is all very ordinary; however, I hope that in The Encyclopedia of Life My work contains, people will be able to find something of the way of livelihood; in Man’s Destination, they may seek the meaning of life; in The Secrets of Heaven, they may seek out My will; and in The Path of Mankind, they may seek out the art of living. Would things not be better this way? I do not force man; if someone is “uninterested” in My written work, I will give them a “refund” on My book, plus a “service charge.” I do not force anyone. As the author of this book, My only hope is that readers will love My work, but people's likes are always different. And so, I urge men not to compromise their future prospects merely because they cannot bear to let go of considerations of face. If they were to do so, how could I, kindhearted as I am, endure such great humiliation? If you are readers who love My work, I hope you will relay to Me your own precious suggestions, the better to advance My writing, and thus through man's errors improve the content of My writing. This would benefit both the author and the reader, would it not? I do not know whether My saying so is correct, and perhaps in this way I can improve My writing ability, or perhaps strengthen the friendship between us. On the whole, I hope that all people may cooperate with My work, without interrupting it, so that My word may be transmitted to every family and home, and so that all the people on earth may be able to live within My words. This is My goal. I hope that, by reading The Chapter on Life in My words, all may gain something, be it maxims about life, or knowledge of the errors that befall the human world, or what it is I require of man, or the "secrets" of the people of the kingdom today. However, I urge men to take a look at The Scandals of the Men of Today; this would be beneficial to all. Nor would it hurt to read often from The Latest Secrets, which would be even more beneficial for people's lives. Again, read the Hot Topics column often—would this not be even more beneficial for people's lives? There is no harm in consulting My advice, seeing if it has any effect, and then relating to Me how you feel after reading it, that I may be better able to prescribe the correct medicine and, in the end, completely eradicate all of humanity's maladies. I do not know what you think of My suggestions, but I hope that you will regard them as materials for your reference. How would that be?

Chapter 42

As soon as the new work begins, all people have a new entry, and they advance with Me hand-in-hand. We walk on the great road of the kingdom together, and there is such close intimacy between man and Myself. To show My feelings and to display My attitude toward man, I have always spoken to man. Some of these words, however, may hurt people, while some may be of great help to them, and so I advise people to listen more often to the words that come from My mouth. My utterances might not be particularly elegant, but they are all words that come from the bottom of My heart. Because mankind is My friend, I have continued to carry out My work among man, and man, too, does his utmost to cooperate with Me, deeply afraid of interrupting My work. At this moment, My heart is filled with great delight, for I have gained a portion of people, and so My "enterprise" is no longer in recession; it no longer consists of empty words, and My “specialty product market” is no longer performing sluggishly. People are sensible after all—they are all willing to “offer themselves up” for My name and My glory, and it is only in this way that My “specialty store” gains some new “goods,” and so in the spiritual realm many “customers” come to buy My “goods.” Only from this moment onward do I gain glory; only then are the words spoken from My mouth no longer empty. I have triumphed and have returned in victory, and all people celebrate Me. At this moment the great red dragon also comes to “celebrate,” to show its admiration for Me, to show that it yields at My feet, which I view as glory. From the time of creation until today, I have fought many victorious battles, and have done many admirable things. Many people once celebrated Me, offered praise to Me, and danced for Me. Although these were stirring and unforgettable scenes, I never showed My smile, for I had yet to conquer man, and was merely doing part of the work similar to the creation. Today is unlike the past. I wear a smile from upon the throne, I have conquered man, and people all bow down in worship before Me. The people of today are not the people of the past. How could My work be for the sake of anything but the present? How could it be for anything except My glory? For the sake of a brighter tomorrow, I shall make plain all of My work in man many times over, so that all of My glory may “rest” in man, who was created. I shall take this as the principle of My work. To those who are willing to cooperate with Me, rise up and work hard so that more of My glory may fill the firmament. Now is the time to carry out grand plans. All those who are under the care and protection of My love have the chance to put their abilities to use here with Me, and I shall maneuver all things to “revolve” for the sake of My work. The birds flying in the sky are My glory in the sky, the seas upon the earth are My doings upon the earth, the master of all things is My manifestation among all things, and I employ all that there is upon the earth as the capital for My management, causing all things to multiply, flourish, and shine with life.

At the time of creation, I had already determined that My work on earth would come to a complete end in the final age. The time when My work comes to an end shall be the very time that all of My doings are made manifest in the firmament. I shall make the people on earth acknowledge My doings, and My deeds shall be proven before the “judgment seat,” so that they may be acknowledged among people across the earth, who all shall yield. Thus, after this I shall embark upon an enterprise never before carried out in ages past. From today onward, I shall make plain My deeds step by step, so that My wisdom, My wondrousness, and My unfathomability shall be acknowledged and proven in every sector of society. In particular, all the ruling parties of the earth shall be made to acknowledge My deeds, such that My doings shall be judged by “judges,” and “defended” by “lawyers,” and thus My doings shall be acknowledged, causing all people to lower their heads and yield. From this time onward, My actions shall be recognized by every sector of society, and this will be the moment when I gain all glory on earth. At that time, I shall appear to man and no longer be hidden. At present, My deeds have yet to reach their climax. My work is progressing onward, and when it reaches its zenith, it will be finished.

I shall completely conquer the people of all nations, I shall cause ferocious beasts to become as tame as lambs before Me, and I shall cause the great red dragon to submit before Me like the people on earth. I shall defeat all My enemies in heaven, and I shall cause all My adversaries on earth to be conquered. This is My plan, and this is the wondrousness of My deeds. All that man can do is to live by nature's influence, under My guidance—he cannot make his own decisions! Who can escape My hand? I have allocated all of nature to various categories, causing it to exist within laws, and it is only because of this that there are such laws upon earth as warmth in spring and coolness in autumn. The reason why the flowers on earth wither in winter and blossom in summer is because of the wondrousness of My hand; the reason why the geese fly south in winter is because I adjust the temperature; and the reason why the seas roar is because I want to drown the things upon the water's surface. What is not arranged by Me? From this moment onward, man's "economics of nature" is entirely vanquished by My words, and people no longer eradicate My presence because of the existence of "natural laws." Who will ever again deny the existence of the Ruler of all things? In heaven, I am Head; among all things, I am the Lord; and among all people, I am foremost. Who dares to lightly daub this over with "paint"? Could falsehoods disrupt the existence of the truth? At this precious opportunity, I once again begin the work in My hands, no longer suffering man's interference, and continuing the "turning" of the machines.

I have added various "seasonings" to My words, and thus it would seem as though I am one of humanity's star chefs. Though people do not know how to season their food, they relish its taste; holding the "plate," they all savor the "dishes" I have prepared. I do not know why, but people always want to eat more of the dishes that I personally prepare. It is as if they look too highly upon Me, as if they see Me as the highest of all condiments, and have no regard at all for other people. Because I have too much self-respect, I wish not to smash others' "iron rice bowl" for My own reasons. Thus, I take the chance to step back from the "kitchen" and allow others the chance to distinguish themselves. Only in this way is My heart steadfast; I do not want to make people look up to Me and look down on others; that would not be right. What is the value of having status in people's hearts? Am I really so boorish and unreasonable? Am I really willing to demand status? If so, then why do I embark on such a great enterprise? I wish not to struggle for fame and fortune against others, and I disdain earthly fame and fortune; this is not what I pursue. I do not see man as a role model, I do not fight or snatch, but make a living by relying on My "craft," and I do not commit unconscionable acts. Thus, when I walk around the earth, I act first and ask for "payment for My handiwork" later—only this is the fairness and reasonableness spoken of by man. There is no exaggeration in this, and nor is it in the least bit played down; I speak as per the true meaning of the facts. I walk back and forth among man, searching for those who are fair and reasonable, and yet this has yielded no fruit. And because people love to bargain, the price is either too high or too low, and so I am still doing the work that is in My hands that has "fallen to Me to do."

Today, I still do not know why man does not abide by his duty, and why he does not know how great his stature is. People do not even know whether their stature weighs several grams or several liang.<sup>a</sup> And thus, they still wheedle Me. It is as if all of My work has been in vain, as if My words are but an echo in the vast mountains, and no one has ever perceived the roots of My words and utterances. And so I use this as the foundation to summarize the third aphorism: “People do not know Me, for they do not see Me.” It is as if, having eaten My words, people drink some medicine to aid digestion, and because the side effects of the medicine are so strong they suffer memory loss, and so My words become that which is forgotten by mankind, and the place where I am becomes the corner they forget. Because of this, I sigh. Why have I done so much work, yet there is no proof of it in people? Have I not committed enough effort? Or is it because I have not grasped what man needs? There is already nothing I can do regarding this matter, and My only choice is to use My administrative decrees to conquer all people. I shall no longer be a loving mother, but shall manage all mankind as a stern father!

Chapter 43

Perhaps it is only on account of My administrative decrees that people have taken a “great interest” in My words. Were they not governed by My administrative decrees, they would all be howling like tigers that have just been disturbed. Daily, I wander among the clouds, watching the humanity that covers the earth as they bustle about, subject to My restraint through My administrative decrees. In this way, the human race is kept in order, and I perpetuate My administrative decrees. From this time forth, those on earth receive all manner of chastisement on account of My administrative decrees, and as this chastisement descends on them, all humanity clamors loudly and flees in every direction. At this moment, the nations of earth immediately perish, the boundaries between nations cease to exist, place is no longer divided from place, and no more is there estrangement between men. I begin to do “ideological work” between men, so that people may coexist peacefully, one with another, no longer fighting, and, as I build bridges and establish connections in mankind’s midst, people become united. I shall fill the empyrean with the manifestations of My actions and make everything on earth fall prostrate under My power, thus implementing My plan for “global unity” and bringing this one wish of Mine to fruition, so that humanity will no longer “roam about” on the face of the earth, but find a suitable destination without delay. I take thought for the human race in every way, making it so that all mankind will soon come to live in a land of peace and happiness, so that the days of their lives will no longer be sad and desolate, and so that My plan will not come to naught upon the earth. Because man exists there, I shall build My nation upon the earth, for a part of the manifestation of My glory is upon the earth. In heaven above, I shall set My city aright and so make everything new above and below. I shall render all that exists above and below heaven into one unity, so that all things on earth will be united with all that is in heaven. This is My plan; it is what I shall accomplish in the final age—let no one interfere with this part of My work! Spreading My work among the Gentile nations is the last part of My work on earth. No one is able to fathom the work I shall do, and because of this, people are quite befuddled. And because I am busily occupied by My work on earth, people take the opportunity to “play around.” To keep them from being too unruly, I have first placed them under My chastisement to endure the discipline of the lake of fire. This is one step in My work, and I shall use the might of the lake of fire to accomplish this step of My work; otherwise, it would be impossible to carry out My work. I shall have human beings throughout the universe submit before My throne, dividing them into different categories according to My judgment, classifying them according to these categories, and further sorting them into their families, so that the whole of humanity will cease to disobey Me, falling instead into a neat and orderly arrangement according to the categories that I have named—let no one move about at random! Throughout the universe, I have wrought new work; throughout the universe, all humanity is dazed and dumbstruck by My sudden appearance, their horizons greatly expanded by My appearance in the open. Is today not just so?

I have taken My first stride among all nations and all peoples, and I have begun the first part of My work. I shall not disrupt My plan to begin anew: The sequence of the work among the Gentile nations is based on the procedure of My work in heaven. When all human beings lift up their eyes to look upon My every gesture and action, that is when I cast a fog upon the world. Men’s eyes dim at once, and they are unable to make out any direction, like sheep in a desert waste, and, when the gale starts howling, their cries are drowned by the howling wind. Amid the waves of the wind, human forms can faintly be seen, but no human voice can be heard, and though men are shouting at the top of their voice, the effort is futile. At this time, humanity weeps and wails loudly, hoping a savior will drop suddenly from the sky to lead them out of the boundless desert. But, no matter how great their faith, the savior remains immovable, and man’s hopes are dashed: The fire of faith that has been lit is blown out by the gale from the desert, and man lies prostrate in a barren and uninhabited place, nevermore to raise a blazing torch, and he falls senseless.... Seizing the moment, I cause an oasis to appear before man’s eyes. But, while his heart may be overjoyed, man’s body is too frail to respond, weak and limp of limb; and though he sees the beautiful fruits growing in the oasis, he lacks the strength to pluck them, because man’s “internal resources” have been exhausted entirely. I take the things man needs and offer them to him, but all he does is flash a fleeting smile, his face completely cheerless: Every jot of humanity's strength has disappeared without a trace, vanishing upon the moving air. For this reason, man's face is entirely without expression, and only a single ray of affection radiates from his bloodshot eyes, with a gentle benevolence like that of a mother watching over her child. From time to time, man's parched, cracked lips stir, as if he were about to speak but lacked the strength to do so. I give man some water, but all he does is shake his head. From these erratic and unpredictable actions, I learn that man has already lost all hope in his own self, and only keeps his supplicating gaze on Me, as if pleading for something. But, ignorant of the customs and mores of mankind, I am bewildered by humanity's facial expressions and actions. Only at this moment do I suddenly discover that the days of man's existence are fast drawing to a close, and I turn a sympathetic gaze toward him. And only at this moment does man show a smile of pleasure, nodding his head at Me, as if his every wish has been fulfilled. Humanity is no longer sad; on earth, people complain no more of life's emptiness, and desist from all dealings with "life." Thenceforth, there are no more sighs on earth, and the days the human race lives shall be filled with delight ...

I shall dispose of man's affairs properly before going about My own work, lest humanity constantly intrudes upon My work. To Me, man's affairs are not the central issue; the affairs of humankind are inconsequential. Because man is so small of spirit—it appears that humanity is unwilling to show mercy even to an ant, or that ants are mankind's enemies—there is always discord among men. Hearing the discord of men, I depart once more and give their tales no further heed. In humanity's eyes, I am a "resident's committee," specializing in the resolution of "family disputes" among "residents." When people come before Me, they invariably come with their own reasons and, with overbearing eagerness, recount their own "uncommon experiences," adding their own commentary as they do. I look at humanity's extraordinary demeanor: Their faces are covered with dust—a dust that, under the "irrigation" of sweat, loses its "independence" as it commingles at once with the sweat, and men's faces become further "enriched," like the sandy surface of a beach, on which footprints can occasionally be seen. Their hair resembles that of specters of the dead, lusterless, standing straight up, like bits of straw stuck into a globe. Because his temper is so inflamed, such that his very hair bristles in rage, his face sporadically gives off "steam," as if his sweat were "boiling." Scrutinizing him closely, I see that man's face is covered with "flames" like a blazing sun, which is why hot gas rises from it, and I truly worry his anger might immolate his face, though he himself pays no mind to this. At this juncture, I urge man to dampen his temper a little, for what good does this do? Why torture yourself so? For anger, the stalks of straw on the surface of this "globe" are practically burnt up by the sun's flames; in circumstances like this, even the "moon" turns red. I urge man to moderate his temper—it's important to safeguard his health. But man does not listen to My advice; rather, he continues "lodging complaints" with Me. What use is there in this? Is My bounty insufficient for man to enjoy? Or does man refuse what I give him? In a sudden fit of anger, I upend the table, and man no longer dares to narrate exciting episodes from his story; he is terrified that I might lead him into a “detention center” to cool his heels for a few days, and he takes the opportunity afforded by My tantrum to slip away. Otherwise, man would never be willing to drop such things, but would keep rattling on about his own concerns. The very sound of it grates on Me. Why is humanity so complicated in their heart of hearts? Could it be that I have installed within man too many “components”? Why does he always put on a show in front of Me? Surely, it is not that I am a “consultant” for the resolution of “civil disputes”? Did I ask man to come to Me? Surely, I am not a county magistrate? Why are the affairs of people always brought before Me? I hope that man will see fit to take charge of his own self and not disturb Me, for I have too much work to do.

Chapter 44

People treat My work as something supplemental; they do not forgo food or sleep for its sake, so I have no choice but to make appropriate demands of man as befits his attitude toward Me. I recall I once gave man much grace and many blessings, but, after snatching these things, he left at once. It was as if I had unconsciously given them to him. So, man has always loved Me by means of his own notions. I want man to love Me truly; today, however, people still drag their feet, unable to give their true love to Me. In their imaginings, they believe that if they give their true love to Me, they will be left with nothing. When I object, their whole bodies tremble—yet they remain unwilling to give their true love to Me. It is as if they are waiting for something, so they look ahead, never telling Me the truth of what is happening. It is as if their mouths have been sealed with a sticker, so their speech constantly falters. Before man, it seems, I have become a merciless capitalist. People always fear Me: At the sight of Me, they immediately disappear without a trace, terrified of what I will ask them about their circumstances. I do not know why people are capable of sincere love for their “fellow villagers,” yet are unable to love Me, who am upstanding in spirit. Because of this, I sigh: Why do people always release their love in the world of man? Why can I not taste the love of man? Is it because I am not one of mankind? People always treat Me like a savage from the mountains. It is as if I lacked all the parts that form a normal person, and so, before Me, people always affect a high moral tone. They often drag Me before them to rebuke Me, scolding Me as they would a child of preschool age; people always play the part of the educator before Me because, in their memories, I am someone who is irrational and uneducated. I do not chastise people for their failings, but give them suitable assistance, allowing them to receive regular “economic aid.” Because man has always lived amid catastrophe and finds it difficult to escape, and, amidst this disaster, he has always called out to Me, I punctually deliver “grain supplies” into his hands, allowing all people to live in the great family of the new era, and to experience the warmth of the great family. When I observe the work among man, I discover his many defects, and, as a result, I give him help. Even at this time, there is still exceptional poverty among man, and I have thus bestowed suitable care upon “impoverished areas,” lifting them from poverty. This is the means by which I work, allowing all people to enjoy My grace as much as they are able.

The people on earth unconsciously suffer chastisement, and so I open My great hand and pull them to My side, allowing them the good fortune of enjoying My grace on earth. What on earth is not empty and without value? I walk among all places in the world of man, and though there are multitudinous famous monuments and natural scenery that is pleasing to man, everywhere I go has long since become bereft of vitality. Only then do I feel the earth is gloomy and desolate: Upon the earth, life has long since disappeared. There is only the odor of death, and thus I have ever called upon man to hurry to leave this land of affliction. All that I see is redolent of emptiness. I take the chance to hurl the life in My hand toward those whom I have selected; instantly, there is a patch of green upon the land. People are willing to enjoy the things of vitality upon the earth, but I find no pleasure in this; people always cherish the things upon the earth, and never see their emptiness, such that, having reached this point today, they still do not understand why no life exists upon the earth. Today, as I walk within the universe, all people are able to enjoy the grace of the place where I am, and they use this as an asset, never pursuing the source of life. They all use what I give as an asset, yet none of them tries to perform the original function of vitality. They do not know how to use or develop natural resources, and they are thus left destitute. I reside among man, I live among man, yet today man still does not know Me. Though people have given Me much help as a result of My being so far from home, it is as if I have yet to establish the right friendship with man, and I thus still feel the unfairness of the world of man; in My eyes, mankind, after all, is empty, and there is no treasure of any value among man. I do not know what view people have of human life, but, in sum, My own is inseparable from the word “empty.” I hope people do not think badly of Me because of this, for I am quite forthright, and I do not try to be polite. However, I would advise people to pay closer attention to what I think, for My words, after all, are of help to them. I do not know what understanding people have of “emptiness.” My hope is that they spend a little effort on this work. They would do well to experience human life in a practical way, and to see if they can find any valuable “hidden veins of ore” in it. I am not trying to dampen people’s positivity; I simply want them to gain some knowledge from My words. I always rush about for the sake of human matters, but now, with things as they are, people still have not spoken a word of thanks, as if they were too busy and had forgotten to do so. Even today, I still do not understand what effect man’s rushing about all day has had. Even today, there remains no place for Me in people’s hearts, and so, once again, I fall into deep thought. I have begun setting Myself to the work of researching “why people do not have a heart that truly loves Me.” I shall lift man onto the “operating table,” I shall dissect his “heart,” and look at what is blocking the way in his heart and stopping him from truly loving Me. Under the effect of the “knife,” people squeeze their eyes shut, waiting for Me to begin, for, at this time, they have completely yielded; in their hearts, I find many other adulterations. Chief among these are people’s own things. Although they may have but a few things outside their bodies, those within their bodies are innumerable. It is as if man’s heart were a great storage box, full of riches and everything people would ever need. Only at this moment do I understand why people never pay Me any regard: It is because they have great self-sufficiency—what need do they have for My help? So, I depart from man, for people have no need of My help; why should I “act shamelessly” and incur their disgust?

Who knows why, but I have always been willing to speak amongst man, as if I cannot help Myself. Thus, people look upon Me as worthless, and always treat Me as though I was worth even less than a copper penny; they do not treat Me as something to be respected. They do not cherish Me, and they drag Me home whenever they wish, and then again throw Me out, “exposing” Me before the public. I have the utmost loathing for man’s ignoble behavior, and thus I baldly say that man is without conscience. But people are intransigent; they take their “swords and spears” and do battle with Me, saying that My words are at odds with reality, saying that I vilify them—but I do not wreak retribution upon them as a result of their violent behavior. I merely use My truths to win people over and to make them feel ashamed of themselves, after which they silently retreat. I do not compete with man, for there is no benefit in that. I will abide by My duty, and I hope that man can also abide by his and not act against Me. Would it not be better to get along peacefully in this way? Why hurt our relationship? We have gotten along all these years—what need is there to cause trouble for both of us? Would that not be totally without benefit to either of our reputations? Ours is a years-long “old friendship,” an “old acquaintance”—what need is there to part on acrimonious terms? Would it be good to do so? I hope people pay attention to the impact, that they know what is good for them. My attitude toward man today is sufficient for a lifetime of his discussion—why do people always fail to recognize My kindness? Is it because they lack the powers of expression? Do they lack sufficient vocabulary? Why are they always lost for words? Who is ignorant of how I conduct Myself? People are perfectly aware of My doings—it is only that they always like to take advantage of others, so they are never willing to put aside their own interests. If a phrase touches upon their own interests, they refuse to relax until they have gained the upper hand—and what is the point in that? People cannot compete over what they can contribute, but struggle over what they can obtain. Though there is no enjoyment in their status, they cherish it very much, even regarding it as a priceless treasure—and so they would rather endure My chastisement than give up the benefits of status. People think too highly of themselves, and thus are never willing to put themselves aside. Perhaps there are some small inaccuracies in My evaluation of man, or perhaps I have put on him a label that is neither harsh nor lenient, but, in sum, My hope is that people take this as a warning.

Chapter 45

I once chose fine goods to be kept in My house, so that within it there would be unparalleled riches and it would be thus adorned, and from this I gained enjoyment. But because of man's attitude toward Me, and because of people's motivations, I had no choice but to put this work aside and do other work. I shall use man's motivations to accomplish My work, I shall maneuver all things to serve Me, and cause My house to no longer be gloomy and forlorn as a result. I once watched among man: All that was of flesh and blood was in a stupor, and not a single thing experienced the blessing of My existence. People live amid blessings but do not know how blessed they are. If My blessings toward mankind had not existed unto today, who among mankind would have been able to persist until the present and not perished? That man lives is My blessing, and it means he lives amid My blessings, because he originally had nothing, and because he was originally without the capital to live on earth and under heaven; today I continue to help man, and only because of this does man stand before Me, lucky enough to escape death. People have summed up the secrets of man's existence, but no one has ever perceived that this is My blessing. As a result, all people curse the injustice within the world, and they all complain about Me because of the unhappiness in their lives. If not for My blessings, who would have seen today? People all complain about Me because they are unable to live amidst comfort. If man's life was bright and breezy, if the warm "spring breeze" was sent into the heart of man, causing unsurpassed pleasantness in his whole body and leaving him without the slightest pain, then who among man would die complaining? I have great difficulty gaining man's absolute sincerity, for people have too many crafty schemes—enough, quite simply, to make one's head spin. But when I raise objections to them, they give Me the cold shoulder and they pay no attention to Me, for My objections have touched their souls, leaving them incapable of being edified from head to toe, and thus people loathe My existence, for I always love to "torment" them. Because of My words, people sing and dance; because of My words, they lower their heads in silence; and because of My words, they burst out weeping. In My words, people despair; in My words, they gain the light for survival. Because of My words they toss and turn, sleepless day and night, and because of My words, they rush about all over the place. My words plunge people into Hades, and then plunge them into chastisement—but, without realizing it, people also enjoy My blessings. Is this achievable by man? Could it come in return for people's tireless efforts? Who can escape the orchestrations of My words? Thus, because of man's failings, I bestow My words upon mankind, causing man's deficiencies to be nourished because of My words, bringing unparalleled riches to the life of mankind.

I often scrutinize people's words and actions. In their behavior and facial expressions, I have discovered many "mysteries." In people's interactions with others, "secret recipes" practically take pride of place—and thus, when I engage with man, what I gain is the "secret recipes of human interaction," which shows that man does not love Me. I often reprimand man because of his failings, yet I am incapable of gaining his trust. Man is unwilling to let Me slay him, for in the "secret recipes of human interaction" of man, never has it been discovered that man has suffered a fatal disaster—he has merely suffered a few setbacks during times of misfortune. People cry out because of My words, and their pleas always contain grievances about My heartlessness. It is as if they are all searching for My true "love" of man—but how could they find My love in My stern words? As a result, they always lose hope because of My words. It is as if, as soon as they read My words, they behold the "grim reaper" and thus tremble with fear. This makes Me unhappy: Why are the people of the flesh, who live amid death, always afraid of death? Are man and death bitter enemies? Why does the fear of death always cause distress in people? Throughout the "exceptional" experiences of their lives, do they only experience a little of death? Why, in what they say, do people always complain about Me? Thus, I summarize the fourth aphorism for human life: People are only the slightest bit obedient toward Me, and thus they always hate Me. Because of man's hate, I often leave. Why must I subject Myself to this? Why must I always provoke loathing in people? Since people do not welcome My existence, why must I live shamelessly inside the house of man? I have no choice but to take My "luggage" and leave man. But people cannot bear to let Me go, and they never want to let Me leave. They wail and sob, deeply afraid that I will depart and that they will thus lose what they depend on to live. Seeing their imploring gaze, My heart softens. Amidst all the oceans of the world, who is capable of loving Me? Man is covered in filthy water, engulfed by the force of the sea. I loathe man's disobedience, yet I also feel compassion for all mankind's misfortune—for man, after all, is still a victim. How can I cast man into the waters when he is weak and powerless? Am I so cruel as to kick him when he is on the ground? Is My heart so ruthless? It is because of My attitude toward mankind that man enters this age alongside Me, and it is because of this that he has passed these exceptional days and nights together with Me. Today, people are in an agony of joy, they have a greater sense of My affection, and they love Me with great vigor, because there is vitality in their lives, and they cease to be prodigal sons wandering to the ends of the earth.

In My days of living with man, people rely on Me, and because I am considerate of man in all things and meticulous in My care for him, people live ever in My warm embrace, enduring none of the blowing wind, driving rain, or burning sun; people live amidst happiness and treat Me as a loving mother. People are like flowers in a greenhouse, utterly incapable of withstanding the onslaught of “natural disasters,” ever incapable of standing firm. Thus I place them amidst the trials of howling seas, and they cannot help but ceaselessly “waver.” They have practically no power to resist—and because their stature is too lacking and their bodies are too weak, I feel a sense of burden. Thus, without realizing it, people are subjected to My trials, because they are too fragile, and unable to stand the howling winds and burning sun. Is this not My work of the present? Why, when faced with My trials, do people always burst into tears? Am I doing them an injustice? Am I deliberately slaying them? Why does the state of man that is lovable die, never to be resurrected? People always grab Me and do not let go; because they have never been capable of living on their own, they have always allowed themselves to be led by My hand, deeply afraid of being taken away by someone else. Are their whole lives not guided by Me? During their tumultuous lives, as they cross peak and vale, they have experienced much tumult—did this not come from My hand? Why are people never able to understand My heart? Why are My good intentions always misunderstood by them? Why can My work not proceed smoothly upon earth? Because of man’s weakness, I have always shunned man, which fills Me with sorrow: Why can My next step of work not be carried out in man? Thus, I fall silent, carefully weighing him up: Why am I ever constrained by man’s defects? Why are there always obstructions to My work? Today, I have yet to find a full answer in man, for man always blows hot and cold, he is never normal; he either hates Me to his bones, or has the utmost love for Me. I, the normal God Himself, cannot stand such torment from man. Because people are always mentally abnormal, I am seemingly a little fearful of man, and so watching his every move makes Me think of his abnormality. I have unintentionally discovered the mystery in man: It turns out there is a mastermind behind him; as a result, people are always bold and confident, as if they have done something justified. Thus, people always pretend to be an adult, and they sweet-talk the “little child.” Watching man’s charade, I cannot help but grow incensed: Why are people so unloving and disrespectful of themselves? Why do they not know themselves? Have My words passed away? Are My words the enemy of man? Why, when they read My words, do people grow resentful toward Me? Why do people always add their own thoughts to My words? Am I too unreasonable toward man? All people should think hard about this, about what is contained within My words.

I do not know how well people are doing in making My words the basis of their existence. I have always felt anxious for man's fate, yet people do not seem to have any sense of this—as a result, they have never paid any heed to My doings, and have never developed any adoration for Me resulting from My attitude toward man. It is as if they had shed emotion long ago to satisfy My heart. Faced with such circumstances, I once more fall silent. Why are My words not worthy of people's consideration, of further entry? Is it because I have no reality and I am trying to find something I can use against people? Why do people always give Me "special treatment"? Am I an invalid who is in his own special ward? Why, when things have reached the point they have today, do people still look at Me differently? Is there a fault in My attitude toward man? Today, I have begun new work above the universes. I have given the people on earth a new beginning, and I have asked them all to move out from My house. And because people always like to indulge themselves, I advise them to be self-aware, and to not always disturb My work. In the "guesthouse" that I have opened, nothing inspires My loathing more than man, because people always cause trouble for Me and disappoint Me. Their behavior brings shame upon Me and I have never been able to hold My head high. Thus, I calmly speak with them, asking that they leave My house as soon as possible and stop eating My food for free. If they wish to remain, then they must undergo suffering and endure My chastening. In their minds, I am totally unaware and ignorant of their doings, and thus they have always stood tall before Me, without any sign of falling, merely pretending to be human in order to make up the numbers. When I make demands of people, they are astonished: They had never thought that God, who has been good-natured and kind for so many years, could say such words, words that are heartless and unjustified, and so they are speechless. At such times, I see that the hate for Me in people's hearts has grown once more, because they have again begun the work of complaining. They always rail against earth and imprecate Heaven. Yet I find nothing in their words that curses themselves, because their love of themselves is so great. Thus, I sum up the meaning of human life: Because people love themselves too much, their whole lives are anguished and empty, and they bring ruin upon their own heads because of their hate for Me.

Though there is untold "love" for Me in the words of man, when I take these words to the "laboratory" for testing and observe them under the microscope, all that is contained within them is revealed with utter clarity. At this moment, I come among man once more to let them look at their "medical records," so as to render them sincerely convinced. When people see them, their faces are filled with sadness, they feel regret in their hearts, and they are even so anxious that they itch to forsake their evil ways immediately and return to the right path in order to make Me happy. Seeing their resolution, I am extremely delighted; I am overcome with joy: "On earth, who but man could share joy, sorrow, and hardship with Me? Is man not the only one?" Yet when I leave, people rip up their medical records and throw them to the floor before strutting off. In the days since then, I have seen little in people's actions that is after My own heart. Yet their resolutions before Me have accumulated considerably, and, looking upon their resolutions I feel disgusted, for in them there is nothing that can be held up for My enjoyment; they are too tainted. Seeing My disregard for their resolution, people grow cold. Afterward, only rarely do they submit an "application" because man's heart has never been praised before Me, and has only ever met with My rejection—no longer is there any spiritual support in people's lives, and so their zeal disappears, and no more do I feel that the weather is "scorching hot." People suffer much throughout their lives, to the extent that, with the arrival of the situation today, they are so "tormented" by Me that they hover between life and death. As a result, the light in their faces dims and they lose their "liveliness," for they have all "grown up." I cannot bear to see people's piteous state when they are refined during chastisement—yet who can redeem the miserable defeat of mankind? Who can save man from the miserable human life? Why have people never been able to extricate themselves from the abyss of the sea of affliction? Do I entrap people deliberately? People have never understood My mood, and so I lament to the universe that among all things in heaven and on earth, nothing has ever perceived My heart, and nothing truly loves Me. Even today, I still do not know why people are incapable of loving Me. They can give their hearts to Me, they are able to sacrifice their destiny for Me, but why can they not give their love to Me? Do they not possess what I ask for? People are able to love everything apart from Me—so why can they not love Me? Why is their love always hidden? Why, as they have stood before Me up until today, have I never seen their love? Is this something they lack? Am I deliberately making things difficult for people? Do they still have scruples in their hearts? Are they afraid of loving the wrong person, and being unable to remedy themselves? In people there are countless unfathomable mysteries, and thus I am always "timid and afraid" before man.

Today, at the time of advancing toward the gate of the kingdom, all people start forging ahead—but when they arrive before the gate, I close the gate, I shut people outside, and demand that they show their entry passes. Such an odd move is completely counter to people's expectations, and they are all astonished. Why has the gate—which has always been wide open—suddenly been shut tight today? People stamp their feet and pace about. They imagine that they can worm their way in, but when they hand Me their false entry passes, I cast them into the pit of fire there and then, and seeing their own "painstaking efforts" in flames, they lose hope. They clutch their heads, crying, watching the beautiful scenes within the kingdom but unable to enter. Yet I do not let them in because of their piteous state—who may upset My plan as they please? Are the blessings of the future given in exchange for people's zeal? Does the meaning of human existence lie in entering My kingdom as one pleases? Am I so lowly? If not for My harsh words, would people not have entered the kingdom long ago? Thus, people always hate Me because of all the bother My existence causes them. If I did not exist, they would be able to enjoy the blessings of the kingdom during the present day—what need would there then be to endure this suffering? And so I tell people they would be better off leaving, that they should take advantage of how well things are going in the present to find a way out for themselves; they should take advantage of the present, while they are still young, to learn some skills. If they do not, then in the future it will be too late. In My house, no one has ever received blessings. I tell people to hurry up and leave, to not stick to living in “poverty”; in the future it will be too late for regrets. Do not be too hard on yourself; why make things difficult for yourself? Yet I also tell people that when they fail to gain blessings, no one may complain about Me. I have no time to waste My words on man. I hope that this remains in people’s minds, that they do not forget it—these words are the uncomfortable truth, which I give. I have long since lost faith in man and I have long since lost hope in people, for they lack ambition, they have never been able to give Me a heart that loves God, and always give Me their motivations instead. I have said much to man, and since people still ignore My advice today, I tell them of My view in order to prevent them misunderstanding My heart in the future; whether they live or die in the times to come is their business; I have no control over this. I hope they find their own path to survival. I am powerless in this. Since man does not truly love Me, we simply part ways; in future, no longer will there be any words between us, no longer will we have anything to talk about, we will not interfere with each other, we will each go our own way, people must not come looking for Me, and never again will I ask for man’s “help.” This is something that is between us, and we have spoken without equivocation to prevent there being any issues in the future. Does this not make things easier? We each go our own way and have nothing to do with each other—what is wrong with that? I hope people give this some consideration.

In order to cause humanity’s life to mature, and so that humanity and I may, sharing a common ambition, achieve results, I have always made allowances for humans, allowing them to gain nourishment and sustenance from My word and to receive all of My abundance. I have never given humanity cause for embarrassment, and yet humans never consider My feelings. This is because humans are unfeeling and “despise” all things apart from Me. Due to their shortcomings, I very much sympathize with them; I therefore have put forth more than a little effort into humans so that they may enjoy, to their hearts’ content, all the earth’s abundance during their time in the world. I do not treat people unfairly, and out of consideration for their having followed Me for many years, My heart has softened for them. It is as if I cannot bear to carry out My work upon these humans. Thus, seeing these scrawny people who love Me as they love themselves, in My heart there is always an inexplicable feeling of pain. But who can break convention because of this? Who will disturb oneself because of this? Nonetheless, I have bestowed all of My bounty upon humankind so that they may enjoy it to the fullest, and I have not mistreated humans on this issue. This is why humanity still sees My compassionate and benevolent face. I have always been patient, and I have always been waiting. When humans have had enough enjoyment and become bored, at that time I shall begin to “satisfy” their requests and allow all humans to escape their empty lives, and never have any more dealings with humankind. On earth, I have used seawater to swallow up humanity, controlled them with famine, threatened them with plagues of insects, and used heavy rains to “water” them, yet they have never felt the emptiness of life. Even now, people still do not understand the significance of living on earth. Could it be that living in My presence is the most profound significance of human life? Does being within Me allow one to escape the threat of disaster? How many fleshly bodies on earth have lived in a state of freedom of self-enjoyment? Who has escaped the emptiness of living in the flesh? Yet who can recognize this? Ever since I created humanity, no one has been able to live a life of most significance on earth, and so humanity has always idled away a life of utter insignificance. None, however, is willing to escape this sort of predicament, and none is willing to shun this empty and weary life. In humanity’s experience, none of those who live in the flesh has escaped the customs of the human world, even though they capitalize on enjoying Me. Instead, they have always just let nature take its course and continued to deceive themselves.

Once I have fully ended humanity’s existence, there will be no one left on earth to endure the “persecution” of the earth; only then will it be possible to say that My great work has been thoroughly accomplished. In the last days when I am incarnate, the work I wish to accomplish is to make people understand the emptiness of living in the flesh, and I shall use this occasion to extinguish the flesh. From then on, no humans will exist on earth, no one will ever again cry about the emptiness of the earth, no one will ever speak again of the difficulties of the flesh, no one will ever complain again that I am unfair, and all people and things will enter into rest. Thereafter, humans will no longer be rushing about, constantly busy, and nor will they search here and there on earth, for they will have found a suitable destination for themselves. At that time, smiles will appear upon all their faces. I will then ask nothing more of humanity, and I will have no further dispute with them; there will be no more peace treaty between us. I exist upon the earth and humans live upon the earth; I live and reside with them. They all feel the enjoyment of My presence, and so they are unwilling to leave without reason, and instead, would prefer that I just stay for a little longer. How can I stand to witness the desolation of the earth without lifting a finger to help? I am not of the earth; it is through patience that I have forced Myself to remain here to this day. Were it not for humanity's endless supplications, I would have left long ago. Nowadays people can take care of themselves, and they do not need My assistance because they have matured and do not need Me to feed them. Therefore, I am planning to hold a "victory celebration" with humanity, after which I shall bid them farewell, so that they will not be unaware. Of course, parting on bad terms would not be a good thing, because there is no rancor between us. Thus, the friendship between us shall be everlasting. I hope that after we part ways, humans will be able to carry on My "inheritance," and not forget about the teachings I have provided during My life. I hope that they will not do anything that would bring disgrace to My name, and that they will be mindful of My word. I hope humans can all try their best to satisfy Me after I have left; I hope that they use My word as a foundation for their lives, and that they do not fail to live up to My hopes, for My heart has always been concerned for humans, and I have always been attached to them. Humanity and I once gathered together, and we enjoyed on earth the same blessings that are in heaven. I lived together with humans and resided with them; humans have always loved Me, and I have always loved them. We had an affinity for one another. Looking back on My time together with humans, I remember our days being filled with laughter and joy, and there also were quarrels. Nonetheless, the love between us was established on this basis, and our dealings with one another were never severed. Amidst our many years of contact, humanity has left a profound impression upon Me, and I have also given humans a great many things to enjoy, for which they have always been doubly grateful. Now, our gatherings will never be the same as before; who can run away from this moment of our parting? Humans have a deep affection for Me, and I have endless love for them—but what can be done about that? Who would dare to violate the requirements of the heavenly Father? I will return to My abode, where I will complete another part of My work. Perhaps we will have a chance to meet again. It is My hope that humans will not feel overly sorrowful, and that they will satisfy Me on earth; My Spirit in heaven shall often confer grace upon them.

At the time of creation, I had prophesied that in the last days I shall make a group of people who are of one mind with Me. I had foretold that after establishing an exemplar on earth in the last days, I would return to My abode. Once all of humanity has satisfied Me, they will have achieved what I have asked of them, and I will no longer require them to do anything. Instead, humans and I will trade stories about the old days, and after that we shall part company. I have begun this work, and I have allowed humans to prepare themselves psychologically and to understand My intentions, lest they misunderstand and think Me cruel or heartless, which is not My intent. Do humans love Me yet refuse to allow Me a suitable resting place? Are they unwilling to beseech the heavenly Father on My behalf? Have humans not shed tears of sympathy with Me? Have they not helped in achieving an early reunion between Us—the Father and Son? Why, then, are they unwilling now? My ministry upon the earth has been fulfilled, and after parting ways with humanity, I will still continue to assist them; is this not good? In order for My work to achieve better results, and so that it will be mutually beneficial, we must part ways, though it is painful. Let our tears fall in silence; I will no longer reproach humanity. In the past, I have said many things to people, all of which have pricked their very hearts, causing them to shed tears of grief. For that, I hereby apologize to humanity and ask for their forgiveness. I ask that they not hate Me, for this is all for their own good. Therefore, I hope that humans will understand My heart. In former times we had our disputes, but looking back, we both benefited. Because of these disputes, God and humanity have built a bridge of friendship. Is that not the fruit of our collaborative efforts? We should all enjoy this. I ask humans to forgive My previous “mistakes.” Their transgressions, too, shall be forgotten. As long as they are able to give Me a love in return in the future, that will give comfort to My Spirit in heaven. I do not know what humanity’s resolution is in this regard—whether or not people are willing to satisfy Me in My final request. I am not asking anything else of them, only that they love Me. That is enough. Can this be achieved? Let all the unpleasant things that happened between us be left in the past; let there always be love between us. I have given humans so much love, and they have paid such a heavy price to love Me. Thus, I hope that humanity treasures the undiluted and pure love between us so that our love will extend all over the human world and be passed down forever. When we meet again, let us still be linked in love so that our love may continue on for eternity and be praised and disseminated by all people. This would satisfy Me, and I would show My smiling face to humanity. I hope that humans will remember My exhortations.

APPENDIX:

INTERPRETATIONS OF THE MYSTERIES OF “GOD’S WORDS TO THE ENTIRE UNIVERSE”

Chapter 1

Just as God has said, “None can grasp the root of My words, nor do they know My purpose in speaking them,” if not for the guidance of the Spirit of God, and if not for the advent of His utterances, all people would perish under His chastisement. Why has God taken such a long time to test all people? And for as long as five months? This is precisely the focal point of our fellowship as well as a central point in God’s wisdom. We may postulate the following: Without this period of putting man on trial, and without God vehemently striking at, killing, and hacking away at the corrupt human race, if the building of the church had continued until today, then what would the result have been? So God gets straight to the point in the very first sentence, directly pointing out the desired effect of these several months’ work—truly He draws blood at the first prick! This suffices to show the wisdom of God’s deeds over this period of several months: They have enabled everyone to learn, through trial, how to submit and how to expend themselves with sincerity, as well as how better to come to know God through painful refinement. The greater the despair people experience, the better they come to know themselves. And to tell the truth, the more they face refinement that is fraught with suffering, the more they come to know their own corruption, to the point of recognizing that they are unworthy even of being a service-doer for God, and that to render service is to be elevated by Him. And so, after this result has been achieved, when man has used up every part of himself, God directly gives voice to the sounds of mercy, without hiding anything away. It can readily be seen that God’s method of working, after these few months, takes today as its starting point; He has made this plain for everyone to see. Because, in the past, God often said “it is not easy to earn the right to be called God’s people,” He has borne these words out in the people who are referred to as service-doers, which suffices to show that God is trustworthy beyond the shadow of a doubt. Whatsoever God says will come true, in varying degrees, and in no way is it empty talk.

When all people are filled with grief and sorrow to the point of distraction, words like these from God hit home, reviving them all in the midst of their hopelessness. In order to eliminate any further doubt from men’s minds, God added the following: “Even though they are referred to as My people, this title is in no way secondary to being called My ‘sons.’” This suffices to show that only God is able to protect His own authority, and once the people have read this, they will believe even more firmly that, far from being a method of working, it is a fact. Going one step further, so that people’s visions may remain unclouded, everyone’s identity is made clear in His new approach. This suffices to show the wisdom of God and it enables people to better know that God can see into the hearts of men; in their thoughts and actions men are as puppets, with God pulling the strings, and this is certain and beyond question.

Going back to the beginning, what God did from the start was to point out directly that the first step of His work, that of “purifying the church,” had already been concluded.

“The situation now is not what it once was, and My work has entered on a new starting point.” From this statement, one can see that God’s work has entered on a new starting point, immediately following upon which, He has indicated to us the blueprints for the next step of His work—once the building of the church is concluded, the life of the Age of Kingdom will begin, “for it is now no longer the era of church building, but rather the era in which the kingdom is successfully built.” Furthermore, He has stated that, as people are still on the earth, their assemblies will continue to be referred to as the church, in this way avoiding the realization of an unrealistic “kingdom” as everyone has imagined it. Next comes fellowship on the issue of visions.

Why is it that, even though it is now the era of kingdom building and the end of church building, all assemblies are still called the church? It has been said in the past that the church is the precursor to the kingdom, and without the church there can be no talk of the kingdom. The beginning of the Age of Kingdom is the beginning of God’s ministry in the flesh, and the Age of Kingdom is ushered in by God incarnate. What He brings is the Age of Kingdom, and not the official descent of the kingdom. This is not difficult to imagine; what I mean by the people of God are the people of the Age of Kingdom, and not the people of the kingdom itself. That is why it would make sense to say that assemblies on earth should still be referred to as the church. In the past, He acted within His normal humanity while not yet having been borne witness to as God Himself, and so the Age of Kingdom had not then begun among men; that is, as I have said, My Spirit had not yet officially begun to work in My incarnate flesh. Now that God Himself has been borne witness to, the kingdom is realized among men. This signifies that I will begin to work within My divinity, and so those human beings who can appreciate the words I speak and the deeds I work in My divinity will become known as My people of the Age of Kingdom. It is from this that “God’s people” came to be. In this stage, it is primarily My divinity that acts and speaks. Man simply cannot interfere, nor can he disrupt My plan. Once God has reached a certain stage in His speaking, His name is witnessed, and from this point His trial of mankind will commence. This is the summit of the wisdom in God’s work. It lays a firm foundation and sets down roots for the beginning of the next step as well as the end of the last step. This is something that, no one, as a human being, could possibly have anticipated; it is the meeting point of the first and second parts of the era of judgment. Without those few months in which I refined man, My divinity would have had no way of working. Those several months of refinement opened the way for the next step of My work. The cessation of these few months of work is a sign that the next phase of work is to be more profound. If one truly understands the words of God, then one may be able to grasp that He is using this period of several months to start the next step of His work, thereby enabling it to achieve even better results. Because the obstruction of My humanity has created a hindrance to the next step of My work, through these few months of refinement through suffering, therefore, both sides are edified and have derived substantial benefit. Only now, as a result of this, does man begin to treasure My way of referring to him. Therefore, when God, with a turn of His writing brush, said He would no longer call men “service-doers” but rather “God’s people,” all of them were overcome with joy. This was man’s Achilles’ heel. It was precisely to get hold of this vital weakness of man that God spoke as He did.

In order to further win over all people and gain their wholehearted belief, and in order to point out the fact that the devotion of some people is adulterated with impurities, God has taken the additional step of calling attention to all the different kinds of human ugliness, and in doing so He has fulfilled His words: “How many are sincere in loving Me? Who is not acting out of consideration for their own future? Who has never complained during their trials?” From words like these, everyone is able to recognize their own disobedience, disloyalty, and lack of filial devotion, and thereby come to see that God’s mercy and lovingkindness follow all of those who seek Him, every step of the way. This can be seen from the following words: “When some are on the brink of retreat, when all who, hoping for Me to change My manner of speaking, have lost hope, at that time I give voice to the sounds of salvation, bringing all who sincerely love Me back to My kingdom, before My throne.” Here, the phrases “those who sincerely love Me,” and the rhetorical question “How many sincerely love Me?” do not contradict one another. They illustrate how “sincerity” in this context contains impurities. It is not that God knows nothing; rather, it is precisely because God can see into the innermost hearts of men that He uses words like “sincerity,” which is a sarcasm aimed at the corrupt human race, to make everyone feel their indebtedness to God more deeply and reproach themselves more harshly, as well as recognize the fact that the grievances in their hearts come entirely from Satan. Everyone is surprised when they see a term like “devotion,” thinking privately: “Many times I have railed against Heaven and earth, and many times wanted to leave, but because I feared God’s administrative decrees I would deal anyhow with matters just to get them over with and go along with the crowd, waiting for God to deal with me, thinking that, if things turned out to be truly hopeless, there would still be enough time for me to back away slowly. But now God is calling us His devoted people. Can God really be a God who sees into the innermost hearts of men?” It was to avoid this kind of misunderstanding that God called attention to the psychological states of various types of people only at the very end, causing everyone to transition from a state where they doubted inwardly while outwardly expressing delight into a state whereupon they are convinced by heart, by word, and by sight. In this way, man’s impression of God’s word has deepened, as a natural consequence of which man has grown a little more fearful, a little more reverent, and has moreover gained a better understanding of God. Finally, to alleviate man’s worries, God said: “But as the past is the past, and the present is already here, there is no need to long nostalgically for yesterday anymore, or to take thought for the future.” This type of tense, harmonious, and yet pithy manner of speaking has an even greater effect, making all who read His words see the light once more from the midst of the despair of the past, until they see God’s wisdom and deeds, gain the appellation of “God’s people,” eliminate the clouds of doubt in their hearts, and then come to know themselves from the shifting patterns of their psychological states. These conditions ebb and flow in turn, giving rise to sorrow and grief, happiness and joy. In this chapter God has delineated an outline of people so lifelike and vivid in every detail that it has arrived at the point of perfection. It is truly something man cannot achieve, something that truly exposes the secrets in the deepest recesses of the human heart. Could this be something that man has the capacity to do?

Immediately following this, and of even greater importance, is the passage below, which reveals God’s administrative decree directly to man and which, moreover, is the most important part: “Being human, whoever goes against reality and does not do things according to My guidance will not come to a good end, but will only bring trouble upon themselves. Of everything that occurs in the universe, there is nothing in which I do not have the final say.” Is this not the administrative decree of God? This suffices to show that examples of those who contravene this administrative decree are legion. Based on the above, God goes on to urge everyone not to take thought for their own destiny. If one should dare to wish to break free of God’s orchestration, the consequences would be dire beyond imagining. This then enables all those who have experienced enlightenment and illumination in these words to better understand God’s administrative decree as well as to understand that His majesty may not be offended, and thereby to become more seasoned and steady, as verdant as a pine that, weathered by wind and frost, stands defiant against the threat of the bitter cold, continuing to add to nature’s thriving green vitality. Most people, encountering this passage, feel as bewildered as if they had wandered into some sort of maze; this is because the content of God’s words changes relatively quickly, and so nine out of ten people enter into a labyrinth when they attempt to understand their own corrupt dispositions. So that the work may go more smoothly in future, so that the doubts in all men’s hearts may be eliminated, and so that all may go one step further in their belief in God’s faithfulness, He emphasizes at the end of that passage: “Each and every one of those who sincerely love Me shall assuredly return before My throne.” Thus, the minds of people that have undergone several months of His work are, in an instant, relieved of some part of their apprehension. What is more, their hearts, which had been suspended in midair, return to what they had once been as though a heavy stone had dropped off onto the ground. No longer do they have to take thought for their fate; further, they believe that God will no longer speak empty words. Because men are self-righteous, there is not a single one who does not believe that they display the utmost devotion toward God; this is why God deliberately emphasizes “sincerely”—to achieve a better outcome. This is to pave the way and lay the foundation for the next step in His work.

Chapter 3

Today is no longer the Age of Grace, nor the age of mercy, but the Age of Kingdom in which the people of God are revealed, the age in which God does things directly through divinity. Thus, in this chapter of God's words, God leads all those who accept His words into the spiritual realm. In the opening paragraph, He makes these preparations in advance, and if one possesses the knowledge of God's words, one will follow the vine to get the melon, and shall directly grasp what God wishes to achieve in His people. Before, people were tested by application of the appellation "service-doers," and today, after they have been subjected to the trial, their training formally begins. In addition, people must have a greater knowledge of God's work based on the foundation of the words of the past, and must look upon the words and the person, and the Spirit and the person, as one inseparable whole—as one mouth, one heart, one action, and one source. This requirement is the highest requirement that God has made of man since the creation. From this it can be seen that God wishes to expend part of His efforts on His people, that He wishes to display some signs and wonders in them, and, more importantly, that He wishes to make all people obey the entirety of God's work and words. In one regard, God Himself upholds His testimony, and in another, He has made requirements of His people, and has directly issued God's administrative decrees to the masses: Thus, since you are called My people, things are not as they used to be; you should heed and obey the utterances of My Spirit, and closely follow My work; you may not separate My Spirit and My flesh, for We are inherently one, and by nature undivided. In this, to prevent people from neglecting God incarnate, there is once again an emphasis on the words "for We are inherently one, and by nature undivided"; because such neglect is man's failing, this is once more listed in God's administrative decrees. Next, God informs people of the consequences of offending God's administrative decrees, without hiding anything, by saying, "They shall suffer loss, and shall only be able to drink from their own bitter cup." Because man is weak, after hearing these words he cannot help but become more wary of God in his heart, for the "bitter cup" is enough to make people ponder a while. People have many interpretations of this "bitter cup" of which God speaks: being judged by words or expelled from the kingdom, or being isolated for a period of time, or having one's flesh corrupted by Satan and possessed by evil spirits, or being forsaken by the Spirit of God, or having one's flesh terminated and banished to Hades. These interpretations are what can be achieved by people's thinking, and so in their imagination, people are incapable of going beyond them. But God's thoughts are unlike those of man; that is to say, the "bitter cup" does not refer to any of the above things, but to the extent of people's knowledge of God after receiving God's dealing. To put this more clearly, when someone arbitrarily separates the Spirit of God and His words, or separates the words and the person, or the Spirit and the flesh with which He clothes Himself, this person is not only incapable of knowing God in God's words, but also, if they grow a little suspicious of God, they will become blinded at every turn. It is not as people imagine that they are directly cut off; rather, they gradually fall into God's chastisement—which is to say, they descend into great catastrophes, and no one can be compatible with them, as if they have been possessed by evil spirits, and as if they are a headless fly, butting against things wherever they go. Despite this, they are still incapable of leaving. In their hearts, things are indescribably hard, as if there is unspeakable suffering in their hearts—yet they cannot open their mouths, and they spend all day in a trance, unable to feel God. It is under these circumstances that God's administrative decrees threaten them, so that they do not dare to leave the church despite having no enjoyment—this is what is called an “internal and external attack,” and is terribly hard for people to endure. What has been said here is different from people's notions—and that is because, under those circumstances, they still know to seek God, and this happens when God turns His back on them, and what is more important is that, just like an unbeliever, they are totally incapable of feeling God. God does not save such people directly; when their bitter cup is emptied out, that is the time when their last day has arrived. But at this moment, they still seek God's will, wishing to enjoy just a little bit more—but this time is different from the past, unless there are special circumstances.

Following this, God also explains the positive aspects to all, and thus they once more gain life—for, in times past, God said that the service-doers had no life, but today God suddenly talks of “the life within.” Only with talk of life do people know that there can still be the life of God within them. In this way, their love of God increases by several increments, and they gain a greater knowledge of God's love and mercy. Thus, after beholding these words, all people repent their previous mistakes, and secretly shed tears of contrition. Most, too, quietly make up their minds that they must satisfy God. Sometimes, God's words pierce people's innermost heart, making it hard for people to accept them, and difficult for people to be at peace. Sometimes, God's words are sincere and earnest, and warm people's hearts, such that after people have read them, it is as when a lamb sees its ewe again after many years of being lost. Tears fill their eyes, they are overcome with emotion, and they are itching to throw themselves into God's embrace, wracked with sobs, setting free the indescribable pain that has been in their hearts for many years, so as to show their loyalty to God. Due to the several months of test, they have become a little oversensitive, as if they have just suffered a nervous attack, like an invalid that has been bedbound for years. To make them adamant in their belief in God's words, many times does God stress the following words: “In order that the next step of My work may proceed smoothly and without hindrance, I employ the refinement of words to test all those in My house.” Here, God says “to test all those in My house”; a close reading tells us that when people are acting as service-doers, they are still people within God's house. Moreover, these words emphasize God's truthfulness toward the title “people of God,” bringing people a measure of relief in their hearts. And so why does God repeatedly point out the many manifestations in people after they have read God's words, or when the title "people of God" has yet to be revealed? Is it only to show that God is the God who looks deep into man's heart? This is only part of the reason—and here, it is only of secondary importance. God does so in order to make all people utterly convinced, in order that every person might, from God's words, know of their own inadequacies and know of their own previous deficiencies with regard to life, and, more importantly, in order to lay the foundation for the next step of work. People can only strive to know God and pursue emulation of God based upon the foundation of knowing themselves. Because of these words, people change from being negative and passive to positive and proactive, and this enables the second part of God's work to take root. It can be said that, with this step of work as the foundation, the second part of God's work becomes a simple matter, requiring but the slightest of effort. Thus, when people expel the sadness within their hearts and become positive and proactive, God takes this opportunity to make other requirements of His people: "My words are released and expressed at any time or place, and so, too, should you know yourselves before Me at all times. For today, after all, is unlike what came before, and you can no longer accomplish whatever you wish. Instead, under the guidance of My words, you must be capable of subduing your body; you must use My words as your mainstay, and you may not act recklessly." In this, God primarily stresses "My words"; in the past, too, He referred to "My words" many times, and thus, each person cannot help but give some attention to this. Thus is indicated the core of the next step of God's work: All people shall turn their attention to God's words, and may not have any other loves. All must cherish the words spoken from God's mouth, and not take them lightly; thus will be ended the previous circumstances in the church, when one person would read God's words and many would say amen and be obedient. At that time, people did not know the words of God, but took them as a weapon with which to defend themselves. To reverse this, God on earth makes new, higher demands of man. To stop people from becoming negative and passive after seeing God's high standards and stringent requirements, God encourages people many times by saying: "Since things have come to such a situation as today's, you need not feel too aggrieved and regretful about your deeds and actions of the past. My magnanimity is as boundless as the seas and the sky—how could man's capabilities and knowledge of Me not be as familiar to Me as the back of My own hand?" These earnest and sincere words suddenly open up people's minds, and immediately take them from despair to the love for God, to being positive and proactive, for God speaks by seizing hold of the weakness within people's hearts. Without being aware of it, people always feel ashamed before God because of their past actions, and they express remorse over and over again. Thus, God reveals these words especially naturally and normally, so that people do not feel that God's words are stiff and dull, but both stern and soft, and vivid and lifelike.

From the creation until today, God has silently arranged everything for man from the spiritual world, and never described the truth of the spiritual world to man. Yet, today,

God suddenly gives an overview of the battle that rages within it, which naturally leaves people scratching their heads, deepens their sense that God is profound and unfathomable, and makes it even harder for them to locate the source of God's words. It can be said that the embattled state of the spiritual world brings all people into the spirit. This is the first crucial part of the work of the future, and is the clue enabling people to enter the spiritual realm. From this, it can be seen that the next step of God's work is mainly targeted at the spirit, the primary aim of which is to give all people greater knowledge of the miraculous deeds of the Spirit of God within the flesh, thus giving all those who are loyal to God a greater knowledge of the foolishness and of the nature of Satan. Although they were not born in the spiritual realm, they feel as if they have beheld Satan, and once they have this feeling, God immediately changes to another means of speaking—and once people have attained this way of thinking, God asks: "Why am I training you with such urgency? Why do I tell you the facts of the spiritual world? Why do I remind and exhort you time and again?" And so on—a whole series of questions that provoke many questions in people's minds: Why does God speak in this tone? Why does He speak of the matters of the spiritual world, and not of His demands of people during the time of the building of the church? Why does God not strike at people's notions by revealing mysteries? Simply by being a little more thoughtful, people acquire a little knowledge of the steps of God's work, and thus, when they encounter temptations in the future, there is born in them a real sense of loathing toward Satan. And even when they encounter trials in the future, they are still able to know God and detest Satan more profoundly, and thus curse Satan.

At the end, God's will is entirely revealed to man: "allowing each of My words to take root, blossom and yield fruit within your spirits, and, more importantly, to bear more fruit. This is because what I ask for is not bright, lush flowers, but bounteous fruit, fruit that does not lose its ripeness." Of God's repeated demands of His people, this is the most comprehensive of them all, it is the center point, and is put forward in a straightforward manner. I have transitioned from working in normal humanity to working in full divinity; thus, in the past, in My plain-spoken words, there was no need for Me to add any further explanations, and most people were able to understand the meaning of My words. The result was that, back then, all that was required was for people to know My words and be capable of speaking of reality. This step, however, is hugely different. My divinity has completely taken over, and left no room for the humanity to play a part. Thus, if those among My people wish to understand the true meaning of My words, they have the utmost difficulty. Only through My utterances can they gain enlightenment and illumination, and if it is not through this channel, any thoughts of grasping the aim of My words are but idle daydreams. When all people have a greater knowledge of Me after accepting My utterances is the time when My people live Me out, it is the time when My work in the flesh is completed, and the time when My divinity is entirely lived out in the flesh. At this moment, all people shall know Me in the flesh, and will truly be able to say that God appears in the flesh, and this will be the fruit. This is further evidence that God has grown tired of the building of the church—that is, “although the flowers in a greenhouse are as innumerable as the stars, and draw all the admiring crowd, once they have wilted, they become as tattered as the deceitful schemes of Satan, and no one shows any interest in them.” Although God also personally worked during the time of the building of the church, because He is the God who is always new and never old, He has no nostalgia for matters of the past. To stop people thinking back upon the past, He employed the words “as tattered as the deceitful schemes of Satan,” which shows that God does not abide by doctrine. Some people may misinterpret God’s will, and ask: Why, since it is work done by God Himself, did He say “once the flowers have wilted, no one shows any interest in them”? These words give people a revelation. What is most important is that they allow all people to have a new, and correct, starting point; only then will they be able to satisfy God’s will. Ultimately, the people of God shall be able to give God praise that is true, not forced, and which comes from their hearts. This is what is at the heart of God’s 6,000-year management plan. That is, it is the crystallization of this 6,000-year management plan: letting all people know the significance of God’s incarnation—letting them practically know God become flesh, which is to say, the deeds of God in the flesh—so that they deny the vague God, and know the God who is of today and also yesterday, and, more than that, of tomorrow, who has really and actually existed from everlasting to everlasting. Only then shall God enter rest!

To stop all people from having their heads turned and getting carried away after transitioning from negativity to positivity, in the last chapter of God’s utterance, once God has spoken of His highest requirements of His people—once God has told people of His will in this stage of His management plan—He gives them the opportunity to ponder His words, to help them make up their minds to satisfy God’s will in the end. When people’s conditions are positive, God immediately begins to ask them questions about the other side of the issue. He asks a string of questions that are difficult for people to figure out: “Was your love for Me tainted by impurity? Was your loyalty to Me pure and wholehearted? Was your knowledge of Me true? How much of a place did I hold within your hearts?” And so on. In the first half of this paragraph, with the exception of two reprimands, the remainder consists entirely of questions. One question in particular—“Have My utterances hit home within you?”—is very fitting. It truly strikes home at the most secret things in the depths of people’s hearts, causing them to unconsciously ask themselves: “Am I truly loyal in my love of God?” In their hearts, people unconsciously recall their past experiences in serving: They were consumed by self-forgiveness, self-righteousness, self-importance, self-satisfaction, complacency, and pride. They were like a big fish caught in a net—after falling into the net, it was not easy for them to free themselves. Furthermore, they were frequently unrestrained, they often deceived God's normal humanity, and they put themselves first in all they did. Prior to being called "service-doers," they were like a newborn tiger cub, filled with energy. Though they focused their attention on life to some degree, at times they were only going through the motions; like slaves, they behaved perfunctorily toward God. During the time of being exposed as service-doers, they were negative, they fell behind, they were filled with sorrow, they complained about God, they hung their heads in dejection, and so on. Each step of their own wonderful, touching stories lingers in their minds. It even becomes difficult for them to sleep, and they spend the daytime in a stupor. They seem to have been cast out a second time by God, to have fallen into Hades, incapable of escaping. Though God did nothing more than pose a few difficult questions in the first paragraph, read closely they show that God's aim is more than just to ask these questions for the sake of asking; in them is contained a deeper level of meaning, one that must be explained in greater detail.

Why did God once say that today, after all, is today, and since yesterday has already passed, there is no call for nostalgia, and yet in the first sentence here, He asks people questions, and makes them think back to the past? Think about it: Why does God ask that people not be nostalgic about the past, but also that they think back on the past? Could there be a mistake in God's words? Could the source of these words be wrong? Naturally, those who pay no attention to God's words would not ask such profound questions. But for the moment, there is no need to speak of this. First, let Me explain the first question above—the "why." Of course, everybody is aware that God has said He does not speak empty words. If words are uttered from God's mouth, then there is an aim and significance to them—this touches upon the heart of the question. People's biggest failing is their inability to change their evil ways and the intractability of their old nature. To allow all people to know themselves more thoroughly and realistically, God first leads them in thinking back upon the past, in order that they may reflect upon themselves more deeply, and thus come to know that not a single one of God's words is empty, and that all of God's words are fulfilled in different people to different degrees. In the past, the way God dealt with people gave them a little knowledge of God and made their sincerity toward God a little more heartfelt. The word "God" occupies but 0.1 percent of people and of their hearts. Achieving this much shows God has carried out a tremendous amount of salvation. It is fair to say that God's accomplishment of this much in this group of people—a group that is exploited by the great red dragon and possessed by Satan—is such that they dare not just do as they please. That is because it is impossible for God to occupy one hundred percent of the hearts of those who have been possessed by Satan. To increase people's knowledge of God during the next step, God compares the condition of the service-doers of the past with that of God's people of today, thus creating a clear contrast that makes people feel more ashamed. Just as God said, there is "nowhere to hide your shame."

So, why did I say that God is not merely asking questions for the sake of asking them? A close reading from start to finish shows that, though the questions posed by God have not been thoroughly explained, they all refer to the extent of people's loyalty toward God and knowledge of God; they refer, in other words, to people's actual conditions, which are pitiable, and difficult for them to open up about. From this it can be seen that people's stature is too meager, that their knowledge of God is too superficial, and their loyalty toward Him too tainted and impure. As God said, almost all people fish in murky waters and are only there to make up the numbers. When God says, "Do you truly believe that you are unqualified to be My people?" the true meaning of these words is that among all people, none are fit to be God's people. But in order to achieve a greater effect, God uses the method of asking questions. This method is far more effective than the words of the past, which ruthlessly attacked, hacked at, and killed people, to the point of piercing their hearts. Suppose God had directly said something dull and insipid like "You are not loyal to Me, and your loyalty is tainted, I do not hold an absolute place in your hearts.... I shall leave you no place to hide from yourselves, for none of you are sufficient to be My people." You might compare the two, and though their content is the same, the tone of each is different. Using questions is much more effective. Thus, the wise God employs the first tone, which shows the artistry with which He speaks. This is unachievable by man, and so it is no wonder that God said, "People are but utensils that are used by Me. The only difference between them is that some are lowly, and some are precious."

As people read on, God's words come thick and fast, barely giving them the chance to take a breath, for by no means does God go easy on man. When people feel the utmost regret, God once more warns them: "If you are completely oblivious to the questions above, then this shows that you are fishing in murky waters, that you are only present to make up the numbers, and at the time preordained by Me, you will surely be cast out and knocked into the bottomless pit for a second time. These are My words of warning, and any who take them lightly will be struck by My judgment, and, at the appointed time, will meet with disaster." Reading such words, people cannot help but think of when they were cast into the bottomless pit: Threatened by catastrophe, governed by God's administrative decrees, their own end awaiting them, for a long time feeling distressed, depressed, ill at ease, unable to speak of the melancholy within their hearts to anyone—compared to this, they feel they were better off having their flesh purged.... As their thinking reaches this point, they cannot help but feel distressed. Thinking of how they were in the past, how they are today, and how they will be tomorrow, the sorrow in their hearts grows, they unconsciously begin to shiver, and thus they become more fearful of God's administrative decrees. As it occurs to them that the term "God's people" might also be just a means of speaking, the cheer in their hearts immediately turns to distress. God is using their fatal weakness to strike at them, and at this point, He is beginning the next step of His work, causing people's nerves to be constantly stimulated, and increasing their sense that God's deeds are unfathomable, that God is unreachable, that God is holy and pure, and that they are not fit to be God's people. As a result, they redouble their efforts to improve themselves, not daring to fall behind.

Next, to teach people a lesson, and to make them know themselves, revere God, and fear God, God begins His new plan: "From the time of creation until today, many people have disobeyed My words and thus have been skimmed off and cast out from My stream of recovery; ultimately, their bodies perish and their spirits are cast into Hades, and even today they are still subjected to grievous punishment. Many people have followed My words, but they have gone against My enlightenment and illumination ... and some...." These are real examples. In these words, God not only gives all God's people a real warning to make them know of God's deeds throughout the ages, but also provides an oblique depiction of part of what is happening in the spiritual world. This allows people to know that nothing good can come of their disobedience toward God. They will become an everlasting mark of shame, and they will become the embodiment of Satan, and a copy of Satan. In God's heart, this aspect of meaning is of secondary importance, for these words have already left people trembling and at a loss as to what to do. The positive side of this is that, as people tremble with fear, they also acquire some details of the spiritual world—but only some, so I must provide a little explanation. From the gate of the spiritual world it can be seen that there are all kinds of spirits. However, some are in Hades, some are in hell, some are in the lake of fire, and some are in the bottomless pit. I have something to add here. Superficially speaking, these spirits can be divided according to place; specifically speaking, however, some are directly dealt with by God's chastisement, and some are in the bondage of Satan, which God makes use of. More specifically, their chastisement differs according to the severity of their circumstances. At this point, let Me explain a little more. Those who are directly chastised by God's hand have no spirit on earth, which means they have no chance of being reborn. The spirits under the domain of Satan—the enemies of which God speaks when He says "have become My enemies"—are connected to earthly matters. The various evil spirits on earth are all the enemies of God, the servants of Satan, and their reason for existence is to render service, to render service so that they may be foils for the deeds of God. Thus, God says, "These people have not only been taken captive by Satan, but have become eternal sinners and become My enemies, and they directly oppose Me." Next, God tells people what kind of ending there is for this kind of spirit: "They are the objects of My judgment at the height of My wrath." God also clarifies their present conditions: "Today they are still blind, still within the dark dungeons."

To show people the truthfulness of God's words, God uses a real example as proof (the case of Paul of which He speaks) so that His warning leaves a deeper impression on people. To stop people from treating what is said about Paul as a story, and to prevent them from thinking of themselves as bystanders—and, furthermore, to stop them from going about boasting of the things that happened thousands of years ago that they learned from God—God does not concentrate on Paul's experiences throughout his life.

Instead, God focuses on the consequences for Paul and on what kind of end he met with, the reason why Paul opposed God, and how Paul ended the way he did. What God focuses on is emphasizing how He ultimately denied Paul's wishful hopes, and directly laying bare Paul's condition in the spiritual realm: "Paul is directly chastised by God." Because people are numb and incapable of grasping anything of God's words, God adds an explanation (the next part of the utterance), and begins speaking about an issue relating to a different aspect: "Whoever opposes Me (by opposing not only My fleshly self but more importantly, My words and My Spirit—which is to say, My divinity), receives My judgment in their flesh." Although, superficially speaking, these words seem unrelated to the ones above and there does not appear to be any correlation between the two, do not panic: God has His own aims; the simple words of "the example above proves that" organically combine two seemingly unrelated issues—this is the ingeniousness of God's words. Thus, people are enlightened through the account of Paul, and so, because of the connection between the previous and following text, through the lesson provided by Paul, they pursue knowing God even more, which is precisely the effect God wished to achieve in speaking those words. Next, God speaks some words that provide assistance and enlightenment for people's entry into life. There is no need for Me to speak of this; you will feel that these things are easy to understand. What I must explain, however, is when God says, "When I worked in normal humanity, most people had already measured themselves against My wrath and majesty, and already knew a little of My wisdom and disposition. Today, I speak and act directly in divinity, and there are still some people who will see My wrath and judgment with their own eyes; moreover, the main work of the second part of the era of judgment is to make all of My people know My deeds in the flesh directly, and to make all of you behold My disposition directly." These few words conclude God's work in normal humanity and officially commence the second part of God's work of the era of judgment, which is carried out in divinity, and foretell the end of a group of people. At this point, it is worth explaining that God did not tell people that this was the second part of the era of judgment when they became God's people. Instead, He only explains that this is the second part of the era of judgment after telling people of God's will and the aims that God wishes to achieve during this period, and of God's final step of work on earth. Needless to say, there is also God's wisdom in this. When people have just got up from their sickbeds, the only thing they care about is whether or not they will die, or whether or not their illness can be banished from their body. They pay no heed to whether they will put on weight, or whether they will dress up in the right clothes. Thus, it is only when people completely believe they are one of God's people that God speaks of His requirements, step-by-step, and tells people what the current era of today is. That is because people only have the energy to concentrate on the steps of God's management a few days after they have recovered, and so this is the most suitable time to tell them. Only after people understand do they start to analyze: Since this is the second part of the era of judgment, God's requirements have become stricter, and I have become one of God's people. It is right to analyze thus, and this way of analysis is attainable by man; that is why God employs this method of speaking.

Once people understand a little, God once more enters the spiritual realm to speak, and so they once more fall into an ambush. During this series of questions, everyone scratches their heads, confused, not knowing where God's will lies, not knowing which of God's questions to answer, and, moreover, not knowing what language to use to reply to God's questions. One wonders whether to laugh or cry. To people, these words seem as if they might contain very profound mysteries—but the facts are precisely the opposite. I may as well add a little explanation for you here—it will give your brain a rest, and you will feel that this is a simple thing and there is no need to think about it. In fact, though there are many words, they contain only one aim held by God: gaining people's loyalty through these questions. But it is not expedient to say this directly, so God once again employs questions. The tone with which He speaks, however, is especially soft, much unlike at the beginning. Though they are being questioned by God, this kind of contrast brings people a measure of relief. You may as well read each question one by one; were these things not often referred to in the past? In these few simple questions, there is rich content. Some are a description of people's mentality: "Are you willing to enjoy a life on earth which is akin to that in heaven?" Some are people's "warrior's oath" which they take before God: "Are you truly able to allow yourselves to be put to death by Me, and led by Me, like a sheep?" And some of them are God's requirements of man: "If I did not speak directly, could you forsake everything around you and allow yourself to be used by Me? Is this not the reality that I require? ..." They also include God's exhortations and reassurances for man: "Yet I ask that you no longer be weighed down by misgivings, that you be proactive in your entry and grasp the most profound depths of My words. This will prevent you from misunderstanding My words, and from being unclear as to My meaning, and thus violating My administrative decrees." Finally, God talks of His hopes for man: "I hope that you grasp My intentions for you in My words. Think no more of your own prospects, and act as you have resolved before Me to submit to God's orchestrations in all things." The final question has profound meaning. It is thought-provoking, it impresses itself on people's hearts and is difficult to forget, ceaselessly ringing out, like a bell close to their ears ...

The above are a few words of explanation for you to use as reference.

Chapter 5

When God makes demands of humans that are difficult for them to explain, and when His words strike directly into the human heart and people offer up their sincere hearts for Him to enjoy, God then gives them the chance to ponder, make a resolution, and seek out a path for practice. In this way, all those who are His people will once again, with fists clenched in determination, offer their whole being up to God. Some, perhaps, might draw up a plan and establish a daily schedule, as they prepare to mobilize themselves to work hard, dedicating their bit of strength toward God's management plan in order to bring it glory and hasten it toward its conclusion. Just when people are harboring this mentality, holding these things closely in their minds as they go about their chores, as they talk and as they work, God again begins to speak: "The voice of My Spirit is an expression of the whole of My disposition. Do you understand?" The more determined human beings are, the more desperately they will yearn to grasp God's will and the more earnestly they will yearn for God to make demands of them. For this reason, God will give people what they want, taking advantage of this opportunity to impart His words, long held in readiness, to the innermost recesses of their being. Although these words may seem a bit harsh or gruff, to humanity they sound sweet beyond compare. Suddenly, their hearts blossom with joy, as if they were in heaven or had been transported to another realm—a veritable paradise of the imagination—where the affairs of the outside world no longer impinge upon humanity. In order to circumvent the eventuality that people will, as they were in the habit of doing in the past, speak from the outside and act from the outside, and so fail to lay down proper roots, once what people desire in their hearts has been achieved and, moreover, once they prepare to go to work with passionate enthusiasm, God still adapts His way of speaking to their mentality and, summarily and without holding back, refutes all the ardor and religious ceremony they hold within their hearts. As God has said, "Have you genuinely seen the importance that lies herein?" Whether before or after humans set their resolve upon something, they do not place great importance upon knowing God in His actions or in His words, but rather keep on pondering the question, "What can I do for God? That is the key issue!" This is why God says, "And you have the nerve to call yourselves My people to My face—you have no shame, much less any sense!" As soon as God has spoken these words, people immediately come to their realization and, as though sustaining an electric shock, they hasten to withdraw their hands to the safety of their bosoms, deeply fearful of provoking God's wrath a second time. In addition to this, God has also said, "Sooner or later, people like you will be cast out from My house! Do not come the old soldier with Me, assuming that you have stood testimony for Me!" Hearing words like these, people are even more afraid, as if they had sighted a lion. They know full well in their hearts. They do not wish to be eaten by the lion, while on the other hand, they have no idea how to escape. In this very moment, the plan inside the human heart vanishes without a trace, utterly and completely. Through God's words, I feel as if I can see every single aspect of humanity's shamefulness: drooping head and hangdog demeanor, like a candidate who has failed the college entrance exam, with such lofty ideals, happy family, bright future, and so on and so forth, along with the Four Modernizations by the Year 2000, all transformed into mere empty talk, creating an imaginary scenario in a science fiction film. This is to exchange passive for active elements, causing people, in the midst of their passivity, to stand up in the position God has assigned them. Exceptionally important is the fact that human beings are deeply afraid of losing this appellation; as such, they cling for dear life to their own badges of office, deeply afraid that someone might try to wrest them away. When humanity is in this frame of mind, God does not worry that people will become passive, so He accordingly changes His words of judgment to words of interrogation. Not only does He give people a chance to catch their breath, but He also gives them a chance to take the aspirations they have had before now and sort them out for future reference: Anything unsuitable can be modified. This is because God has not yet begun His work—this is a piece of good fortune in the midst of great misfortune—and, moreover, does not condemn them. So, let me continue to give Him all my devotion!

Next, you must not, on account of your fear, set aside God's words. Take a look to see whether God has any new demands. Sure enough, you will discover one like this: "From this time forth, in all things, you must enter into the reality of practice; merely flapping your gums, as you have done in the past, will no longer get you by." Herein still manifests God's wisdom. God has always safeguarded His own witnesses, and when the reality of the words of the past has reached its conclusion, no one whomsoever can fathom the knowledge of "the reality of practice." This is sufficient to prove the truth of what God said: "I undertake to do the work Myself." It has to do with the true meaning of the work in divinity, and also with the reason that humankind, after having reached a new point of beginning, is nevertheless still incapable of fathoming the true meaning of God's words. This is because, in the past, the great majority of people stuck to the reality in God's words, whereas today they have no clue about the reality of practice, understanding only the superficial aspects of these words but not their essence. Even more importantly, it is because today, in the building of the kingdom, no one is permitted to interfere, but only to obey God's bidding like automatons. Remember this well! Every time God brings up the past, He begins to speak about the actual situation of today; this is a form of speaking that creates a striking contrast between what comes before and what comes after, and for this reason is able to achieve even better fruits, enabling people to juxtapose the present with the past, and in this way avoid confusing the two. This is one facet of God's wisdom, and its purpose is to attain the fruits of the work. After this, God once again reveals humanity's ugliness, in order that humanity shall never forget to eat and drink of His words every day and, even more importantly, so that they shall know themselves and take this as the lesson from which they must learn every day.

After speaking these words, God has achieved the effects that were His original purpose. And so, without paying any further heed to whether or not humanity has understood Him, He brushes past this in a few sentences, because Satan's work has nothing to do with humanity—of this humanity has no clue. Now, leaving behind the world of the spirit, look further into how God makes His demands of humanity: "Resting in My abode, I observe closely: All the people on earth bustle about, 'traveling around the world' and rushing back and forth, all for the sake of their destiny and their future. Not a single one, though, has the energy to spare for building My kingdom, not even so much as the effort it takes to draw breath." After exchanging these conventionalities with humans, God still pays them no heed, but continues to speak from the perspective of the Spirit, and, through these words, reveals the general circumstances of the life of the human race in its entirety. It is clear to see, from "traveling around the world" and "rushing back and forth," that human life is completely devoid of content. Were it not for the omnipotent salvation of God, and especially for those born into the waning, big family of China's imperial line, people would be even more prone to living entire lifetimes in vain, and they would be better off falling into Hades or hell rather than come into the world. Under the domination of the great red dragon they have, unbeknownst to themselves, offended God, and therefore naturally and unknowingly fallen under God's chastisement. For this reason, God takes "have rescued" and "ingrates," and puts them in contrast to each other so that human beings may more clearly know themselves, creating from this a foil to His saving grace. Does this not make for an even more efficacious result? Of course, it goes without My having to say so explicitly that people can, from the content of God's utterances, infer an element of reproach, an element of salvation and appeal, and a slight intimation of sadness. Reading these words, people unconsciously begin to feel distressed, and cannot help but shed tears.... However, God will not be restrained due to a few sorrowful feelings, nor will He, on account of the corruption of the entire human race, abandon His work in disciplining His people and making demands of them. Because of this, His topics straight away touch upon circumstances such as those of today, and moreover, He proclaims to humanity the majesty of His administrative decrees so that His plan will continue to progress. This is why, following upon this with all due speed and striking while the iron is hot, God promulgates at this critical juncture a constitution for the times—a constitution that humans must read, paying careful attention to every clause, before they can understand God's will. There is no need to go further into this right now; people must simply read more attentively.

Today, you—this group of people here—are the only ones who can truly see God's words. Even so, in knowing God, the people of today have fallen far behind any single person in ages past. This makes it sufficiently clear how much effort Satan has invested in people over these several thousand years, as well as the extent to which it has corrupted humankind—a degree so great that despite the many words God has spoken, humanity still neither understands nor knows Him, but instead dares to rise up and oppose Him publicly. And so, God often holds up the people of past ages as comparisons for the people of today, to give the latter, insensate and obtuse as they are, realistic points of reference. Because human beings have no knowledge of God, and because they lack genuine faith in Him, God has adjudged humanity to be lacking in qualifications and reason; He has therefore, again and again, shown people tolerance and given them salvation. A battle is fought along these lines in the realm of the spirit: It is the vain hope of Satan to corrupt humanity to a certain degree, make the world foul and evil, and so drag people down into the mire with it and destroy God's plan. However, God's plan is not to make all of humanity into people who know Him, but rather to choose a part to represent the whole, leaving the rest as waste products, as defective goods to be thrown onto the rubbish heap. Thus, although from Satan's point of view taking possession of a few individuals might seem an excellent opportunity to destroy God's plan, what could such a simpleton as Satan know of God's intention? This is the reason God said, long ago, "I have covered My face to avoid looking at this world." We do know a little bit about this, and God does not ask that human beings be capable of doing anything; rather, He wants them to recognize that what He does is miraculous and unfathomable, and hold Him in reverence in their hearts. If, as humans imagine, God were to chastise them without regard for the circumstances, then the entire world would long since have perished. Would this not have been tantamount to falling right into Satan's trap? And so, God merely uses His words to attain the fruits that He has in mind, but seldom is there the advent of facts. Is this not an instance of His words, "If I did not take pity on your lack of qualifications, reason, and insights, then all of you would perish in the midst of My chastisement, wiped out from existence. Nevertheless, until My work on earth is finished, I will remain lenient to humankind"?

People are stunned when they read God's utterances, and they think that God has performed a great deed in the spiritual realm, something of which man is incapable, and that God Himself must accomplish in person. So God once more speaks words of tolerance toward humankind. They are conflicted in their hearts: "God is not a God of mercy and lovingkindness, He is a God who only strikes man down. Why is He being tolerant toward us? Could it be that God has once again shifted into the method?" When these notions, these thoughts, enter their hearts, they try their hardest to struggle against them. But after God's work goes on for some time, the Holy Spirit does great work in the church, and everyone begins to perform their function, all people enter into God's method, for no one can see any imperfection in what God says and does. As for what precisely God's next step will be, no one has the faintest inkling. As God has said: "Of all under heaven, who is not in My hands? Who does not act after My guidance?" I offer you some advice, however: In matters that are not clear to you, none of you must say or do anything. I say this not to dampen your enthusiasm, but to allow you to follow God's guidance in your actions. On no account should you lose heart or become doubtful because of My mention of "imperfections"; My aim is chiefly to remind you to pay attention to God's words. People are stunned again when they read God's words that say, “Be perceptive toward matters of the spirit, attentive toward My word, and truly capable of regarding My Spirit and My being, and My word and My being, as an inseparable whole, so that all people can satisfy Me in My presence.” Yesterday, they were reading words of warning, words about God’s tolerance—but today, God is suddenly talking of spiritual matters. What is going on? Why does God keep changing the method with which He speaks? Why is all this to be regarded as an inseparable whole? Could it be that God’s words are not practical? After a closer reading of God’s words, it is discovered that when the flesh of God and His Spirit are separated, the flesh becomes a physical body with fleshly attributes—what people refer to as a walking corpse. The incarnate flesh comes from the Spirit: He is the embodiment of the Spirit, the Word become flesh. In other words, God Himself lives in the flesh. Such is the seriousness of the separation of God’s Spirit from His being. As a result, though He is called human, He is not of humankind. He is without human attributes, He is the being with which God clothes Himself, the being whom God approves. God’s word embodies the Spirit of God, and the word of God is directly revealed in the flesh—which, moreover, shows that God lives in the flesh and is the more practical God, thus proving the existence of God and ending the age of man’s rebelliousness toward God. After telling people of the path to knowing God, God changes topic once again, turning to the other side of the matter.

“I have set foot upon all there is, I have looked out across the vast expanse of the universe, and I have walked among all people, tasting the sweetness and bitterness among man.” Though simple, these words are not easily understood by humankind. The topic has changed, but in essence, it remains the same: It still enables people to know the incarnate God. Why does God say He has tasted the sweetness and bitterness among man? Why does He say He has walked among all people? God is the Spirit, and He is also the incarnate being. The Spirit, not bound by the limitations of the incarnate being, can set foot upon all there is, the Spirit can look out across the vast expanse of the universe, showing that the Spirit of God fills all the cosmos, that He covers the earth from pole to pole, that nothing is not arranged by God’s hand and nowhere can God’s footprints not be found. Though the Spirit has become flesh and been born human, the existence of the Spirit does not negate all human needs; God’s being eats, clothes Himself, sleeps, and resides as normal, and He does what people should do as normal. Yet because His inner essence is different, He is not the same as “man” that one speaks of. And though He suffers among humankind, He does not forsake the Spirit because of this suffering. Though He is blessed, He does not forget the Spirit because of these blessings. The Spirit and the being work in silent rapport. The Spirit and the being cannot be sundered, nor have They ever been sundered, for the being is the embodiment of the Spirit, He comes from the Spirit, the Spirit that has a form. Thus transcendence is impossible for the Spirit in the flesh; that is, the Spirit is incapable of supernatural things, which is to say, the Spirit cannot depart from the physical body. If He were to depart from the fleshly body, God's incarnation would lose all meaning. Only when the Spirit is fully expressed in the physical body can man know the practical God Himself, and only then shall God's will be achieved. Only after separately introducing the fleshly body and the Spirit to man does God point out the blindness and disobedience of man: "Yet never has man truly known Me, never has he paid Me any heed during My travels." On the one hand, God is saying that He secretly hides in the fleshly body, never doing anything supernatural for people to see; on the other hand, He complains that man does not know Him. There is no contradiction in this. In fact, from a detailed point of view, it is not hard to see that God achieves His aims from these two sides. If God were to display supernatural signs and wonders, He would not need to undertake great work. With His own mouth, He would simply curse people to death, and they would instantly die, and thus all people would be convinced—but this does not achieve God's aim in becoming flesh. If God were to truly act thus, people would never be able to consciously believe in His existence. They would be incapable of true faith, and would, moreover, mistake the devil for God. More importantly, people would never be able to know God's disposition—and is this not one aspect of the significance of God's being in the flesh? If people were incapable of knowing God, then that vague God, that supernatural God, would forever hold sway among man. And in this, would people not be possessed by their own notions? To put it more plainly, would it not be Satan, the devil that holds sway? "Why do I say I have taken back power? Why do I say there is so much significance of the incarnation?" The moment God becomes flesh is the moment that He takes back power, and it is also the time when His divinity emerges directly to act. All people gradually come to know the practical God, and thus completely expunge Satan's place in their hearts, giving God a deeper place in their hearts. In the past, people saw the God in their minds in the image of Satan, as a God who was invisible and intangible; and yet they believed this God not only to exist, but to be capable of performing all manner of signs and wonders, and of revealing many mysteries, such as the ugly faces of those possessed by demons. This sufficiently proves that the God in people's minds is not the image of God, but the image of something other than God. God has said that He wishes to occupy 0.1 percent of people's hearts. This is the very highest standard that He asks of man. Beyond what's on their surface, there is also a practical side to these words. If it were not explained thus, people would think God's requirements of them too low, as though God understood too little of them. Is this not the mentality of man?

By combining the aforementioned and the example of Peter below, one will find that Peter really did know God better than anyone else, for he was able to turn his back on the vague God and pursue the knowledge of the practical God. Why is special mention made of how his parents were demons who opposed God? It proves that Peter was not pursuing the God in his heart. His parents were the representation of the vague God; this is the point of God mentioning them. Most people do not pay much attention to this fact. Instead, they concentrate on the prayers of Peter. In some people, the prayers of Peter are ever on their lips, constantly on their minds, yet they never compare the vague God with the knowledge of Peter. Why did Peter turn against his parents and seek the knowledge of God? Why did Peter spur himself on with the lessons of those who had failed? Why did he assimilate the faith and love of all those who had loved God throughout the ages? Peter came to know that all positive things come from God and are directly issued from Him without being processed by Satan. This shows that the God he knew was the practical God, not the supernatural God. Why is it said that Peter focused on assimilating the faith and love of all those who had loved God throughout the ages? From this it can be seen that the failure of people throughout the ages is mainly because they had only faith and love but were incapable of knowing the practical God. As a result, their faith remained vague. Why does God make multiple mention of the faith of Job, without saying that he knew God, and why does God say Job was not the equal of Peter? Job's words—"I have heard of You by the hearing of the ear: but now my eye sees You"—show that he was only possessed of faith, and had no knowledge. The words "The contradistinction of Peter's parents gave him a greater knowledge of My lovingkindness and mercy" often provoke a raft of questions from most people: Why did Peter need a contradistinction to know God? Why was he incapable of knowing God directly? Why was it that he knew only God's mercy and lovingkindness, and God did not talk of anything else? It is only possible to seek the knowledge of the practical God after recognizing the unreality of the vague God; the aim of these words is to make people expel the vague God in their hearts. If, since the time of creation up until today, people had always known God's true face, they would not be capable of discerning the deeds of Satan, for that common saying of man—"one does not notice level ground until one has crossed a mountain"—demonstrates God's point in speaking these words. Because He wishes to give people a deeper understanding of the veracity of the example He gave, God deliberately emphasizes mercy and lovingkindness, proving that the age Peter lived in was the Age of Grace. From another perspective, this reveals all the more the hideous countenance of the devil, who does nothing but harm and corrupt man, setting God's mercy and lovingkindness in even starker contrast.

God also outlines the facts of Peter's trials and describes their actual circumstances, further indicating to people that God is not only possessed of mercy and lovingkindness, but also of majesty and wrath, and that those who live in peace do not necessarily live amid God's blessings. Telling people about Peter's experiences after his trials is even greater proof of the veracity of Job's words "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" Thus it is demonstrated that Peter's knowledge of God had indeed attained unprecedented realms, realms never achieved by the people of ages past, which was also the fruit of his assimilation of the faith and love of all those who had loved God throughout the ages and his encouragement of himself using the lessons of people who had failed in the past. For this reason, all who attain the true knowledge of God are called "fruit," and that includes Peter. Peter's prayers to God show his true knowledge of God during his trials. The fly in the ointment, however, is that he was not capable of fully grasping God's will, which is why God only asked to "occupy 0.1 percent of the human heart" upon the basis of Peter's knowledge of Him. That even Peter, the man who knew God best, was incapable of accurately grasping God's will shows that humans lack the faculty to know God, for they have been so corrupted by Satan; this allows all people to know the essence of man. These two preconditions—people's lack of a faculty for knowing God and their utter permeation by Satan—are a foil for God's great power, for God only works with words, He does not undertake any enterprise, and thus does He take a certain place in people's hearts. But why do people only need to achieve that 0.1 percent to satisfy God's will? This can be explained by God not having created this faculty in man. If, in the absence of this faculty, man were to arrive at a 100 percent knowledge of God, then God's every move would be clear as day to them—and, given the inherent nature of man, people would immediately rebel against God, they would stand up and openly oppose Him, which is how Satan fell. So God never underestimates people, for the very reason that He has already thoroughly dissected them, and knows everything about them with crystal clarity, even down to exactly how much water is in their blood. How much more obvious, then, is humanity's nature to Him? God never makes mistakes, and He chooses the words of His utterances with the utmost precision. Thus there is no conflict between Peter not having an accurate grasp of God's will and his having the greatest knowledge of God; the two, furthermore, are completely unrelated. It was not in order to focus people's attention on Peter that God mentioned him as an example. Why was someone like Job not able to know God, and yet Peter was? Why would God say that man is capable of attaining this, and yet say that it is due to His great power? Are people really naturally good? This is not easy for people to know; no one would realize the inner significance of this if I did not speak of it. The aim of these words is to give people an insight, so that they can have the faith to cooperate with God. Only then can God work with the cooperation of man. Such is the actual situation in the spiritual realm, and it is completely unfathomable to man. Eliminating Satan's place in people's hearts and giving that place to God instead—this is what it means to repel Satan's onslaught, and only thus can it be said that Christ has descended to earth, only thus can it be said that the kingdoms on earth have become Christ's kingdom.

At this point, mention of Peter's having been a model and exemplar for several thousands of years is not to say merely that he was a model and exemplar; these words are a reflection of the battle being waged in the spiritual realm. Satan has been working in man for all this time in the vain hope of devouring him, thereby causing God to destroy the world and lose His witnesses. Yet God has said, "I will first create a model so that I may take up the smallest position within the human heart. At this stage, humanity neither pleases nor fully knows Me; nevertheless, because of My great power, humans will become able to submit to Me wholly and cease to rebel against Me, and I will use this example to vanquish Satan. That is to say, I will use that 0.1 percent of the human heart I occupy to repress all the forces that Satan has been wielding over humanity.” So, today God mentions Peter as an example so that he may serve as a template for all of humankind to emulate and practice. Combined with the opening passage, this demonstrates the veracity of what God said about the situation in the spiritual realm: “Today is unlike the past: I shall do things never beheld since the time of creation, shall speak words never heard throughout the ages, for I ask that all people come to know Me in the flesh.” From this it is evident that God has begun to act on His words today. People can only see what’s happening on the outside, they can’t see what’s actually going on in the spiritual realm, and so God directly says, “These are the steps of My management, but man has not the slightest inkling. Though I have spoken plainly, people remain addled; it is difficult to get through to them. Is this not the lowliness of man?” There are words within these words: They explain that a battle is going on in the spiritual realm, just as described above.

God’s will is not entirely achieved after His brief description of the story of Peter, so God makes the following demand of man regarding the matters of Peter: “Throughout the cosmos and the firmament, among everything in heaven and on earth, all things upon the earth and in heaven give their every effort to My final stage of work. Surely you do not wish to be spectators, ordered about by the forces of Satan?” People are profoundly enlightened after reading about Peter’s knowledge, and in order to be even more effective, God shows people the consequence of their debauchery, unrestraint, and lack of knowledge of God; moreover, He tells humanity—once again, and with greater precision—of what’s actually happening in the battle in the spiritual realm. Only thus are people more vigilant against being taken by Satan. Further, it makes clear that if people fall this time, they will not be saved by God as they were this time. Taken together, these warnings deepen humanity’s impression of God’s words, they make people more treasure God’s mercy, and cherish God’s words of warning, so that God’s aim in saving humankind may truly be attained.

On the Life of Peter

Peter was God’s role model for humanity, a luminary who was known to all. Why was someone so unremarkable raised up as an exemplar by God and extolled by successive generations? It goes without saying that this is inseparable from his expression of love for God and resolve to love God. As for how Peter’s heart of love for God was manifested, and what his life’s experiences were actually like, we must return to the Age of Grace to look again at the customs of the time and observe the Peter of that age.

Peter was born into an ordinary Jewish farming household. His parents supported the entire family by farming, and he was the eldest of the children, with four brothers and sisters. This, of course, is not the main part of our story; Peter is our central character. When he was five years old, Peter's parents started teaching him to read. At that time, the Jewish people were quite erudite, and were especially advanced in such areas as agriculture, industry, and commerce. As a result of their social environment, both of Peter's parents had received higher education. Despite being from the countryside, they were well-educated and comparable to the average university students of today. Evidently, Peter was blessed to have been born into such favorable social conditions. Clever and quick on the uptake, he readily assimilated new ideas. After beginning his studies, he figured things out very easily during lessons. His parents were proud to have such a bright son, and made every effort to allow him to go to school, hoping that he would be able to distinguish himself and secure some sort of official post in society. Without realizing it, Peter had become interested in God, which meant that, at fourteen, when he was in high school, he grew fed up with the curriculum of Ancient Greek Culture he was studying, especially with regard to the fictional people and made-up events in ancient Greek history. From then on, Peter—who had just entered the springtime of his youth—started trying to find out more about the human life and the wider world. His conscience did not compel him to repay the pains his parents had taken, because he clearly saw that people were all living in a state of self-deception, they were all living within meaningless lives, ruining their own lives in their struggle for wealth and recognition. His insight was largely to do with the social environment he inhabited. The more knowledge people have, the more complex their interpersonal relationships and internal worlds are, and therefore the more they exist in a void. Under these circumstances, Peter spent his free time making wide-ranging visits, most of which were to religious figures. In his heart, there seemed the vague feeling that religion might be able to account for all that was inexplicable in the human world, and so he would often go to a nearby synagogue to attend services. His parents were unaware of this, and before long Peter, who had always been of good character and fine scholarship, began to hate going to school. Under the supervision of his parents, he barely completed high school. Swimming ashore from the ocean of knowledge, he took a deep breath; from then on, no one would educate or restrict him any longer.

After finishing school, he began to read all sorts of books, but at the age of seventeen, he still did not have much experience of the wider world. After graduating from school, he supported himself by farming while making as much time as he could to read books and attend religious services. His parents, who had had high hopes for him, often cursed Heaven for their "rebellious son," but even this could not stand in the way of his hunger and thirst for righteousness. Peter suffered no small number of setbacks in his experiences, but his was a voracious heart, and he grew like grass after rain. Before long, he was "fortunate" enough to encounter some senior figures in the religious world, and because his longing was so strong, he started associating with them ever more frequently, until he was spending nearly all of his time among them. Immersed in contented happiness, he suddenly realized that, most of these people believed with their lips, and they had not given their hearts to their belief. How could Peter, whose soul was upright and pure, tolerate such a blow? He realized that nearly all the people he associated with were beasts in human attire—they were animals with a human countenance. At that time, Peter was very naive, so on several occasions he pleaded with them from the heart. But how could these wily, cunning religious figures possibly listen to the entreaties of this impassioned young man? It was at this time that Peter felt the true emptiness of human life: At the first step upon life's stage, he had failed.... One year later, he moved away from the synagogue and began living independently.

The setback made the 18-year-old Peter much more mature and sophisticated. No longer was there any trace of his youthful naiveté; the innocence and artlessness of the young had been callously smothered by the setback he suffered, and he began a life as a fisherman. Thereafter, people would be seen listening to him preach on his boat. As he made his living fishing, he would spread the message wherever he went, and all he preached to were mesmerized by his sermons, for what he spoke of struck a chord in the hearts of the common people, and they were all deeply moved by his honesty. He often taught people to treat others from the heart, to call on the Sovereign of the heavens and earth and all things, and to not ignore their consciences and do shameful things, in all matters satisfying the God whom they loved in their hearts.... People were often deeply touched after listening to his sermons; they all felt inspired by him and were frequently moved to tears. At the time, he was greatly admired by all of his followers, who were all destitute and naturally, given how society was at the time, very few in number. Peter was also persecuted by the religious elements of society at the time. All of this meant that, for two years, he was moving from place to place and living a solitary life. During these two years of extraordinary experiences, he gained many insights and learned a great deal about things of which he had no previous knowledge, such that he became unrecognizable from his 14-year-old self, with whom he now seemed to have nothing in common. Over these two years he encountered all kinds of people and saw all sorts of truths about society, as a result of which he gradually started to rid himself of all manner of rituals from the religious world. He was also profoundly affected by developments in the work of the Holy Spirit at that time; by then, Jesus had been working for many years, so Peter's work was also influenced by the work of the Holy Spirit at that time, though he had yet to meet Jesus. For this reason, when Peter was preaching, he gained many things that previous generations of saints never had. Of course, at the time, he was marginally aware of Jesus, but he had never yet had the chance to meet Him face-to-face. He only hoped and longed to see that heavenly figure born of the Holy Spirit.

At dusk one evening, Peter was fishing from his boat (near the shore of what was then known as the Sea of Galilee). He had a fishing rod in his hands, but there were other things on his mind. The setting sun illuminated the surface of the water like a vast ocean of blood. The light reflected onto Peter's young yet calm and composed face; he seemed to be deep in thought. At that moment, a breeze stirred, and he suddenly felt the loneliness of his life, which immediately gave him a sense of bleakness. As the waves of the ocean glistened in the light, it was clear that he was in no mood to fish. As he was lost in thought, he suddenly heard someone behind him say, "Simon Barjona the Jew, the days of your life are lonely. Will you follow Me?" Startled, Peter promptly dropped the fishing rod he had been holding, which immediately sank to the bottom of the sea. Peter hurriedly turned around to see a man standing in his boat. He looked Him up and down: The man's hair, hanging to His shoulders, was slightly golden yellow in the sunlight, He wore gray clothing, was of medium height, and was dressed from head to toe as a Jewish man. In the fading light, the man's gray clothing looked slightly black, and His face seemed to have a slight sheen. Many times, Peter had sought to meet Jesus, but had never succeeded. At that moment, deep in his soul, Peter believed that this man must be the holy one of his heart, and so he prostrated himself in the fishing boat and said, "Could it be that You are the Lord who has come to preach the gospel of the kingdom of heaven? I have heard of Your experiences, but I have never seen You. I have wanted to follow You, but I could not find You." By then, Jesus had moved to the boat's cabin, where He was sitting calmly. "Get up and sit next to Me!" He said. "I am here to seek those who truly love Me. I have come especially to spread the gospel of the kingdom of heaven, and I shall travel throughout the lands to seek those who are of one mind with Me. Are you willing?" Peter replied: "I must follow he who is sent by the heavenly Father. I must acknowledge he who is chosen by the Holy Spirit. As I love the heavenly Father, how could I not be willing to follow You?" Although Peter's words were rife with religious notions, Jesus smiled and nodded His head in satisfaction. At that moment, a feeling of fatherly love for Peter grew inside of Him.

Peter followed Jesus for a number of years and saw much in Him that was not in other people. After following Him for a year, Peter was chosen by Jesus from among the twelve disciples. (Of course, Jesus did not speak this aloud, and others were not aware of it at all.) In life, Peter measured himself by everything Jesus did. Most notably, the messages that Jesus preached were etched in his heart. He was utterly dedicated and loyal to Jesus, and he never spoke any grievances against Him. As a result, he became Jesus' faithful companion everywhere He went. Peter observed Jesus' teachings, His gentle words, what He took for His food, His clothing, His shelter, and how He traveled. He emulated Jesus in every regard. He was never self-righteous, but cast off all that was outdated, following Jesus' example in both word and deed. It was then that Peter felt that the heavens and earth and all things were in the hands of the Almighty and that, for this reason, he was without personal choice. Peter also assimilated all that Jesus was and used it as an example. Jesus' life shows that He was not self-righteous in what He did; instead of bragging about Himself, He moved people with love. Various things showed what Jesus was, and for this reason, Peter emulated everything about Him. Peter's experiences gave him an increasing sense of the loveliness of Jesus, and he said such things as, “I have searched for the Almighty throughout the universe, and I have seen the wonders of the heavens and earth and all things, and I thus have gained a profound sense of the Almighty’s loveliness. However, I had never had genuine love in my own heart, and I had never seen the loveliness of the Almighty with my own eyes. Today, in the eyes of the Almighty, I have been looked upon with favor by Him, and I have finally felt God’s loveliness. I have finally discovered that it is not just God’s having created all things that makes humanity love Him; in my daily life, I have found His boundless loveliness. How could it possibly be limited to what can be seen right now?” As time passed, much that was lovely also emerged in Peter. He grew very obedient to Jesus, and of course, he also suffered quite a few setbacks. When Jesus took him to preach at various locations, Peter always humbled himself and listened to Jesus’ sermons. He never became arrogant because of his years of following Jesus. After being told by Jesus that the reason He had come was to be crucified so that He could finish His work, Peter often felt anguish in his heart and would weep alone in secret. Nevertheless, that “unfortunate” day finally arrived. After Jesus was arrested, Peter wept alone in his fishing boat and said many prayers for this. But in his heart, he knew that this was the will of God the Father, and that no one was able to change it. He remained anguished and teary-eyed only because of his love. This is a human weakness, of course. Thus, when he learned that Jesus would be nailed to the cross, he asked Jesus, “After You leave, will You return to be among us and watch over us? Will we still be able to see You?” Although these words were very naive and full of human notions, Jesus knew the bitterness of Peter’s suffering, so through His love He was considerate of Peter’s weakness: “Peter, I have loved you. Do you know that? Although there is no reason behind what you say, the Father has promised that after My resurrection, I will appear to people for 40 days. Do you not believe that My Spirit will frequently bestow grace upon you all?” Though Peter felt somewhat comforted by this, he still felt that there was one thing missing, and so, after being resurrected, Jesus appeared to him openly for the first time. In order to prevent Peter from continuing to cling to his notions, however, Jesus declined the lavish meal that Peter had prepared for Him, and disappeared in the blink of an eye. From that moment on, Peter finally had a deeper understanding of the Lord Jesus and loved Him even more. After His resurrection, Jesus frequently appeared to Peter. He appeared to Peter three more times after the forty days were up and He had ascended to heaven. Each appearance was right when the work of the Holy Spirit was about to be completed and new work was about to be begun.

Throughout his life, Peter fished for a living but, more than that, he lived to preach. In his later years, he wrote the first and second epistles of Peter, as well as several letters to the church of Philadelphia of that time. The people of this period were profoundly touched by him. Instead of lecturing people using his own credentials, he provided them with a suitable supply of life. He never forgot Jesus’ teachings before He left, and was inspired by them throughout his life. While following Jesus, he resolved to repay the Lord's love with his death and to follow His example in all things. Jesus agreed to this, so when Peter was 53 years old (more than 20 years after Jesus' departure), Jesus appeared to him to help fulfill his aspiration. In the seven years following that, Peter spent his life getting to know himself. One day, at the end of these seven years, he was crucified upside down, thus bringing his extraordinary life to an end.

Chapter 8

When God speaks from the perspective of the Spirit, His tone is directed at all of humanity. When God speaks from a human perspective, His tone is directed at all who follow the guidance of His Spirit. When God speaks in the third person (from what people refer to as an observer's point of view), He shows His words to people directly, so that they will see Him as a commentator, and it seems to them that from His mouth come forth boundless things of which humans have no knowledge and which they cannot fathom. Is this not the case? When God speaks from the perspective of the Spirit, all of humanity is astonished. "Humans' love of Me is minuscule, and their faith in Me is also pitifully small. If I did not direct the brunt of My words at people's weaknesses, they would boast and exaggerate, pontificating and coming up with bombastic theories, as if they were omniscient and all-knowing with regard to earthly matters." These words not only reveal humanity as they actually are and the position God has in the hearts of humans, but also lay bare the entire life of humankind. Each person believes that they are extraordinary yet does not even know that there is such a word as "God." Therefore, they dare to come up with bombastic theories. However, this "coming up with bombastic theories" is not "speaking" in the sense that people understand it. Rather, it means that humans have been corrupted by Satan. Everything they do, every action they take is contrary to God and opposes Him directly, and the substance of their actions comes from Satan and is in opposition to God, and is intended to achieve independence, counter to God's will. This is why God says that humans all come up with bombastic theories. Why does God say that the brunt of His words is directed at human weaknesses? It is because, in accordance with God's intention, if He did not reveal the things hidden deep in people's hearts, then no one would submit; as such, people would not understand themselves, and they would not hold God in reverence. In other words, if people's intentions are not laid bare, then they will dare to do anything—perhaps even direct curses at Heaven or at God. These are humanity's weaknesses. Therefore, God speaks thusly: "I journey to all corners of the universe world in perpetual search of those who align with My intention and are fit for My use." This statement, in conjunction with what is later said about the salute of the kingdom ringing formally out, makes it evident that God's Spirit is engaged in new work on earth; it is just that humans cannot see it with their physical eyes. Since it is said that the Spirit is on earth doing new work, the entire universe world also undergoes momentous change: God's sons and God's people begin to accept the testimony of God's incarnation, but more than that, every religion and denomination, every walk of life and place also accept it to varying degrees. It is a great movement of the universe world in the spiritual realm. It shakes the entire religious world to its core, which is partly what the previously mentioned "earthquake" refers to. Next, the angels formally begin their work and the people of Israel return to their home, never again to wander, and all those included accept being shepherded. In contrast, the Egyptians begin to break away from the scope of My salvation; that is, they receive My chastisement (but that has not yet formally begun). So, when the world simultaneously undergoes these several great changes, it is also when the salute of the kingdom rings formally out, a time that people have called "the time when the sevenfold intensified Spirit begins to work." Each time God does the work of recovery, at these phases (or in these transitional periods), no one is able to sense the work of the Holy Spirit. Therefore, God's words, "when people lose hope," ring true. Furthermore, during each of these transition phases, when humans lose hope, or when they feel that this is the wrong stream, God begins anew and undertakes the next step of His work. From the time of creation until now, God has recovered His work and altered the methods of His work in such a manner. Though most people, to varying degrees, can grasp some aspect of this work, they are in the end nonetheless washed away by a torrent of water, for they are too small of stature; they are unable to grasp the steps of God's work, and so they are cast out. However, this is also how God purifies people, and this is God's judgment of humanity's outdated notions. The more of a foundation people have, the greater their religious notions of God, which are difficult for them to set aside; they always cling to old things, and it is hard for them to accept new light. On the other hand, if one is standing, then one must have some foundation to stand on, yet most people still have trouble letting go of their notions. This is especially true of their notions about the God incarnate of today, a point that is clear to see.

In today's words, God speaks much of visions, and there is no need to elaborate. God speaks primarily about how building the church lays the foundation for building the kingdom. More specifically, while the church was being built, the main goal was to convince people both in heart and in word, though they have not known God incarnate with their own eyes. Even though they harbored faith in their hearts, they did not know God incarnate, because at that stage He was indistinguishable from a person. In the Age of Kingdom, all must show conviction in their hearts, their speech, and their eyes. This suffices to show that for all to show conviction in their hearts, speech, and eyes, they must be allowed to know God living in the flesh with their physical eyes—not under duress, nor with mere casual belief, but with knowledge that comes from conviction in their hearts and mouths. Therefore, at this stage of construction, there is no fighting and no killing. Instead, people will be led to enlightenment by way of God's words, and through this they may pursue and explore, so that they can subconsciously come to know God incarnate. Therefore, to God, this stage of work is much easier, in that it lets nature take its course and does not run counter to humanity. It will, in the end, lead humans naturally to knowledge of God, so do not be worried or anxious. When God said, “The state of battle of the spiritual realm is made plain directly among all My people,” He meant that when people embark on the right track and begin to know God, not only is each person tempted internally by Satan, but they may also be tempted by Satan in the church itself. However, this is a path that everyone must take, so no one need be alarmed. Satan’s temptation may come in several forms. Someone may neglect or forsake what God says, and might say negative things to dampen other people’s positivity; however, such a person will usually not win others to their side. This is difficult to discern. The main reason for this is: Such a person might still be proactive in attending meetings, but they are unclear about visions. If the church does not guard against them, then the entire church could be swayed by their negativity into responding tepidly to God, and thereby not paying attention to God’s words—and this would mean falling straight into Satan’s temptation. Such a person might not rebel against God directly, but because they cannot fathom God’s words and do not know God, they may go so far as to complain or have a heart full of resentment. They might say God has abandoned them and they are therefore incapable of receiving enlightenment and illumination. They may wish to leave, but they are slightly afraid, and they might say that God’s work does not come from God but is instead the work of evil spirits.

Why does God mention Peter so often? And why does He say that even Job did not come close to being his equal? Saying so not only causes people to pay attention to Peter’s deeds, but also has them set aside all the examples they have in their hearts, as even the example of Job—who had the greatest faith—will not do. Only in this way can a better result be achieved, wherein people are able to cast aside everything in an effort to imitate Peter, and, in doing so, advance a step in their knowledge of God. God shows people the path of practice that Peter took to know God, and the goal of doing so is to give people a point of reference. God then goes on to predict one of the ways in which Satan will tempt humans when He says, “However, if you are cold and uncaring toward My words, then you undoubtedly oppose Me. This is fact.” In these words, God foretells the crafty schemes Satan will try to use; they stand as a warning. It is not possible that everyone could be indifferent to God’s words, yet nonetheless, some people will be taken captive by this temptation. Therefore, at the end, God reiterates with emphasis, “If you do not know My words, nor accept them, nor put them into practice, then you will inevitably become objects of My chastisement! You will surely become victims of Satan!” This is God’s counsel to humanity—yet in the end, as God foretold, a portion of people will inevitably fall victim to Satan.

In people's imagination, God is God and humans are humans. God does not speak the language of humans, nor can they speak the language of God. To God, meeting humanity's demands of Him is a piece of cake—one easy slice at a time—whereas God's requirements of humanity are unattainable and unthinkable to humans. However, the truth is precisely the opposite: God only asks "0.1 percent" of humans. This is not only astonishing to people, but also makes them feel very much bewildered, as if they are all at sea. It is only thanks to God's enlightenment and grace that people have gained a little knowledge of God's will. On March 1, however, all people were once again left bewildered and scratching their heads; God asked that His people be as gleaming snow, not as drifting clouds. So, what does this "snow" refer to? And what do "drifting clouds" indicate? At this point, God is deliberately revealing nothing of the deeper meaning of these words. This plunges people into confusion, and thus increases their faith as they seek knowledge—for this is a specific demand made of God's people, and nothing else; people all therefore find themselves unwittingly spending more time pondering these unfathomable words. As a result, various ideas sprout in their brains, drifting snowflakes flash before their eyes, and drifting clouds in the sky immediately appear in their minds. Why does God ask that His people be as snow, and not as drifting clouds? What is the true meaning here? To what do these words refer, specifically? "Snow" not only makes nature look pretty, but is also good for farmland; it is good for killing bacteria. After a heavy snowfall, all the bacteria are covered by gleaming snow, and the entire area immediately brims with life. Likewise, the people of God must not only know God incarnate, but also discipline themselves upon the fact of God's incarnation; in so doing, they will live out normal humanity. This is how snow makes nature look pretty; ultimately, the maturity of God's people shall bring an end to the great red dragon, establishing God's kingdom on earth, and spreading and glorifying God's holy name so that the whole of the kingdom on earth is filled with God's righteousness, shines forth with His radiance, and sparkles with His glory. Everywhere there will be scenes of peace and contentment, happiness and fulfillment, and continuously renewed beauty. The various plagues that currently exist—corrupt satanic dispositions such as unrighteousness, crookedness and deceitfulness, evil desires, and so on—will all be eradicated, and thus heaven and earth will both be renewed. This is the true meaning of "after a heavy snowfall." Those who are as drifting clouds are akin to the sort of people who follow the herd that God mentions; if there are any temptations from Satan or trials from God, they will immediately drift away, no longer to exist. Not even any substance of theirs will survive, having vanished long ago. If people are as drifting clouds, then they are not only incapable of living out God's image, but also bring shame upon His name, for such people are in danger of being snatched away at any time or place; they are the food that Satan consumes—and when Satan takes them captive, they will betray God and serve Satan. This clearly brings shame upon God's name, and is what God resents most of all; such people are God's enemies. Thus, they are both without the essence of normal people and without any practical value. It is because of this that God makes such requirements of His people. After understanding something of these words, however, people feel at a loss as to what to do next, for the topic of God's words has turned to God Himself, which puts them in a difficult position: "Because I come from the holy land, I am not like the lotus, which has only a name and no essence, for it comes from the mire and not the holy land." Why, after speaking of His requirements of His people, does God describe His own birth? Could it be that there is a connection between the two? Indeed, there is an inherent connection between them; if not, God would not tell people that. Amongst green leaves, the lotus sways back and forth in the gentle breeze. It is pleasing to the eye, and greatly cherished. People simply cannot get enough of it, and are itching to swim in the water to pick a lotus blossom and get a closer look at it. However, God says the lotus comes from the mire, and has only a name and no essence; it appears that God attaches no importance to lotuses, and His words make it evident that He has a certain loathing toward them. Throughout the ages, many have lavished praise upon lotuses because they emerge unstained from the filth, and even seem to imply that lotuses are beyond compare and indescribably wonderful. In God's eyes, though, lotuses are worthless—which is precisely the difference between God and humans. Thus it can be seen that the difference between God and humans is as vast as the distance between the vault of heaven and the very foundation of the earth. Because a lotus comes from the mire, the nutrients it requires all come from there, too. It is simply that the lotus is able to disguise itself, and thus provide a feast for the eyes. Many people see only the lotus' beautiful exterior, but no one sees that the life concealed within is filthy and impure. Thus, God says that it has only a name and no essence—which is totally correct and true. Is this not precisely what God's people are like today? Their submission to and faith in God is only superficial. Before God, they curry favor and parade themselves in order to make Him satisfied with them; inside, however, they are stuffed full of a corrupt, satanic disposition, and their bellies are filled with impurities. This is why God poses questions to humans, asking whether their loyalty to God is tainted with impurities or whether it is pure and wholehearted. When they were service-doers, many people praised God vocally but cursed Him in their hearts. With their words, they submitted to God, but in their hearts, they disobeyed Him. Their mouths uttered negative words, and in their hearts, they harbored opposition to God. There were even those whose actions were coordinated: They released obscenities with their mouths and gesticulated with their hands, utterly dissolute, and gave a vivid and lifelike expression of the true visage of the great red dragon. Such people are genuinely worthy of being called the spawn of the great red dragon. Today, however, they stand in the place of loyal service-doers and act as though they are God's loyal people—how shameless! This is no wonder, though; they come from the mire, so cannot help but show their true colors. Because God is holy and pure, and real and actual, His flesh comes from the Spirit. This is definite and incontrovertible. Not only being able to bear testimony for God Himself, but also being able to completely devote Himself to doing God's will: these represent one side of God's essence. That the flesh comes from the Spirit with an image means that the flesh with which the Spirit clothes Himself is substantively different to the flesh of humans, and this difference primarily lies in their spirit. What the "Spirit with an image" refers to is how, as a result of being covered by normal humanity, the divinity is able to work normally from within. This is not the least bit supernatural, and is not limited by humanity. The "image of the Spirit" refers to complete divinity, and is not limited by humanity. As such, God's inherent disposition and true image can be completely lived out in the incarnate flesh, which is not only normal and stable, but possesses majesty and wrath. The first incarnate flesh could only present the God that people could conceive of; that is, He was only able to perform signs and wonders and speak prophecies. Thus, He did not completely live out the reality of God, and so was not the embodiment of the Spirit with an image; He was but the direct appearance of divinity. Moreover, because He transcended normal humanity, He was not called the complete practical God Himself, but had a little of the vague God in heaven about Him; He was the God of people's notions. This is the substantive difference between the two fleashes incarnate.

From the highest point in the universe, God watches over humanity's every move and over all that people say and do. He even observes all of their innermost thoughts with absolute clarity, never overlooking them; as such, His words cut right into people's hearts, striking at their every thought, and God's words are astute and without error. "Although people 'know' My Spirit, they still offend My Spirit. My words lay bare the ugly faces of all people, as well as their innermost thoughts, and cause all upon earth to fall down in the midst of My scrutiny." From this it is evident that although God's requirements of humanity are not very demanding, people are still unable to endure the scrutiny of God's Spirit. "However, despite falling down, their hearts do not dare to stray far from Me. Among the objects of creation, who does not come to love Me as a result of My deeds?" This is even more indicative of God's full wisdom and omnipotence, and thus reveals everything God's people thought when they were in the position of service-doers: After a "trade" that ended in failure, the "hundreds of thousands" or "millions" in their heads came to nothing. However, because of God's administrative decrees and because of God's majesty and wrath—even though they hung their heads in sorrow—they still served God with a negative mindset, and all of their practices of the past became but empty talk and totally forgotten. Instead, to keep themselves entertained, to pass or idle away the time, they did things at will that made them and everybody else happy. ... This was what was really going on among humans. Thus, God opens up to humanity and says, "Who does not yearn for Me as a result of My words? In whom are not born feelings of attachment as a result of My love?" To be honest, humans are all willing to accept God's words, and there is not one among them who does not like to read the words of God; it is just that they are unable to put God's words into practice, for they are hindered by their natures. After reading God's words, many people cannot bear to be apart from them, and their love for God wells up within them. Thus, God once again curses Satan, once more exposing its ugly face. "This era in which Satan runs riot and is madly despotic" is also the very age that God begins His official great work on earth. Next, He begins the work of annihilating the world. In other words, the more Satan runs amok, the sooner God's day will arrive. Thus, the more God speaks of Satan's wantonness, the closer the day draws on which God will annihilate the world. Such is God's proclamation to Satan.

Why did God repeatedly say, "... furthermore, behind My back, they engage in those 'laudable' dirty dealings. Do you think the flesh, with which I clothe Myself, knows nothing of your actions, your behavior, and your words?" He did not just say such words one or two times. Why is that? Once people have been comforted by God, and are aware of God's sorrow for humanity, it becomes easy for them to forget the past as they struggle forward. Nevertheless, God is not the least bit lenient toward humans: He continues to target their thoughts. Thus, He tells people over and over to know themselves, to cease their debauchery, to no longer engage in such laudable dirty dealings, and to never again deceive God in the flesh. Although people's natures do not change, there is benefit in reminding them a few times. After this, God speaks from a human perspective to reveal the mysteries in their hearts: "Many years have I endured the wind and rain, and so too have I experienced the bitterness of the human world; however, upon closer reflection, no amount of suffering can make fleshly humanity lose hope in Me, much less can any sweetness cause humans of flesh to grow cold, downhearted, or dismissive toward Me. Is their love for Me really limited to either a lack of suffering or a lack of sweetness?" "Everything beneath the sun is empty"—these words indeed have inner meaning. Thus, God is saying that nothing can make humans lose hope in Him or grow cold toward Him. If people do not love God, then they may as well be dead; if they do not love God, then their suffering is in vain and the happiness they enjoy is empty, and is added to their sins. Because not a single person truly loves God, He says, "Is their love for Me really limited to either a lack of suffering or a lack of sweetness?" In the world of humanity, how could anyone exist without suffering or sweetness? Time and time again, God says, "Not a single human has ever truly seen My face or ever truly heard My voice, for humans do not truly know Me." God says that humans do not truly know Him, but why does He ask humans to know Him? Is this not a contradiction? Every one of God's words has a certain purpose. Because humans have grown numb, God employs the principle of doing 100% of His work through humans in order to ultimately possess 0.1 percent of each of their hearts. Such is the method by which God works, and God must act thusly in order to achieve His goals. This is also precisely the wisdom in God's words. Have you grasped this?

God says: "When I reveal My mysteries directly and make plain My will in the flesh, you take no notice; you listen to the sounds, but do not understand their meaning. I am overcome with sadness. Although I am in the flesh, I am unable to do the work of the ministry of the flesh.” In one regard, these words make people, because of their numbness, take the initiative to cooperate with God; in another regard, God reveals the true face of His divinity in flesh incarnate. Because humans are too small of stature, the revelation of divinity during the period that God is in the flesh only comes in accordance with their ability to accept it. During this step of work, most people remain incapable of fully accepting it, which sufficiently shows how unreceptive they are. Thus, during this work, the divinity does not perform all of its original function; it only performs a small part of it. This shows that in future work, the divinity will gradually be revealed according to the state of humanity’s recovery. However, the divinity does not grow gradually; rather, it is what the incarnate God possesses in essence, and is unlike the stature of humans.

There was a purpose and meaning to God’s creation of humans, which is why He said, “If humanity were all destroyed by My wrath, what would be the significance of My creation of the heavens and earth?” After humans were corrupted, God planned to gain a portion of them for His enjoyment; it was not His intention that all humans would be destroyed, nor that they would be eradicated at the slightest violation of God’s administrative decrees. Such is not the will of God; as God said, that would be meaningless. It is precisely because of this “meaninglessness” that God’s wisdom is made plain. Is there not even greater significance in God speaking and working through many means in order to chastise, judge, and strike at all people, ultimately selecting only those who truly love Him? It is precisely in this manner that God’s deeds are revealed, and so the creation of humans becomes even more significant. Thus, the majority of God’s words are said to simply float past them; this is in order to achieve a goal, and this exactly is the reality of a portion of His words.

Addendum:

Chapter 1

What I ask you to do is not the vague and empty theory that I speak of, nor is it unimaginable by the brain of man or unachievable by the flesh of man. Who is capable of complete loyalty within My house? And who can offer up their all within My kingdom? If not for the revelation of My will, would you truly demand of yourselves that you satisfy My heart? No one has ever understood My heart, and no one has ever perceived My will. Who has ever seen My face or heard My voice? Did Peter? Or Paul? Or John? Or James? Who has ever been clothed by Me, or possessed by Me, or used by Me? Though the first time I became flesh happened within divinity, the flesh in which I clothed Myself knew not the sufferings of man, because I was not incarnated in a form, and so it could not be said that the flesh fully did My will. Only when My divinity is able to do as I would do and speak as I would speak in a person of normal humanity, without hindrance or obstruction, can it be said that My will is done in the flesh. Because My normal humanity is able to shield My divinity, thus is achieved My aim of being humble and hidden. During the stage of work in the flesh, although the divinity acts directly, such actions are not easy for people to see, which is merely because of the life and actions of normal humanity. This incarnation cannot fast for 40 days like the first incarnation, but works and speaks normally; although He reveals mysteries, He is very normal; it is not as people imagine—His voice is not like thunder, His face does not sparkle with light, and the heavens do not tremble when He walks. If that were the case, then in this there would be none of My wisdom, and it would be impossible to shame and defeat Satan.

When I display My divinity from behind the shield of normal humanity, I obtain full glory, My great work is accomplished, and nothing presents any difficulties. This is because the aim of My incarnation is chiefly to allow all those who believe in Me to behold the deeds of My divinity in the flesh, and to see the practical God Himself, thus dispelling the place within people's hearts that is occupied by the invisible and intangible God. Because I eat, clothe Myself, sleep, dwell, and act like a normal person, because I speak and laugh as a normal person and have the needs of a normal person, while also possessing the essence of full divinity, I am called "the practical God." This is not abstract, and it is easy to understand; in it can be seen in which part the core of My work lies, and in which phase of work My focus is. The core aim of My incarnation is to reveal My divinity through normal humanity. It is not hard to see that the center of My work is in the second part of the era of judgment.

In Me, there has never been human life, nor any trace of humanity. Human life has never held a place in Me, and has never suppressed the revelation of My divinity. Thus, the more My voice in heaven and the will of My Spirit is expressed, the more Satan can be shamed, and so the easier it becomes to do My will within normal humanity. This alone has defeated Satan; Satan has already been utterly shamed. Although I am hidden, this does not impede the utterances and actions of My divinity—this is enough to show that I have been victorious and have gained complete glory. Because My work in the flesh is without hindrance, and because the practical God now has a place in people's hearts and has set down roots in their hearts, it is fully proven that Satan has been defeated by Me. And because Satan is incapable of doing any more among man, and because it is difficult to instill the quality of Satan in man's flesh, My will proceeds without hindrance. The content of My work is, chiefly, to cause all people to behold My wondrous deeds and see My true face: I am not beyond reach, I do not tower in the sky, and I am not formless and amorphous. I am not invisible like air, and nor am I like a floating cloud, easily blown away; instead, though I live among man and experience the sweetness, sourness, bitterness, and fieriness among man, yet My flesh is substantively different to that of man. Most people have difficulty engaging with Me, yet most also yearn to engage with Me. It is as if there are huge, unfathomable mysteries within the incarnate God. Because of the direct revelation of divinity, and because of the shield of human appearance, people keep a respectful distance from Me, believing that I am a merciful and loving God, yet also fearful of My majesty and wrath. Thus, in their hearts, they wish to speak in earnest with Me, yet they cannot do as they wish—what their hearts desire, their strength lacks. Such are the states of everyone in these circumstances—the more that people are like this, the greater the proof of the revelation of various aspects of My disposition, and thus the aim of people knowing of God is achieved. But this is secondary; the key is making people know My wondrous deeds from the doings of My flesh, causing them to know the essence of God; I am not, as people imagine, abnormal and supernatural. Rather, I am the practical God who is normal in all things. My place within people’s notions is dispelled, and they come to know Me in reality. Only then do I take My true place in people’s minds.

Before all people, I have not only never done anything supernatural that has been cherished by people, but I am also extremely ordinary and normal; I deliberately do not allow people to see anything in My incarnate flesh that has any hint of God. But because of My words, people are utterly conquered, and they submit to My testimony. Only thus do people come to know the Me in the flesh, without misgivings and upon the foundation of fully believing that God does indeed exist. In this way, people’s knowledge of Me becomes more real, more clear, and entirely untainted by their good behavior; all is the result of My divinity acting directly, giving people a greater knowledge of My divinity, for only divinity is the true face of God and inherent attribute of God. People should see this. What I want are words, deeds, and actions that are in divinity—I care not for words and actions in humanity. My aim is to live and act in divinity—I wish not to take root and sprout in humanity, and I wish not to reside in humanity. Do you understand what I am saying? Even though I am a guest in humanity, I do not want this; I act in complete divinity, and only in this way can people better understand My true face.

Chapter 10

During the time of church building, God barely mentioned building the kingdom. Even when He brought it up, He did so in the language of the time. Once the Age of Kingdom had arrived, God wrote off certain methods and concerns of the time of church building with a single stroke, and never again uttered even a single word about them. This is precisely the fundamental meaning of “God Himself” who is always new and never old. As well as things may have been done in the past, they are, after all, part of a bygone era, so God categorizes such past events as having occurred in the time before Christ, whereas the present day is known as the time after Christ. From this it can be seen that the building of the church was a prerequisite for the building of the kingdom; it laid the foundation for God to wield His sovereign power in the kingdom. The building of the church is a snapshot of today; God’s work on earth is primarily focused on this part that is the building of the kingdom. Before He finished building the church, He had already made preparations for all the work to be done, and when the time was right, He formally began His work. This is why God said, “The Age of Kingdom is, after all, different from times past. It does not concern how humanity acts; rather, I have descended upon the earth to personally carry out My work, which is something that human beings can neither conceive of nor accomplish.” Indeed, this work must be carried out by God personally—no human is capable of such work; they are just not up to it. Who, besides God, could carry out such great work among humanity? Who else is capable of “tormenting” the whole of humankind half to death? Could humans possibly arrange such work? Why is it that He says, “I have descended upon the earth to personally carry out My work”? Could God’s Spirit have truly disappeared from all of space? The line, “I have descended upon the earth to personally carry out My work,” refers both to the fact that God’s Spirit is incarnated in the flesh to do work, and to the fact that God’s Spirit is clearly working through humankind. By personally carrying out His work, He allows many people to see God Himself with their naked eyes; it is unnecessary for them to search carefully for Him in their own spirits. Furthermore, He allows all humans to see the workings of the Spirit with their own eyes, showing them that there is a substantive difference between the flesh of man and that of God. At the same time, throughout all of space, the universe world, the Spirit of God is at work. All God’s people who are enlightened, having accepted God’s name, see how the Spirit of God works and, thereby, become even more acquainted with God incarnate. As such, only if God’s divinity works directly—that is, only when God’s Spirit is able to work without the slightest interference—can humanity become acquainted with the practical God Himself. This is the substance of kingdom building.

How many times has God been incarnated in the flesh? Could it be several times? Why is it that God has remarked multiple times, “I once descended into the world of humans and experienced and observed their suffering, but did so without fulfilling the purpose of My incarnation”? Is it that God has been incarnated several times, but has never once been known by humanity? That is not what is meant by this statement. The first time God was incarnated, His aim was actually not for humans to know Him; rather, He carried out His work and then disappeared without anyone noticing or having even an opportunity to know Him. He did not allow people to fully know Him, nor did He completely possess the significance of incarnation; as such, He could not be said to have been fully incarnated. In the first incarnation, God merely used a physical body free of a sinful nature to carry out that work; after it was complete, there was no need of further mention. As for those humans who have been used by God throughout the ages, such instances are even less worthy of being called “incarnations.” Only the practical God Himself today, who is under the cover of a normal humanity and who has an inner, complete divinity, and whose aim is to allow humanity to know Him, can be fully called an “incarnation.” The significance of God’s first visit to this world is one aspect of the significance of what is called the incarnation today—but this visit by no means comprises the full meaning of what is now known as the incarnation. This is why God said, “without fulfilling the significance of My incarnation.” Experiencing and observing humans’ suffering, as God’s words say, refers to God’s Spirit and the two incarnations. For this reason, God said, “Once the building of the kingdom got under way, My incarnate flesh formally began to perform My ministry; that is, the King of the kingdom formally took up His sovereign power.” Though the construction of the church was a testimony to God’s name, the work had not yet formally begun; only today can it be said to be kingdom building. All that was done previously was just a foretaste; it was not the real thing. Even though it was said that the kingdom had commenced, no work was yet being done within it. Only today, now that work is being done within God’s divinity and God has formally begun His work, has humanity finally entered the kingdom. Thus, “the descent of the kingdom into the human world—far from being merely a literal manifestation—is one of actual reality; this is one aspect of the meaning of ‘the reality of practice.’” This excerpt is an apt summary of the above exposition. Having provided this description, God moves on to characterize the general state of humankind, leaving people in a state of constant busyness. “Throughout the world, everyone exists within My mercy and lovingkindness, but so does all humanity lie under My judgment, and likewise is subject to My trials.” Human life is governed according to certain principles and rules, as arranged by God, and they are as follows: There will be times of happiness, moments of frustration, and, moreover, times of refinement by way of hardships that must be endured. Thus, no one will live a life of pure happiness or pure suffering; every life will have its ups and downs. Throughout all of humanity, not only is God’s mercy and lovingkindness apparent, but so are His judgment and the whole of His disposition. It can be said that all humans exist amidst God’s trials, can it not? Throughout this vast world, humans are all busy with finding a way out for themselves. They are not sure what role they play, and some even damage or forfeit their lives for the sake of fate. Even Job was no exception to the rule: Though he, too, endured God’s trials, nonetheless, he looked for a way out for himself. No one has ever been able to stand fast through God’s trials. Due to human greed and nature, no one is fully satisfied with their current condition, and no one stands fast through trials; everyone crumbles under God’s judgment. If God were to be serious with humanity, and if He were still to hold such exacting demands of people, then it would be just as He said: “The entire human race would topple under My burning gaze.”

Despite the fact that construction of the kingdom has formally begun, the salute to the kingdom has yet to formally ring out; now it is but a prophecy of what is to come. When the people have all been made complete and all the nations of the earth become Christ’s kingdom, then it will be the time when the seven thunders peal. The current day is a stride toward that stage; the charge has been unleashed toward that day. This is God’s plan, and in the near future it will be realized. However, God has already accomplished everything that He has uttered. Thus, it is clear that the nations of earth are but castles in the sand, trembling as high tide nears: The last day is imminent, and the great red dragon will topple beneath God’s word. To ensure that His plan is carried out successfully, the angels of heaven have descended upon earth, doing their utmost to satisfy God. The incarnate God Himself has deployed to the field of battle to wage war against the enemy. Wherever the incarnation appears is a place from which the enemy is exterminated. China will be the first to be annihilated; it will be laid to waste by the hand of God. God will give absolutely no quarter there. Proof of the great red dragon's progressive collapse can be seen in the continued maturation of the people; this is obvious and visible to anyone. The maturation of the people is a sign of the enemy's demise. This is a bit of an explanation of what is meant by "compete." Thus, God has reminded the people on numerous occasions to give beautiful testimonies to Him to undo the status held by notions, which are the great red dragon's ugliness, in the hearts of humans. God uses such reminders to enliven people's faith and, in so doing, achieves attainments in His work. This is because God has said, "What exactly are humans capable of doing? Is it not rather that I do it Myself?" All humans are like this; not only are they incapable, but they are also easily discouraged and disappointed. For this reason, they cannot know God. God not only revives humanity's faith; He is also secretly and constantly imbuing people with strength.

Next, God began speaking to the entire universe. Not only has God commenced His new work in China, but throughout the universe, He has begun doing the new work of today. In this stage of the work, because God wishes to reveal all of His deeds throughout the world so that all humans who have betrayed Him will come again to submit before His throne, God's judgment will still contain His mercy and lovingkindness. God uses current events throughout the world as opportunities to cause humans to feel panic, spurring them to seek God so that they may flow back to be before Him. Thus, God says, "This is one of the ways in which I work, and is without doubt an act of salvation for humanity, and what I extend to them is still a kind of love." Here God exposes humanity's true nature with an accuracy that is penetrating, unparalleled, and effortless. This leaves people hiding their faces in shame, utterly humiliated. Every time God speaks, He somehow always manages to point out some aspect of humanity's shameful performance so that, while at ease, people do not forget to know themselves and do not think of knowing themselves as an old task. According to human nature, if God were to stop pointing out their faults for even just a moment, they are liable to become dissolute and arrogant. This is why God again says today, "Humanity—far from treasuring the titles that I have conferred upon them, so many of them, on account of the title 'service-doer,' nurse resentment in their hearts, and so many, on account of the title 'My people,' breed love for Me in their hearts. No one should try to fool Me; My eyes are all-seeing!" As soon as humans read this statement, they immediately feel uncomfortable. They feel that their past actions were far too immature—just the kind of dirty-dealing that offends God. They have recently wanted to satisfy God, but while they are more than willing, they lack the power to do so, and do not know what they ought to do. Unwittingly, they are imbued with a renewed resolve. This is the effect of reading these words after one has become at ease.

On the one hand, God says Satan is insane in the extreme, while on the other hand He points out that the old nature shared by most humans has not changed. From this, it is clear that Satan's actions are manifested through humanity. God therefore frequently reminds humans not to be dissolute, lest they be devoured by Satan. This not only prophesies that some humans will rebel; moreover, it is an alarm bell ringing out to warn all people to set aside the past with haste and seek the present day. No one wishes to be possessed by demons or overcome by evil spirits, so God's words are, even more so, a warning and admonishment to them. However, when most people move to the opposite extreme, attaching great importance to God's every last word, God in turn says, "Most people are waiting for Me to reveal even more mysteries for them to feast their eyes upon. However, even if you came to understand all the mysteries of heaven, exactly what could you do with that knowledge? Would it increase your love for Me? Would it arouse your love for Me?" From this it is evident that humans do not use God's word to know God and love God, but rather to increase the stores of their "little storehouse." Thus, God uses the phrase "to feast their eyes upon" to describe humanity's extremism, which reflects how humans' love of God is still not entirely pure. If God did not unveil mysteries, humans would not lay much importance on His words, but would rather just give them a cursory glance, glimpsing briefly as if admiring flowers whilst galloping past on horseback. They would not take the time to truly reflect upon or mull over God's utterances. Most people do not truly cherish His word. They do not go to great lengths to eat and drink of His words; instead, they just skim over them perfunctorily. Why does God speak now in a different way than He did in times past? Why are all His words so unfathomable? Some examples are the word "crown" in "I would never crown them with such labels so casually," "purest gold" in "Is there anyone who can receive the purest gold of which My words are made," His previous mention of "processing" in "without undergoing any processing by Satan," and other such phrases. Humans do not understand why God speaks this way; they cannot comprehend why He speaks in such a jocular, humorous, and provocative manner. It is precisely these which are manifestations of the purpose of God's speech. Ever since the very beginning, humans have always been incapable of comprehending God's word, and it has seemed as though His utterances are indeed quite grave and stern. By adding the slightest strain of humor—adding a few quips here and there—He is able to lighten the mood with His word and allow humans to relax their muscles somewhat. In so doing, He is able to achieve an even greater effect, compelling every human to ponder over God's word.

Chapter 11

To man's naked eye, there appears to be no change in God's utterances during this period, which is because people are incapable of grasping the laws by which God speaks, and do not understand the context of His words. After reading the words of God, people do not believe there to be any new mysteries in these words; thus, they are incapable of leading lives that are extraordinarily fresh, and instead live lives that are stagnant and lifeless. But in God's utterances, we see that there is a deeper level of meaning, one that is both unfathomable and unreachable to man. Today, for man to be fortunate enough to read such words of God is the greatest of all blessings. If no one were to read these words, man would forever remain arrogant, self-righteous, unknowing of himself, and unaware of just how many failings he has. After reading the profound, unfathomable words of God, people secretly admire them, and there is true conviction in their hearts, untainted by falsehood; their hearts become the genuine article, not counterfeit goods. This is what really happens in people's hearts. Everyone has their own story in their heart. It is as if they are saying to themselves: "Most likely this was spoken by God Himself—if not God, who else could utter such words? Why can't I speak them? Why am I incapable of doing such work? It appears the incarnate God of which God speaks truly is real, and is God Himself! I will doubt no more. Otherwise, it may well be that when the hand of God arrives, it will be too late for regrets! ..." This is what most people think in their hearts. It is fair to say that, from when God began to speak until today, all people would have fallen away without the support of God's words. Why is it said that all of this work is done by God Himself, and not by man? If God did not use words to support the life of the church, everyone would disappear without trace. Is this not the power of God? Is this truly man's eloquence? Is this man's singular talents? Absolutely not! Without dissection, no one would know what blood type runs through their veins, they would be unaware of how many hearts they have, or how many brains, and they would all think they know God. Do they not know that there is still opposition contained within their knowledge? Little wonder that God says, "Every person in mankind should accept being scrutinized by My Spirit, should closely inspect their every word and action, and, moreover, should look upon My wondrous deeds." From this it can be seen that God's words are not aimless and without basis. God has never treated any man unfairly; even Job, with all his faith, was not let off—he was also dissected, and left with nowhere to hide from his shame. And that is to say nothing of the people of today. Thus, God then immediately asks: "How do you feel at the time of the kingdom's arrival on earth?" God's question matters little, but it leaves people perplexed: "What do we feel? We still do not know when the kingdom will arrive, so how could we talk of feelings? What's more, we don't have a clue. If I had to feel something, it would be 'astonished,' and nothing else." In fact, this question is not the aim of God's words. Above all, this single sentence—"When My sons and people stream to My throne, I formally commence judgment before the great white throne”—summarizes the developments of the entire spiritual realm. No one knows what God wants to do in the spiritual realm during this time, and only after God utters these words is there a slight awakening in people. Because there are different steps in God’s work, God’s work throughout the universe also varies. During this time, God chiefly saves the sons and the people of God, which is to say, shepherded by the angels, the sons and the people of God begin to accept being dealt with and broken, they officially begin to dispel their thoughts and notions, and to say goodbye to any trace of this world; in other words, the “judgment before the great white throne” spoken of by God officially begins. Because it is the judgment of God, God must utter His voice—and although the content varies, the aim is always the same. Today, judging from the tone with which God speaks, it seems that His words are directed at a certain group of people. In fact, above all, these words address the nature of all mankind. They cut directly to man’s spinal cord, they do not spare man’s feelings, and they reveal the entirety of his substance, leaving nothing out, not letting anything through. Starting from today, God officially reveals the true face of man, and thus “releases the voice of My Spirit to the entire universe.” The effect that is ultimately achieved is this: “Through My words, I will wash clean all the people and things among all that is in heaven and on earth, so that the land is no longer filthy and licentious, but is a holy kingdom.” These words present the future of the kingdom, which is entirely of Christ’s kingdom, just as God said, “All is good fruit, all are diligent farmers.” Naturally, this will occur throughout the universe, and will not just be limited to China.

It is only when God begins to speak and act that people have a little knowledge of Him in their notions. In the beginning, this knowledge exists only in their notions, but as time goes by, people’s thoughts are increasingly futile and unfit for human use; thus, they come to believe all that God says, to the extent that they “create a place for the practical God in their consciousness.” It is only in their consciousness that people have a place for the practical God. In reality, however, they do not know God, and speak nothing but empty words. Yet compared to the past, they have made tremendous progress, although there is still a great difference from the practical God Himself. Why does God always say, “Each day I walk among the unceasing flow of people, and each day I operate within every person”? The more God says such things, the more people can compare them to the actions of the practical God Himself of today, and so they can better know the practical God in reality. Because God’s words are spoken from the perspective of the flesh and uttered using the language of humanity, people are able to appreciate the words of God by measuring them against material things, and thereby a greater effect is achieved. In addition, time and time again God speaks of the image of the “Me” in people’s hearts and the “Me” in reality, which makes people more willing to purge the image of God in their hearts, and thus willing to know and engage with the practical God Himself. This is the wisdom of God’s words. The more God says such things, the greater the benefit to people’s knowledge of God, and thus God says, “If I did not become flesh, man would never know Me, and even if he came to know Me, would not such knowledge still be a notion?" Indeed, if people were required to know God according to their own notions, it would be easy for them; they would be relaxed and happy, and thus God would be forever vague and not practical in people's hearts, which would prove that Satan, and not God, holds dominion over the whole universe; thus, God's words that "I have taken back My power" would forever remain empty.

When divinity begins to act directly, that is also the time when the kingdom officially descends to the world of man. But what is said here is that the kingdom descends among man, not that the kingdom takes form among man—and thus what is spoken of today is the construction of the kingdom, and not how it takes form. Why does God always say, "All things fall silent"? Could it be that all things stop and stand still? Could it be that great mountains really fall silent? So why do people have no sense of this? Could it be that God's word is wrong? Or is God exaggerating? Because everything that God does is carried out within a certain environment, no one is aware of it or capable of perceiving it with their own eyes, and all that people can do is listen to God speak. Because of the majesty with which God acts, when God arrives, it is as if there has been a tremendous change in heaven and on earth; and to God, it appears that all are watching this moment. Today, the facts have yet to arrive. People have merely learned a little from part of the literal meaning of God's words. The true meaning awaits the time when they purge themselves of their notions; only then will they become aware of what God incarnate is doing on earth and in heaven today. In the people of God in China there is not only the venom of the great red dragon. So, too, is the nature of the great red dragon revealed more abundantly, and more clearly, in them. But God does not speak of this directly, merely mentioning a little about the venom of the great red dragon. In this way, He does not expose man's scars directly, which is more beneficial to man's progress. The spawn of the great red dragon do not like to be called the descendants of the great red dragon in front of others. It is as if the words "great red dragon" bring shame upon them; none of them are willing to speak of these words, and thus God only says, "This stage of My work is primarily focused on you, and this is one aspect of the significance of My incarnation in China." More precisely, God has chiefly come to conquer the archetypal representatives of the spawn of the great red dragon, which is the significance of God's incarnation in China.

"When I personally come among man, the angels simultaneously begin the work of shepherding." In fact, it is not taken literally that God's Spirit only arrives in the world of man when the angels commence their work among all peoples. Instead, these two pieces of work—work of divinity and the shepherding of the angels—are carried out simultaneously. Next, God talks a little about the shepherding of the angels. When He says that "all the sons and people not only receive trials and shepherding, but are also able to behold, with their own eyes, the occurrence of all kinds of visions," most people have abundant imaginings about the word "visions." Visions refer to the supernatural happenings in people's imaginations. But the content of the work remains the knowledge of the practical God Himself. Visions are the means by which angels work. They may give people feelings or dreams, allowing them to perceive the existence of the angels. But the angels remain invisible to man. The method by which they work among the sons and the people of God is to directly enlighten and illuminate them, added to which is the dealing with and breaking of them. Rarely do they give sermons. Naturally, communion between people is the exception; this is what is happening in countries outside of China. Contained within God's words is the revelation of the living circumstances of all mankind—naturally, this is primarily directed at the spawn of the great red dragon. Of the various states of all mankind, God selects those which are representative to serve as models. Thus, God's words strip people naked, and they know no shame, or else they have no time to hide from the shining light, and are beaten at their own game. The many manners of man are a plethora of images, which God has painted from ancient times until today, and which He shall paint from today until tomorrow. All He paints is the ugliness of man: Some weep in the darkness, seemingly grieving for the sight lost from their eyes, some laugh, some are buffeted by great waves, some walk upon undulating mountain roads, some search amid the vast wilderness, quivering with fear, like a bird startled by the mere twang of a bow-string, deeply fearful of being eaten by wild animals in the mountains. In God's hands, these many ugly manners become touching, lifelike tableaux, most of them too horrible to look at, or else enough to make people's hair stand on end and leave them bewildered and confused. In God's eyes, all that is manifested in man is nothing but ugliness, and even though it might provoke compassion, it is still ugliness. The locus of man's difference from God is that man's weakness lies in his tendency to show kindness toward others. God, however, has always been the same to man, which means that He has always had the same attitude. He is not always as kindly as people imagine, like an experienced mother whose children are always at the forefront of her mind. In reality, if God did not want to employ an array of methods to conquer the great red dragon, there is no way He would submit to such humiliation, allowing Himself to be subjected to the limitations of man. According to God's disposition, all that people do and say provokes God's wrath, and they ought to be chastised. In God's eyes, not one of them is up to standard, and they all are the ones to be struck down by God. Because of the principles of God's work in China, and, moreover, because of the nature of the great red dragon, added to which is the fact that China is the country of the great red dragon and the land in which God incarnate resides, God must swallow His anger and conquer all of the spawn of the great red dragon; yet He shall always detest the spawn of the great red dragon—that is, He will always detest all that comes from the great red dragon—and this will never change.

No one has ever been aware of any of God's actions, nor have His actions ever been looked upon by anything. When God returned to Zion, for example, who was aware of this? Thus, words such as "I quietly come among man, and then I drift away. Has anyone ever seen Me?” show that man does indeed lack the faculties to accept the happenings of the spiritual realm. In the past, God said that when He returns to Zion, “the sun is fiery, the moon is lustrous.” Because people are still preoccupied with God’s return to Zion—because they have yet to let it go—God directly utters the words “the sun is fiery, and the moon is lustrous” to conform with people’s notions. As a result, when people’s notions are struck by God’s words, they behold that God’s actions are so wondrous, and they see that His words are profound, unfathomable, and indecipherable to all; thus, they put this matter completely aside, and feel a little clarity in their spirits, as if God has already returned to Zion, and so people pay no great attention to this matter. From then on, they accept God’s words with one heart and one mind, and no longer fret that catastrophe will strike after God’s return to Zion. Only then is it easy for people to accept God’s words, focusing the entirety of their attention on God’s words, leaving them without the desire to consider anything else.

Addendum:

Chapter 2

When people behold the practical God, when they personally live their lives with, walk side-by-side with, and reside with God Himself, they put aside the curiosity that has been in their hearts for so many years. The knowledge of God previously spoken of is only the first step; although people have knowledge of God, there remain many persistent doubts in their hearts: Where did God come from? Does God eat? Is God vastly different from ordinary people? For God, is dealing with all people an easy thing, mere child’s play? Is all that is spoken from God’s mouth the mysteries of heaven? Is all that He says higher than the things said by all created beings? Does light shine from God’s eyes? And so on—this is all that people’s notions are capable of. These things are what you should understand and enter into before all else. In people’s notions, the incarnate God is still a vague God. If not through practical knowledge, people would never be able to understand Me, and would never behold My deeds in their experiences. It is only because I became flesh that people are “unable to grasp” My will. If I had not become flesh, and were still in heaven, still in the spiritual realm, then people would “know” Me; they would bow down and worship Me, and talk of their “knowledge” of Me through their experiences—but what would be the use of such knowledge? What would be its value as a point of reference? Could the knowledge that comes from people’s notions be real? I do not want the knowledge of people’s brains—I want practical knowledge.

My will is revealed among you at all times, and at all times is there My illumination and enlightenment. When I act directly in divinity, it is not filtered through the brain, and there is no need to add “seasoning”—it is a direct act of divinity. What are people capable of? Has everything from the time of creation until today not been personally carried out by Me? In the past, I talked of the sevenfold intensified Spirit, but no one was able to understand His essence—even when they were aware of it, they were incapable of complete understanding. When I work in humanity governed by divinity, because this work is carried out in circumstances that people believe to be not supernatural but normal, it is referred to as the work of the Holy Spirit. When I work directly in divinity, because I am unconstrained by people’s notions, and because I am not subject to the limits of the “supernatural” as it exists within their notions, this work has an immediate effect; it goes to the heart of the matter, and it cuts straight to the point. As a result, this step of work is purer; it is twice as fast, people’s understanding accelerates and My words increase, causing all people to rush to catch up. Because the effect is different, because the means, the nature, and the content of My work are not the same—and, furthermore, because I have officially begun to work in the flesh, in view of the foregoing, this step of work is referred to as “the work of the sevenfold intensified Spirit.” It is not something abstract. Following developments in the means by which I work in you, and following the arrival of the kingdom, the sevenfold intensified Spirit begins to work, and this work constantly grows deeper and more intense. When all people behold God and they all see that the Spirit of God is among man, the full significance of My incarnation is made clear. There is no need to summarize—people know this naturally.

Considering many respects—the methods by which I work, the steps of My work, the tone of My words today, and so on—only what comes from My mouth now are “the utterances of the seven Spirits” in the true sense. Though I also spoke in the past, that was during the stage of building the church. It was like the preface and table of contents in a novel—it was without essence; only the utterances of today can be called the utterances of the seven Spirits in terms of their essence. “The utterances of the seven Spirits” refers to the utterances that come from the throne, which is to say, they are uttered directly in divinity. The moment when My utterances turned to revealing the mysteries of heaven was the moment when I spoke directly in divinity. In other words, unconstrained by humanity, I directly revealed all of the mysteries and circumstances of the spiritual realm. Why do I say that I was previously subject to the limits of humanity? This requires explanation. In people’s eyes, no one is capable of revealing the mysteries of heaven; if not for God Himself, no one on earth could know of these mysteries. Thus, I address people’s notions and say that the reason I did not reveal any mysteries in the past was because I was subject to the limits of humanity. More specifically, however, this is not the case: The content of My words differs as My work differs, and thus, when I began to perform My ministry in divinity, I revealed mysteries; in the past, I had to work in circumstances that all people viewed as normal, and the words that I spoke were capable of being achieved in people’s notions. When I began to reveal mysteries, not one of these was attainable by people’s notions—they were unlike human thinking. So, I officially began to turn to speaking in divinity, and these were the utterances of the seven Spirits in the true sense. Though the words of the past were utterances from the throne, they were spoken upon the basis of what was attainable by people, and thus were not uttered directly in divinity—as a result, they were not the utterances of the seven Spirits in the true sense.

Chapter 12

When all people take heed, when all things are renewed and revived, when every person submits to God without qualms and is willing to shoulder the heavy responsibility of God's burden—this is when the eastern lightning issues forth, illuminating all from the East to the West, terrifying all the earth with the arrival of this light; and, at this juncture, God once again begins a new life. This is to say that at this moment, God begins the new work on earth, proclaiming to the people of the entire universe that “when lightning issues from the East, which is also precisely the moment that I begin to utter My words—when the lightning issues, the whole universe is illuminated, and a transformation occurs in all the stars.” So, when is the time that lightning issues forth from the East? When the heavens darken and the earth grows dim is when God hides His face from the world, and it is the very moment when all beneath the heavens is about to be beset by a mighty storm. Yet just at this time, all people are stricken by panic, fearful of the thunder, afraid of the brilliance of the lightning, and even more terrified of the onslaught of the deluge, such that most of them shut their eyes and wait for God to unleash His wrath and strike them down. And as various states come to pass, the eastern lightning issues forth immediately. This means that in the world's East, from when testimony to God Himself begins, to when He begins to work, to when divinity begins to wield sovereignty across the earth—this is the glowing shaft of the eastern lightning, which has ever shone upon the whole universe. When the countries of earth become the kingdom of Christ is when the whole universe is illuminated. Now is the time of the eastern lightning issuing forth. God incarnate begins to work, and, furthermore, speaks directly in divinity. It may be said that when God begins to speak on earth is when the eastern lightning issues forth. More precisely, when living water flows from the throne—when the utterances from the throne begin—is precisely when the utterances of the seven Spirits formally begin. At this time, the eastern lightning begins to issue forth, and because of its duration, the degree of illumination also varies, and there is, too, a limit to the scope of its radiance. Yet with the movement of God's work, with changes in His plan—with variations in the work on the sons and people of God—the lightning increasingly performs its inherent function, such that all throughout the universe is illuminated, and no dregs or dross remain. This is the crystallization of God's 6,000-year management plan, and the very fruit enjoyed by God. “The stars” does not refer to the stars in the sky, but to all the sons and people of God who work for Him. Because they bear testimony to God in God's kingdom, and represent Him in His kingdom, and because they are creatures, they are called “the stars.” “To transform” refers to a transformation in identity and status: People change from people on earth into people of the kingdom, and, furthermore, God is with them, and God’s glory is in them. As a result, they wield sovereign power in God’s stead, and the venom and impurities in them are cleansed by God’s work, ultimately making them fit for use by God and in accordance with God’s heart—this is one aspect of these words’ meaning. When the shaft of light from God illuminates all the land, all things in heaven and on earth will change to varying degrees, and the stars in the sky will also change, the sun and moon will be renewed, and the people on earth will be subsequently renewed—which is God’s work between heaven and earth, and of no surprise.

When God saves people—this does not refer to those who are not chosen naturally—that is just when God cleanses and judges people, and all weep bitterly, or fall stricken upon their beds, or are struck down and plunged into the hell of death because of God’s words. Thanks only to God’s utterances do people begin to know themselves. If things were not so, theirs would be the eyes of a toad—looking up, no one convinced, none of them knowing themselves, ignorant of how many stones they weigh. People are truly corrupted by Satan to a great extent. It is precisely because of God’s omnipotence that the ugly face of man is depicted in such vivid detail, causing man, after reading it, to compare it to his own true face. People all know that God seems to know, with perfect clarity, how many brain cells they have in their heads, to say nothing of His knowledge of their ugly faces or innermost thoughts. In the words “The entire human race is as if it had been sorted out. Under the glow of this shaft of light from the East, all of mankind is revealed in their original form, their eyes dazzled, unsure what to do,” it can be seen that one day, when God’s work ends, all mankind will be judged by God. No one will be able to escape; God will handle the people of all mankind one by one, without overlooking a single one of them, and only thus shall God’s heart be satisfied. And so, God says, “They are also like unto animals that flee from My light and take refuge in mountain caves—yet not one among them can be effaced from within My light.” People are lowly and inferior animals. Living in the hands of Satan, it is as if they have taken refuge in ancient forests deep within the mountains—but, because nothing can escape incineration in God’s flames, even while under the “protection” of the forces of Satan, how could they be forgotten by God? When people accept the coming of God’s words, the various bizarre forms and grotesque states of all people are depicted by God’s pen; God speaks as befits the needs and mentality of man. Thus, to people, God appears well-versed in psychology. It is as if God is a psychologist, but also as if God is a specialist of internal medicine—no wonder He has such an understanding of man, who is “complex.” The more people think so, the greater their sense of God’s preciousness, and the more they feel that God is profound and unfathomable. It is as if, between man and God, there is an uncrossable celestial boundary, but also as if the two were regarding each other from opposite banks of the Chu River,<sup>a</sup> neither able to do more than watch the other. This is to say, the people on earth only look at God with their eyes; they have never had the chance to study Him closely, and all they have toward Him is a feeling of attachment. In their hearts, there is always a sense that God is lovely, but because God is so “heartless and unfeeling,” they have never had the chance to speak of the anguish in their hearts before Him. They are like a beautiful young wife before her husband, never having had the opportunity to divulge her true feelings due to her husband’s probity. People are self-despising wretches, and so, because of their fragility, because of their lack of self-respect, My hate of man grows, unconsciously, somewhat more intense, and the fury in My heart bursts forth. In My mind, it is as if I have suffered a trauma. I have long since lost hope in man, but because “once again, My day presses close upon all humanity, once again arousing the human race, giving humanity another new beginning,” I once again drum up the courage to conquer all mankind, to capture and defeat the great red dragon. God’s original intention was as follows: to do nothing more than conquer the spawn of the great red dragon in China; only this could be considered the defeat of the great red dragon, the vanquishing of the great red dragon. Only this would suffice to prove that God reigns as King across the earth, to prove the accomplishment of God’s great enterprise, that God has a new beginning on earth and has gained glory on earth. Because of the final, beautiful scene, God can’t help but express the passion in His heart: “My heart beats and, following the rhythms of My heartbeat, the mountains leap for joy, the waters dance with joy, and the waves beat upon the rocky reefs. It is difficult to express what is in My heart.” From this, it can be seen that what God planned, He has already accomplished; it was predetermined by God, and it is precisely what God makes people experience and behold. The prospect of the kingdom is beautiful; the King of the kingdom is the victor, without ever having had, from His head to His feet, a trace of flesh or blood, composed entirely of divine elements. His whole body glows with sacred glory, utterly untainted by human ideas; His entire body, from top to bottom, brims with righteousness and the aura of heaven, and exudes a captivating fragrance. Like the beloved in Song of Songs, He is yet more beautiful than all the saints, higher than the ancient saints; He is the exemplar among all people, and incomparable to man; people are not fit to look upon Him directly. No one can attain God’s glorious countenance, God’s appearance, or God’s image; no one can compete with them, and no one can easily praise them with their mouth.

God’s words have no end—like water gushing from a spring, they never run dry, and thus no one can fathom the mysteries of God’s management plan. Yet to God, such mysteries are endless. Using different means and language, God has spoken many times of His renewal and utter transformation of the whole universe, each time more profound than the last: “I want to make all unclean things burn into ashes under My gaze;

a. “Chu River” refers figuratively to the border between opposing powers.

I want to make all the sons of disobedience disappear from before My eyes, never more to tarry in existence.” Why does God repeatedly say such things? Is He not fearful people will grow weary of them? People merely grope amidst God’s words, wishing to know God in this way, but never remembering to examine themselves. Thus, God employs this method to remind them, to make them all know themselves, so that from themselves they may know the disobedience of man, and thus eradicate their disobedience before God. Reading that God wishes to “sort out,” people’s mood grows anxious at once, and their muscles, too, seem to stop moving. They immediately return before God to criticize themselves, and so come to know God. After this—after they have made up their minds—God uses the opportunity to show them the substance of the great red dragon; thus, people engage with the spiritual realm directly, and, because of the role their resolve has played, their minds also begin to play a role, which increases the sentiment between man and God—which is of greater benefit to God’s work in the flesh. In this way, people are unconsciously possessed of a mood to look back on times gone by: In the past, people believed for years in a vague God; for years, they were never set free in their hearts, incapable of great enjoyment, and, although they believed in God, there was no order to their lives. It seemed the same as it did before coming to belief—their lives still felt empty and hopeless, and their belief at that time seemed like a kind of entanglement, no better than disbelief. Since they have beheld the practical God Himself of today, it is as if heaven and earth have been renewed; their lives have become radiant, they are no longer without hope, and, because of the arrival of the practical God, they feel steadfast in their hearts and peaceful within their spirits. No longer do they chase the wind and clutch at shadows in all they do; no more is their pursuit aimless, and no more do they flail about. The life of today is even more beautiful, and people have unexpectedly entered the kingdom and become God’s people, and afterward.... In their hearts, the more people think of this, the greater the sweetness; the more they think of this, the happier they are, and the more they are inspired to love God. Thus, without their realizing it, the friendship between God and man is enhanced. People love God more, and know God more, and God’s work in man becomes increasingly easy, and it no longer forces or compels people, but follows the course of nature, and man performs his own, unique function—only in this way will people gradually become able to know God. Only this is God’s wisdom—it does not entail the slightest effort, and it is brought to bear as befits man’s nature. Thus, at this moment, God says, “During My incarnation in the human world, mankind has come, under My guidance, unwittingly to this day and has come unwittingly to know Me. But, as for how to walk the path that lies ahead, no one has an inkling, no one is aware—and less still does anyone have a clue in what direction that path will take them. Only with the Almighty watching over them will anyone be able to walk the path to the end; only guided by the lightning in the East will anyone be able to cross the threshold that leads to My kingdom.” Is this not exactly a summary of what I described in man’s heart above? Herein lies the secret of God’s words. What man thinks in his heart is precisely what God speaks from His mouth, and what He speaks from His mouth is precisely that for which man yearns. This is precisely where God is most adept in exposing man's heart; if not, how could all be sincerely convinced? Is this not the effect God wishes to achieve by conquering the great red dragon?

In fact, there are many words for which God's intention is not to indicate their superficial meanings. In many of His words, God simply intends deliberately to change people's notions and divert their attention. God does not attach any importance to these words, and thus many words are not worthy of explanation. When man has been conquered by God's words to the extent they have been today, people's strength reaches a certain point, so God subsequently utters more words of warning—the constitution He issues forth to the people of God: “Although the human beings that populate the earth are as numerous as the stars, I know them all as clearly as the palm of My own hand. And, though the human beings that ‘love’ Me are also as innumerable as grains of sand in the sea, only a few are chosen by Me: only those who pursue the bright light, who are apart from those who ‘love’ Me.” Indeed, there are many who say they love God, but there are few who love Him in their hearts. It would seem that this could be clearly discerned even with closed eyes. This is how the entire world of those who believe in God actually is. In this, we see that God has now turned to the work of “sorting people out,” which shows that what God wants, and what satisfies God, is not the church of today, but the kingdom after the sorting. At this moment, He gives a further warning to all the “dangerous goods”: Unless God does not act, as soon as God begins to act, these people shall be wiped from the kingdom. God never does things perfunctorily. He acts always according to the principle of “one is one and two is two,” and, if there are those He does not wish to look upon, He does everything possible to wipe them away, to stop them from causing trouble in the future. This is called “taking out the trash and thoroughly cleaning.” The very moment God announces the administrative decrees to man is when He presents His miraculous deeds and all that is within Him, and thus He subsequently says: “There are wild beasts without number in the mountains, but they are all as tame as sheep before Me; unfathomable mysteries lie beneath the waves, but they present themselves to Me as clearly as all things upon the face of the earth; in the heavens above are realms that man can never reach, yet I walk about freely in those inaccessible realms.” God's meaning is this: Although the heart of man is deceitful above all things, and seems as endlessly mysterious as the hell of people's notions, God knows man's actual states like the back of His hand. Among all things, man is an animal fiercer and more brutal than a wild beast, yet God has conquered man to the point that none dare to rise up and resist. In fact, as God intends, what people think in their hearts is more complex than all things among all things; it is unfathomable, yet God has no regard for man's heart. He merely treats it as a little worm before His eyes. With a word from His mouth, He conquers it; at any time He wishes, He strikes it down; with the slightest movement of His hand, He chastises it; at will, He condemns it.

Today, all people exist within darkness, but, due to God's arrival, they finally come to know the essence of the light by having seen Him. Throughout the world, it is as if a great black pot has been upturned over the earth, and no one can draw a breath; they all want to reverse the situation, yet no one has ever lifted the pot. Only because of God's incarnation have people's eyes suddenly been opened, and they have beheld the practical God. Thus, God asks them with a questioning tone: "Man has never recognized Me in the light, but has only seen Me in the world of darkness. Are you not in exactly the same situation today? It was at the climax of the great red dragon's rampages that I formally assumed the flesh to do My work." God does not hide the real circumstances of the spiritual realm, nor does He hide the real state of the heart of man, and thus He repeatedly reminds people: "I am not only enabling My people to know the incarnate God, but also cleansing them. Due to the severity of My administrative decrees, a great majority of people are still in danger of being cast out by Me. Unless you make every effort to deal with yourself, to subdue your own body—unless you do this, you will assuredly become an object that I despise and reject, to be cast down into hell, just as Paul received chastisement from My hands, from which there was no escape." As God says so more, only then do people guard their steps more and become more fearful of God's administrative decrees; only then can God's authority be brought to bear and His majesty made plain. Here, Paul is once again mentioned, so that people might understand God's will: They must not be those who are chastised by God, but those who are mindful of God's will. Only this can make people, amidst their fear, look back on the inability of their past resolve before God to satisfy Him completely, which gives them even greater regret and more knowledge of the practical God. Thus, only then can they have no doubts about God's words.

"Man does not merely not know Me in My flesh; more than that, he has failed to understand his own self that resides in a fleshly body. For so many years, human beings have been deceiving Me, treating Me as a guest from outside. So many times...." These "so many times" list the realities of man's opposition to God, showing people real examples of chastisement; this is proof of sin, and no one can refute it again. All people use God like some everyday item, as if He were some household essential that they can use as they wish. No one cherishes God; no one has tried to know the beauty of God, nor His glorious countenance, and much less does anyone intend to submit to God. Nor has anyone ever looked upon God as something beloved in their heart; they all drag Him out when they need Him, and toss Him to the side and ignore Him when they don't. It is as if, to man, God is a puppet that man may manipulate at will, and make demands of howsoever he wishes or desires. But God says, "If, during the period of My incarnation, I had not sympathized with man's weakness, then all of humanity would, solely on account of My incarnation, have been frightened out of their wits and, as a result, fallen into Hades," which shows just how great the significance of God's incarnation is. He has come to conquer mankind in the flesh, instead of destroying all mankind from the spiritual realm. Thus, when the Word became flesh, nobody knew. If God had no care for man's frailty, if heaven and earth were turned upside down when He became flesh, then all people would have been annihilated. Because it is in people's nature to like the new and hate the old, and they often forget the bad times when things are going well, and none of them know how blessed they are, God repeatedly reminds them that they must treasure how hard-won today is; for the sake of tomorrow, they must treasure today even more, and must not, like an animal, climb upon high without recognizing the master, and not be ignorant of the blessings among which they live. Thus, people become well-behaved, no longer boastful or arrogant, and they come to know that it is not the case that man's nature is good, but that God's mercy and love have come upon man; they all fear chastisement, and so dare do nothing more.

God loathes all the descendants of the great red dragon, and He hates the great red dragon itself even more: This is the source of the wrath within God's heart. It seems that God wishes to cast all things belonging to the great red dragon into the lake of fire and brimstone to incinerate them. There are even times when it seems God would like to extend His hand to personally wipe the great red dragon out—only that could erase the abhorrence in His heart. Every single person in the house of the great red dragon is a beast without humanity, and this is the reason God strongly suppressed His anger to say the following: "Among all My people, and among all My sons, that is, among the ones that I have chosen out of the whole human race, you belong to the lowest group." God has begun a decisive battle with the great red dragon in its own country, and He will destroy it when His plan comes to fruition, and will no longer allow it to corrupt mankind or ravage their souls. Every day, God calls out to His slumbering people to save them, yet they are all in a dazed state, as though they have taken sleeping pills. If God ceases to rouse them even for a moment, they will return to their state of sleep, completely oblivious. It seems that all of His people are two-thirds paralyzed. They do not know their own needs or their own deficiencies, nor even what they should wear or what they should eat. This suffices to show that the great red dragon has put forth a great deal of effort to corrupt people. Its ugliness extends throughout every region of China, and it has perturbed people such that they are unwilling to stay any longer in this decadent, vulgar country. What God hates most is the great red dragon's substance, which is why He, in His wrath, gives people reminders every day, and they live every day under His wrathful eye. Even so, most people still do not know to seek God; instead, they sit there, watching, waiting to be hand fed. Even if they were starving to death, they would still not be willing to find their own food. The conscience of man was long ago corrupted by Satan and has changed in essence to one of cold-heartedness. It is no wonder that God said, “Had I not prompted you, you would still not have awakened, but would have remained as if frozen, and again, as if in hibernation.” It is as if people were hibernating animals, passing the winter without a need for food or drink; this is precisely the current condition of God’s people. For just this reason, God demands only that people come to know God incarnate Himself in the light; He does not demand that people change a great deal, nor that they have great growth in their life. That would be enough to defeat the dirty, filthy great red dragon, thereby manifesting God’s great power all the more.

When people read God’s words, they understand only their literal meaning, and are incapable of comprehending their spiritual significance. The mere words, “the roiling waves,” have baffled every hero and champion. When God’s wrath is displayed, are His words, actions, and disposition not the roiling waves? When God judges all mankind, is this not a revelation of His wrath? Is this not the time those roiling waves come into force? Because of their corruption, who among man does not live in the midst of such roiling waves? In other words, who does not live amidst God’s wrath? When God wishes to visit catastrophe upon mankind, is that not when people see the “tumbling welter of dark clouds”? What person does not flee from catastrophe? God’s wrath rains down like a heavy downpour and blows people about like a fierce wind. People are all purified through God’s words as if met with a swirling snowstorm. God’s words are hardest for mankind to fathom. Through His words, He created the world, and through His words, He leads and purifies all mankind. And in the end, God will restore the entire universe to purity through His words. It can be seen in everything He says that the existence of the Spirit of God is not hollow, and it is only in His words that people can catch a glimpse of how to survive. All people treasure His words, for they contain provision for life. The more people concentrate on God’s words, the more questions God poses to them—questions that confound them and leave them without a chance to answer. God’s successive questions alone are enough for people to ponder for quite a while, let alone the rest of His words. In God, all is truly full and abundant, and there is nothing lacking. However, people cannot enjoy much of it; they know only the surface of His words, like one who sees a chicken’s skin but cannot eat its meat. This means that people have a dearth in fortune, such that they cannot enjoy God. Each person has, among their notions, their own image of God, which is why no one knows what the vague God is, or what the image of Satan is. Therefore, when God said, “For what you believe in is merely Satan’s image and has nothing whatever to do with God Himself,” all were struck dumb: They had had faith for so many years, yet they did not know that what they believed in was Satan, not God Himself. They felt a sudden void inside, but they did not know what to say. They then began to grow confused again. Only by working in this manner can people better accept the new light and thereby deny the things of old. No matter how good those things may seem, they will not do. It is more beneficial for people to understand the practical God Himself; this enables them to rid their hearts of the status their notions hold there, and allow only God Himself to occupy them. Only in this way can the significance of the incarnation be achieved, which enables people to know the practical God Himself with their physical eyes.

God has told people about the situation of the spiritual world many times: “When Satan comes before Me, I do not recoil from its wild ferocity, nor am I frightened by its hideousness: I simply ignore it.” What people have taken from this is only a condition of reality; they do not know the truth of the spiritual world. Because God has become flesh, Satan has employed every sort of accusation, hoping thus to attack God. However, God does not retreat; He simply speaks and works among mankind, allowing people to know Him through His incarnate flesh. Satan is red-eyed with fury at this, and has exerted much effort to make God’s people negative, retreat, and even lose their way. However, due to the effect of God’s words, Satan has failed completely, which adds to its ferocity. Therefore, God reminds everyone, “In your lives, there may come a day when you will meet with such a situation: Would you willingly allow yourself to fall captive to Satan, or will you let Me obtain you?” Although people are not aware of what occurs in the spiritual world, as soon as they hear such words from God, they become cautious and afraid. This beats back Satan’s attacks, sufficing to show God’s glory. Despite having entered into a new method of work long ago, people are still unclear about life in the kingdom, and even if they do understand it, they lack clarity. Therefore, after issuing a warning to people, God introduced to them the essence of life in the kingdom: “Life in the kingdom is the life of the people and God Himself.” Because God Himself has been incarnated in the flesh, the life of the third heaven has been realized on earth. This is not merely God’s plan—He has made it come to pass. As time goes by, people come to know God Himself better, and thus are they more able to taste the life of heaven, for they genuinely feel that God is on earth, rather than only a vague God in heaven. Thus, life on earth is like that in heaven. The reality is that God incarnate tastes the bitterness of the human world, and the more He is able to do so, the more it proves that He is the practical God Himself. Therefore, the words, “In My dwelling place, which is the place where I am hidden—nevertheless, in My dwelling place, I have defeated all My enemies; in My dwelling place, I have gained real experience of living on earth; in My dwelling place, I am observing man’s every word and action, and watching over and conducting the whole of the human race” are sufficient proof of the fact that the God of today is practical. Actually living within the flesh, actually experiencing human life within the flesh, actually understanding all of humanity within the flesh, actually conquering mankind within the flesh, actually waging a decisive battle against the great red dragon within the flesh, and doing all of God’s work within the flesh—is this not the very existence of the practical God Himself? Yet very seldom are there people who see the message in these ordinary lines spoken by God; they merely skim through them, and do not feel the preciousness or rarity of God’s words.

God’s words transition especially well. The phrase, “as mankind lies comatose,” takes a description of God Himself and alters it into a description of the state of all mankind. Here, “blasts of cold radiance” does not represent the lightning of the East;

rather, it means God's words, meaning His new method of doing work. So, one can see in this all sorts of human dynamics: After entering into the new method, all people lose their sense of direction, and know not from where they have come nor where they are going. "Most people are struck by the laser-like beams" refers to those who are cast out in the new method; they are those who cannot withstand the trials or bear the refinement of suffering, and are therefore cast once more into the bottomless pit. God's words expose mankind to an extent that people seem afraid when they see God's words, and they dare not say anything, as if they had seen a machine gun aimed at their hearts. However, they also feel that there are good things in God's words. There is great conflict in their hearts, and they do not know what they should do. Because of their faith, however, they merely steel themselves and delve deeper into His words, for fear that God might abandon them. Just as God said, "Who among mankind does not exist in this state? Who does not exist within My light? Even if you are strong, or though you may be weak, how can you avoid the coming of My light?" If God uses someone, then even if they are weak, God will still illuminate and enlighten them in His chastisement; so, the more people read God's words, the more they understand Him, the more they revere Him, and the less they dare to be reckless. That people have come to where they are today is entirely due to God's great power. It is because of the authority of His words—that is, it is a result of the Spirit in His words—that people fear God. As God reveals the true face of mankind, the greater their awe for Him grows, and thus do they become more certain of the reality of His existence. This is a beacon on mankind's path to understanding God, a trail He has given them. Think about it carefully: Is this not so?

Is what is told above not the beacon ahead of mankind that lights his way?

Chapter 14

Humans have never fathomed anything from God's words. Instead, they merely "treasure" them superficially, without understanding their true meaning. Therefore, although most people are fond of His utterances, God points out that they do not actually cherish them. The reason for this is that, in God's view, even though His words are treasures, people have not tasted their true sweetness. As such, they can only "quench their thirst with thoughts of plums," thereby assuaging their greedy hearts. Not only is God's Spirit at work among all humans, but they also, of course, are granted enlightenment from God's word; it is simply that they are too careless to truly be able to appreciate its essence. In people's minds, right now is the age in which the kingdom is being fully realized, but in essence, this is not the case. Although what God prophesies is what He has accomplished, the actual kingdom has not yet fully arrived on the earth. Instead, as humanity changes, as the work progresses, and as lightning comes out of the East—that is, as God's word deepens—the kingdom will slowly come about on earth, gradually but completely descending upon this world. The process of the coming of the kingdom is also the process of the divine work on earth. Meanwhile, throughout the universe, God has begun a work that has not been done in all the ages throughout history: to reorganize the earth in its entirety. For example, tremendous changes are afoot throughout the universe, including changes in the State of Israel, the coup d'état in the United States of America, the changes in Egypt, the changes in the Soviet Union, and the overthrow of China. Once the entire universe has settled down and been restored to normal, God's work on earth will be completed; that is when the kingdom will come to earth. This is the true meaning of the words, "When all the nations of the world are disrupted, that is precisely when My kingdom will be established and shaped, as well as when I will transform and turn to face the entire universe." God does not hide anything from humankind; He has continuously told people of all His abundance—yet they cannot figure out what He means, and simply accept His word like fools. At this stage of work, humans have learned the unfathomableness of God and, moreover, can now appreciate the difficulty of the task of understanding Him; for this reason, they have felt that these days, believing in God is the most difficult thing to do, akin to teaching a pig to sing. They are completely helpless, just like mice stuck in a trap. Indeed, no matter how much power a person has or how masterful a person's skill, or whether a person harbors limitless capabilities, when it comes to God's word, such things mean nothing. It is as if humanity is but a pile of burnt paper ash in God's eyes—completely devoid of any value, let alone any use. This is a perfect illustration of the true meaning of the words, "I have become, from their point of view, more and more hidden and increasingly unfathomable." From this it is evident that God's work follows a natural progression, and is performed according to what human perceptual organs can take in. When humanity's nature is firm and unshaken, the words God utters completely conform to their notions, and these notions seem almost to be as like terms with God, without any difference in the least. This makes people somewhat aware of the "reality of God," but that is not His primary objective. God is allowing people to settle down before formally beginning His true work on earth. Therefore, in the course of this beginning that is so confusing for humans, they are realizing that their former ideas were incorrect, and that God and humanity are as different as heaven and earth, and not at all alike. Because God's words can no longer be evaluated on the basis of human notions, humans have immediately begun to look at God in a new light; as a result, they gaze at God in astonishment, as though the practical God were as unapproachable as an invisible and untouchable God, and as if the flesh of God incarnate is merely an exterior shell, devoid of His essence. Though He is an incarnation of the Spirit, He can convert into Spirit form and float away at any time; people have therefore developed a somewhat guarded mindset. At the mention of God, they dress Him up with their notions, claiming that He can ride on clouds and mist, walk on water, and suddenly appear and vanish among humans. Some others have even more descriptive explanations. Because of people's ignorance and lack of insight, God said, "When they believe they have resisted Me or violated My administrative decrees, I still turn a blind eye."

God reveals humanity's ugly countenance and their internal world with unflinching accuracy, never missing His mark in the slightest. It can even be said that He never makes any error whatsoever. This is proof that convinces people utterly. Due to the principle behind God's work, many of His words and deeds leave an impression that is impossible to erase, and people seem to therefore gain an even deeper understanding of Him, as if they have discovered things that are more precious in Him. "In their memories, I am either a God who shows mercy to people rather than chastising them, or am the God Himself who does not mean what He says. These are all imaginings born of human thought, and they do not accord with the facts." Although humankind has never attached any importance to the true face of God, they know "the lateral side of His disposition" like the backs of their hands; they are always picking holes in God's words and actions. This is because people are always so willing to pay attention to negative things, and ignore positive ones, merely looking down upon the deeds of God. The more God says He humbly hides Himself in His dwelling place, the higher the demands humanity makes of Him. They say, "If God incarnate is observing humanity's every deed and experiencing human life, why is it that the majority of the time God does not know of our actual situation? Does this mean that God is truly hidden?" Although God looks deep into the human heart, He still works according to the actual conditions of humanity, being neither vague nor supernatural. In order to completely rid humanity of their old disposition, God has spared no effort to speak from various perspectives, uncovering people's true nature and pronouncing judgment on their disobedience, one moment saying He will deal with everyone, and the next proclaiming that He will save a group of people; either placing requirements upon humans or warning them; and alternately dissecting their innards and providing treatment. Thus, under the guidance of God's words, it is as if humans had traveled to every corner of the earth and entered a bounteous garden in which each flower vies to be the most beautiful. Whatever God says mankind will enter into His word, just as though God were a magnet that drew anything containing iron toward it. Upon reading the words, "Humans pay Me no heed, so I do not take them seriously, either. They pay no attention to Me, so neither do I need to work any harder on them. Is this not the best of both worlds?" all of God's people seem to get knocked into the bottomless pit again, or be struck at their vital point once more, leaving them utterly shocked. Thus, again they enter into the method. They are especially confused with regard to the words, "If you are unable to keep to your duties as members of My people in the kingdom, then you will be detested and rejected by Me!" Most people feel so hurt that they are brought to tears, thinking, "I had a hard time climbing out of the bottomless pit, so I would have no hope at all if I were to fall into it again. I have gained nothing in the human world, and have undergone all manner of difficulties and tribulations in my life. In particular, since coming into the faith, I have experienced the abandonment of loved ones, persecution from my family, and slander from others in society, and I have not enjoyed any of the world's happiness. If I again fall into the bottomless pit, will my life not have been lived even more in vain?" (The more a person dwells on this, the more sorrowful they feel.) "All of my hopes have been entrusted into God's hands. If He abandons me, I might as well die right now.... Well, all was predestined by God, so now I can only seek to love God; all else is secondary. Why is this my fate?" The more people think like this, the closer they come to God's standard and the objective of His words. In this manner, the objective of His words is achieved. After humans see God's words, they all experience an internal ideological struggle. Their only choice is to submit to what fate dictates, and in this way God's objective is achieved. The harsher God's words are, the more complex the internal world of humans becomes as a result. This is just like touching a wound; the harder it is touched, the more it hurts, to the point that people hover between life and death and can even lose the confidence to survive. As such, only when humans suffer most and are in the depths of hopelessness can they give their true hearts over to God. Human nature is such that if even one shred of hope remains, they will not go to God for help, but will instead adopt self-sufficient methods to survive naturally. This is because the nature of humanity is self-righteous, and people tend to look down on everyone else. Therefore, God said, "Not a single human being has been able to also love Me whilst in a state of comfort; not a single person has reached out in times of peace and happiness, that I might partake of their joy." This is indeed disappointing; God created humankind, but when He comes to the human world, people seek to resist Him and drive Him away from their territory, as if He were just some orphan drifting through the world, or like a world man without a country. Nobody feels attached to God, nobody truly loves Him, and nobody has ever welcomed His coming. Instead, when seeing the coming of God, clouds cover joyful faces in shadow in the blink of an eye, as if a sudden storm were on the way or as though God might take away the happiness of their families, and as if God had never blessed humans but, instead, had only ever brought them misfortune. Therefore, in the minds of humans, God is not a boon, but rather One who always curses them. Because of this, people do not pay heed to Him or welcome Him; they are always cold toward Him, and this has always been the case. Because humans harbor these things in their hearts, God says that humanity is unreasonable and immoral, and that not even the feelings with which humans are supposedly equipped can be perceived in them. Humans do not show any consideration for God's feelings, but instead use so-called "righteousness" to deal with God. They have been like this for many years and, for this reason, God has said that their dispositions have not changed. This goes to show that they have no more substance than a handful of feathers. It could be said that humans are worthless wretches, for they do not treasure themselves. If they do not even love themselves, trampling on themselves instead, then does this not show their worthlessness? Humanity is like an immoral woman who plays games with herself and gives herself willingly to others to be violated. Even so, people still do not recognize just how lowly they are. They find pleasure in working for others or in talking with others, putting themselves under the control of others; is this not precisely the filthiness of humankind? Although I have not experienced a life among humanity, and have not truly experienced human life, I have gained a very clear understanding of every move, every action, every word, and every deed that humans make. I am even able to expose humans to their deepest shame, to the point that they no longer dare to reveal their own connivery or give way to their lust. Like snails that retreat into their shells, they no longer dare to expose their own ugly state. Because humans do not know themselves, their greatest flaw is a willingness to parade their charms before others, showing off their ugly countenances; this is a thing that God detests most. This is because the relations between people are abnormal, and there is a lack of normal interpersonal relationships between people, much less normal relationships between them and God. God has said so much and, in so doing, His main objective has been to occupy a place in people's hearts so that they can rid themselves of all the idols that have taken up residence there. Thereupon, God can wield power over all humanity, and achieve the purpose of His existence on earth.

Chapter 15

The greatest difference between God and man is that God's words always go straight to the heart of the matter, concealing nothing. Thus, this aspect of God's disposition can be seen in today's first sentence. It at once exposes man's true colors and openly reveals God's disposition. It is the source of several aspects of the ability of God's words to achieve results. However, people fail to grasp this; they always come merely to know themselves through God's words, without having "dissected" God. It is as if they are terrified of offending Him or that He will kill them for their "seriousness." In fact, when most people eat and drink of the word of God, they do so from a negative perspective, not a positive one. It may be said that people have now begun to "focus on humility and submission" under the guidance of His words. From this, it is evident that people have started to go to another extreme—from not paying any attention to His words toward paying undue attention to them. However, not a single person has entered in from a positive perspective, nor has anyone ever truly grasped God's goal in having humans pay attention to His words. It is known from what God says that He does not need to experience the life of the church personally to be able to understand, accurately and without error, the actual states of all the people in it. Because they have just attained entry into a new method, people have yet to rid themselves fully of their negative elements; the odor of corpses still wafts throughout the church. It is as if people have just taken medicine and are still in a daze, their consciousness not yet fully restored. It is as if they are still menaced by death, so that, still in the midst of terror, they cannot transcend themselves. “Humans are all creatures who lack self-knowledge”: The way this statement is said is based still on the building of the church. Despite the fact that people in the church all pay attention to God’s words, their natures remain deeply ingrained, inextricable. This is why God spoke the way He did in the previous stage to judge people, that they might accept being smitten by His words in the midst of their pride. Though people underwent five months of refinement in the bottomless pit, their actual state is still one of not knowing God. They are still dissolute; they have simply become somewhat more guarded against God. This step is the first proper step people take onto the path of knowing God’s words; thus, in connecting with the essence of God’s words, it is not difficult to see that the previous portion of work paved the way for today, and that only now is everything normalized. People’s fatal weakness is their tendency to separate God’s Spirit from His fleshly self in order to win personal freedom and avoid constant constraint. This is the reason God describes humans as little birds “flitting merrily about.” This is the actual state of all mankind. It is what makes all people easiest to topple, and it is the place where they are most liable to lose their way. It is evident in this that Satan’s work among mankind is nothing more than this work. The more of it Satan does in people, the stricter God’s requirements of them. He requires people to devote their attention to His words, while Satan works hard to break it. God, however, has always reminded people to pay more attention to His words; this is the climax of the war raging in the spiritual world. It can be said in this way: What God wants to do in man is exactly what Satan wants to destroy, and what Satan wants to destroy is expressed through man, completely unconcealed. There are clear examples of what God does in people: Their conditions are getting better and better. There are also clear representations of Satan’s destruction in mankind: They are becoming more and more depraved, and their conditions are sinking ever lower. Once their situations grow dire enough, they are liable to be captured by Satan. This is the actual condition of the church, as presented in God’s words, and it is also the actual situation of the spiritual world. It is a reflection of the spiritual world’s dynamics. If people do not have the confidence to cooperate with God, then they are in danger of being captured by Satan. This is a fact. If people are truly able to offer up their hearts fully for God to occupy, then that is just as God has said, “They, when before Me, seem to be in My embrace, tasting of its warmth.” This shows that God’s requirements of mankind are not high; He merely needs them to rise up and cooperate with Him. Is this not an easy and happy thing? Is this the one thing that has confounded every hero and great man? It is as if the generals had been plucked from a battlefield and made to knit instead—these “heroes” have been immobilized by hardship, and they do not know what to do.

Whichever aspect of God’s requirements of mankind is greatest, that is the aspect in which Satan’s attacks on humanity will be the fiercest, and thus, the states of all people are revealed accordingly. “Which of you standing before Me would be as pure as the driven snow and as unblemished as jade?” All people still wheedle God and conceal things from Him; they are still carrying out their own special schemes. They have not put their hearts entirely in God's hands to satisfy Him, yet they wish to gain His rewards by being enthusiastic. When people eat a delicious meal, they put God aside, leaving Him standing there, waiting to be "handled"; when people have beautiful clothing, they stand there in front of the mirror, enjoying their own beauty, and deep in their hearts, they do not satisfy God. When they have standing, when they have luxurious enjoyments, they sit there atop their status and begin to enjoy it, yet do not humble themselves as a result of God's elevation. Instead, they stand in their high places, speaking their high-sounding words, and pay no attention to God's presence, nor do they seek to know His preciousness. When people have an idol in their hearts, or when their hearts have been seized by someone else, it means they have already denied the presence of God, as if He were but an interloper in their hearts. They are terrified that God will steal away others' love for them, and that they will then feel lonely. God's original intention is that nothing on earth should make people ignore Him, and though there may be love between people, yet God cannot be driven away from this "love." All earthly things are empty—even feelings between people that cannot be seen or touched. Without the existence of God, all creatures would return to nothing. On earth, all people have things that they love, but no one has ever taken God's words as that thing they love. This determines the degree to which people understand His words. Though His words are harsh, no one is wounded by them, for people do not genuinely pay attention to them; rather, they observe them as they might a flower. They do not treat His words like fruit that they may taste of themselves, so they know not the essence of God's words. "If human beings were genuinely able to see the sharpness of My sword, they would go scurrying like rats into their holes." One in the state of a normal person, after reading God's words, would be stunned, full of shame, and unable to face others. However, nowadays, people are exactly the opposite—they use God's words as a weapon to strike blows against others. They truly know no shame!

With God's utterances, we have been brought into this state of being: "Within the kingdom, not only do utterances issue forth from My mouth, but My feet tread ceremoniously everywhere across all lands." In the war between God and Satan, God is winning every step of the way. He is expanding His work on a large scale throughout the entire universe, and it could be said that everywhere are His footprints and the signs of His victory. Satan hopes, in its schemes, to destroy God's management by breaking countries apart, but God has taken advantage of this sundering to reorganize the entire universe—though not to wipe it out. God does something new every day, but people have not noticed. They pay no attention to the dynamics of the spiritual world, so they are unable to see God's new work. "Within the cosmos, everything shines like new in the radiance of My glory, presenting a heartwarming aspect that ravishes the senses and lifts people's spirits, as if it now exists in a heaven beyond the heavens, as conceived in the human imagination, unmolested by Satan and free from the assaults of external enemies.” This foretells the joyful scene of the kingdom of Christ on earth, and it also introduces the situation of the third heaven to mankind: Only those holy things that belong to God exist there, without any of the assaults of Satan’s forces. But what is most important is allowing people to see the circumstances of the work on earth of God Himself: Heaven is a new heaven, and following it, the earth is likewise renewed. Because this is life under God’s own guidance, people are all immeasurably happy. In their awareness, Satan is mankind’s “prisoner,” and they are not at all timid or fearful as a result of its existence. Because of direct instruction and guidance from the divine, Satan’s schemes have all come to naught, and this even suffices to prove Satan no longer exists, having been obliterated by God’s work. That is why it is said “exists in a heaven beyond the heavens.” When God said, “No disturbance has ever arisen, nor has the cosmos ever been divided,” He was referring to the condition of the spiritual world. This is proof that God proclaims victory to Satan, and it is the sign of God’s final victory. No man can change God’s mind, nor can anyone know it. Although people have read God’s words and examined them with seriousness, they remain unable to express their essence. For example, God said, “I execute flying leaps above the stars, and when the sun shoots forth its rays, I blot out their warmth, sending giant flurries of snowflakes as big as goose feathers drifting down from My hands. When I change My mind, though, all that snow melts into a river, and in an instant, spring has sprung everywhere beneath the skies and emerald green has transformed the entire landscape upon the earth.” Though people may be able to imagine these words in their minds, God’s intention is not so simple. When everyone under heaven is in a daze, God utters the voice of salvation, thus awakening people’s hearts. However, because all sorts of disasters befall them, they feel the bleakness of the world, so they all seek death and exist in frigid, icy caves. They are frozen by the chill of huge snowstorms, to the point that they cannot survive for the lack of warmth on the earth. It is because of people’s corruption that they are killing each other more and more cruelly. And in the church, the majority of people will be swallowed up in one gulp by the great red dragon. After all trials have passed, Satan’s disruptions will be removed. The entire world, in the midst of transformation, will thus be permeated by spring, warmth will cover the earth, and the world will be full of energy. These are all the steps of the entire management plan. The “night” of which God spoke refers to when Satan’s madness reaches its peak, which will happen during the night. Is that not what is happening right now? Although people all survive under the guidance of God’s light, they are being put through the misery of the night’s darkness. If they cannot escape from Satan’s bonds, they will live eternally amidst a dark night. Look at the countries on earth: Because of the steps of God’s work, the countries on earth are “running around,” and each is “seeking its own appropriate destination.” Because God’s day has not yet come, all on earth remains in a state of muddy turbulence. When He openly appears to the entire universe, His glory will fill Mount Zion, and all things will be orderly and neat, as they will be arranged by His hands. God’s words not only speak to today, but also foretell tomorrow. Today is the foundation of tomorrow, so, as it stands today, no one can fully understand God's utterances. Only after His words have been fully fulfilled will humans be able to understand them in their entirety.

God's Spirit fills up all the space in the universe, yet He also works within all people. As such, in people's hearts, it is as if God's figure is everywhere and every place contains the work of His Spirit. Indeed, the purpose of God's appearance in the flesh is to conquer these exemplifiers of Satan and, in the end, to obtain them. While working in the flesh, however, the Spirit is also cooperating with the flesh to transform these people. It may be said that God's deeds extend throughout the entire world and that His Spirit fills the whole universe, but because of the steps of His work, those who do evil have not been punished, while those who do good have not been rewarded. Thus, His deeds have not been appreciated by all of earth's people. He is both above and within all things; moreover, He is among all people. This suffices to show that God actually exists. Because He has not openly appeared to all humans, they have developed illusions such as, "As far as humanity is concerned, I seem to actually exist, yet I also seem to not exist." Of all those who now believe in God, none is utterly, one-hundred-percent certain that God truly exists; they are all three parts doubt and two parts belief. This is mankind as they now stand. People these days are all in the following situation: They believe there is a God, but they have not seen Him; or, they do not believe there is a God, but have many difficulties that mankind cannot resolve. It seems there is always something that entangles them from which they cannot escape. Even though they believe in God, it seems that they always feel a bit of vagueness. However, if they do not believe, they are afraid of losing out in case He does exist. This is their ambivalence.

"For the sake of My name, for the sake of My Spirit, and for the sake of My entire management plan, who can make an offering of all their strength?" God also said, "Today, when the kingdom is in the human world, is the time in which I have come in person among humanity. Is there anyone who could venture forth into the battlefield on My behalf without any trepidation?" The goal of God's words is this: If it were not for God in the flesh doing His divine work directly, or if He were not incarnate but instead worked through ministers, then God would never be able to conquer the great red dragon, nor would He be able to reign as King among humans. Mankind would be unable to know God Himself in reality, so this would still be Satan's reign. Thus, this stage of work must be done personally by God, through flesh incarnate. If the flesh were changed, then this stage of the plan could never be completed, because the significance and the substance of different flesh would not be the same. People can only grasp the literal meaning of these words, because God grasps the root. God said, "Nevertheless, when all is said and done, there is no one who understands whether this is the working of the Spirit or a function of the flesh. It would take people an entire lifetime just to experience this one thing in detail." People have been corrupted by Satan for so many years, and they long ago lost their consciousness of spiritual matters. For this reason, just one sentence of God's words is like a feast for people's eyes. Because of the distance between the Spirit and spirits, all those who believe in God feel a sense of longing for Him, and all of them are willing to become closer with Him and to pour out their hearts. However, they do not dare to come into contact with Him, and instead just remain in awe. This is the power of attraction possessed by the Spirit. Because God is a God for people to love, and in Him there are infinite elements for them to love, everyone loves Him and everyone wishes to confide in Him. In truth, everyone harbors love for God in their heart—it is just that Satan's disruptions have prevented numb, dull-witted, pitiful people from knowing God. This is why God spoke of the true feelings humans have for Him: "Humans have never despised Me in their hearts' innermost reaches; rather, they cling to Me in the depths of their spirits. ... My reality renders humans at a loss, dumbfounded and perplexed, and yet they are willing to accept it." This is the actual condition deep in the hearts of those who believe in God. When people truly know God, their attitude toward Him naturally changes, and they can utter praise from the depths of their hearts due to the function of their spirits. God is there in the depths of all people's spirits, but because of Satan's corruption, people have confused God with Satan. God's work today begins with this very problem, and in the spiritual world, it has been the focus of the battle from start to finish.

Chapter 16

From a human perspective, God is so great, so abundant, so wondrous, so unfathomable; in people's eyes, God's words rise upon high, and appear as a great masterpiece of the world. But because people have too many failings and their minds are too simple, and, furthermore, because their abilities of acceptance are too meager, regardless of how clearly God speaks His words, they remain seated and motionless, as if suffering from mental illness. When they are hungry, they do not understand that they must eat; when they are thirsty, they do not understand that they must drink; they just keep on shouting and screaming, as if they are experiencing indescribable hardship in the depths of their spirits, yet they are unable to talk about it. When God created mankind, His intention was for man to live in normal humanity and accept God's words as befits his instincts. But because, at the very beginning, man succumbed to the temptation of Satan, today he remains incapable of extricating himself, and is yet incapable of recognizing the deceitful schemes carried out by Satan over thousands of years. Additionally, man lacks the faculties to fully know God's words—all of this has led to the present situation. As things stand today, people still live in danger of Satan's temptation, and so remain incapable of appreciating God's words in a right way. In the dispositions of normal people there is no crookedness or deceitfulness, people have a normal relationship with each other, they do not stand alone, and their lives are neither mediocre nor decadent. So, too, is God exalted among all; His words permeate among man, people live in peace with one another and under the care and protection of God, the earth is filled with harmony, without the interference of Satan, and the glory of God holds the utmost importance among man. Such people are like angels: pure, vibrant, never complaining about God, and devoting all their efforts solely to God's glory on earth. Now is the time of the black night—all are groping about and searching, the pitch black night makes their hair stand on end, and they cannot help but tremble; listening closely, the howling northwesterly wind blowing in gust after gust seems to be accompanied by the mournful sobs of man. People grieve and weep for their destiny. Why is it that they read God's words but are incapable of understanding them? It is as if their lives are on the verge of hopelessness, as if death is about to befall them, as if their last day is before their eyes. Such miserable circumstances are the very moment when the fragile angels call out to God, telling of their own hardship in one mournful cry after another. It is for this reason that the angels who work among the sons and the people of God will never again descend upon man; this is to prevent them being caught in the manipulation of Satan whilst in the flesh, unable to extricate themselves, and so they work only in the spiritual world that is invisible to man. Thus, when God says, "When I ascend to the throne in man's heart, that will be the moment when My sons and My people rule over the earth," He is referring to the time when the angels on earth will enjoy the blessing of serving God in heaven. Because man is the expression of the spirits of angels, God says that for man, being on earth is like being in heaven; for man to serve God on earth is like the angels serving God in heaven directly—and thus, during his days on earth, man enjoys the blessings of the third heaven. This is what is actually being said in these words.

There is so much meaning hidden in God's words. "When the day comes, people will know Me in the depths of their hearts, and will remember Me in their thoughts." These words are directed at man's spirit. Because of the frailty of the angels, they always depend on God in all things, and have always been attached to God and adored God. But because of Satan's disturbance, they cannot help themselves and cannot control themselves; they wish to love God but are incapable of loving Him with all their hearts, and so they suffer pain. Only when God's work reaches a certain point can these poor angels' desire to truly love God come true, which is why God spoke those words. The nature of the angels is to love, cherish, and obey God, yet they have been incapable of achieving this on earth, and have had no choice but to exercise patience until the present time. You might look upon the world of today: There is a God in the hearts of all people, yet people are incapable of distinguishing whether the God in their hearts is the true God or a false god, and although they love this God of theirs, they are incapable of truly loving God, by which is meant they have no control of themselves. The ugly face of man revealed by God is the true face of Satan in the spiritual realm. Man was originally innocent and without sin, and thus all of the corrupt, ugly manners of man are Satan's actions in the spiritual realm, and are a faithful record of the developments of the spiritual realm. "Today, people have qualifications, and believe they can strut about in front of Me, and laugh and joke with Me without the slightest inhibition, and address Me as an equal. Still man does not know Me, still he believes that we are similar in nature, that we are both of flesh and blood, and both dwell in the human world.” This is what Satan has done in man’s heart. Satan uses the notions and naked eyes of man to oppose God, yet God tells man of these happenings without equivocation, in order that man might avoid catastrophe here. The mortal weakness of all people is that they only see “a body of flesh and blood, and do not perceive the Spirit of God.” This is the basis of one aspect of Satan’s enticement of man. All people believe that only the Spirit in this flesh can be called God. No one believes that today, the Spirit has become flesh and actually appeared before their eyes; people see God as two parts—“the clothing and the flesh”—and none look upon God as the incarnation of the Spirit, none see that the essence of the flesh is the disposition of God. In people’s imagination, God is especially normal, but do they not know that hidden in this normality is one aspect of the profound significance of God?

When God began to cover up the entire world, it became pitch black, and as people slept, God took this opportunity to descend among man, and officially commenced issuing the Spirit to all corners of the earth, embarking upon the work of saving mankind. It can be said that when God began to assume the image of the flesh, God personally worked on earth. Then the work of the Spirit began, and there officially commenced all work on earth. For two thousand years, the Spirit of God has always worked throughout the universe. People neither know nor sense this, but during the last days, at the time when this age is soon to conclude, God has descended to earth to work in person. This is the blessing of those who were born during the last days, who are able to personally behold the image of God who lives in the flesh. “When the entire face of the deep was murky, among man I began to taste the bitterness of the world. My Spirit travels throughout the world and looks upon the hearts of all people, yet so, too, do I conquer mankind in My incarnate flesh.” Such is the harmonious cooperation between God in heaven and God on earth. Ultimately, in their thoughts people will believe that the God on earth is the God in heaven, that the heavens and the earth and everything in them were created by the God on earth, that man is controlled by the God on earth, that the God on earth does the work in heaven on earth, and that the God in heaven has appeared in the flesh. This is the ultimate objective of God’s work on earth, and so, this stage is the highest standard of work in the period of the flesh; it is carried out in divinity, and causes all people to become sincerely convinced. The more people search for God in their notions, the more they feel that the God on earth is not real. Thus, God says that people search for God among empty words and doctrines. The more people know God in their notions, the more adept they become at speaking these words and doctrines and the more admirable they become; the more people speak words and doctrines, the further they stray from God, the more incapable they become of knowing the substance of man, the more they disobey God, and the further they depart from God’s requirements. God’s requirements of man are not as supernatural as people imagine, yet never has anyone truly understood God's will, and thus God says, "People seek only in the boundless sky, or upon the rolling sea, or upon the placid lake, or among empty letters and doctrines." The more requirements God makes of man, the more people feel that God is unreachable, and the more they believe that God is great. Thus, in their consciousness, all of the words spoken from God's mouth are unattainable by man, leaving God no choice but to personally act; man, meanwhile, has not the slightest inclination to cooperate with God, and merely persists in bowing his head and confessing his sins, trying to be humble and obedient. As such, without realizing it, people enter into a new religion, into religious ceremony that is more extreme even than in the religious churches. This requires that people return to normal conditions through transforming their negative state into one that is positive; if not, man shall become ever more deeply ensnared.

Why does God focus on describing mountains and waters in so many of His utterances? Is there symbolic meaning in these words? God not only allows man to behold His deeds in His flesh, but also allows man to understand His powers in the firmament. In this way, at the same time as believing without doubt that this is God in the flesh, people also come to know the deeds of the practical God, and thus the God on earth is sent unto heaven, and the God in heaven is brought down to earth, only after which people become capable of more completely beholding all that God is and of gaining a greater knowledge of the omnipotence of God. The more that God is able to conquer mankind in the flesh and transcend the flesh to travel both above and throughout the entire universe, the more people are able to behold God's deeds upon the basis of beholding the practical God, and thus to know the verity of God's work throughout the entire universe—that it is not fake but real—and so they come to know that the practical God of today is the embodiment of the Spirit, and is not of the same kind of fleshly body as man. Thus, God says, "But when I unleash My wrath, the mountains are immediately torn asunder, the ground immediately begins to convulse, water immediately dries up, and man is immediately beset by disaster." When people read God's words, they associate them with the flesh of God, and thus, the work and words in the spiritual realm directly point to God in the flesh, which leads to a more effective result. When God speaks, it is often from heaven to earth, and then once more from earth to heaven, leaving all people incapable of grasping the motivations and origins of God's words. "When I am among the heavens, never have the stars been thrown into panic by My presence. Instead, they put their hearts into their work for Me." Such is the state of heaven. God methodically arranges everything in the third heaven, with all of the servants in service to God doing their own work for God. They have never done anything in disobedience to God, so they are not thrown into the panic spoken of by God, but instead put their hearts into their work; never is there any disarray, and thus all angels live in God's light. Meanwhile, because of their disobedience, and because they do not know God, the people on earth all live in darkness, and the more they oppose God, the more they live in darkness. When God says, “The brighter the heavens, the darker the world beneath,” He is referring to how the day of God is drawing ever closer to all mankind. Thus, God’s 6,000-year busyness in the third heaven will soon be concluded. All things on earth have entered the final chapter, and shall soon each be cut away from God’s hand. The further people go into the time of the last days, the more they are able to taste the corruption in the world of man; the further they go into the time of the last days, the more indulgent they are of their own flesh. There are even many who wish to reverse the miserable state of the world, yet their hope is lost amidst their sighs, because of God’s deeds. Thus, when people sense the warmth of spring, God covers their eyes, and so they float upon the rolling waves, not one of them capable of reaching the far-off lifeboat. Because people are inherently weak, God says there are none who can turn things around. When people lose hope, God begins to speak to the entire universe. He begins to save all mankind, and it is only after this that people are able to enjoy the new life that comes once things have been turned around. The people of today are at the stage of self-deception. Because the road before them is so desolate and indistinct, and because their future is “limitless” and “without borders,” the people of this age have no inclination to fight, and can only pass their days like a Hanhao bird.<sup>a</sup> Never has there been anyone who has seriously pursued life and the knowledge of man’s existence; instead, they await the day when the Savior in heaven suddenly descends to reverse the miserable state of the world, only after which will they attempt to live life in earnest. Such is the true state of all mankind and the mentality of all people.

Today, God foretells, in light of man’s current mentality, man’s future new life. This is the glimmer of light appearing, of which God speaks. What God foretells is that which shall ultimately be achieved by God, and is the fruits of God’s victory over Satan. “I move above all men and am watching everywhere. Nothing ever looks old, and no person is as he used to be. I rest upon the throne, I recline above the whole universe....” This is the outcome of God’s present work. All of God’s chosen people return to their original form, because of which the angels, who have suffered for so many years, are released, just as God says “their faces are like that of the holy one within man’s heart.” Because the angels work on earth and serve God on earth, and because God’s glory spreads across the world, heaven is brought to earth, and the earth is lifted up to heaven. Therefore, man is the link that connects heaven and earth; heaven and earth are no longer apart, no longer separated, but connected as one. Throughout the world, only God and man exist. There is no dust or dirt, and all things are renewed, like a little lamb lying in a green grassland beneath the sky, enjoying all of God’s grace. And it is because of the arrival of greenness that the breath of life shines forth, for God comes to the world a. The story of the Hanhao bird is very similar to Aesop’s fable of the ant and the grasshopper. The Hanhao bird prefers to sleep instead of building a nest while the weather is warm, despite repeated warnings from his neighbor, a magpie. When winter arrives, the bird freezes to death.

to live alongside man for all eternity, just as it was said from God's mouth that "I can peacefully reside within Zion once again." This is the symbol of Satan's defeat, it is the day of God's rest, and this day shall be extolled and proclaimed by all people, and commemorated by all people. When God is at rest upon the throne, that is also the time when God concludes His work on earth, and it is the very moment that all of God's mysteries are shown to man; God and man will be forever in harmony, never apart—such are the beautiful scenes of the kingdom!

In mysteries are hidden mysteries; God's words are truly profound and unfathomable!

Chapter 17

In truth, all the utterances that issue from God's mouth are unknown to humans; they are all language that people have not heard. As such, it can be said that God's words themselves are a mystery. Most people mistakenly believe that mysteries only include things at which people cannot arrive conceptually, matters of heaven that God now allows people to know, or the truth of what God does in the spiritual world. From this, it is evident that people do not treat all of God's words equally, nor do they treasure them; rather, they focus on what they themselves believe to be "mysteries." This proves that people do not know what God's words are or what mysteries are; they merely read His words within the scope of their own notions. The reality is that there is not a single person who truly loves God's words, and this is precisely the root of His saying that "people are experts at deceiving Me." It is not that God says people are devoid of any merit or are complete messes; this describes the actual situation of mankind. People themselves are not very clear on how much space God actually occupies in their hearts; only God Himself knows this fully. Therefore, at the moment, people are like suckling babies. As to why they drink milk and why they should survive, they are completely unaware. Only the mother understands a baby's needs; she will not let it starve to death, nor will she allow the baby to eat itself to death. God knows people's needs best, so at times His love is embodied in His words, at times His judgment is revealed in them, at times they wound people to the depths of their hearts, and at times they are sincere and earnest. This allows people to feel God's kindness and accessibility, and that He is not some imagined, imposing figure that cannot be touched. Nor is He the Son of Heaven in people's minds, who cannot be looked directly in the face, and less still is He an executioner who slaughters the innocent, as people imagine. God's entire disposition is revealed in His work; the disposition of God in the flesh today is still embodied through His work. Thus, His ministry is one of words, not what He does or how He appears outwardly. Ultimately, everyone will gain edification from God's words and be made complete because of them. In their experience, guided by God's words, people will obtain a path to practice, and through the words of God's mouth they will come to know

His entire disposition. Because of His words, all of God's work will be fulfilled, people will come alive, and all enemies will be defeated. This is the primary work, which no one can ignore. Let us look at His words: "My utterances ring out like thunder, casting light in all directions and on the whole earth, and in the midst of thunder and lightning, humanity is struck down. No man has ever stayed firm in the midst of thunder and lightning; most men are terrified out of their wits at the coming of My light and know not what to do." As soon as God opens His mouth, words come out. He accomplishes everything through words, all things are transformed by them, and everyone is renewed through them. What does "thunder and lightning" refer to? And what does "light" refer to? Not a single thing can escape God's words. He uses them to lay bare people's minds and depict their ugliness; He uses words to deal with their old natures and make all His people complete. Is this not precisely the importance of God's words? In the entire universe, without the support and fortification of God's words, all mankind would long ago have been destroyed to the point of nonexistence. This is the principle of what God does, and the method in which He works during His six-thousand-year management plan. This shows the importance of God's words. They pierce straight into the depths of people's souls. As soon as people see His words, they feel astounded and terror-stricken, and flee in haste. They want to escape the reality of His words, which is the reason these "refugees" can be seen everywhere. As soon as God's words are issued, people take to their heels. This is one aspect of the image of mankind's ugliness that God depicts. Right now, all people are gradually awakening from their stupor; it is as if they all had previously developed cases of dementia—and, now that they see God's words, they seem to be suffering the residual effects of that disease, and are unable to regain their former states. This is how all people actually are, and it is also a true portrayal of these words: "Many people, moved by this faint luminescence, are instantaneously roused from their illusions. Yet no one has ever realized that the day has come when My light descends upon the earth." This is why God said, "The majority of men are dumbstruck by the sudden advent of the light." Putting it this way is perfectly appropriate. God's description of mankind has no gap, even to admit the tip of a needle, and He has truly phrased it accurately and without error, which is why all people are utterly convinced. Moreover, without knowing it, their love for God has started to build up from deep within their hearts. Only thus does God's position there become ever more genuine, and this is also one way in which God works.

"The majority of men are merely bewildered; they are wounded in the eyes and cast down into the mud by the light." Because such people go against the will of God (that is, they resist God), when His words come, they suffer chastisement due to their rebelliousness; this is why it is said that they are wounded in the eyes by the light. Such people have already been given over to Satan; so, when entering the new work, they possess neither enlightenment nor illumination. All who do not have the work of the Holy Spirit have been occupied by Satan, and there is no place for God deep in their hearts.

Thus, it is said these people are “cast down into the mud.” All those in this condition are in a state of disarray. They cannot enter onto the right track, nor can they recover normality; all their thoughts are contrary. Everyone on earth has been corrupted to the extreme by Satan. People have no vitality and reek with the odor of corpses. All earth’s people survive amidst a plague of germs, which no one can escape. They are not willing to survive on earth, but they always feel that something greater will happen for people to see with their own eyes; as such, people all force themselves to continue living. They have had no strength in their hearts for a very long time; they just use their invisible hopes as a spiritual pillar, and thus they prop up their heads in a pretense of being men and muddle through their days on earth. It is as if all people were the sons of the devil incarnate. This is why God said, “The disorder covers the earth, an unbearably sorry sight that, examined closely, assails one with an overwhelming melancholy.” Because this situation has arisen, God began “strewing the seeds of My Spirit” throughout the entire universe, and He began to carry out His work of salvation upon the entire earth. It is because of the furthering of this work that God began to rain down all manner of disasters, thus saving hard-hearted humans. In the phases of God’s work, salvation still takes the form of various disasters, and none who is doomed can escape them. Only in the end will it be possible to achieve a situation on earth that is “as serene as the third heaven: Here, living things, great and small, coexist in harmony, never once engaging in ‘conflicts of mouth and tongue.’” One aspect of God’s work is to conquer all mankind and gain the chosen people through His words; another is to conquer all sons of rebellion by way of various disasters. This is one part of the large-scale work of God. Only in this way can the kingdom on earth that God wants be fully achieved, and this is the part of His work that is pure gold.

God constantly requires that people grasp the dynamics of heaven. Can they truly achieve this? The reality is that, based on people’s current, actual state of having been corrupted by Satan for more than 5,900 years, they cannot compare to Peter; as such, they simply cannot achieve this. This is one of the methods of God’s work. He would not have people wait passively; He would have them actively seek instead. Only thus will God have the opportunity to work in people. It would be well to offer you a bit more explanation; otherwise, people will merely have a superficial understanding. After God created mankind and granted them spirits, He enjoined them that if they did not call out to Him, then they would not be able to connect with His Spirit and, thus, the “satellite television” from heaven would be impossible to receive on earth. When God is no longer in people’s spirits, there is an empty seat left for other things, and Satan thus seizes the opportunity to get in. When people contact God with their hearts, Satan immediately panics and rushes to escape. Through mankind’s cries, God gives them what they need, but He does not at first “reside” within them. He simply gives them constant aid because of their cries, and from that internal strength people gain hardiness, so that Satan dares not come in to “play” at its will. So, if people continuously connect with God’s Spirit, Satan does not dare to come and cause disruptions. Without Satan's disruptions, all people's lives are normal, and God then has the opportunity to work unhindered within them. As such, what God wants to do can be achieved through humans. From this it may be known why God has always required people to increase their faith, and has also said, "I make suitable demands according to the stature of man on earth. I have never put anyone in difficulties, nor have I ever asked anyone to 'squeeze out his blood' for My pleasure." Most people are baffled by God's requirements. They wonder why, given that people do not possess that faculty and have been irretrievably corrupted by Satan, God continues to make requirements of them. Is this not God putting people in a difficult position? Seeing their solemn faces, and then seeing their awkward looks, you cannot help but laugh. People's various ugly appearances are the most laughable: At times, they are like children who love to play, while at times they are like a little girl playing "mom." Sometimes they are like a dog eating a mouse. One does not know whether to laugh or cry at all these ugly states of theirs, and often, the less people can grasp God's will, the more liable they are to get into trouble. So, the following words of God—"Am I the God that merely imposes silence on creation?"—suffice to show just how foolish people are, and they also show that no man can understand God's will. Even if He voices what His will is, they are unable to be considerate of it. They only do the work of God according to human will. As such, how can they grasp His will? "I go walking upon the earth, dispersing My fragrance everywhere, and, in every place, I leave behind My form. Each place reverberates with the sound of My voice. People everywhere linger on the beautiful scenes of yesterday, for all humanity is remembering the past ..." This will be the situation when the kingdom is formed. In fact, in several places, God has already prophesied the beauty of the realization of the kingdom, and all these combined form a complete picture of the kingdom. However, people pay no attention to it; they simply watch it as though it were a cartoon.

Because of the millennia of Satan's corruption, people have always lived in darkness, so they are not troubled by it, nor do they long for the light. This has led to the following, therefore, when the light arrives today, "they are all averse to My arrival, and they banish the light's arrival, as if I were man's enemy in heaven. Man greets Me with a defensive light in his eyes." Although most people try to love God with sincerity, He is still not satisfied, and He still condemns mankind. This is baffling for people. Because they live in darkness, they still serve God as they do in the absence of light. That is, all people serve God using their own notions, and when He comes, such is their condition, and they are unable to serve Him by accepting new light; rather, they serve Him with all the experience they have had themselves. God does not gain enjoyment from mankind's "devotion," so the light cannot be praised by humans in the darkness. This is why God spoke the words above; this is absolutely not contrary to reality, and it is not God's mistreating mankind, nor is it His wronging them. Ever since the creation of the world, not a single person has truly tasted of God's warmth; people have all been defensive toward God, fearing deeply that He will strike them down and annihilate them. Thus, over these 6,000 years, God has always exchanged warmth for people's sincerity, and has continued to guide them patiently at every turn. This is because people are so weak, and they are unable to know God's will fully or love Him wholeheartedly, for they cannot help but be subject to Satan's manipulation. Nevertheless, God remains tolerant, and one day, after being so patient—that is, when He renews the world—He will no longer look after people like a mother. Instead, He will give humans retributions that suit them. For this reason, this will then happen: "Corpses drift about on the ocean's surface," while "in the places empty of water, other men still enjoy, amid laughter and song, the promises that I have vouchsafed unto them." This is a comparison between the destinations of those who are punished and those who are rewarded. "The ocean's surface" refers to the bottomless pit of mankind's chastisement, of which God has spoken. This is Satan's destination, and it is the "resting place" that God has prepared for all who resist Him. God has always wanted mankind's genuine love, yet people do not know this and are insensible to it, and still do their own work. Because of this, in all of His words, God always asks for things from people and points out their shortcomings, and points out the path of practice for them, that they may practice according to these words. He has shown His own attitude to people: "Yet I have never casually taken up a single human life to play with as if it were a toy. I observe the pains man has taken and understand the price he has paid. As he stands before Me, I do not wish to catch man off guard in order to chastise him, nor do I wish to bestow on him undesirable things. Instead, all this time, I have only provided for man and given unto him." When people read these words from God, they immediately feel His warmth, and think: Indeed, in the past I have paid a price for God, but I have also treated Him perfunctorily, and I have complained to Him at times. God has always guided me with His words, and He pays so much attention to my life, yet at times I play with it as if it were a toy. I really should not do this. God loves me so much, so why can I not strive hard enough? When such thoughts occur to them, people really want to slap their own faces, and some people's noses even twitch and they cry out loud. God understands what they think and speaks accordingly, and these few words—which are neither hard nor soft—inspire people's love for Him. Finally, God prophesied the change in His work when the kingdom is formed on earth: When God is on the earth, people will be able to be free from disasters and calamities, and will be able to bask in grace; however, when He begins the judgment of the great day, it will be when He appears among all people, and all His work on earth will be complete. At that time, because the day will have come, it will be just as it was written in the Bible: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still." The unrighteous will come to chastisement, and the holy will come before the throne. Not a single person will be able to gain God's indulgence; not even the sons and the people of the kingdom. This is all God's righteousness, and it is all a revelation of His disposition. He will not show solicitude for mankind's weaknesses a second time.

Chapter 18

All of God's words contain part of His disposition. God's disposition cannot be fully expressed in words, which suffices to show just how much richness there is in Him. What people can see and touch is, after all, limited, as is people's ability. Although God's words are clear, people are unable to understand them fully. Take these words for example: "In a flash of lightning, every animal is revealed in its true form. So too, illuminated by My light, man has regained the sanctity he once possessed. Oh, corrupt world of old! At last, it has toppled over into the filthy water and, sinking below the surface, has dissolved into mud!" All of God's words contain His being, and though all people are aware of these words, none has ever known their meaning. In the eyes of God, all those who resist Him are His enemies, that is, those belonging to evil spirits are animals. From this, one can observe the true state of the church. All men are illuminated by God's words, and in this light, they examine themselves without being subject to the lecturing or chastening or direct dismissal of others, without being subject to other human ways of doing things, and without others pointing things out. From the "microscopic perspective," they see very clearly how much sickness there really is inside of them. In God's words, every kind of spirit is classified and revealed in its original form; those with the spirits of angels grow more illuminated and enlightened, hence God's words, "having regained the sanctity they once possessed." These words are based on the final result achieved by God. For the moment, of course, this result cannot yet be fully achieved—it is just a foretaste, through which God's will can be seen. These words suffice to show that a great number of people will crumble within God's words and will be defeated in the gradual process of all people's sanctification. Here, "having dissolved into mud" does not contradict God's destroying the world with fire, and "lightning" refers to God's wrath. When God lets loose His great wrath, the whole world will experience all sorts of disasters as a result, like a volcano exploding. Standing on high in the sky, it can be seen that on the earth, every manner of calamity approaches all of mankind, closer by the day. Looking down from on high, the earth presents a variety of scenes like those that precede an earthquake. Liquid fire rushes unchecked, lava flows freely, mountains shift, and a cold light glitters over all. The entire world has sunk into fire. This is the scene of God unleashing His wrath, and it is the time of His judgment. All those who are of flesh and blood will be unable to escape. Thus, wars between countries and conflicts between people will not be needed to destroy the entire world; instead, the world will "consciously enjoy itself" within the cradle of God's chastisement. No one will be able to escape; each and every person must pass through this ordeal, one by one. After that, the entire universe will once again sparkle with holy radiance and all of mankind will once again begin a new life. And God will be at rest above the universe and will bless all of mankind each day. Heaven will not be unbearably desolate, but will recover the vitality it has not had since the creation of the world, and the coming of the "sixth day" will be when God begins a new life. God and mankind will both enter into rest and the universe will no longer be turbid or filthy, but will be renewed. This is why God said: "Earth is no longer deathly still and silent, heaven no longer desolate and sad." In the kingdom of heaven, there has never been unrighteousness or human emotions, or any of mankind's corrupt disposition, because Satan's disturbance is not present there. "People" are all able to understand God's words, and life in heaven is a life full of joy. All those in heaven have wisdom and the dignity of God. Because of the differences between heaven and earth, the citizens of heaven are not called "people"; rather, God calls them "spirits." These two words have substantive differences—those now called "people" have been corrupted by Satan, while "spirits" have not. In the end, God will change the people of the earth into beings with the attributes of the spirits of heaven, and then they will no longer be subject to Satan's disturbance. This is the true meaning of the words, "My holiness has extended throughout the universe." "Earth in its primordial state belongs to heaven, and heaven is united with earth. Man is the cord uniting heaven and earth, and because of man's sanctity, because of man's renewal, heaven is no longer concealed from earth, and earth is no longer silent toward heaven." This is said in reference to people who have the spirits of angels, and at this point, the "angels" will once again be able to coexist peacefully and regain their original state, no longer divided by the flesh between the realms of heaven and earth. The "angels" on earth will be able to communicate with the angels in heaven, people on earth will know the mysteries of heaven, and the angels in heaven will know the secrets of the human world. Heaven and earth will be united, with no distance between them. This is the beauty of the realization of the kingdom. It is what God will complete, and it is something that all humans and spirits long for. But those in the religious world know nothing of this. They are just waiting for Jesus the Savior to come on a white cloud and take their souls away, leaving "garbage" strewn over the earth ("garbage" referring here to corpses). Is this not a notion that all humans share? This is why God said: "Oh, the religious world! How could it not be destroyed by My authority on earth?" Because of the completion of God's people on earth, the religious world will be overturned. This is the true meaning of the "authority" that God spoke of. God said: "Are there any who, in My day, disgrace My name? All men direct their reverential gaze toward Me, and in their hearts, they secretly cry out to Me." This is what He said about the consequences of the destruction of the religious world. It will submit in its entirety before God's throne because of His words, and will no longer wait for a white cloud to descend or look to the sky, but will instead be conquered before God's throne. Hence the words, "in their hearts, they secretly cry out to Me"—this will be the outcome for the religious world, which God will conquer entirely. This is what God's almightiness refers to—knocking down all religious people, the most rebellious of mankind, so that they will never again cling to their own notions that they might know God.

Although God's words have repeatedly foretold the beauty of the kingdom, have spoken of its various aspects and described it from different perspectives, they still cannot fully express every condition of the Age of Kingdom because people's ability to receive is too lacking. All the words of His utterances have been spoken, but people have not looked inside them through a fluoroscope, with X-rays, as it were, and are thus deprived of clarity and understanding, and are even bewildered. This is the greatest defect of the flesh. Although in their hearts, people want to love God, they resist Him because of the disturbance of Satan, so God has time and again touched people's numb and dull-witted hearts so they may be revived. All that God exposes is Satan's ugliness, so the harsher His words are, the more shamed Satan is, the less bound people's hearts become, and the more people's love can be aroused. This is how God works. Because Satan has been exposed and because it has been seen through, it no longer dares to occupy people's hearts, and thus the angels are no longer harassed. In this way, they love God with their whole heart and mind. Only at this time is it clear to see that, in their true selves, the angels belong to and love God. It is only by this path that God's will can be achieved. "Inside the hearts of all human beings, there is now a place for Me. No longer will I meet with aversion or rejection among men, for My great work has already been accomplished, and is hindered no more." This is the meaning of what was described above. Because of Satan's harassment, people cannot find time to love God and are always entangled by the things of the world and deluded by Satan so that they act out of confusion. This is why God has said that mankind "has undergone so many of life's hardships, so many of the world's injustices, so many vicissitudes of the human realm, but now they dwell in My light. Who does not weep for yesterday's injustices?" When people have heard these words, they feel as if God is their partner in misery, is commiserating with them and, at that time, is sharing their complaints. They suddenly feel the pain of the human world and think: "That's so true—I've never enjoyed anything in the world. Since coming out of my mother's womb up until now, I've experienced human life and I haven't gained anything, but I've suffered so much. It's all so empty! And now I am so corrupted by Satan! Oh! If not for God's salvation, when the time of my death comes, won't I have lived my whole life for nothing? Is there any meaning to human life? No wonder God said that everything under the sun is empty. If God hadn't enlightened me today, I would still be in the dark. How wretched!" At this point, a misgiving arises in their heart: "If I cannot gain God's promise, how can I continue to experience life?" Everyone who reads these words will come to tears while they pray. Such is the human psyche. It would be impossible for someone to read this and not have any reaction, unless they are mentally unbalanced. Every day, God reveals the states of all kinds of people. Sometimes, He vents grievances on their behalf. Sometimes, He helps people overcome and pass successfully through a certain environment. Sometimes, He points out people's "transformations" for them. Otherwise, people would not know how much they have grown in life. Sometimes, God points out people's experiences in reality, and sometimes, He points out their inadequacies and flaws. Sometimes, He makes new requirements of them, and sometimes, He points out the degree to which they understand Him. However, God has also said: "I have heard heartfelt words spoken by so many people, accounts from so many people about their painful experiences in the midst of suffering; I have seen so many, in the direst straits, unflinchingly offer up their loyalty to Me, and I have watched so many, as they walked the rocky path, search for a way out.” This is a description of positive characters. In each episode of the “drama of human history,” there have not only been positive characters but negative ones as well. Therefore, God goes on to reveal the ugliness of these negative characters. Thus, it is only through their contrast with “traitors” that the unyielding loyalty and fearless courage of “upright men” is revealed. In all people’s lives, there are negative factors and also, without exception, positive factors. God uses both to reveal the truth about all people, so that the traitors will lower their heads and admit their sins, and so that, with encouragement, upright men will continue to be loyal. The implications of God’s words are very deep. At times, people read them and double over with laughter, while at other times, they only hang their heads in silence. At times they reminisce, at times they cry bitterly and acknowledge their sins, at times they fumble, and at times they seek. Overall, there are changes in people’s reactions because of the different circumstances in which God speaks. When a person reads God’s words, sometimes bystanders may even mistakenly believe that that person is mentally ill. Consider these words: “And so, contentious disputes on earth are no more, and, following the issuance of My words, the various ‘weapons’ of the modern age are withdrawn.” The word “weapons” alone could fuel a whole day’s worth of laughter, and whenever someone by chance recalls the word “weapons,” they will laugh mightily to themselves. Is this not so? How could you not laugh at this?

When you laugh, do not forget to grasp what God requires of mankind, and do not forget to see the true state of the church: “All mankind has returned to a normal state and embarked upon a new life. Dwelling in new surroundings, a goodly number of people look around them, feeling as if they have entered into an entirely new world, and because of this, they are not able to adapt to their present environment right away or to enter at once onto the right track.” This is currently the true state of the church. Do not be too anxious to have all people immediately enter onto the right track. Once the Holy Spirit’s work has progressed to a certain point, people will all enter into it without realizing it. When you grasp the essence of God’s words, you will know to what point His Spirit has worked. God’s will is: “I only administer, depending on man’s unrighteousness, a fitting measure of ‘education,’ the better to enable everyone to get onto the right track.” This is God’s way of speaking and working, and it is also mankind’s specific path of practice. After this, He pointed out for people another of mankind’s states: “If men are unwilling to enjoy the bliss that is in Me, I can only go along with what they have set their hearts upon and send them into the bottomless pit.” God spoke exhaustively and left people without the slightest opportunity to complain. This is precisely the difference between God and man. God is always speaking to man openly and freely. In everything God says, one can see His sincere heart, which causes people to measure their own hearts against His and enables them to open up their hearts to Him, that He may see where in the spectrum of the rainbow they fall. God has never applauded any person's faith or love, but He has always made requirements of people and exposed their ugly side. This shows what small "stature" people have and how lacking their "constitution" is. They need more "exercise" to make up for these deficiencies, which is why God constantly "unleashes His anger" on people. One day, when God has revealed the entire truth about mankind, people will be made complete, and God will be at ease. People will no longer wheedle God, and He will no longer "educate" them. From then on, people will be able to "live on their own," but now is not the time. There is still much within people that can be called "counterfeit," and several more rounds of examination are needed, several more "checkpoints" where their "taxes" can properly be paid. If there are still counterfeit goods, they will be confiscated so that they will not be sold, and then that batch of smuggled goods will be destroyed. Is this not a good way to do things?

Chapter 19

In people's imagination, it seems, God is very lofty, and He is unfathomable. It is as though God does not reside among humanity and as though He disdains people because He is so lofty. God, however, smashes people's notions and eliminates them all, burying them in "tombs" where they turn to ashes. God's attitude toward humanity's notions is similar to His attitude toward the dead, defining them at will. It seems "notions" have no reactions; therefore, God has been doing this work from the creation of the world until today, and has never stopped. Because of the flesh, humans are corrupted by Satan, and because of Satan's actions on earth, humans form all manner of notions in the course of their experiences. This is called "natural formation." This is the last stage of God's work on earth, so the method of His work has reached its peak, and He is intensifying His training of people so that they can be made complete in His final work, ultimately satisfying God's will. Before, there were only the enlightenment and illumination of the Holy Spirit among humanity, but no words spoken by God Himself. When God spoke with His own voice, everyone was astonished, and today's words are even more puzzling. Their meaning is even more difficult to fathom, and humans seem to be bedazzled, for fifty percent of His words come between quotation marks. "When I speak, people listen to My voice with rapt attention; when I fall silent, though, they again begin their own 'enterprises.'" That passage contains a word in quotation marks. The more humor with which God speaks, as He does here, the more they can draw people in to read them. People are able to accept being dealt with when they are relaxed. Primarily, though, this is to prevent more people from being discouraged or disappointed when they have not understood God's words. This is a tactic in God's war against Satan. Only in this way will people remain interested in God's words and continue paying attention to them even when they cannot follow their thread. However, there is also great charm in all His words that are not surrounded by quotes, and so they are more noticeable and make people love God's words even more and feel the sweetness of His words in their own hearts. As God's words come in a great variety of forms, and are rich and diverse, and because there is no repetition of nouns among the many words of God, in their third sense, people believe that God is always new and never old. For example: "I do not ask people to be mere 'consumers'; I also ask them to be 'producers' who defeat Satan." The words "consumers" and "producers" in that sentence have similar meanings to some words spoken in times previous, but God is not inflexible; rather, He makes people aware of His freshness and thereby treasure God's love. The humor in God's speech contains His judgment and His demands of humanity. As God's words all have objectives, as they all have meanings, His humor is not simply meant to lighten the atmosphere or make people roar with laughter, nor is it simply meant to relax their muscles. Instead, God's humor is intended to free humans from five thousand years of bondage, never to be bound again, so that they are better able to accept God's words. God's method is to use a spoonful of sugar to help the medicine go down; He does not force bitter medicine down people's throats. There is bitterness within the sweet, and also sweetness within the bitter.

"When a faint glimmer of light begins to show in the East, all the people within the universe pay a bit more attention to it. No longer steeped in slumber, humans venture forth to observe the source of this eastern light. Due to their limited capability, no one has yet been able to see the place whence the light originates." This is happening everywhere in the universe, not only among the sons of God and His people. People in religious circles and unbelievers all have this reaction. In the moment when God's light shines out, their hearts all change gradually, and they begin unwittingly to discover that their lives are meaningless, that human life is without value. Humans do not pursue a future, give consideration to tomorrow, or worry about tomorrow; rather, they hold onto the idea that they should eat and drink more while they are still "young," and that it will all have been worth it once the last day arrives. Humans have no desire whatsoever to govern the world. The vigor of humankind's love for the world was completely stolen by the "devil," but nobody knows what the root is. All they can do is run back and forth, informing one another, for God's day has not yet come. One day, everyone will see the answers to all the unfathomable mysteries. This is exactly what God meant when He said, "Humans rouse from sleep and dream, and only then do they realize that My day has gradually come upon them." When that time comes, all the people who belong to God will be like green leaves "waiting to play their own part for Me while I am on earth." So many among God's people in China still relapse after God utters His voice, and so God says, "yet, powerless to alter the facts, they can do nothing but wait for Me to pronounce sentence." There will still be some among them to be cast out—not all will remain unchanged. Rather, people can only meet standard after being put to the test, through which they are issued “certificates of quality”; otherwise, they will become refuse on the scrap heap. God constantly points out the true state of humanity, so people increasingly feel the mysteriousness of God. “If He were not God, how would He be able to know our true state so well?” Nevertheless, because of people’s weakness, “in humans’ hearts, I am neither lofty nor lowly. As far as they are concerned, it makes no difference if I exist or not.” Is this not precisely the state of all people that best fits with reality? As far as humans are concerned, God exists when they seek Him and does not exist when they do not seek Him. In other words, God exists in humans’ hearts the instant they need His help, but when they no longer need Him, He no longer exists. This is what is within people’s hearts. In reality, everybody on earth thinks this way, including all “atheists,” and their “impression” of God is also vague and opaque.

“Therefore, the mountains become boundaries between nations upon the land, the waters become barriers to keep people of different lands apart, and the air becomes that which flows from person to person in the spaces above the earth.” This was the work that God did while creating the world. Mentioning this here is perplexing for people: Could it be that God wants to create another world? It is fair to say this: Every time God speaks, His words contain creation, management, and the destruction of the world; it is just that sometimes they are clear, and sometimes they are vague. All of God’s management is embodied in His words; it is just that people cannot distinguish them. The blessings that God bestows upon humans make their faith grow a hundredfold. From the outside, it seems as though God is making a promise to them, but in essence it is the measure of God’s demands of the people of His kingdom. Those who are fit for use will remain, while those who are not will be swallowed up in a calamity that falls from heaven. “The thunder, rolling across the skies, will strike humans down; the high mountains, as they topple, will bury them; the wild beasts in their hunger will devour them; and the oceans, surging, will close over their heads. As humanity engages in fratricidal conflict, all humans will seek their own destruction in the calamities arising from amongst them.” This is the “special treatment” that will be meted out to those who are not up to standard and who will not afterward be brought salvation in the kingdom of God. The more God says things like, “You will surely, under the guidance of My light, break through the stranglehold of the forces of darkness. You will surely not, in the midst of darkness, lose the light guiding you,” the more people become aware of their own respectability; as such, they have more faith to seek new life. God provides to humans as they ask of Him. Once God has exposed them to a certain extent, He changes His manner of speech, using a tone of blessing to obtain the best outcome. Making demands of humanity this way yields more practical results. Because people are all willing to talk business with their counterparts—they are all experts in business—this is exactly what God is homing in on in saying this. So, what is “Sinim”? Here God does not refer to the kingdom on earth, which is corrupted by Satan, but rather to an assembly of all the angels who came from God. The words “stand firm and unwavering” imply that the angels will break through all of Satan’s forces, thereby establishing Sinim throughout the entire universe. Thus, the real meaning of Sinim is an assembly of all the angels on earth, and here it refers to those on earth. Therefore, the kingdom that will exist afterward on earth will be called “Sinim,” and not the “kingdom.” There is no real meaning to the “kingdom” on earth; it is, in essence, Sinim. Thus, only upon linking them to the definition of Sinim can one know the true meaning of the words, “You will surely radiate My glory throughout the entire universe.” This demonstrates the ranking of all people on earth in the future. The people of Sinim will all be kings who govern all peoples on earth after they have suffered chastisement. Everything on earth will operate normally because of the management of the people of Sinim. This is nothing more than a rough sketch of the situation. All humans will remain within the kingdom of God, meaning that they will be left in Sinim. Humans on earth will be able to communicate with the angels. As such, heaven and earth will be connected; or, in other words, all people on earth will submit to and love God as the angels in heaven do. At that time, God will appear openly to all people on earth and allow them to see His true face with their naked eyes, and He will reveal Himself to them at any time.

Chapter 20

God created all mankind, and has led all mankind unto today. Thus, God knows all that happens among man: He knows the bitterness in the world of man, understands the sweetness in the world of man, and so each day He describes the life conditions of all mankind, and, moreover, deals with the weakness and corruption of all mankind. It is not God’s will that all mankind be cast into the bottomless pit, or that the entirety of mankind be saved. There is always a principle to God’s actions, yet no one is capable of grasping the laws of all that He does. When people become aware of God’s majesty and wrath, God immediately changes the tone to mercy and love, but when people come to know God’s mercy and love, He immediately changes the tone once more, making His words as hard to eat as if they were a live chicken. In all of God’s words, never has the beginning been repeated, and never have any of His words been spoken according to the principle of the utterances of yesterday; even the tone is not the same, and there is no connection in the content—all of which makes people feel even more bewildered. This is the wisdom of God, and the revelation of His disposition. He uses the tone and manner of His speech to disperse people’s notions, in order to confuse Satan, stripping Satan of the opportunity to poison God’s deeds. The wondrousness of God’s actions causes people’s minds to be left reeling by God’s words. They are barely able to find their own front door, and even do not know when they are supposed to eat or rest, thus truly achieving “forgoing sleep and food to expend for God.” Yet even at this point, God remains unsatisfied with the present circumstances, and is always angry with man, forcing him to bring forth his true heart. If not, as soon as God showed the slightest lenience, people would immediately “obey” and grow lax. This is the lowliness of man; he cannot be coaxed, but must be beaten or dragged to get him moving. “Of all those I look upon, no one has ever sought Me deliberately and directly. They all come before Me at the urging of others, following the majority, and they are unwilling to pay the price or spend the time to enrich their lives.” Such are the circumstances of all upon earth. Thus, without the work of the apostles or the leaders, all people would have long since scattered, and so, throughout the ages, there has been no lack of apostles and prophets.

In these utterances, God pays special attention to summarizing the life conditions of all mankind. Such words as the following are all of this type: “Man’s life has not the slightest warmth, and is devoid of any trace of humanity or light—yet he has been ever self-indulgent, abiding a lifetime bereft of value in which he rushes about without achieving anything. In the blink of an eye, the day of death draws near, and man dies a bitter death.” Why is it that God has guided mankind’s existence until today, and yet also reveals the emptiness of life in the world of man? And why does He describe the entire life of all people as “arriving in a hurry and departing in a hurry”? This, it can be said, is all God’s plan, it is all ordained by God, and as such, in another respect it reflects how God despises all except the life in divinity. Although God created all mankind, He has never truly taken pleasure in the life of all mankind, and so He merely allows mankind to exist under the corruption of Satan. After mankind has gone through this process, He will annihilate or save mankind, and thus man shall achieve a life on earth that is not empty. This is all part of God’s plan. And so, there is always a wish in man’s consciousness, which has led to no one gladly dying an innocent death—but the only ones who achieve this wish are the people of the last days. Today, people still live amid an irreversible emptiness and they still await that invisible wish: “When I cover My face with My hands, and press people beneath the ground, they immediately feel short of breath, and are barely able to survive. They all cry out to Me, terrified that I will destroy them, for they all wish to behold the day when I gain glory.” Such are the circumstances of all people today. They all live in a “vacuum,” without “oxygen,” which makes it hard for them to breathe. God uses the wish in man’s consciousness to support the survival of all mankind; if not, all would “leave home to become monks,” as a result of which mankind would become extinct, and come to an end. Thus, it is because of the promise God gave to man that man has survived until today. This is the truth, but man has never discovered this law, and thus he knows not why he is “deeply fearful that death will come upon him a second time.” Being human, no one has the courage to carry on living, yet neither has anyone ever had the courage to die, and thus God says that people “die a bitter death.” Such is the true situation among man. Perhaps, in their prospects, some people have faced setbacks and thought of death, but these thoughts have never come to fruition; perhaps, some have thought of death because of family conflicts, but out of concern for their beloved they remain incapable of achieving their wish; and perhaps, some have thought of death because of blows to their marriage, but they are unwilling to go through with it. Thus, people die with grievances or everlasting regrets in their hearts. Such are the various states of all people. Looking out over the wide world of man, people come and go in an endless stream, and although they feel that there would be more joy in death than in living, still they pay lip service, and never has anyone led by example, by dying and coming back and telling the living how to enjoy the joy of death. People are contemptible wretches: They have no shame or self-respect, and they always go back on their word. In His plan, God predestined a group of people who would enjoy His promise, and thus God says, "Many spirits have lived in the flesh, and many have died and been reborn on earth. Yet never have any of them had the opportunity to enjoy the blessings of the kingdom today." All who enjoy the blessings of the kingdom today have been predestined by God since He created the world. God arranged for these spirits to live in the flesh during the last days, and ultimately, God shall gain this group of people, and arrange for them to be in Sinim. Because, in essence, the spirits of these people are angels, God says, "Has there really never been any trace of Me in the spirit of man?" In fact, when people live in the flesh, they remain ignorant of the affairs of the spiritual realm. From these simple words—"man shoots Me a guarded look"—God's mood can be seen. Within these simple words, the complex psychology of God is expressed. From the time of creation until today, in God's heart there has always been grief accompanied by wrath and judgment, for the people on earth are incapable of being mindful of God's will, just as God says, "Man is like a mountain savage." Yet God also says, "The day will come when man swims to My side from amid the mighty ocean, so that he might enjoy all the riches on earth and leave behind the risk of being swallowed by the sea." This is the accomplishment of God's will, and can also be described as an inevitable trend, and it symbolizes the accomplishment of God's work.

When the kingdom entirely descends on earth, all people shall recover their original likeness. Thus, God says, "I enjoy from atop My throne, and I live among the stars. The angels offer unto Me new songs and new dances. No longer does their own fragility cause tears to run down their faces. No longer do I hear, before Me, the sound of the angels weeping, and no longer does anyone complain of hardship to Me." This shows that the day upon which God gains complete glory is the day when man enjoys his rest; people no longer rush about as a result of Satan's disturbance, the world stops progressing onward, and people live in rest—for the myriad stars in the heavens are renewed, and the sun, moon, stars, and so on, and all the mountains and rivers in heaven and on the earth, are all changed. And because man has changed and God has changed, so, too, will all things change. This is the ultimate aim of God's management plan, and this is what shall finally be achieved. God's objective in speaking all these words is mainly for man to know Him. People do not understand God's administrative decrees. All that God does is orchestrated and arranged by God Himself, and God is unwilling to let anyone interfere; instead, He allows people to behold that all is arranged by Him and unachievable by man. Even though man can see it, or finds it hard to imagine, all is controlled by God alone, and God does not wish it to be tainted by the slightest human thought. God will surely not forgive any who partake, even just a little bit; God is the God who is jealous of man, and it seems the Spirit of God is particularly sensitive in this regard. Thus, whosoever has the slightest intention of interfering shall immediately be beset by God's consuming flames, turning them into ashes in the fire. God does not allow people to display their gifts however they please, for all who are gifted are without life; these supposed gifts only serve God, and originate from Satan, and thus are especially despised by God, who makes no concessions in this. Yet it is often people without life who are likely to partake in the work of God, and, furthermore, their participation remains undiscovered, for it is disguised by their gifts. Throughout the ages, those who are gifted have never stood firm, for they are without life, and thus lack any powers of resistance. Thus, God says, "If I do not speak plainly, man will never come to his senses, and will unwittingly fall into My chastisement—for man does not know Me in My flesh." All those of flesh and blood are guided by God, yet also live in Satan's bondage, and so never have people had a normal relationship with one another, whether because of lust, or adoration, or the arrangements of their environment. Such abnormal relationships are what God detests most of all, and thus it is because of such relationships that such words as the following come from God's mouth: "What I want are living creatures that are full of life, not corpses that have been steeped in death. Since I recline at the table of the kingdom, I will command all people on earth to receive My inspection." When God is above the entire universe, each day He observes every action of those of flesh and blood, and has never overlooked a single one of them. These are the deeds of God. And so, I urge all people to examine their own thoughts, ideas, and actions. I do not ask that you be a sign of shame to God, but a manifestation of God's glory, that in all of your actions, words, and lives, you do not become the target of Satan's jokes. This is God's requirement of all people.

Chapter 21

In God's eyes, people are like the animals in the animal world. They fight with each other, slaughter each other, and have extraordinary interactions with each other. In God's eyes, they are also like apes, scheming against one another regardless of age or gender. As such, all that the whole of mankind does and manifests has never been after God's heart. The time that God covers His face is precisely when people all over the world are tested. All people groan in pain, they all live under the threat of catastrophe, and not a single one of them has ever escaped from God's judgment. Actually, God's primary aim in becoming flesh is to judge man and condemn him in His flesh. In God's mind, it has long since been decided who, in accordance with their substance, shall be saved or destroyed, and this shall be gradually made plain during the final phase. As the days and months pass, people change and their original form is revealed. It becomes apparent whether there is a chicken or a duck in the egg when it cracks open. The time when the egg breaks is the very time that the disasters on earth shall come to an end. From this it can be seen that, in order to know whether there is a “chicken” or a “duck” inside, the “egg” must be broken open. This is the plan in God’s heart, and it must be accomplished.

“Poor, pitiable mankind! Why is it that man loves Me, but is unable to follow the intentions of My Spirit?” Because of this state of man, he must undergo being dealt with in order to satisfy God’s will. And because of God’s loathing for mankind, He has proclaimed many times: “O the rebels of all mankind! They must be crushed beneath My feet; they must vanish amid My chastisement, and they must, on the day on which My great enterprise is completed, be cast out from among mankind, so that the whole of mankind knows their ugly face.” God is speaking to all mankind in the flesh, and He is also speaking to Satan in the spiritual realm, which is above the entire universe. This is the will of God, and this is what is to be achieved by God’s 6,000-year plan.

In truth, God is especially normal, and there are some things that can only be accomplished if He carries them out in person and sees them with His own eyes. It is not as people imagine, God does not lie there whilst all goes as He wishes; this is the consequence of Satan’s disturbance in people, which makes people unclear about God’s true face. As such, during the final age, God has become flesh to openly reveal His reality to man, without hiding anything. Some descriptions of God’s disposition are pure exaggeration, such as when it is said that God can annihilate the world with a single word or the slightest thought. As a result, most people say things like, Why is it that God is omnipotent, but cannot swallow Satan in a single mouthful? These words are absurd, and show that people still do not know God. For God to annihilate His enemies requires a process, yet it is true to say that God is all-victorious: God shall ultimately defeat His enemies. Just as when a strong country defeats a weak one, it must achieve victory itself, step-by-step, sometimes using force, sometimes using strategy. There is a process, but it cannot be said that, since the strong country has new-generation nuclear weapons and the weak country is far inferior, the weak country will give up without a fight. That is an absurd argument. It is fair to say that the strong country is sure to win and the weak country is sure to lose, but the strong country can only be said to have greater force when it personally invades the weak country. Thus, God has always said that man does not know Him. So, do the words above represent one side of why man does not know God? Are these the notions of man? Why does God ask only that man know His reality, and thus became flesh in person? Thus, most people devoutly worshiped Heaven, yet “Heaven has never been the slightest bit affected by the actions of man, and if My treatment of man were based on his every action, then the whole of mankind would live amid My chastisement.”

God sees through to man’s substance. In God’s utterances, God seems so “tormented” by man that He has no interest in paying any more attention to man, nor the slightest hope in him; man, it would seem, is beyond salvation. “I have seen many people with tears coursing down their cheeks, and I have seen many people offer up their hearts in exchange for My riches. Despite such ‘piousness,’ I have never freely given My all to man as a result of his sudden urges, for man has never been gladly willing to devote himself before Me.” When God reveals man’s nature, man is ashamed of himself, but this is but superficial knowledge, and he is incapable of truly knowing his nature in God’s words; thus, most people do not understand God’s will, they cannot find a path for their life in God’s words, and so the more dull-witted they are, the more severely God mocks them. Thus, they unconsciously enter into the role of hideousness—and as a result, they come to know themselves as they are stabbed by the “soft sword.” God’s words appear to applaud man’s deeds, and to encourage man’s deeds—and yet people always feel that God is ridiculing them. And so, when they read God’s words, the muscles in their faces twitch from time to time, as if they are convulsing. This is the impurity of their consciences, and it is because of this that they twitch involuntarily. Their pain is the sort in which they want to laugh, yet they cannot—nor can they cry, for people’s farcical manner is played on the remote control “VCR,” yet they cannot switch it off, but can only endure. Though “focusing on God’s words” is preached during all co-worker meetings, who knows not the nature of the spawn of the great red dragon? Face-to-face, they are as obedient as lambs, but when backs are turned they are as savage as wolves, which can be seen in God’s words that “many people genuinely love Me when I provide My words, yet do not cherish My words in their spirits, instead casually using them like public property and tossing them back to where they came from whenever they feel like it.” Why has God always exposed man? This shows that man’s old nature has never budged an inch. Like Mount Tai, it stands tall in hundreds of millions of people’s hearts, but the day will come when Yu Gong moves that mountain; this is the plan of God. In His utterances, there is not a moment when God does not make requirements of man, warn man, or point out man’s nature which is revealed in his life: “When man is distant from Me, and when he tests Me, I hide Myself from him among the clouds. As a result, he is unable to find any trace of Me, and lives only by the hand of the wicked, doing all that they ask.” In reality, people rarely have the opportunity to live in God’s presence, because they have too little desire for seeking; as a result, although most people love God, they live under the hand of the evil one, and all that they do is directed by the evil one. If people truly lived in the light of God, seeking God at every moment of every day, there would be no need for God to speak like this, would there? When people put the texts aside, they immediately put God aside together with the book, and so they concern themselves with their own business, after which God disappears from their hearts. Yet when they pick up the book again, it suddenly occurs to them that they had put God to the back of their minds. Such is man’s life “without memory.” The more God speaks, the higher His words. When they reach their peak, all of the work is concluded, and as a result, God ceases His utterances. The principle by which God works is to conclude His work when it reaches its pinnacle; He does not continue working once it has reached its pinnacle, but abruptly stops. He never does work that is unnecessary.

Chapters 22 and 23

Today, all are willing to grasp God's will and know God's disposition, yet none know the reason why they are incapable of carrying out what they are willing to do, why their hearts always betray them and they cannot achieve what they want. As a result, they are once more beset by crushing desperation, yet they are also fearful. Unable to express these conflicting emotions, they can only hang their heads in sorrow and incessantly ask themselves: "Could it be that God has not enlightened me? Could it be that God has secretly forsaken me? Perhaps everyone else is fine, and God has enlightened all of them except me. Why do I always feel disturbed when I read God's words—why can't I ever grasp anything?" Though such thoughts are in people's minds, none dare to express them; they merely carry on struggling inside. In fact, no one but God is able to understand His words or grasp His true will. Yet God always asks that people grasp His will—is this not like trying to force a duck onto a perch? Is God ignorant of man's failings? This is a juncture in God's work, which people fail to understand, and thus, God says, "Man lives amid the light, yet he is unaware of the preciousness of the light. He is ignorant of the essence of the light, and the source of the light, and, moreover, to whom the light belongs." According to what God's words tell man and what they ask of him, no one will survive, for there is nothing in man's flesh that is accepting of God's words. So, being able to obey God's words, cherishing and yearning for God's words, and applying those words of God that point to man's state to their own conditions, and thereby coming to know themselves—this is the highest standard. When the kingdom is ultimately realized, man, who lives in the flesh, shall still be incapable of grasping God's will, and will still require His personal guidance—yet people will simply be without Satan's interference, and shall possess the normal life of man; this is God's objective in defeating Satan, which He does chiefly in order to recover the original substance of man, who was created by God. In God's mind, "flesh" refers to the following: the inability to know God's substance; the inability to see the affairs of the spiritual realm; and, furthermore, the ability to be corrupted by Satan yet also be directed by the Spirit of God. This is the essence of the flesh created by God. Naturally, it is also meant to avoid the chaos in the lives of mankind that a lack of order would cause. The more God speaks, and the more incisively He speaks, the more people understand. People unconsciously change, and unconsciously live in the light, and thus, "because of the light, they are growing and have left the darkness." This is the beautiful scene of the kingdom, and the "living in the light, departing from death" that has often been spoken of. When Sinim is realized on earth—when the kingdom is realized—there will be no more war on earth; never again will there be famines, plagues, and earthquakes; people will stop producing weapons; all will live in peace and stability; and there will be normal dealings between people, and normal dealings between countries. Yet the present bears no comparison to this. All beneath the heavens is in chaos, and coups gradually begin to arise in each country. In the wake of God's utterances, people are gradually changing, and, internally, every country is slowly being torn apart. The steady foundations of Babylon begin to shake, like a castle on the sand, and, as God's will shifts, tremendous changes occur unnoticed in the world, and all manner of signs appear at any time, showing people that the last day of the world has arrived! This is God's plan; these are the steps by which He works, and each country will surely be torn to pieces. Old Sodom will be annihilated a second time, and thus God says, "The world is falling! Babylon is in paralysis!" No one but God Himself is capable of understanding this completely; there is, after all, a limit to people's awareness. For example, the ministers of internal affairs might know that the present circumstances are unstable and chaotic, but they are incapable of addressing them. They can only ride the current, hoping in their hearts for the day when they can hold their heads high, for the day to come when the sun rises once again in the east, shining across the land and reversing this miserable state of affairs. Little do they know, however, that when the sun rises a second time, its rise is not meant to restore the old order—it is a resurgence, a thorough change. Such is God's plan for the whole universe. He shall bring about a new world, but, above all, He will first renew man. Today, what is most vital is bringing mankind into God's words, not simply allowing them to enjoy the blessings of status. Moreover, as God says, "In the kingdom, I am King—but instead of treating Me as its King, man treats Me as the 'Savior that has descended from heaven.' As a result, he longs for Me to give him alms and does not pursue knowledge of Me." Such are the true conditions of all people. Today, what is crucial is dispelling man's insatiable greed completely, thus allowing people to know God without asking for anything. It is no wonder, then, that God says, "So many have pleaded before Me like beggars; so many have opened their 'sacks' to Me and implored Me to give them food to survive." States such as these indicate people's greed, and they show that people do not love God, but make demands of Him, or try to gain the things they long for. People have the nature of a hungry wolf; they are all cunning and greedy, and thus God makes requirements of them once and again, forcing them to hand over their hearts of greed and to love God with hearts of sincerity. In reality, to date, people have yet to give all of their hearts to God; they straddle two boats, depending sometimes on themselves, sometimes on God, without completely relying on Him. When God's work has reached a certain point, all people will live amid true love and faith, and God's will shall be satisfied; thus, God's requirements are not high.

The angels move constantly among the sons and people of God, hurrying between heaven and earth and descending to the human world after returning to the spiritual realm each day. This is their duty, and thus, each day, the sons and people of God are shepherded, and their life gradually changes. On the day that God changes His form, the angels' work on earth shall officially end and they will return to the realm of heaven. Today, all the sons and people of God are in the same condition. As the seconds go by, all people are changing, and the sons and people of God are gradually maturing. In comparison, all the rebels are also changing before the great red dragon: People are no longer loyal to the great red dragon, and demons no longer follow its arrangements. Instead, they "act as they see fit, and each goes its own way." Thus, when God says, "How could the countries on earth not perish? How could the countries on earth not fall?" the heavens come pressing down in an instant.... It is as if an ominous feeling were presaging the end of mankind. The various ominous signs prophesied here are precisely what is occurring in the country of the great red dragon, and none on earth can escape. Such is the prophecy in God's words. Today, all people have a premonition that time is short, and they seem to feel that a disaster is about to befall them—yet they have no means of escape, and thus they are all without hope. God says, "As I decorate the 'inner chamber' of My kingdom day by day, no one has ever suddenly burst into My 'workroom' to disrupt My work." In fact, the meaning of God's words is not simply to say that people may know God in His words. Above all, they indicate that each day, God arranges all manner of developments throughout the universe to serve the next part of His work. The reason He says "no one has ever suddenly burst into My 'workroom' to disrupt My work" is that God works in divinity, and people are incapable of partaking in His work, though they may wish to. Let Me ask you: Could you really arrange every development in the entire universe? Could you make the people on earth defy their ancestors? Could you maneuver people throughout the universe to serve God's will? Could you cause Satan to run riot? Could you make people feel the world is desolate and empty? People are incapable of such things. In the past, when Satan's "skills" had yet to be brought fully to bear, it would always interfere in each stage of God's work; in this stage, Satan has run out of tricks, and God thus allows it to show its true colors, that all people may know it. This is the truth of the words "No one has ever disrupted My work."

Each day, the people of the churches read God's words, and each day, they undergo the work of dissection on "the operating table." For example, "losing their position," "being dismissed," "their fears allayed and composure restored," "abandonment," and "devoid of 'feeling'"—such mocking words "torment" people and render them dumb with shame. It is as if no part of their entire body—from head to toe, from inside to out—meets with God's approval. Why does God strip people's lives so bare with His words? Is God deliberately making things difficult for people? It is as if the faces of all people are smeared with mud that cannot be washed off. Each day, heads bowed, they give an account of their sins, like scam artists. People have been so corrupted by Satan that they are not fully aware of their own true states. But to God, Satan's venom is in every part of their bodies, even their marrow; as a result, the more profound God's revelations, the more fearful people become, and thus are all people made to know Satan and see

Satan in man, for they have been incapable of seeing Satan with their naked eyes. And since all has entered into reality, God exposes man's nature—which is to say, He exposes the image of Satan—and thus allows man to behold the real, tangible Satan, all the better for them to know the practical God. God allows man to know Him in the flesh, and He gives form to Satan, allowing man to know the real, tangible Satan in the flesh of all people. The various states that are spoken of are all expressions of Satan's deeds. And so, it may be said that all who are of the flesh are embodiments of Satan's image. God is incompatible with His enemies—they are hostile to each other, and are two different forces; therefore, demons are forever demons, and God is forever God; they are as incompatible as fire and water, ever as separate as heaven and earth. When God created man, people of one sort had the spirits of angels, while one kind had no spirit, and thus the latter were possessed by the spirits of demons, and so they are called demons. Ultimately, angels are angels, demons are demons—and God is God. This is what is meant by each according to its kind, and so, when the angels reign on earth and enjoy blessings, God returns to His dwelling place, and the rest—the enemies of God—are turned to ashes. In fact, all people seem outwardly to love God, but the root is in their substance—how can those with the nature of angels escape God's hand and fall into the bottomless pit? And how can those with the nature of demons ever love God truly? The essence of such people is not one of true love for God, so how could they ever have the chance to enter the kingdom? All was arranged by God when He created the world, just as God says: "I advance amid wind and rain, and have spent year after year among man, and have come in time to the present day. Are these not precisely the steps of My management plan? Who has ever added to My plan? Who can break away from the steps of My plan?" Having become flesh, God must experience the life of man—is this not the practical side of the practical God? God does not hide anything from man because of man's weakness; instead, He lays bare the truth to man, just as God says: "I have spent year after year among man." It is precisely because God is God become flesh that He has passed year after year on earth; accordingly, only after undergoing all manner of processes can He be considered God incarnate, and only after that can He work in the divinity within the flesh. Then, after having revealed all mysteries, He will be free to change His form. This is another aspect of the explanation of non-supernaturalness, which God indicated directly.

It is necessary to pass the muster of each of God's words, without being perfunctory—this is God's commission!

Chapters 24 and 25

Without a close reading, it is impossible to detect anything in the utterances of these two days; in fact, they should have been spoken in one day, yet God divided them across two days. That is to say, the utterances of these two days form a single whole, but to make it easier for people to accept them, God divided them across two days to give people a chance to breathe. Such is God's consideration for man. In all of God's work, all people perform their function and their duty in their own place. It is not just the people with the spirit of an angel who cooperate; those with the spirit of a demon also "cooperate," as do all the spirits of Satan. In God's utterances are seen God's will and His requirements of man. The words "My chastisement comes upon all people, yet it also remains distant from all people. The whole life of every person is filled with love and hate toward Me" show that God uses chastisement to threaten all people, causing them to gain knowledge of Him. Because of the corruption of Satan and the frailty of the angels, God employs only words, and not administrative decrees, to chastise people. Since the time of creation until today, this has been the principle of God's work regarding the angels and all people. Because the angels are of God, one day they shall surely become the people of God's kingdom, and will be cared for and protected by God. All others, meanwhile, will also be classed according to kind. All of the various evil spirits of Satan will be chastised, and all who are without spirits will be ruled by the sons and people of God. Such is God's plan. Thus, God once said, "Is the arrival of My day really the moment of man's death? Could I really destroy man at the time when My kingdom is formed?" Though these are two simple questions, they are God's arrangements for the destination of all mankind. When God arrives, that is the time when "people throughout the universe are nailed to the cross upside down." This is the purpose of God appearing to all people, using chastisement to make them know the existence of God. Because the time when God descends upon earth is the final age, the time when the countries on earth are at their most turbulent, thus God says, "When I come down to earth, it is cloaked in darkness and man is 'fast asleep.'" As such, today there are but a handful of people who are capable of knowing God incarnate, there are almost none. Because now is the final age, no one has ever truly known the practical God, and people only have a superficial knowledge of God. It is because of this that people live amid painful refinement. When people leave refinement, that is also when they begin to be chastised, and it is the time when God appears to all people so that they might personally behold Him. Because of God incarnate, people fall into disaster and are unable to extricate themselves—this is God's punishment of the great red dragon, and it is His administrative decree. When the warmth of spring arrives and the flowers blossom, when all beneath the heavens is covered in green and all things on earth are in place, then all people and things shall gradually enter into God's chastisement, and at that time all of God's work on earth will end. God shall no longer work or live on earth, for God's great work will have been accomplished. Are people incapable of putting aside their flesh for this short time? What things can cleave the love between man and God? Who is able to pull apart the love between man and God? Is it parents, husbands, sisters, wives, or painful refinement? Can the feelings of conscience wipe away God's image within man? Are people's indebtedness and actions toward each other their own doing? Can they be remedied by man? Who is able to protect themselves? Are people able to provide for themselves? Who are the strong ones in life? Who is able to leave Me and live on their own? Time and time again, why does God ask that all people carry out the work of self-reflection? Why does God say, “Whose hardship has been arranged by their own hand?”

At present, there is dark night throughout the universe, and people are numb and dull-witted, but the hands of the clock always tick onward, the minutes and seconds do not stop, and the revolutions of the earth, sun, and moon grow faster. In their feelings, people believe that the day is not far off; it is as if their last day is before their eyes. People ceaselessly prepare everything for their own time of death, so that it will serve a purpose at their death; if not, they would have lived in vain. Would that not be regrettable? When God annihilates the world, He begins with changes in countries' domestic affairs, from which there occur coups; thus, God mobilizes the service of people throughout the universe. The land where the great red dragon lies coiled is a demonstration zone. Because, internally, it has been torn apart, its domestic affairs have been thrown into chaos, everyone engages in the work of self-defense, preparing to escape to the moon—but how could they escape the dominion of God's hand? Just as God said that people would “drink from their own bitter cup.” The time of domestic strife is precisely when God departs the earth; God will not continue to stay in the country of the great red dragon, and shall immediately end His work on earth. It can be said that time flies, and there is not much of it left. From the tone of God's words, it can be seen that God has already spoken of the destination of all throughout the universe, and that He has nothing else to say for the remainder. This is what God reveals to man. It is because of God's aim in creating man that He says, “In My eyes, man is the ruler of all things. I have given him no small amount of authority, allowing him to manage all things on earth—the grass upon the mountains, the animals among the forests, and the fish in the water.” When God created man, He predestined that man would be the master of all things—yet man was corrupted by Satan, and so he cannot live as he would wish. This has led to the world of today, in which people are no different from beasts, and the mountains have mingled with the rivers, with the result that “man's entire life is one of anguish and rushing about, of fun added to emptiness.” Because there is no meaning to man's life, and because this was not God's aim in creating man, the whole world has become turbid. When God puts the entire universe in order, all people shall officially begin to experience human life, and only then will their lives start to have meaning. People will begin to make use of the authority given to them by God, and they will officially appear before all things as their master; they will accept God's guidance on earth, and will no longer disobey God, but instead will obey Him. The people of today, however, are a long way off that. All they ever do is “line their pockets” through God, and so God asks a string of questions such as “Is the work I do upon man of no benefit to him?” If God did not ask these questions, nothing would happen; but when He asks such things, some people are unable to stand firm, for there is indebtedness in their consciences, and they are not purely for God, but for themselves. All of everything is empty; thus, these people and “the people of every religion, every sector of society, every nation, and every denomination all know the emptiness on earth, and they all seek Me and await My return.” All people yearn for God’s return so that He might bring an end to the empty old era, yet they also fear falling into disaster. The entire religious world will immediately be left desolate, and neglected by all; they lack reality, and they will realize that their belief in God is vague and abstract. People of every sphere of society shall also disperse, and every nation and denomination will begin to fall into turmoil. In sum, the regularity of all things shall be torn apart, all will lose its normality, and so, too, will people reveal their true faces. Thus, God says, “Many are the times that I have cried out to man, yet has anyone ever felt compassion? Has anyone ever lived in humanity? Man may live in the flesh, but he is without humanity. Was he born in the animal kingdom?” Change is also occurring among man, and because of this change, each is classed according to kind. This is God’s work during the last days, and this is the effect that is to be achieved by the work of the last days. God speaks more clearly of man’s substance, and thus it is proven that the end of His work is coming closer, and furthermore that God is more hidden from people, which makes them feel more disconcerted. The less people observe God’s will, the less attention they pay to God’s work of the last days; this stops them from interrupting, and thus God does the work that He intends to do when no one is paying attention. This is one principle of God’s work throughout the ages. The less considerate He is of people’s weaknesses, thus is shown that God’s divinity is more apparent, and so the day of God draws closer.

Chapter 26

From all of the words spoken by God, it can be seen that the day of God draws nearer with each passing day. It is as if this day is right before people’s eyes, as if it will arrive tomorrow. Thus, after reading God’s words, all people are struck with terror, and they also sense a part of the world’s desolation, like leaves that fall in a breeze, accompanied by a light rain. People disappear without a trace, as if they have all vanished entirely. Everyone has an ominous feeling, and though all people try hard and wish to satisfy God’s will, and each person uses all their might to satisfy God’s intention, that God’s will may proceed smoothly and without obstruction, such a sentiment is always mingled with a sense of foreboding. Take today’s utterances: If they were broadcast to the masses, announced to the whole universe, then all people would bow down and weep, for in the words “I will watch over the whole earth and, appearing in the East of the world with righteousness, majesty, wrath, and chastisement, I shall reveal Myself to the myriad hosts of humanity!” all who understand spiritual matters see that no one can escape God’s chastisement, and that after experiencing the suffering of chastisement, all will be separated according to their kind. Truly, this is a step of God's work, and no one can change it. When God created the world, when He led mankind, He showed His wisdom and wondrousness, and only when He brings this era to an end will people behold His true righteousness, majesty, wrath and chastisement. Furthermore, it is only through chastisement that they are able to see His righteousness, majesty and wrath; this is a path that must be taken, just as, during the last days, God's incarnation is necessary and indispensable. After proclaiming the end of all mankind, God shows to man the work He does today. For example, God says, "The Israel of old has ceased to be, and today's Israel has risen up, erect and towering in the world, and has stood up in the hearts of all humanity. Today's Israel shall surely attain the source of existence through My people!" "Ah, hateful Egypt! ... How can you not exist within My chastisement?" God deliberately shows people the consequences that two antithetical countries meet in His hands, in one sense referring to Israel, which is material, and in another referring to all God's chosen ones—which is to say, to how God's chosen ones change as Israel changes. When Israel has wholly returned to its original form, all of the chosen ones will subsequently be made complete—which is to say, Israel is a meaningful symbol of those whom God loves. Egypt, meanwhile, is the representative convergence of those whom God hates. The more decayed it becomes, the more corrupt those who are hated by God become—and Babylon subsequently falls. This forms a clear contrast. By proclaiming the ends of Israel and Egypt, God reveals the destination of all people; thus, when mentioning Israel, God speaks also of Egypt. From this, it can be seen that the day of Egypt's destruction is the day of the world's annihilation, the day when God chastises all people. This will happen soon; God is about to complete it, something that is quite invisible to man's naked eye, yet indispensable and unalterable. God says, "All those who stand against Me will surely be chastised by Me for eternity. For I am a jealous God and will not lightly spare men for all that they have done." Why does God speak in such absolute terms? And why has He personally become flesh in the nation of the great red dragon? From God's words, His aim can be seen: He has not come to save people, or to show them compassion, or to care for them, or protect them—He has come to chastise all those who oppose Him. For God says, "None can escape My chastisement." God lives in the flesh, and, furthermore, He is a normal person, yet He does not forgive people for their weakness in being unable to know Him subjectively; instead, He condemns men for their sins by means of a "normal person," He makes all those who behold His flesh those who are chastised, and they thus become sacrifices for all who are not the people of the nation of the great red dragon. But this is not one of the primary goals of God's incarnation. God became flesh chiefly in order to do battle, in the flesh, with the great red dragon, and to bring shame upon it through battle. Because God's great power is more evidenced by battling the great red dragon in the flesh than in the Spirit, God fights in the flesh to show His deeds and omnipotence. Innumerable people have been "innocently" condemned by God's incarnation, and countless people have thereby been thrown into hell and cast into chastisement, and suffer in the flesh. This is the demonstration of God's righteous disposition, and regardless of how those who oppose God change today, God's upright disposition will never change. Once condemned, people are condemned forever, never able to rise again. Man's disposition cannot be like God's. Toward those who oppose God, people are by turns hot and cold; they waver left and right, now up, now down; they are incapable of remaining constant, sometimes hating those who oppose God to their bones, sometimes holding them close. Today's circumstances have come about because people do not know God's work. Why does God say such words as, "The angels are, after all, angels; God, after all, is God; the demons are, after all, demons; the unrighteous are still unrighteous; and the holy are still holy"? Can you not comprehend it? Could God have misremembered? Thus, God says, "Each person is separated according to their kind, and finds their way unawares back into the bosom of their families." From this it can be seen that today, God has already classified all things into their families, so that it is no longer an "infinite world," and people no longer eat from the same big pot, but perform their own duty in their own home, playing their own role. This was God's original plan when creating the world; after being separated according to kind, people would "each eat their own meal," meaning that God would commence judgment. As a result, from God's mouth came these words: "I will restore the former state of creation; I will restore everything to the way it originally was, profoundly changing everything, so that everything will return to the bosom of My plan." This is precisely the aim of all God's work, and it is not hard to understand. God will complete His work—could man stand in the way of His work? And could God rip up the covenant established between Him and man? Who could alter what is done by the Spirit of God? Could any man at all do so?

In the past, people grasped a law in God's words: When God's words are spoken, they are soon made real. There is no falsehood in this. Since God has said He shall chastise all peoples, and, furthermore, since He has issued His administrative decrees, it can be seen that God's work has been carried out to a certain stage. The constitution that was issued forth to all people addressed their lives and their attitude toward God. It did not get to the root; it did not say that it was based on God's predestination, but on man's behavior at that time. The administrative decrees of today are extraordinary and they speak of how "all people will be separated according to their own kind, and will receive chastisements commensurate with their actions." Without a close reading, no problem can be found in this. Because it is only during the final age that God separates all things according to their kind, after reading this, most people remain puzzled and confused; they still adopt a lukewarm attitude, not seeing the urgency of the times, and so they do not take this as a warning. Why, at this point, are God's administrative decrees, which are announced to the whole universe, shown to man? Do these people represent all those throughout the universe? Could God, afterward, have more mercy on these people? Have these people grown two heads? When God chastises the people of the entire universe, when all manner of catastrophes strike, changes will occur in the sun and moon as a result of these catastrophes, and, when these catastrophes end, the sun and moon will have been altered—and this is called “the transition.” Suffice to say, the disasters of the future will be grievous. Night might take the place of day, the sun might not appear for a year, there might be several months of searing heat, a waning moon might always face mankind, there might appear the bizarre state of the sun and moon rising together, and so on. Following several cyclical changes, ultimately, with the passage of time, they shall be renewed. God pays special attention to His plans for those who belong to the devil. Thus, He deliberately says, “Of the human beings within the universe, all those belonging to the devil will be exterminated.” Before these “people” have shown their true colors, God always uses them to render service; as a result, He pays no heed to their doings, He gives them no “reward” when they do well, nor does He dock their “wages” when they perform badly. As such, He disregards them and gives them the cold shoulder. He does not suddenly change because of their “goodness,” for, regardless of the time or place, man’s substance does not change, just like the covenant established between God and man, and just like, as man says, “There will be no change even if the seas run dry and the rocks crumble.” Thus, God simply sorts those people according to their kind and does not readily heed them. From the time of creation until today, the devil has never comported itself well. It has always caused interruptions, disturbances, and dissent. When God acts or speaks, the devil always tries to participate, but God takes no notice of it. At the mention of the devil, God’s rage flows forth, insuppressible; because they are not of one spirit, there is therefore no connection, only distance and separation. Following the revelation of the seven seals, the state of the earth grows always worse, and all things “advance shoulder-to-shoulder with the seven seals,” not falling behind in the slightest. Throughout God’s words, people are seen by God as stupefied, yet they do not awaken at all. To reach a higher point, to bring forth the strength of all people, and, moreover, to conclude God’s work at its peak, God asks people a string of questions, as if inflating their bellies, and thus He replenishes all people. Because these people have no real stature, based on the actual circumstances, those who are inflated are goods that are up to standard, while those who are not are useless trash. This is God’s requirement of man, and the aim of the method by which He speaks. In particular, when God says, “Could it be that I, when on earth, am not the same as I am in heaven? Could it be that I, when in heaven, cannot come down to the earth? Could it be that I, when on earth, am unworthy to be borne up to heaven?” these questions serve as a clearer path on which man might know God. From God’s words, God’s urgent will is beheld; people are incapable of attaining it, and God repeatedly adds conditions, thus reminding all people to know the heavenly God on earth, and to know the God who is in heaven but lives on earth.

From God’s words can be seen the states of man: “All mankind spends effort on My words, undertaking investigations of their own into My outward semblance, but they all meet with failure, their efforts bearing no fruit, and instead are struck down by My words and dare not get up again.” Who can understand God’s sorrow? Who can comfort God’s heart? Who accords with God’s heart in what He asks? When people bear no fruit, they deny themselves and truly submit to God’s orchestrations. Gradually, as they show their true heart, each is separated according to their kind, and it is thus seen that the substance of the angels is pure obedience to God. And so, God says, “Humanity is exposed in its original form.” When God’s work reaches this step, it will all have been completed. God appears to say nothing of His being an exemplar for His sons and people, instead focusing on making all people display their original form. Do you understand the true meaning of these words?

Chapter 27

Today, God’s words have reached their pinnacle, which is to say, the second part of the era of judgment has reached its peak. But this is not the highest peak. At this time, God’s tone has changed—it is neither mocking nor humorous, and it is neither chastening nor scolding; God has lightened the tone of His words. Now, God begins to “exchange sentiments” with man. God is both continuing the work of the era of judgment and at the same time opening up the path of the next section of work, so that all sections of His work are intertwined with each other. On the one hand, He speaks of man’s “obduracy and recidivism,” and on the other, He speaks of “the joys and sorrows of being sundered from and then reunited with man”—all of which provoke a reaction in people’s hearts, moving even the most benumbed of human hearts. God’s aim in saying these words is primarily to make all people fall down without a sound before God at the very end, and only afterward “do I make My actions manifest, making everyone know Me through their own failure.” In this period, the people’s knowledge of God remains entirely superficial; it is not true knowledge. Though they try as hard as they can, they are incapable of achieving God’s will. Today, God’s words have reached their zenith, but people remain in the early stages, and are thus incapable of entering into the utterances of the here and now—this shows that God and man are as different as it is possible to be. On the basis of this comparison, when the words of God come to an end, people will only be capable of attaining the lowest standards of God. This is the means by which God works in these people who have been utterly corrupted by the great red dragon, and God must work thus in order to achieve the optimal effect. The people of the churches pay a little more attention to God’s words, but God’s intention is that they might know God in His words—is there not a difference? However, as things stand, God is no longer mindful of man’s weakness, and carries on speaking regardless of whether people are able to accept His words or not. In accordance with His will, when His words end, that will be the time when His work on earth shall be completed. But the work at this time is unlike the past. When God's utterances come to an end, no one will know; when God's work comes to an end, no one will know; and when God's form changes, no one will know. Such is the wisdom of God. To avoid any accusations made by Satan and any interference from hostile forces, God works without anyone knowing, and at this time there is no reaction among the people of earth. Though the signs of God's transfiguration were once spoken of, no one is able to perceive it, for man has forgotten, and he pays no attention to it. Due to attacks from both inside and out—the disasters of the external world and the burning and cleansing of God's words—people are no longer willing to toil for God, because they are too busy with their own affairs. When all people reach a point of denying the knowledge and pursuit of the past, when all people have seen themselves clearly, then they will fail and their own self will no longer have a place in their hearts. Only then will people sincerely long for the words of God, only then will God's words truly have a place in their hearts, and only then will God's words have become the source of their existence—at this moment, God's will shall be fulfilled. But the people of today are a long way from reaching this point. Some of them have barely moved an inch, and thus God says this is “recidivism.”

All of God's words contain many questions. Why does God keep asking such questions? “Why can people not repent and be born again? Why are they forever willing to live in the swamp instead of a place free of mud? ...” In the past, God worked by means of directly pointing things out or direct exposure. But after people had suffered tremendous pain, God no longer spoke in this way directly. Within these questions, people both see their own deficiencies and they grasp the path to practice. Because people all like to eat what is readily available, God speaks as befits their demands, providing them with topics to ponder so that they may ponder them. This is one aspect of the significance of God's questions. Naturally, this is not the significance of some of His other questions, for example: Could it be that I have mistreated them? Could it be that I have pointed them in the wrong direction? Could it be that I am leading them to hell? Questions like these show the notions lodged in the depths of people's hearts. Although their mouths do not give voice to these notions, there is doubt within most of their hearts, and they believe that God's words portray them as totally without merit. Naturally, such people do not know themselves, but ultimately they will admit defeat by God's words—this is inevitable. Following these questions, God also says, “I intend to smash all nations to smithereens, to say nothing of the family of man.” When people accept the name of God, all nations will shake as a result, people will gradually change their mentality, and in families the relationships between father and son, mother and daughter and husband and wife shall cease to exist. Furthermore, the relationships between people in families will become ever more estranged; they will join the great family, and the regular conventions of the lives of almost all families shall be torn apart. Because of this, the concept of “family” in people's hearts will become increasingly obscure.

Why, in God's words of today, has so much been devoted to “exchanging sentiments” with people? Naturally, this is also in order to achieve a certain effect, from which it may be seen that God's heart is filled with anxiety. God says, "When I am sad, who can comfort Me with their hearts?" God says these words because His heart is overcome with grief. People are incapable of giving every care to God's will, and they are always dissolute, they cannot hold themselves in check, and they do as they please; they are too lowly, and they always forgive themselves and are not mindful of God's will. But because people have been corrupted by Satan right up until today, and are incapable of freeing themselves, God says: "How can they escape the jaws of the ravening wolf? How can they free themselves from its threats and its temptations?" People live in the flesh, which is to live in the mouth of the ravenous wolf. Because of this, and because people have no self-awareness and are always indulging themselves and giving in to debauchery, God cannot help but feel anxious. The more God reminds people thus, the better they feel in their hearts, and the more they become willing to engage with God. Only then will man and God relate harmoniously to one another, without any separation or distance between them. Today, all mankind awaits the arrival of God's day, and so mankind has never moved forward. Yet God says: "When the Sun of righteousness appears, the East will be illuminated, and then it will in turn illuminate the whole universe, reaching everyone." In other words, when God changes His form, the East will be illuminated first and the nation of the East will be the first to be supplanted, after which the remaining countries shall be renewed from south to north. This is the order, and all will be in accordance with God's words. Once this phase has finished, all people shall see. It is according to this order that God works. When they behold this day, people will be overjoyed. It can be seen from God's urgent intention that this day is not far off.

In the words spoken here today, the second and third parts provoke tears of anguish in all those who love God. Their hearts are immediately shrouded in shadow, and thenceforth all people are filled with tremendous sorrow because of God's heart. They will feel no comfort until after God finishes His work on earth. This is the general trend. "Anger rises within My heart, accompanied by a surging feeling of sorrow. When My eyes behold people's deeds and their every word and action as filthy, My rage wells up, and in My heart there is a greater sense of the injustices of the human world, which makes Me more sorrowful; I long to end man's flesh right away. I know not why man is incapable of cleansing himself in the flesh, why man cannot love himself in the flesh. Could it be that the 'function' of the flesh is so great?" In God's words today, God has publicly disclosed all of the anxiety within His heart to man, without holding anything back. When the angels of the third heaven play music for Him, God still longs for the people on earth, and it is because of this that He says, "When the angels play music in praise of Me, this cannot but stir up My sympathy for man. My heart is instantly filled with sadness, and it is impossible to rid Myself of this painful emotion." It is for this reason that God says the words: "I will correct the injustices of the human world. I will do My work with My own hands throughout the world, forbidding Satan from harming My people again, forbidding the enemies from doing whatever they please again. I will become King on earth and move My throne there, making all My enemies fall to the ground and confess their crimes before Me.” God’s sadness increases His hatred for devils, and thus He reveals to the masses in advance how the devils will end. This is the work of God. God has always wished to be reunited with all people and to bring the old age to a close. All people throughout the universe are beginning to move—that is to say, all people in the cosmos are entering the guidance of God. As a result, their thoughts turn to revolting against their emperors. Before long, the people of the world will erupt into chaos and the heads of all countries will flee in every direction, ultimately being hauled to the guillotine by their people. This is the final end of the kings of devils; ultimately, none of them will be able to escape, and they all must pass through it. Today, those who are “clever” have begun to step back. Seeing that the situation is not promising, they use this opportunity to back down and escape the hardships of catastrophe. But I say plainly, the work that God does during the last days is chiefly the chastisement of man, so how could these people possibly escape? Today is the first step. One day, everything in the universe shall fall into the tumult of war; the people of earth will never again have leaders, the whole world will be like a pile of loose sand, governed by no one, and people will care only for their own lives, heedless of anyone else, for everything is controlled by God’s hand—this is why God says, “All humanity is breaking up the sundry nations according to My will.” The sounding of angels’ trumpets of which God speaks now are a sign—they are ringing the alarm bell for man, and when the trumpets sound once again, the world’s last day will have arrived. At that time, God’s entire chastisement will befall earth in its entirety; this will be heartless judgment, and the official start of the era of chastisement. Among the Israelites, there will often be God’s voice to lead them through different environments, and so too will the angels appear to them. The Israelites will be made complete in just a few months, and because they will not have to undergo the step of removing themselves from the great red dragon’s venom, it will be easy for them to enter onto the right track under various kinds of guidance. From the developments in Israel can be seen the state of the entire universe, and this shows just how quick the steps of God’s work are. “The time has come! I will put My work in motion, I will reign as King among men!” In the past, God only reigned in heaven. Today, He reigns on earth; God has taken back all of His authority, and so it is foretold that all mankind shall never again live a normal human life, for God shall reorder heaven and earth, and no man is allowed to interfere. Thus, God often reminds man that “the time has come.” When the Israelites have all returned to their country—on the day that the country of Israel has been entirely recovered—God’s great work will be complete. Without anyone realizing, people across the universe will revolt, and nations throughout the universe will fall like the stars in heaven; in an instant, they will collapse in ruins. After dealing with them, God shall build the kingdom beloved of His heart.

Chapter 28

People's state is that the less they understand of God's words, the more skeptical they are of God's current means of working. But this has no effect on God's work; when His words reach a certain point, people's hearts will naturally come around. In their lives, everyone fixates upon God's words, and they also begin to yearn for His words, and because of God's continuous exposure, they begin to despise themselves. Yet God has also uttered many of the following type of words: "When he has thoroughly grasped all of My words, man's stature is commensurate with My wishes, and his pleas are fruitful, and not in vain or futile; I bless the pleas of mankind that are sincere, those that are not a pretense." In fact, people are incapable of completely grasping God's words, they can merely grasp the surface. God merely uses these words to give them an objective to pursue, to make them feel that God does not do things lightly, but is serious about His work; only then will they have the faith to pursue. And because all people only plead for their own sakes, not for the will of God, but God does not blow hot and cold, His words have always been directed at man's nature. Although most people today plead, they are not sincere—it is just a pretense. The state of all people is that "they consider My mouth to be a cornucopia. All people wish to acquire something from My mouth. Whether it be the secrets of state, or the mysteries of heaven, or the dynamics of the spiritual world, or the destination of mankind." Because of their curiosity, people are all willing to search for these things, and do not wish to gain anything of the provision of life from God's words. Thus God says, "Too much is lacking within man: He requires not just 'nutritional supplements,' but more than that, he needs 'mental support' and a 'spiritual supply.'" It is the notions in people that have led to the negativity of today, and it is because their physical eyes are too "feudal" that there is no vigor to what they say and do, and they are perfunctory and slapdash in all things. Are these not the conditions of people? Should people not hurry up and rectify this, rather than carrying on as they are? What benefit is there for man in knowing the future? Why do people have a reaction after reading some of God's words, but the remainder of His words have no effect? When God says, for example, "I provide a cure for man's sickness in order that better effects may be achieved, so that all may be restored to health, and so that, thanks to My cure, they may return to normality," how is it that these words have no effect in people? Is everything done by God not that which ought to be attained by man? God has work to do—why do people not have a path to walk? Is this not running counter to God? There is actually much work that people ought to do—for example, how much do they know of the "great red dragon" in the words "Do you truly hate the great red dragon?" God saying "why have I asked you so many times?" shows that people are still ignorant of the nature of the great red dragon, and that they remain incapable of going deeper. Is this not the very work that man ought to do? How can it be said that man has no work? If that were the case, what would be the significance of God's incarnation? Is God acting in a slapdash and perfunctory manner for the sake of going through the motions? Can the great red dragon be defeated in this way?

God says, "I have already begun, and I will commence the first step of My work of chastisement in the dwelling place of the great red dragon." These words are directed at the work in divinity; the people of today have already entered chastisement in advance, and thus God says this is the first step of His work. He is not making people endure the chastisement of disasters, but the chastisement of words. Because, when the tone of God's words changes, people become totally ignorant, and after that they all enter chastisement. Having undergone chastisement, "you will formally perform your duty, and will formally praise Me throughout the lands, forever and ever!" These are steps in God's work—they are His plan. Moreover, these people of God shall personally behold the methods by which the great red dragon is chastised, so catastrophe officially begins outside of them, in the world around them. This is one of the means by which God saves people. Internally they are chastised, and externally catastrophe crashes down—this is to say, God's words are fulfilled. Thus, people would prefer to undergo chastisement over catastrophe, and it is because of this that they remain. On the one hand, this is the point that God's work has come to; on the other, it is so that people may all know God's disposition. Thus God says, "The time when My people enjoy Me is when the great red dragon is chastised. Causing the people of the great red dragon to rise up and revolt against it is My plan, and this is the method by which I make perfect My people, and it is a great opportunity for all My people to grow in life." Why is it that God speaks these words, and yet they do not attract people's attention?

Countries are in great chaos, because God's rod has begun to play its role on earth. God's work can be seen in the state of the earth. When God says, "The waters will roar, the mountains will topple, the great rivers will disintegrate," this is the rod's initial work on earth, with the result that "all households upon earth will be torn apart, and all nations on earth will be rent asunder; gone will be the days of reunions between husband and wife, no more will mother and son meet again, never again will there be the coming together of father and daughter. All that used to be on earth will be smashed by Me." Such will be the general state of families on earth. Naturally, it could not possibly be the state of all of them, but it is the state of most of them. On the other hand, it is referring to the circumstances experienced by the people of this stream in the future. It foretells that, once they have undergone the chastisement of words and the unbelievers have been subjected to catastrophe, there will no longer be familial relations among the people on earth; they will all be the people of Sinim, and will all be faithful in God's kingdom. Thus, gone will be the days of reunions between husband and wife, no more will mother and son meet again, never again will there be the coming together of father and daughter. And so, the families of people on earth will be torn apart, ripped to pieces, and this will be the final work that God does in man. And because God shall spread this work throughout the universe, He takes the opportunity to clarify the word "emotion" for people, thus allowing them to see that God's will is to tear apart all people's families, and showing that God uses chastisement to resolve all the "family disputes" among mankind. If not, there would be no way of bringing the final part of God's work on earth to a close. The final part of God's words lays bare mankind's greatest weakness—they all live in emotion—and so God does not avoid a single one of them, and exposes the secrets hidden in the hearts of all mankind. Why is it so hard for people to separate themselves from emotion? Does doing so surpass the standards of conscience? Can conscience accomplish God's will? Can emotion help people through adversity? In God's eyes, emotion is His enemy—has this not been clearly stated in God's words?

Of the work done by people, some of it is carried out with direct instruction from God, but there is also a part of it for which God does not provide specific instructions, sufficiently showing that what is done by God has, today, yet to be completely revealed—this is to say, much remains hidden and has yet to become public. However, some things need to be made public, while others need to leave people puzzled and confused; this is what is required by God's work. For example, God's arrival from heaven among man—how He arrived, at what second He arrived, or whether the heavens and earth and all things underwent changes or not—these things require people to be confused. This is also based on actual circumstances, for human flesh itself is incapable of directly entering the spiritual realm. Thus, even if God clearly states how He came from heaven to earth, or when He says, "On the day that all things were resurrected, I came among man, and I have spent wonderful days and nights with him," such words are like someone talking to a tree trunk—there is not the slightest reaction, because people are ignorant of the steps of God's work. Even when they are truly aware, they believe that God flew down to earth from heaven like a fairy and was reborn among man. This is what is attainable by the thoughts of man. It is because the substance of man is such that he is unable to understand the essence of God, and unable to understand the reality of the spiritual realm. By their substance alone, people would be incapable of acting as an exemplar for others, because people are inherently the same, and not different. Thus, asking that people set an example for others to follow or serve as an exemplar becomes a bubble, it becomes steam rising from water. Whereas when God says "gaining some knowledge of what I have and am," these words are merely addressed at the manifestation of the work God does in the flesh; in other words, they are directed at God's true face—divinity, which primarily refers to His divine disposition. That is to say, people are asked to understand things such as why God works in this way, what things are to be accomplished by God's words, what God wishes to achieve on earth, what He wishes to gain among man, the methods by which God speaks, and what God's attitude toward man is. It can be said that there is nothing in man worth boasting about—that is, there is nothing in him that can set an example for others to follow.

It is precisely because of the normality of God in the flesh, and because of the dissimilarity between God in heaven and God in the flesh, who does not seem to be born of God in heaven, that God says, “Many years have I passed among man, yet he has always remained unaware, and has never known Me.” God also says, “When My footsteps tread across the universe and to the ends of the earth, man will begin to reflect upon himself, and all people will come to Me and bow down before Me and worship Me. This will be the day I gain glory, the day of My return, and also the day of My departure.” Only this is the day when God’s true face is shown to man. Yet God does not delay His work as a result, and He simply does the work that ought to be done. When He judges, He condemns people on the basis of their attitude toward God in the flesh. This is one of the main threads of God’s utterances during this period. For example, God says, “I have formally embarked throughout the entire universe upon the finale of My management plan. From this moment onward, any who are not cautious are liable to be plunged amid merciless chastisement, and this could happen at any moment.” This is the content of God’s plan, and it is neither odd nor strange, but all part of the steps of His work. The people and sons of God abroad, meanwhile, are judged by God on the basis of all that they do in the churches, and thus God says, “As I work, all angels embark upon the decisive battle with Me and resolve to fulfill My wishes in the final stage, so that the people on earth yield before Me like the angels, and have no desire to oppose Me, and do nothing that rebels against Me. These are the dynamics of My work throughout the universe.” This is the difference in the work God carries out throughout the earth; He employs different measures according to who they are directed at. Today, the people of the churches all have a yearning heart, and they have begun to eat and drink the words of God—this is enough to show that God’s work is approaching its end. Looking down from the sky is akin to once more looking upon dreary scenes of withered branches and fallen leaves, of loess blown by the autumn wind. It feels like an apocalypse is about to occur among man, as if all is about to be turned to desolation. Maybe because of the sensitivity of the Spirit, there is always a sense of unhappiness in the heart, yet bearing a sliver of tranquil comfort, though mixed with some sorrow. This may be the depiction of God’s words that “man is awakening, everything on earth is in order, and the days of survival of the earth are no more, for I have arrived!” People may become somewhat negative after hearing these words, or they may be a little disappointed with God’s work, or they may focus much on the feeling in their spirit. But prior to the completion of His work on earth, God could not possibly be so foolish as to give people such an illusion. If you truly have such feelings, then it shows you pay too much attention to your feelings, that you are someone who does as they please and does not love God; it shows that such people focus too much on the supernatural, and pay no heed to God at all. Because of the hand of God, no matter how people try to get away, they are incapable of escaping this circumstance. Who can escape the hand of God? When have your status and circumstances not been arranged by God? Whether you suffer or are blessed, how could you sneak away from the hand of God? This is not a human matter, but rather is entirely about God's need—who would be capable of not obeying as a result of this?

“I will use chastisement to spread My work among the Gentiles, which is to say, I will use force against all those who are Gentiles. Naturally, this work will be carried out at the same time as My work among the chosen ones.” With the utterance of these words, God embarks upon this work throughout the universe. This is a step of God's work, which has already progressed to this point; no one can turn things around. Catastrophe will take care of one portion of mankind, causing them to perish along with the world. When the universe is officially chastised, God officially appears to all peoples. And because of His appearance, people are chastised. Furthermore, God also said, “When I formally open the scroll, that is when people throughout the universe are chastised, when people all over the world are subjected to trials.” From this, it can be seen clearly that the content of the seven seals is the content of the chastisement, which is to say, there is catastrophe within the seven seals. Thus, today, the seven seals have yet to be opened; the “trials” referred to here are the chastisement suffered by man, and amidst this chastisement, a group of people will be gained who officially accept the “certificate” issued by God, and thus they will be the people in God's kingdom. These are the origins of the sons and people of God, and today they have yet to be decided, and are merely laying the foundation for future experiences. If someone has the true life, they will be able to stand firm during trials, and if they are without the life, then this sufficiently proves that God's work has had no effect on them, that they fish in troubled waters, and do not focus on God's words. Because this is the work of the last days, which is to bring this age to an end instead of carrying on the work, thus God says, “In other words, it is the life that man has never experienced from the time of creation until the present day, and so I say that I have done work that has never been done before,” and He also says, “Because My day draws near to all mankind, because it does not appear distant but is right before man's eyes.” In times past, God personally destroyed several cities, yet none of them were razed in the same way as what will happen in the final instance. Although in the past God destroyed Sodom, the Sodom of today is not to be treated as in times past—it is not to be destroyed directly, but first it shall be conquered and then judged, and, ultimately, subjected to everlasting punishment. These are the steps of the work, and in the end, the Sodom of today shall be annihilated in the same sequence as the past destruction of the world—this is God's plan. The day on which God appears is the day of official condemnation of the present-day Sodom, and His revelation of Himself is not for the sake of saving it. Thus, God says, “I appear to the holy kingdom, and hide Myself from the land of filth.” Because the Sodom of today is impure, God does not truly appear to it, but uses this means to chastise it—have you not seen this clearly? It can be said that no one on earth is capable of seeing God's true face. God has never appeared to man, and no one knows in which level of heaven God is. This is what has allowed the people of today to be in this circumstance. If they were to behold the face of God, that would surely be the time in which their end would be revealed, the time when each is classed according to kind. Today, the words from within divinity are directly shown to people, which foretells that the last days of mankind have arrived, and will not last for much longer. This is one of the signs of people's subjection to trials at the time when God appears to all people. Thus, although people enjoy God's words, they always have an ominous feeling, as if a great calamity is about to befall them. The people of today are like sparrows in frozen lands, on whom it is as if death forces repayment of a debt and leaves them with no way to survive. Because of the debt of death owed by man, people all feel that their last days have arrived. This is what is happening in the hearts of people across the universe, and although it is not revealed on their faces, what is in their hearts is incapable of hiding from My eyes—this is the reality of man. Perhaps, many of the words are not used entirely properly—but it is these very words that are sufficient to show the problem. Every one of the words spoken from God's mouth shall be fulfilled, whether they be of the past or the present; they shall make the facts appear before people—a feast for their eyes—at which time they will become dazzled and confused. Have you still not clearly seen what age it is today?

Chapter 30

Some people may have a little insight into God's words, but none of them trust their feelings; they are deeply afraid of falling into negativity. Thus, they have always alternated between joy and sorrow. It is fair to say that the lives of all people are filled with grief; to take this a step further, there is refinement in the daily lives of all people, yet I can say that no one gains any release in their spirits each day, and it is as if three great mountains are pressing down on their heads. Not one of their lives are happy and joyous all day long—and even when they are a little happy, they are simply trying to keep up appearances. In their hearts, people always have a sense of something unfinished. Thus, they are not steadfast in their hearts; living in this way, things feel empty and unfair, and when it comes to the belief in God, they are busy and are short of time, or else they do not have the time to eat and drink God's words, or do not know how to eat and drink God's words properly. Not one of them is at peace, lucid, and steadfast in their hearts. It is as if they have always lived beneath an overcast sky, as if they live in a space without oxygen, and this has led to the confusion in their lives. God always speaks straight to people's weaknesses, He always strikes them at their Achilles' heel—have you not clearly seen the tone with which He has spoken throughout? God has never given people the opportunity to repent, and He makes all people live on the “moon” without oxygen. From the beginning until today, outwardly God's words have exposed the nature of man, yet no one can clearly see the essence of these words. It appears that by exposing the substance of man, people come to know themselves and thus come to know God, yet this is not the path in essence. The tone and greater depth of God's words show a clear difference between God and man. In their feelings, this makes people unconsciously believe that God is unreachable and unapproachable; God brings everything out into the open, and it seems that no one is capable of returning the relationship between God and man to how it used to be. It is not hard to see that the aim of all God's utterances is to use words to "topple" all people, thereby accomplishing His work. These are the steps of God's work. Yet this is not what people believe in their minds. They believe that God's work is approaching its climax, that it is approaching its most discernible effect so as to conquer the great red dragon, which is to say, making the churches thrive, with no one having notions about God incarnate, or else all people knowing God. Yet let us read what God says: "In people's minds, God is God, and is not easily engaged with, while man is man, and should not easily become dissolute. ... As a result, they are always humble and patient before Me; they are incapable of being compatible with Me, for they have too many notions." From this it can be seen that, regardless of what God says or what man does, people are totally incapable of knowing God; because of the role played by their substance, no matter what, they are, at the end of the day, incapable of knowing God. Thus, God's work will end when people see themselves as the sons of hell. There is no need for God to unleash His wrath on people, or to condemn them directly, or to ultimately sentence them to death in order to conclude His entire management. He merely engages in small talk at His own pace, as if the completion of His work is incidental, something accomplished in His spare time without the slightest effort. From the outside, there appears to be some urgency to God's work—yet God has not done anything, He does nothing but speak. The work among the churches is not of the same great scale as in times gone by: God does not add people, or expel them, or lay them bare—such work is too trivial. It seems as if God is of no mind to do such work. He merely says a little of what He ought to, after which He turns around and disappears without trace—which, naturally, is the scene of the completion of His utterances. And when this moment arrives, all people shall awake from their slumber. Mankind has been in lethargic slumber for thousands of years, he has been in a sopor throughout. And for many years, people have been rushing hither and thither in their dreams, and they even cry out in their dreams, incapable of speaking of the injustice within their hearts. Thus, they "feel a little melancholy in their hearts"—but when they awaken, they shall discover the true facts, and exclaim: "So this is what's going on!" Thus it is said that "Today, most people are still fast asleep. Only when the kingdom anthem sounds do they open their sleepy eyes and feel a little melancholy in their hearts."

No one's spirit has ever been liberated, never has anyone's spirit been carefree and happy. When God's work is completely finished, people's spirits will be liberated, for each will have been classed according to kind, and thus they will all be steadfast in their hearts. It is as if people are on some voyage to far-flung parts and their hearts become steadfast when they return home. Upon arriving home, people will no longer feel that the world is empty and unfair, but will live in peace in their homes. Such will be the circumstances among all mankind. Thus, God says that “people have never been able to free themselves from Satan’s bondage.” No one is able to extricate themselves from this state whilst in the flesh. For the moment, let us put aside what God says about the various actual states of man, and talk only of the mysteries that God has yet to reveal to man. “Countless times have people looked at Me with mocking eyes, as if My body were covered in thorns and loathsome to them, and thus people abhor Me, and believe that I am without worth.” Contrariwise, in essence, man’s true colors are revealed in God’s words: Man is covered in quills, there is nothing pleasing about him, and thus God’s hatred for man increases, for man is nothing but a spine-covered hedgehog that has nothing admirable about it. Superficially, these words appear to describe man’s notions toward God—but in reality, God is painting a picture of man based on his image. These words are God’s delineation of man, and it is as if God has sprayed a fixative upon the image of man; thus, man’s image stands tall in the universe, and even astonishes people. From when He began to speak, God has been positioning His forces for a great battle with man. He is like a university algebra professor laying out the facts for man, and what is proved by the facts that He lists—the evidence and counter evidence—makes all people utterly convinced. This is the aim of all God’s words, and it is because of this that God casually tosses these mystifying words at man: “I am, in sum, utterly without value in man’s heart, I am a dispensable household item.” After reading these words, people cannot help but say a prayer in their hearts, and they come to know their indebtedness to God, which makes them condemn themselves, makes them believe that man ought to die, and is without the slightest worth. God says, “It is because of this that I find Myself in the situation I am in today,” which, when connected to the actual circumstances of today, causes people to condemn themselves. Is this not fact? If you were made to know yourself, could words like “I truly should die!” come from your mouth? Such are the true circumstances of man, and this is not worth thinking about too much—it is merely a fitting example.

In one sense, when God begs for man’s forgiveness and tolerance, people see that God is making fun of them, and in another sense, they also behold their own rebelliousness—they are just waiting for God to exert Himself to the utmost for man. Besides, speaking of people’s notions, God says He is not proficient in man’s philosophy for living or the language of man. Thus, in one regard this makes people compare these words to the practical God, and in another, they see God’s intention in His words—God is mocking them, for they understand that God is revealing the true face of man, and He is not really telling people about the true circumstances of God. The inherent meaning of God’s words is suffused with ridicule, sarcasm, mockery, and hatred toward man. It is as if, in all he does, man is perverting the law and taking bribes; people are whores, and when God opens His mouth to speak, they tremble in terror, profoundly afraid that the truth about them will be thoroughly exposed, leaving them too ashamed to face anybody. But facts are facts. God does not cease His utterances because of man's "repentance"; the more unspeakably ashamed and embarrassed beyond words people become, the more God fixes His burning gaze upon their faces. The words from His mouth lay all of man's ugly deeds on the table—this is being just and impartial, this is called Qingtian,<sup>a</sup> this is judgment from the highest court of the people. Thus, when people read God's words, they are suddenly struck by a heart attack, their blood pressure rises, it is as if they are suffering from coronary heart disease, as if an apoplexy is about to send them back to the western paradise to meet with their ancestors—this is the reaction when they read God's words. Man is made infirm by years of hard labor, he is sick inside and out, all of him is ill, from his heart to his blood vessels, large intestine, small intestine, stomach, lungs, kidneys, and so on. Nothing in his entire body is healthy. Thus, God's work does not reach a level unattainable to man, but causes people to know themselves. Because man's body is beset by viruses, and because he has grown old, the day of his death draws near, and there is no way back. But this is only part of the story; the inner meaning has yet to be revealed, for the source of man's illness is being sought. In reality, the time when the entirety of God's work is completed is not the time when His work on earth is completed, for once this step of work is finished, there will be no way of carrying out the work of the future in the flesh, and the Spirit of God will be required to complete it. Thus, God says, "When I formally open the scroll, that is when people throughout the universe are chastised, the time when My work reaches its climax, when people all over the world are subjected to trials." The time when the work in the flesh is finished is not when God's work reaches its climax—the climax of this time merely refers to the work during this stage, and is not the climax of the entire management plan. Thus, God's requirements of man are not high. He merely asks that people know themselves, thus serving the next step of work, in which God's will shall have been achieved. As God's work changes, people's "work unit" alters. Today is the stage of God's work on earth, and thus they must work at the grassroots. In the future, it will be necessary to administer the nation, and thus they will be reassigned to the "Central Committee." If they visit abroad, they will have to deal with procedures for going overseas. At such times they will be overseas, far from their homeland—but this will still be because of the requirements of God's work. As people have said, "We will lay down our lives for God when necessary"—is this not the path that shall be walked in the future? Who has ever enjoyed such a life? One can travel all over, visit overseas, provide guidance in the countryside, assimilate themselves among the common people, and they can also talk of the important matters of the nation with members of high-level organizations; and when necessary, they can personally taste life in hell, after which they can return and still be able to enjoy the heavenly blessings—are these not the blessings of man? Who has ever compared to God? Who has ever traveled throughout all nations? In fact, people would be able to understand a little of some of God’s words without any pointers or explanations—it is just that they have no faith in themselves, which is what has stretched God’s work out until today. Because people lack too much—as God said, “they have nothing”—the work of today poses tremendous difficulties to them; what is more, their weakness has, naturally, constrained God’s mouth—and are these things not precisely what is hindering God’s work? Can you still not see this? There is hidden meaning in all that God says. When God speaks, He seizes upon the issue at hand, and like a fable, all of the words He speaks contain profound message. These simple words contain profound meaning, and thus explain important issues—is this not what God’s words are best at? Do you know this?

Chapter 31

The disposition of God runs through all of God’s utterances, but the main thread of His words is revealing the rebellion of all mankind and exposing things such as their disobedience, insubordination, unfairness, unrighteousness, and inability to truly love God, such that God’s words have reached the point where He says that every pore in people’s bodies contains opposition to God, that even their capillaries contain defiance to God. If people do not try to examine these things, they will always be incapable of knowing them, and will never be able to cast them aside. This is to say, the virus that is opposition to God will spread in them and ultimately, it will be as if their white blood cells have devoured their red blood cells, leaving their entire body devoid of red blood cells; in the end, they will die from leukemia. This is the real state of man, and no one can deny it. Having been born in the land in which the great red dragon lies coiled, there is at least one thing within each person that typifies and exemplifies the great red dragon’s venom. Thus, in this stage of work, the main thread throughout God’s words has been knowing oneself, denying oneself, forsaking oneself, and slaying oneself. It can be said that this is God’s primary work during the last days, and that this round of work is the most comprehensive and thorough of all—this shows that God is planning to bring the age to an end. No one expected this, but at the same time, it is something that they have anticipated in their feelings. Although God did not say so explicitly, people’s senses are highly acute—they always feel that time is short. I can say that the more a person feels this, the more he has a clear knowledge of the age. It is not seeing the world as normal and thus negating God’s words; rather, it is knowing the content of God’s work through the means by which God works. This is determined by the tone of God’s words. There is a secret to the tone of God’s utterances which no one has discovered, and it is also precisely this that is most difficult for people to enter into. The crux of why people cannot understand God’s words is that they remain ignorant of the tone with which God speaks—if they master this secret, they will be capable of some knowledge of God’s words. God’s words have always followed one principle: causing people to know that God’s words are everything, and resolving all man’s difficulties through God’s words. From the perspective of the Spirit, God makes His deeds plain; from the perspective of man, He exposes people’s notions; from the perspective of the Spirit, He says man is not mindful of His will; and from the perspective of man, He says He has tasted the sweet, sour, bitter, and pungent flavors of human experience, and He comes in the wind and goes with the rain, that He has experienced the persecution of family, and has experienced the ups and downs of life. These are words spoken from different perspectives. When He speaks to the people of God, it is like a housekeeper telling off slaves, or like a comedy sketch; His words leave people red-faced, with nowhere to hide from their shame, as if they have been detained by the feudal authorities of a bygone regime to give a confession under severe torture. When He speaks to the people of God, God is as unrestrained as protesting university students who expose scandals within the central government. If all of God’s words were mocking, they would be harder for people to accept; thus, the words spoken by God are straightforward; they do not contain ciphers for man, but directly point out the actual state of man—this shows that God’s love of man is not just words, but that it is real. Though people value realness, there is nothing real about their love for God. This is what is lacking in man. If people’s love for God is not real, then the entirety of everything will be empty and illusionary, as if all would disappear because of this. If their love of God surpasses the universes, then so too will their status and identity be real, and not empty, and even these words will be real and not empty—do you see this? Have you seen God’s requirements for man? Man should not merely enjoy the benefits of status, but live out the reality of status. This is what God asks of the people of God and of all of man, and this is not some grand empty theory.

Why does God say this type of words, “as if all I do is an attempt to please them, as a result of which they are always disgusted by My doings”? Are you able to speak of the real manifestations of man’s loathing of God? In people’s notions, man and God are “passionately in love,” and today, people’s yearning for God’s words has reached the point that they eagerly wish to swallow God in one gulp—yet God says the following kind of words: “Man despises Me. Why has My love been repaid with man’s hate?” Is this not a mineral deposit within people? Is this not what should be dug out? This is the defect with people’s pursuit; it is a major issue that ought to be solved, and it is the lion that stands in the way of man’s knowledge of God and which must be dispelled for man—is this not what ought to be done? Because, like a pig, man has no memory and always covets pleasures, God gives man medicine for amnesia—He speaks more, says more, and He grabs people by the ears and makes them listen closely, and He fits them with hearing aids. As for some of His words, speaking only once cannot solve the problem; they must be said over and over again, for “people always suffer forgetfulness in their lives, and the days of the lives of all mankind are in disarray.” In this way, people can be saved from the state in which “they read when they have time, listen when they are free, and leave them alone when they do not have time; if the words are spoken today, they pay attention, but they will put them to the back of their minds, if they are not spoken tomorrow.” As far as people’s nature is concerned, if today God spoke of their real state and they came to have a thorough knowledge of it, then they would be filled with regret—but afterward, they would go back to their old ways, casting God’s words to the winds and replaying the scene described above only when reminded. Thus, when you work or speak, do not forget this substance of man; it would be a mistake to cast aside this substance while working. In doing all work, it is especially important to address people’s notions when you speak. In particular, you should add your own insights to God’s words and commune them. This is the path of providing to people and allowing them to know themselves. In providing to people based on the content of God’s words, it will inevitably become possible to grasp their real state. In God’s words, it is enough to grasp man’s real state and thus provide for them—and as such, I shall say no more of God’s words pointing out that “God accepted the invitation to sit at a banquet table on earth.”

Chapter 32

God’s words leave people scratching their heads; it is as if, when He speaks, God is shunning man and speaking to the air, as if He has no thought at all to pay any more attention to man’s deeds and is totally heedless of man’s stature, as if the words He speaks are not directed at people’s notions, but shun man in accordance with God’s original intention. For myriad reasons, God’s words are ungraspable and impenetrable to man. This is no surprise. The original aim of all God’s words is not for people to gain know-how or learn tricks from them; instead, they are one of the means by which God has worked from the start until today. Of course, people do gain things from God’s words: things related to mysteries, or things concerning Peter, Paul, and Job—but this is what they ought to attain and what they are capable of attaining, and, as befits their stature, they have already gone as far as they can in attaining these things. Why is it that the effect that God asks to be achieved is not high, yet He has spoken so many words? This is connected to the chastisement of which He speaks, and naturally, it is all achieved without people realizing. Today, people endure greater suffering under the attacks of God’s words. Superficially, none of them seem to have been dealt with, people have begun to be set free in doing their work, and the service-doers have been elevated to the people of God—in this, it appears to people that they have entered into enjoyment. In fact, the reality is that, from refinement, they have all entered into more severe chastisement. Just as God says, “The steps of My work are closely linked one to the next, each one ever higher.” God has raised the service-doers out of the bottomless pit and cast them into the lake of fire and brimstone, where chastisement is more grievous. Thus, they suffer even greater hardship, from which they are barely able to escape. Is such chastisement not more grievous? Having entered a higher realm, why is it that people feel sorrow rather than any happiness? Why is it said that, having been delivered from the hands of Satan, they are given to the great red dragon? Do you remember when God said, “The last part of the work is completed in the home of the great red dragon”? Do you recall when God said, “The final hardship is bearing strong, resounding testimony for God before the great red dragon”? If people were not given to the great red dragon, how could they bear testimony before it? Who has ever said words such as “I have defeated the devil” after killing themselves? Seeing their own flesh as their enemy, and then killing themselves—where is the practical significance of this? Why did God speak thus? “I do not look at people’s scars, but at the part of them that is unscarred, and from this I gain gratification.” If it were true that God wishes for those who are without scars to be His expression, why would He have patiently and earnestly spoken so many words from the perspective of man to strike back against people’s notions? Why would He concern Himself with that? Why would He go to the unnecessary trouble of doing such a thing? Thus it is shown that there is real significance to God’s incarnation, that He would not “write off” the flesh after becoming flesh and completing His work. Why is it said that “gold can’t be pure and man can’t be perfect”? How can these words be explained? When God speaks about man’s substance, what do His words mean? To people’s naked eyes, the flesh appears incapable of anything, or else it appears all too lacking. To God’s eyes, this is not important at all—yet to people, it is an issue of enormous importance. It is as if they are utterly incapable of resolving this, as if it must be personally handled by a heavenly body—is this not a human notion? “In people’s eyes, I am but a ‘little star’ that has descended from the sky, a little star in heaven, and My arrival on earth today was commissioned by God. As a result, people have come up with more interpretations of the words ‘Me’ and ‘God.’” Since humans amount to nothing, why does God reveal their notions from different perspectives? Could this also be the wisdom of God? Are such words not ridiculous? As God says, “Although there is a place I have established in people’s hearts, they do not require that I reside there. Instead, they wait for the ‘Holy One’ in their hearts to suddenly arrive. Because My identity is too ‘lowly,’ I do not match up to people’s demands and am thus cast out by them.” Because people’s estimation of God is “too high,” many things are “unattainable” to God, which puts Him “in difficulty.” Little do people know that what they ask God to be capable of is their notions. Is this not the actual meaning of “A clever person may become the victim of his own ingenuity”? This is truly a case of “smart as a rule, but this time a fool”! In your preaching, you ask that people dispense with the God of their notions, but has the God of your notions gone away? How can God’s words that “the demands I make of man are by no means great” be interpreted? They are not to make people negative and dissolute, but to give them a pure understanding of God’s words—do you understand? Is God incarnate really the “‘Me’ that is high and mighty” as people imagine?

Although there are those who have read all the words spoken by God and can provide a general outline of them, who is able to speak of what God's ultimate aim is? This is what mankind lacks. Regardless of from what perspective God speaks, His overall aim is to make people know the God in the flesh. If there were nothing of humanity in Him—if all He has were the attributes of the God in heaven—then there would be no need for God to say so much. It can be said that what people lack serves as first-hand materials that correlate with God's words. This is to say, what is manifested in man is the background to what God says about people's notions, and thus, people serve the utterances of God. Naturally, this is based on what God says about people's notions—only in this way can this be said to be the combination of theory and reality; only then can people more effectively be made to be serious about knowing themselves. What would be the point if the God in the flesh were compatible with people's notions and if God also testified of Him? It is precisely because of this that God works from the negative side, using people's notions to highlight His great power. Is this not the wisdom of God? All that God does for everyone is good—so why not give praise at this time? If things reached a certain point, or if the day came, would you, like Peter, be able to utter prayers from deep within yourself amid trials? Only if, like Peter, you are still able to praise God when in Satan's hands will there be the true meaning of "being released from Satan's bondage, overcoming the flesh, and overcoming Satan." Is this not a more real testimony for God? Only this is the effect achieved by "divinity coming forth to act and the sevenfold intensified Spirit working in man," and so, too, is it the effect achieved by "the Spirit coming out from the flesh." Are such actions not real? You used to pay attention to reality, but do you have true knowledge of reality today? "The demands I make of man are by no means great, yet people believe otherwise. Thus, their 'humility' is revealed in their every move. They are always liable to walk before Me, leading the way for Me, profoundly afraid that I will get lost, terrified that I will wander into the ancient forests deep within the mountains. As a result, people have always led Me onward, deeply fearful that I will walk into the dungeon." What is your knowledge of these simple words—are you truly able to grasp the roots of God's words in them? Have you paid attention to which of your notions God has spoken such words about? Do you put your attention on this key point every day? In a sentence of the next part, which follows closely after, God says, "Yet people are unknowing of My will and keep praying for things from Me, as if what I have bestowed upon them are incapable of meeting their requirements, as if demand outstrips supply." In this sentence, it can be seen what the notions within you are. God does not remember or investigate what you did in times gone by, so think no more of matters of the past. Of greater importance is whether you are able to create "the spirit of Peter in the final age" in the path of the future—do you have the faith to attain this? What God asks of man is nothing more than the emulation of Peter, that people might ultimately forge a path to bring shame upon the great red dragon. It is because of this that God says, "I hope only that people have the resolve to cooperate with Me. I do not ask that they cook Me nice food, or that they arrange somewhere suitable for Me to lay My head....” In the world, people are asked to bring the “spirit of Lei Feng” into the 1990s, but in the house of God, God asks that you create “the unique style of Peter.” Do you understand God’s will? Are you truly able to strive for this?

“I move above the universes, and as I walk I observe the people of the entire universe. Amongst the throngs of people on earth, never have there been any who are suitable for My work or who truly love Me. Thus, at this moment I sigh in dismay, and people immediately disperse, to assemble no more, deeply fearful that I will ‘catch them all in one net.’” Most people, perhaps, find these words very difficult to understand. They ask why God does not ask much of man, yet sighs in dismay because there are none who are fit for His work. Is there a contradiction here? Literally speaking, there is, but in reality there is no contradiction. Perhaps you can still recall when God said, “All of My words shall have the effect that I desire.” When God works in the flesh, people fixate upon His every action to see what exactly He is going to do. When God carries out His new work targeting Satan in the spiritual realm, there are, in other words, produced all manner of notions among the people on earth because of the God in the flesh. When God sighs in dismay—that is, when He speaks of all man’s notions, people try their utmost to deal with them, and there are even those who believe they are without hope, for God says that all those who have notions about Him are His enemies—and so how could people not “disperse” because of this? Particularly today, when chastisement has arrived, people are even more fearful that God will wipe them away. They believe that after they are chastised, God will “catch them all in one net.” Yet the facts are not thus: As God says, “I do not wish to ‘detain’ people amid My chastisement so that they may never escape. Because My management lacks the deeds of man, it is not possible to successfully complete My work, which prevents My work from proceeding effectively.” God’s will is not for His work to end once all people are put to death—what would be the point of that? By working in people and chastising them, God then makes plain His deeds through them. Because people have never grasped that there is already chastisement in the tone of God’s words, they have never had any entry in their consciousness. People are incapable of expressing their resolve, and thus God cannot say anything before Satan, and this prevents God’s work from moving forward. Thus God says, “I once invited man as a guest to My house, yet he ran hither and thither because of My calls—as if, rather than inviting him as a guest, I had brought him to the execution ground. Thus, My house was left empty, for man always shunned Me, and was always on his guard against Me. This left Me with no means of carrying out part of My work.” It is because of man’s mistakes in his work that God clearly puts forward His requirements of man. And it is because people fail to accomplish this step of work that God adds more utterances—this is precisely the “another part of work on man” that God speaks of. But I will not talk at length about the “catching them all in one net” of which God speaks, because this has little bearing on the work of today. Naturally, in “God’s Words to the Entire Universe,” many of His words deal with man—but people must understand God’s will; regardless of what He says, His intentions are always good. It can be said that because the means by which God speaks are so many, people are not one hundred percent certain about God's words, and believe that most of God's words are spoken because of the necessities of His work, and contain little that is real. This leaves them addled and weighed down by their thoughts—for in their notions, God is so wise, and so totally beyond their reach, it is as if they know nothing and are clueless about how to eat God's words. People make God's words abstract and complex—as God says, “People always wish to add flavoring to My utterances.” Because their ideas are too complicated, and “barely attainable” by God, part of God's words are constrained by man, leaving Him no choice but to speak in a manner that is straightforward. Because people's demands are “too high,” and because their imagination is too rich—as if they are able to cross over into the spiritual realm to behold the deeds of Satan—this has lessened God's words, for the more that God says, the more melancholy people's faces grow. Why can they not simply obey, instead of contemplating their end? Where is the benefit in this?

Chapter 33

In truth, based on what God has done in people, and on what He has given them, as well as that which people are possessed of, it can be said that His requirements of people are not excessive, that He does not ask much of them. How, then, could they not try to satisfy God? God gives one hundred percent to man, yet He only requires of people a fraction of a percent—is this asking too much? Is God making trouble out of nothing? Often, people do not know themselves; they do not examine themselves before God, and so there are often times when they become ensnared—how could this be considered cooperating with God? If there were ever a time when God did not place a heavy burden upon people, they would crumble like mud, and would not take it upon themselves to find things to do. That is how people are—either passive or negative, ever incapable of actively cooperating with God, always looking for a negative reason to give in to themselves. Are you truly someone who does everything not for yourself, but to satisfy God? Are you truly someone who does not rely upon emotions, who does not have their own personal preferences, and who fulfills the needs of God's work? “Why do people always try to bargain with Me? Am I the general manager of a trade center? Why is it that I wholeheartedly fulfill what people demand of Me, yet what I ask of man comes to nothing?” Why does God ask such things several times in succession? Why does He cry out in dismay thus? God has gained nothing in people; all He sees is the work that they pick and choose. Why does God say “yet what I ask of man comes to nothing”? Ask yourselves: From start to finish, who can do the work which is their duty to do, work over which they have absolutely no choice? Who does not act by virtue of the feelings within their hearts? People give free rein to their personality, never persevering in what they do, as if fishing for three days, and then abandoning their nets and spending the next two days idle. They blow hot and cold by turns: When they are hot, they are able to incinerate all things on earth, and when they are cold, they are capable of freezing all the waters upon the earth. This is not the function of man, yet this is the most appropriate analogy about man's state. Is this not fact? Perhaps I have "notions" about people, perhaps I am vilifying them—but regardless, "with the truth you will walk the entire world; without the truth, you will get nowhere." Though this is a human aphorism, I think it apt to use here. I am not deliberately dampening people's spirits and negating their deeds. Let Me consult you on some questions: Who sees God's work as the work of their own duty? Who can say, "As long as I am able to satisfy God, I will give my all"? Who is able to say, "Regardless of others, I will do all that God needs, and no matter whether the duration of God's work is long or short, I shall fulfill my duty; bringing His work to an end is God's business, and it is not something I occupy myself thinking about"? Who is capable of such knowledge? It matters not what you think—maybe you have higher insights, in which case I acquiesce, I admit defeat—yet I must tell you that what God wants is a loyal heart, one that is sincere and passionate, not a wolf's heart that is ungrateful. What do you know of this "bargaining"? From beginning to end, you have "traveled the world." One moment you are in the city of "Kunming," with its eternal spring, and in the blink of an eye you have arrived in the oppressively cold, snow-covered "South Pole." Who has never gone back on themselves? What God asks for is a spirit of "No rest unto death"; what He wants is a spirit in which people "do not turn back until they hit the south wall." Naturally, God's intention is not for people to take the wrong path, but to adopt such a spirit. Just as God says, "When I compare the 'gifts' they have given to My things, people instantly recognize My preciousness, and only then do they see My immeasurability." How can these words be explained? Perhaps, reading the words above gives you some knowledge, for God takes out the whole of man's heart for dissection, at which time people come to know these words. But because of the profound inner meaning of God's words, people remain unclear about the old flesh, for they have not studied at a medical university, and nor are they archaeologists, and so they feel that this new term is incomprehensible—and only then do they yield a little. For people are powerless before the old flesh; though it is not like a ferocious beast, nor capable of obliterating mankind like an atomic bomb, they do not know what to do with it, and it is as if they are powerless. But for Me, there are ways of dealing with the old flesh. Man's never making any effort to think of a countermeasure has led to the various peculiarities of man flashing constantly before My eyes; just as God said: "When I show My entirety to them, they look upon Me with wide eyes, standing before Me motionless, like a pillar of salt. And when I behold their oddness, I can hardly stop Myself from laughing. Because they are reaching out to ask for things from Me, I give them the things in My hand, and they hold them to their breast, cherishing them like a newborn baby, a motion they engage in but momentarily." Are these not the actions of the old flesh? Given that people have understanding today, why do they not relinquish, and instead still keep on? In fact, part of God's requirements is not unattainable by man, yet people pay it no heed, for "I do not chastise man lightly. It is for this reason that people have always given free rein to their flesh. They do not observe My will, but have ever wheedled Me before My seat of judgment." Is this not the stature of man? It is not that God is deliberately nitpicking, but that this is reality—must God explain this? Just as God says, "It is because people's 'faith' is so great that they are 'admirable.'" For this reason, I obey God's arrangements, and so I do not say much of this; because of people's "faith," I seize on this, making use of their faith to cause them to perform their function without Me reminding them. Is it wrong to do this? Is this not precisely what God needs? Perhaps, upon hearing such words, some people might feel fed up—so I shall speak of something else, to cut them a little slack. When all of God's chosen people throughout the universe pass through chastisement, and when the state within man is rectified, people will secretly rejoice in their hearts, as if they have escaped tribulation. At this moment, people will no longer choose for themselves, for this is exactly the effect achieved during God's final work. With His steps having progressed unto today, God's sons and people have all entered chastisement, and the Israelites, too, cannot escape this phase, for people are tainted by impurity within themselves, and so God leads all people to enter the great smelting furnace for refinement, which is a necessary path. Once this has passed, people will be resurrected from death, which is precisely what God foretold in "the utterances of the seven Spirits." I shall speak no more of this, so as not to antagonize people. Because God's work is wondrous, the prophecies spoken from God's mouth must ultimately be achieved; when God asks that people speak of their notions once again, they are dumbfounded, and so no one should be worried or anxious. Just as I said, "Of all My work, was there ever a step carried out by the hands of man?" Do you understand the essence of these words?

Chapter 35

At present, all humans, to differing degrees, have entered into chastisement. Just as God said, "I go forth with man side by side." This is absolutely true, yet people are still unable to understand this point fully. As a result, part of the work they have done has been unnecessary. God said, "I support and provide for them in accordance with their stature. Because humans are the central characters of My entire management plan, I give more guidance to those who have been cast in the role of 'human,' so that they may play that role wholeheartedly and to the best of their ability," as well as, "However, I refuse to criticize their consciences directly; rather, I continue to guide them patiently and systematically. After all, humans are weak, and unable to do any work." God's thinking is this: Even if He were to exterminate all these humans in the end, His work on earth would still continue in accordance with His original plan. God does not do useless work; all that God does is good. As Peter said, “Even if God were playing with humans as if they were toys, what complaint would humans have? What right would they have?” In the present day, is this not what God is achieving with humanity? Can humans really have such a view? Why was Peter, who lived several thousand years ago, able to say such a thing, while the “Peters” of today, who live in this high-tech, modernized era, cannot? I am unable to say for sure whether history is progressing or regressing, and no one can yet answer the question of whether science is moving forward or backward. Everything God has done in humanity has been meant to make them positive and allow their life to mature. Can people not comprehend this? Everything that causes you to be negative is a weakness of yours, a vital point of vulnerability that Satan will attack. Do you see this clearly? Why did God speak this way? “I implore of mankind in all earnestness and sincerity. Are they truly unable to do what I ask?” What do these words mean? Why did God ask this question? It shows that humanity has too many negative aspects, and a single negative factor is enough to cause humans to stumble. You might as well have a look and see what remaining negative will bring. All that God does, He does for the sake of perfecting humanity. Do these words require any further explanation? No—as I see it, there is no need! It may be said that humans have been possessed by Satan, but it would be much better to say that humans have been possessed by negativity. This is one manifestation of mankind, an appendage of man’s flesh. Therefore, all people unconsciously fall into negativity, and subsequently into chastisement. This is a trap God prepared for humanity, and it is at this time that humans suffer the most. Because people dwell in negativity, it is difficult for them to escape chastisement. Are things these days not exactly so? But how can humans ignore God’s words, “Nowadays, Satan is rampant in the extreme. Why do I not take this opportunity to show off the focus of My work and reveal My power?” I say a few words of reminder, and, at once, people from the churches enter into chastisement. This is because, after two months of God’s work, people have yet to transform substantially within. They simply analyze God’s words with their minds, yet their state has not actually changed at all. They remain negative. This being so, when God mentions that the time of chastisement is at hand, people immediately grow distressed, thinking: “I don’t know whether I am predestined by God, nor do I know if I can stand firm under this chastisement. It is even harder to know what methods God will use to chastise people.” Humans are all afraid of chastisement, yet they are unable to change. They simply suffer in silence, but are also afraid that they will be unable to stand firm. In such circumstances, without chastisement bearing down on them and without the torment of words, humans have unconsciously entered into chastisement. Thus, they are all nervous and unsettled. This is called “reaping what they have sown,” because humans do not understand God’s work at all. Actually, God is not inclined to waste any further words on these people; God seems to have adopted a different way of dealing with them, a way that is not true chastisement.

It is as when a person catches a chick and picks it up to see if it is a hen or a rooster; this might not seem like a matter of any importance, but, nonetheless, the little chick will be so frightened it will struggle to free itself, as if terrified its owner were going to kill and eat it. This is because the chick has no knowledge of itself. Why would someone kill and eat a chick that only weighs a few ounces? Would that not be nonsensical? It is exactly as God said: "Why, then, do people constantly avoid Me? Is it because I will treat them like baby chicks, to be killed as soon as they are caught?" Therefore, human suffering is all "selfless" devotion, and it may be called a useless price to pay. It is because people do not know themselves that they feel afraid; as a result, they cannot risk their lives. This is humanity's weakness. Are the words spoken by God, "In the end, let humans know themselves. This is My final goal," out of date? Who truly knows themselves? If one does not know themselves, then what gives them the right to be chastised? Take lambs for example. How can they be slaughtered if they have not grown into sheep? How can a tree that has not borne fruit be enjoyed by humans? Everyone places too much importance on "vaccination." Thus, people are doing the work of fasting, and they are going hungry. This is an example of reaping what they have sown, of doing harm to themselves, and not God's brutality or inhumanity. If, one day, humans suddenly come to know themselves and tremble in fear before God, then God will begin to chastise them. Only in this way will humans willingly embrace hardship, obedient in heart and speech. But what about today? People are all chastised against their will, like children being made to cook a meal. This being so, how can they not feel ill at ease? Everyone thinks, "Oh well! As long as I'm being chastised, I might as well bow my head and plead guilty! What can I do? Even if I'm crying, I still have to satisfy God, so what can I do? For better or worse, this is the path that I am on now. Oh well! I'll just put it down to my bad luck!" Is this not how people think?

As God said, "Mankind is well-behaved; no one dares oppose Me. All are under My guidance, carrying out the 'job' I have assigned." This suffices to show that not a single human is chastised willingly, and more, that this chastisement comes from God, because humans all want to live in leisure rather than turmoil and chaos. God said, "Who is unafraid of death? Can people truly put their lives on the line?" This is absolutely right; everyone is afraid to die, except, of course, when consumed with anger or despair. This is humanity's substance, and it is exceedingly difficult to solve. Today, God has come precisely to resolve this predicament. Humans are all powerless, so God has specifically established among them a specialist hospital where they may be cured of this disease. People cannot extricate themselves from the snares of this illness, which is why they are all so anxious that their mouths are inflamed and their bellies are swollen. Over time, the volume of gas in their abdomens grows, resulting in an increase in pressure, and, finally, their stomachs rupture and they all die. Therefore, God will then have cured this serious human ailment, because everyone will have died. Is this not a cure for the human condition? God has deliberately come to do this work. Because people are greatly afraid of death, God Himself has come to do this work together with humans; because they have so little courage, He has first given them a demonstration to watch. People are only willing to obey after having seen God's precedent. For this reason, God said, "Because no one could carry out My work, I have set foot upon the battleground in person to engage in a struggle of life and death with Satan." This is a decisive battle, so either the fish dies or the net breaks. This much is certain. Because the spirit will triumph in the end, the flesh must inevitably be taken by death. Do you understand the implications of this? Yet do not be too sensitive. Maybe the sentence above is simple, or maybe it is complex. Either way, humans cannot fathom it—that much is certain. In suffering, humans can accept the refinement of God's word, which one might call their good fortune, or one might call their misfortune. Yet I would still issue a reminder that God's intention is, after all, correct—unlike the intentions of humans, which are always to make plans and arrangements for their own sakes. This should be quite clear; do not fall into endless pondering. Is this not precisely humans' weakness? They are all like this; rather than having great love for God, they have great love for themselves. He is a God who is jealous of man, so He always makes demands of them. The more people love themselves, the more God requires them to love Him, and the stricter His requirements of them. It is as if God were intentionally teasing people. If people truly love Him, He seems not to acknowledge them. Because of this, people scratch their heads and fall into deep thought. This is a narrative of God's disposition, just a brief mention of one or two things. This is God's will. It is what God requires people to know, and it is imperative. It is a new task, and people must work hard at it to break through and make fresh progress. Do you understand this? Do you need Me to say more on the subject?

Of previous eras, God said, "Not a single person was ever chosen by Me; all were rebuffed by My silent letter. This is because people in the past did not serve Me exclusively, so I, in return, did not love them exclusively. They took Satan's 'presents' and then turned around and offered them to Me. Was this not slander against Me?" How can these words be explained? It is as God said: "All gifts originate from Satan." Past generations of apostles and prophets were entirely reliant on gifts to do their work, and, down through the ages, God has used their gifts to conduct His work. This is why it is said that the service of all people with gifts comes from Satan. However, because of God's wisdom, "I use Satan's ruse as My foil." Thus, God has called the service of people who have gifts "presents from Satan," and it is only because they belong to Satan that God calls this action "slander." This is not a baseless accusation against humans; on the contrary, it is a well-founded and appropriate explanation. Thus, "I did not reveal My disgust; rather, I turned their scheme to My own use by adding these 'presents' to the materials of My management. Later, once they had been processed by machine, I would burn the dross within." This is what is so wonderful about God's work. This point accords least with human notions, because no one would think that those who reign as kings are not people with gifts, or that they are the ungifted people whom God loves. As can be seen, the ideas or hopes of Witness Lee and Watchman Nee have all turned to ash, and the same is true for the gift-bearing people of today. Now God has begun this work, and He is gradually retracting all the work of the Holy Spirit in humans who serve as a foil to His work. When God's work is completely finished, these people will all return to their original place. However, I urge humans not to act recklessly because of My words. You should follow the natural course of things in accordance with the steps of God's work, so as not to interrupt it. Do you understand this point? For these are the steps and method of God's work. When God "processes" these "presents" into "finished products," all of His intentions will become obvious, and the presents that render service to Him will all be eliminated; however, God will have the finished products to enjoy. Do you understand this? What God wants is finished products, not the abundant presents that humans offer Him. Only when everyone has assumed their proper place, which means when God has returned to His original position and the devil, too, has sat in its own seat, as well as the angels, without exception—only then will a gratified smile appear on God's face, because His intentions will have been satisfied, His goal achieved. God will no longer seek "assistance" from the "devil," because God's intentions will have been openly revealed to humans, and humans will never again be made to convey them. At this time, people's fleshly bodies will become one with their spirits. This is what God reveals to humans; it is the final destination of the spirit, soul, and body. It is a summary of the original meaning of "humanity." This does not need to be researched in detail; it is enough to know one or two things about it. Do you understand?

It is said that God has now begun to chastise man, but no one can say for sure, no one can give a clear answer as to whether the original intention of this chastisement has befallen man. God says, "Man has never discovered anything in My chastisement, for he does nothing but grasp the yoke around his neck with both hands, both eyes fixed on Me, as if watching an enemy—and only at this moment do I see how emaciated he is. It is because of this that I say none has ever stood firm amid trials." God tells man of the facts of the chastisement that has yet to befall him, and He does so in great detail, without missing anything out. It is as if men have entered chastisement and are truly unable to stand firm. God provides a vivid, lifelike depiction of the ugly features of man. This is why men feel under pressure: Since God says that they have never stood firm amid trials, how could I be the one to break the world record, to be accepted despite convention? At this moment, they begin to reflect. In reality, it is just as God says: "Have I brought them to the end of the road?" Indeed, God has brought all people to the end of the road, and so, in their consciousness, people always believe that God is cruel and inhumane. God has fished all people out of the sea of worldly affliction, after which, "to prevent any accidents, I killed all the 'fish' that had been caught, after which the fish became obedient, and had not the slightest complaint." Is this not fact? God has pulled all people from the bitter sea of death into another abyss of death, He has dragged all of them onto the "executioner's block," He has forced them to the end of the road—why does He not do this to the other sons and people of God? What is His intention in carrying out such work in the country of the great red dragon? Why is the hand of God so "malicious"? No wonder "when I need man, he is always hidden. It is as if he has never seen astonishing scenes, as if he was born in the countryside and knows nothing of city matters." In fact, inside themselves people ask: "What is God's plan in doing this? Does He not put us to death? And what is the point? Why do the steps of His work come thick and fast, and why is He not the slightest bit lenient toward us?" Yet people do not dare to say this, and because God's words cause them to cast away such thoughts, stripping them of the chance to think further, they have no choice but to put aside any more such thoughts. It is just that God reveals all of man's notions, and so people force back their notions, not allowing them to come forth. It was previously said that these people are the progeny of the great red dragon. In fact, to be clear, they are the embodiment of the great red dragon. When God forces them to the end of the road and slaughters them, then—without a doubt—the spirit of the great red dragon has no further chance to work in them. In this way, when people walk to the end of the road is also when the great red dragon ends up dead. It can be said that it is using death to repay God's "great kindness"—which is the aim of God's work in the nation of the great red dragon. When people are ready to sacrifice their lives, everything becomes trifling, and no one can get the better of them. What could be more important than life? Thus, Satan becomes incapable of doing any more in people, there is nothing it can do with man. Although, in the definition of the "flesh" it is said that the flesh is corrupted by Satan, if people truly give themselves over, and are not driven by Satan, then no one can get the better of them—and at this moment, the flesh will perform its another function, and begin to formally receive the direction of the Spirit of God. This is a necessary process, it must happen step-by-step; if not, God would have no means of working in the stubborn flesh. Such is the wisdom of God. In this way, all people have unconsciously entered the circumstances of today. And is it not God who has led man to the "end of the road"? Could it be a new road opened up by man? Looking at your experiences, it appears that in you, God employs methods of the utmost cruelty, from which can be seen God's righteousness. How could you not give praise? What God does in you allows people to behold the righteous disposition of God; does this not merit your admiration of God? Today, at the crossroads when the old era still exists and the new era has yet to materialize, how do you bear testimony to God? Is such a serious issue not worthy of deep consideration? Do you still contemplate other, extraneous matters? Why does God say, "Although people once cried 'Long live the understanding,' no one has spent much time analyzing the word 'understanding,' showing that people have no desire to love

Me”? If God did not say such things, could you not try to understand God’s heart of your own accord?

Though, in recent times, some people may have come to know a little of the aims and point of God’s incarnation, I can say for sure that if God did not speak plainly to man, no one would be able to guess the aims and point of God’s incarnation. This is absolute. Is it still not clear to you? Everything God does in people is part of His management plan—yet they are incapable of accurately grasping God’s will. This is the deficiency of man, but God does not require that people be capable of doing anything, He merely asks that they listen to the “doctor’s admonishments.” This is God’s requirement. He asks all people to know true human life, for “in their hearts, the words ‘human life’ do not exist, they have no regard for them, and merely tire of My words, as if I have become a rambling old lady.” In people’s eyes, God’s words are like an everyday utensil, they do not treat them as important at all. Thus, people cannot put God’s words into practice—they have become miserable wretches who are aware of the truth but do not put it into practice. This fault of man alone is therefore sufficient to cause disgust in God for a period of time, and thus He says multiple times that people pay no heed to His words. Yet in their notions, people think the following: “Each day we study and analyze God’s words, so how could it be said that we pay them no heed? Is this not doing us an injustice?” But let Me dissect a little for you—people will be red-faced. When they read God’s words, they nod their heads, they bow and scrape, like a pug fawning at the words of its master. Thus, at this moment, people feel unworthy, tears stream down their faces, it is as if they wish to repent and start anew—but once this time has passed, their sheepishness immediately disappears, to be replaced by wolfishness; they put God’s words to one side, and always believe that their own affairs take precedence, that matters of God come last, and because of these actions of theirs, they are never able to put God’s words into action. When the facts arrive, they stretch their elbows outward<sup>a</sup>—this is double-crossing their own people—no wonder God says that they “‘run the other way’ while relying on Me for sustenance.” Only from this can it be seen that there is not the slightest falsehood in God’s words, they are entirely true, and contain not the slightest exaggeration, yet they do seem to have been understated somewhat, for man’s stature is too small, he is unable to bear them. God’s words have already provided a crystal clear depiction of the things of man, both inside and out; they have etched them with utter clarity, portraying a vivid likeness that is exactly the original face of Satan. It is just that in the present stage, people have yet to see everything clearly, and thus it is said that they have not come to know themselves. It is because of this that I say this lesson must continue; it cannot stop. When people have come to know themselves will be when God obtains glory. This is easy to understand—there is no need for Me to go into detail. There is, however, one thing that I will remind a. “Stretch one’s elbow outward” is a Chinese idiom, which means a person is helping others at the expense of people close to that person, for example parents, children, relatives or siblings.

you of, though first must be read these words of God: “In today’s times, people have never treasured Me, I have no place in their hearts. Could they show a true love for Me in the days of suffering to come?” What is the meaning of these words? God is saying that chastisement has yet to befall man, which shows that there is yet an inner meaning to the words “knowing yourself”—did you see this? Without undergoing hardship and refinement, how can people know themselves? Are these not empty words? Do you really trust in all that is spoken by God? Are you able to discern God’s words? Why does God repeatedly say things like “Seeing man’s actions, My only choice is to leave,” and also say, “Only when the mountains topple and the earth is rent asunder do people think of My words, only then are they awoken from their dreams, but the time has already come, they are engulfed in the great flood, their corpses floating on the surface of the water”? Why does God say “people think of” and not “people obey My words”? Is it true that the mountains topple and the earth is rent asunder? People pay no heed to such words, they let them slip by, and so they suffer much “hardship” in God’s words. This is because they are too thoughtless. Because of this failing of man, God says, “I, this ‘freak’ without tear ducts, have cried many tears for man. Man, however, knows nothing of this.” Because people pay no attention to God’s words, God uses this means to remind them and get their “help.”

For now, I shall not prophesy about world developments, but will foretell something of man’s fate. Have I not asked that people know themselves? How can this be explained? How should people know themselves? When God “torments” people so much that they hover between life and death, they begin to understand a little of the meaning of human life, and they are weary of human life, believing that a person’s entire life is nothing more than a dream. They believe that man’s life is one of anguish, that they will die without ever having achieved anything, that their life is pointless and without worth. Human life is but a dream, a dream in which grief and happiness come and go. Today, people live for God, but because they live in the world of man, their daily lives remain empty and without worth, causing all people to know that the enjoyment of God is but a passing comfort—but if, when they do not enjoy God, they still live in the flesh even though they believe in God, what is the point? In the flesh, all is empty for man. Having experienced the vicissitudes of human life, with the arrival of old age man’s hair turns white, his face is full of wrinkles, his hands are covered with callouses. Although he has paid a great price, he has gained practically nothing. Thus, My words go a step further: Everything is empty for those who live in the flesh. This is beyond doubt, and there is no need for you to examine this in detail. This is the original face of human life that God has talked of time and time again. God does not eschew these words as a result of man’s weakness, but simply acts according to His original plan. Perhaps, some words provide support and understanding to people, and perhaps some do precisely the opposite, deliberately causing people to live in an atmosphere of death—and it is precisely because of this that they suffer. Thus, perhaps God sets out the “empty city strategy”<sup>a</sup> to deliberately mislead people, but they cannot see this at all, they remain in the dark. And yet, all is in God’s hands, and even though people know this, how could they guard against it? Thus, no one is able to escape the threat of chastisement—what could they do? They can but submit to God’s arrangements—and is that not because God has grabbed them and will not let them go? Only under God’s threats are all people able to follow nature’s course—is this not the case? If not for the arrangements of God, how could people willingly admit defeat? Would that not be a joke? Although human life is empty, who is willing, when their lives are comfortable, to silently leave behind the world of man and try to satisfy God? People die amid helplessness—who has ever died amid abundance, when they have all they could want? Only a “star” that descended from the sky would be an exception to this. Compared to the life of the third heaven it enjoyed, life on earth would be like living in Hades—only under such a circumstance might it be willing to die. Yet who today is a star in heaven? I, too, am “unclear” about this. Let us search around and see if we can find one. If he is found, I ask people to help Me inquire if he is willing to act according to My words above. Yet I have a warning for each of you: None of you must play the “hero” and volunteer to die, do you understand?

Chapter 38

Considering mankind’s inherent traits, that is, mankind’s true face, being able to carry on until now has truly not been easy, and only through this has God’s great power become truly apparent. Considering the substance of the flesh, as well as the fact that, until now, man has been corrupted by the great red dragon, how would he have been able to continue standing to the present day, if not for the guidance of the Spirit of God? Man is unworthy to come before God, but for the sake of His management and in order to bring His great work to fruition before too long, God loves mankind. Truth be told, God’s love for mankind is something no man could ever repay within his lifetime. Perhaps there are some who wish to repay God’s grace by sacrificing their lives, but I tell you: Man is unworthy of dying before God, and so his death would be in vain. This is because, to God, the death of a man is not even worthy of mention, not worth a single penny, like the death of an ant on the ground. I advise humanity not to place too high a value upon themselves, and not to think that dying for God carries great weight, like that of Mount Tai. Actually, the death of a man is but as light as a feather, not worthy of mention. But then again, the flesh of man is doomed to die by nature, and so ultimately the physical body must come to an end on the earth. This is a true fact, which no one can deny. This is a “law of nature” which I derive from the totality of human life experience, and so God

a. “Empty city strategy” is the 32nd of the Thirty-Six Stratagems of ancient China. This strategy involves presenting a deceptively bold front to conceal lack of readiness in order to deceive the enemy.

has defined man's end in this way, without one's realizing it. Do you understand? No wonder God says, "I despise mankind's disobedience. I do not know why; it seems as if I have hated man since the beginning, and yet I feel deep sympathy for him. Thus have people always had two attitudes toward Me—for I love man, and I also hate him."

Who does not praise God for His presence or His appearance? At this time, it is as if I have completely forgotten the impurity and unrighteousness within man. I take mankind's self-righteousness, self-importance, disobedience, defiance, and all of their rebelliousness and push it all to the back of My mind, and forget about it. God is not constrained because of these instances of what mankind is. Since I "share the same affliction" as God, I also free Myself from this trouble, lest I be further constrained by man. Why go to all this bother? Since man is not willing to join God's family with Me, how could I use My power to force them? I do not do things that are oppressive to man, and no wonder, because I was born into the family of God, and so of course man and I are always different. This has led to the state of abject defeat that he finds himself in today. But I continue to give a wide berth to the weaknesses of man; what choice do I have? Is this not because I am powerless? No wonder God seeks to "retire" from the "work unit" of mankind, and moreover demands a "pension." When I speak from the perspective of a man, man does not listen, but has man ever ceased to disobey even when I speak from the perspective of God? Perhaps the day will come when God does suddenly "retire" from the "work unit" of mankind, and when that time comes, God's word will become even more fierce. Today, it may be because of Me that God speaks in this way, and, if that day comes, God will not be like Me, gently and patiently "telling stories to kindergarteners." Perhaps what I say is not quite fitting, but God is willing to loosen His hold on man a bit only on account of God incarnate; otherwise, the prospect would be too horrible to contemplate. Just as God said, "I once loosened My grip on people to a certain extent, allowing them to freely indulge in their fleshly desires—and because of this they dared to behave in an unbridled manner, without any restraint, from which it can be seen that they do not truly love Me, for they are all living in the flesh." Why does God say "indulge in their desires," and "living in the flesh" here? Truth be told, man will naturally understand words like these without My interpretation. Perhaps there are some who will say they do not understand, and I say this is a case of asking when one already knows the answer, of putting on an act. A few words of reminder: Why does God say, "All I ask of man is that he cooperate with Me"? Why does God also say that human nature is difficult to change? Why does God despise human nature? And what exactly are the things of human nature? What are the things outside human nature? Is there anyone who has contemplated these questions? Perhaps this is a new subject to man, yet still I implore man to give it proper consideration, otherwise man will always offend God with phrases such as "human nature is difficult to change." What good does it do to go against Him in that way? In the end, is it not just asking for trouble? Will it not come to the same end as an egg thrown at a stone?

In truth, all the trials and the temptations to which man is subjected are lessons that God requires man to learn. According to God's intention, man can achieve these things, even if he has to sacrifice that which he loves, but, because man always loves himself, he fails to truly cooperate with God. God does not ask much of man. All He asks of man is meant to be achieved easily and happily; it is just that man is unwilling to suffer hardships. Just as, being somebody's child, one can fulfill their duty by living frugally and saving up to take care of their parents. Yet they fear that they may not eat well enough, or that their own clothing will be too plain, so, for one reason or another, the debt they owe their parents for their loving care is completely forgotten, as if the work of caring for them can wait until the child has made a fortune. I see in this that men have in their hearts no filial love for their parents—they are all unfilial sons. Perhaps My statement is too extreme, but I cannot speak inanity in the face of facts. I cannot "emulate others" in resisting God for the sake of satisfying Myself. It is exactly because no one on earth has a filial heart that God said: "In heaven, Satan is My enemy; on earth, man is My foe. Because of the union between the heaven and earth, I hold them all guilty, unto the ninth degree of kinship." Satan is an enemy of God; the reason God says so is because it does not repay God for His great favor and kindness, but rather "paddles against the current," and, in doing so, does not fulfill its duty to show filial devotion to God. Are people not also like this? They show no filial respect to their "parents" and never repay the debt they owe their "parents" for their loving care. This suffices to show that the people on earth are the kin of Satan in heaven. Man and Satan are of one heart and mind in opposing God, so it is no wonder God will implicate them unto the ninth degree of kinship and pardon none. In the past, God had His prostrate servant in heaven manage mankind, but it did not obey, instead indulging its own temper and rebelling. Are rebellious humans not also striding forward along this path? No matter how much God tightens the "reins," people will simply not be shaken and cannot turn from their course. In My view, if humanity continues in this way, they will cause their own ruin. Perhaps now you understand the true meaning of these words of God: "People are incapable of severing their lingering ties to their old nature." God has reminded man on several occasions: "Because of man's disobedience, I leave him." Why does God say this once and again? Could God really be so heartless? Why does God also say "I am not one of the human race"? Over so many idle days, is there anyone who has given careful thought to these detailed issues? I urge mankind to apply themselves with greater vigor to the words of God and not to treat them perfunctorily; to do so would bring no benefit to you, or others. It is best not to say that which does not need to be said, and not to think about that which does not need to be contemplated. Would this not be simpler? What wrong can come from such a practice? Before God proclaims the end of His work on earth, no one shall stop "moving"; no one shall wash their hands of their duty. Now is not the time; do not presume to act as a guide for God, or a vanguard. I think it is too early to stop now and cease moving forward—what do you think?

God brings humanity into the midst of chastisement, and He brings them into an atmosphere of death, yet, conversely, what would God have man do on earth? Surely, man's purpose is not to serve as a wardrobe in God's house—something that cannot be eaten or worn, but only looked at. If that were so, why employ so many complex processes to make people suffer so much in the flesh? God says, "I escort man to the 'execution ground,' for man's offense is sufficient to merit My chastisement." Does God let people walk to the execution ground by themselves at this time? Why does no one "beg for their mercy"? So, how should man cooperate? Can man truly act as God does when He makes His judgments, without the influence of emotion? The effectiveness of these words mainly depends on how man acts. When a father brings home money he has earned, if the mother does not know how to cooperate with him or how to manage the household, then what state would that home be in? Look at the state of the church now: What, as leaders, do you feel about it? You may as well hold a meeting to discuss your individual reflections. If things at home have been spoiled by the mother, what will the children in such a family look like? Like orphans? Or beggars? No wonder God said: "People all think that Mine is a divine nature that lacks 'quality of intellect,' but who can grasp that I am able to see through everything in My humanity?" For such an obvious situation, there is no need for God to speak from His divinity. As God has said, "There is no need to use a sledgehammer to hit a nail." Perhaps, at this time, there are those who have some practical experience with God's maxim of "Among men, there is no one who loves Me." At this point, it is just as God has said: "It is only because they have arrived at the present state of affairs that people all reluctantly bow their heads—but in their hearts, they remain unconvinced." These words are like a telescope. In the not-too-distant future, man will have walked into another situation. This is called incorrigibility. Do you understand? That is the answer to these two questions of God: "Do people not refrain from sin only because they fear I will go away? Is it not true that they do not complain only because they fear chastisement?" In fact, people at the present stage are all somewhat slack, as if overcome with weariness. They are not at all in the mood to heed God's work, but are concerned solely with making arrangements and provisions for the sake of their own flesh. Is this not so?

Let us go beyond God's words and talk a little about matters concerning our lives, so that our lives bloom more, and we live up to God's hopes for us. In particular, with the arrival of today—a time of each being classed according to his kind, and a time of chastisement—there is a greater need to focus on the bigger picture and concentrate on the "collective interest." This is the will of God, and it is what should be achieved by all people. How could we not offer up ourselves for the will of God in heaven? God "assigns numbers for all kinds of people, makes different marks on every sort of person, so that their ancestors can guide them back to their families,” which shows that people have been classed according to kind, and as a result, all kinds of people are revealing their true forms. As such, it is fair to say that people are loyal to their ancestors, not God. However, all people are also rendering service to God under the direction of their ancestors, which is the wondrousness of God’s work. All things are doing service for God, and even though Satan disturbs people, God uses this opportunity to draw on “local resources” to serve Him. People, however, cannot discern this. As God says, “Thus, I also divide the labor, and distribute the efforts. This is part of My plan, and can be disrupted by no man.” People cannot see all that is determined by God, and all that God wishes to accomplish, before He has done it. They can only see it when God’s work has been completed; if not, they are blind, and see nothing.

Today, God has new work among the churches. He makes everything follow nature’s course, truly bringing to bear the function of man. As God says, “I rule everything among all things, I command everything among all things, causing all that there is to follow the course of nature and to submit to the command of nature.” I do not know what clever insights you have into “following nature’s course,” so let us talk about this. This is how I see it: Because they are led home by their ancestors, all kinds of people must come forth and “perform.” And because they are following nature’s course, that which is inherent to them is used to bring their original function to bear, making them follow the guidance of the Holy Spirit according to this law. The work of the Holy Spirit is carried out according to the state within each person; accurately speaking, this is called “God maneuvering all things so that they serve Him,” this is then connected to following the course of nature. Even though a person has the elements of the devil inside them, God shall make use of this, adding the work of the Holy Spirit to the foundation of what is inherently within them, making them sufficient to render service to God. This is all I will say about “following the course of nature”—perhaps you have some higher suggestions. I hope you can provide some valued input. What do you say? Are you willing to cooperate in following the course of nature? Are you willing to divide the work with God? Have you ever thought about how to achieve this? I hope that people are able to understand God’s will, that they can be of one mind in satisfying God for the sake of shared ideals, and can advance together on the road to the kingdom. What need is there to come up with unnecessary notions? Whose existence up until today has not been for the sake of God? And since it is thus, what need is there for sorrow, grief, and sighing? This is of no benefit to anyone. People’s entire lives are in the hands of God, and if it were not for their resolution before God, who would be willing to live in vain in this empty world of man? Why bother? Rushing in and out of the world, if they do not do anything for God, will their entire lives not have been wasted? Even if God does not deem your actions worthy of mention, will you not give a smile of gratification at the moment of your death? You should pursue positive progress, not negative regression—is this not better practice? If your actions are purely for the sake of satisfying God, then you will not be negative or regressive. Because there are always things that are unfathomable in people's hearts, without them realizing it, their faces are like an overcast sky, which leads to several "trenches" appearing on their faces without them knowing, formed as if by the sundering of the ground. It is as if the ground is moving, causing the "hillocks" or "dips" to move place without people realizing. In this, I am not mocking people, but speaking of "geographical knowledge."

Though God has led all people into chastisement, He says nothing of this. Instead, He deliberately avoids this topic and starts a new one, which in one regard is because of God's work, and in another, is in order to immediately complete this step of work. Because God's aims in carrying out this step of work have long since been achieved, there is no need to say any more. Today, I do not know how much you have seen of the methods of God's work; in My consciousness, I always feel that God's work is not as clearly divided into stages and time periods as it used to be. Instead, each day brings its own means of working, change occurs almost every three to five days, and even in five days, there might be two different kinds of content to the work of God. This shows the speed of God's work; before people have had the time to react and peer closely, God is gone without a trace. Thus, God is always ungraspable to people, which has led to the imperceptibility of the work of the Holy Spirit. Why does God always say words such as "and so I left man"? People might pay a little attention to these words, but they do not understand their meaning. How about now, do you understand? No wonder people have no grasp of the Holy Spirit's presence. Their search for God is always beneath hazy moonlight—this is completely true—and it is as if God is deliberately making fun of man, making the brains of all people swell, so that they feel addleheaded and disorientated. They barely know what they are doing; it is as if they are dreaming, and once they awaken, they do not know what happened. All it takes are some ordinary words from God to leave people at a loss. No wonder, then, that God says, "Today, I cast all people into the 'great furnace' to be refined. I stand up high watching closely as people burn in the fire and, forced by the flames, people offer forth the facts." Amidst God's ever-changing words, people have no idea what to do; in fact, just as God says, chastisement has long since begun, and because people have not realized this, they only know when God says so explicitly, they only pay attention after God has told them. It can be said that people only begin to study chastisement now that God's work has been carried out to this point. It is just like when people became aware of the atomic bomb—but because the time has not arrived, people pay no heed; only when someone begins to build one do people begin to pay attention. Only when the atomic bomb comes to light do people understand more of it. Only when God says He shall cast man into the furnace do people become a little aware. If God did not speak, no one would know—is it not so? So, God says, "People unwittingly enter the furnace, as if they have been pulled in by a rope, as if they have grown numb." Why not analyze this: When people offer forth the facts, is it when God says that chastisement has begun, or prior to when God says that chastisement has begun? From this it can be seen that, before God has spoken of chastisement, people began to confess, showing that chastisement began before God spoke of it—is this not fact?

Chapter 40

To God, man is like a plaything in His grasp, like a hand-stretched noodle in His hands—one that can be made as thin or thick as God wishes, to do with as He pleases. It is fair to say that man really is a plaything in God's hands, like a Persian cat that a lady has bought from the market. Without a doubt, he is a plaything in God's hands—and so there was nothing false about the knowledge of Peter. From this, it can be seen that God's words and actions in man are accomplished with ease and pleasure. He does not rack His brains or make plans, as people imagine; the work He does in man is very normal, as are the words He utters to man. When God speaks, He seems to let His tongue run away with Him, He says whatever comes into His mind, without restraint. However, after reading God's words, people are utterly convinced, they are lost for words, wide-eyed and dumbstruck. What is going on here? This well shows just how great God's wisdom is. If, as people imagine, God's work in man had to be meticulously planned to be precise and correct, then—to take these imaginings a step further—God's wisdom, wondrousness, and unfathomability would be quantifiable, which shows people's valuation of God is too low. Because there is always stupidity in people's actions, they measure God in the same way. God does not make plans or arrangements for His work; instead, it is directly carried out by the Spirit of God—and the principles by which the Spirit of God works are free and unrestrained. It is as if God pays no heed to the states of man and talks as He pleases—yet still man can hardly tear himself away from God's words, which is because of the wisdom of God. The facts, after all, are facts. Because the work of God's Spirit in all people is so evident, this is sufficient to show the principles of God's work. If God had to pay such a great price in His work in created beings, would that not be a case of putting fine timber to petty use? Must God act in person? Would it be worth it? Because the Spirit of God has been working for so long, and yet throughout the ages the Spirit of God has never worked in this way, no one has ever known the means and principles by which God works, they have never been clear. Today they are clear, for God's Spirit has personally revealed them—and this is beyond doubt, it is shown directly by the Spirit of God, not summarized by man. Why not take a trip to the third heaven and see whether this is really what is going on; see whether, after doing all this work, God's labors have left Him exhausted, His back aching and His legs in pain, or else unable to eat or sleep; and whether He had to read through a great many reference materials to speak all these words, whether drafts of God's utterances are spread across the table, and whether He is dry-mouthed after saying so much. The facts are precisely the opposite: The words above have nothing in common with the place where God resides. God says, "I have expended much time and paid a great price for the sake of man—but at this time, for an unknown reason, people's consciences remain ever incapable of performing their original function." Regardless of whether people have any sense of God's sorrow, if they could approach God's love without going against their conscience, this would be considered rational and reasonable. The only fear is that they are unwilling to bring to bear the original function of conscience. What do you say, is this right? Do these words help you? My hope is that you belong to the kind of things that are possessed of conscience, rather than being trash without conscience. What do you think of these words? Does anyone have a sense of this? Does having a needle stuck in your heart not hurt? Does God stick the needle in an insensate corpse? Is God mistaken, has old age dulled His eyesight? I say that is impossible! Anyway, this must be the fault of man. Why not go to the hospital and take a look? There is undoubtedly a problem with man's heart; it needs to be fitted with new "parts"—what do you think? Would you do that?

God says, "I look at their ugly faces and weird states, and I once again depart from man. Under such circumstances, people remain uncomprehending, and once more take back the things I have denied them, awaiting My return." Why, during this "new technological age," is God still talking about ox-drawn carts? Why is this? Is it because God likes to nag? Is God passing the time because He has nothing better to do? Is God like man, idling away the time after stuffing himself full of food? Is there any use in repeating these words over and over again? I have said that people are wretches, that you always have to grab them by the ears to get through to them. After the words have been spoken to them today, they will immediately forget them tomorrow—it is as if they are suffering from amnesia. Thus, it is not the case that some words have not been spoken, but that they have not been acted on by people. If something is said but one or two times, people remain ignorant—it must be said three times, this is the minimum number. There are even some "old men" to whom it must be said ten to twenty times. In this way, the same thing is said over and over again in different ways, to see whether or not people have changed. Have you truly worked in this way? I do not want to hector people, but they are all fooling with God; they all know to take more nutritional supplements, but do not feel anxious because of God—is this serving God? Is this loving God? No wonder they spend all day without a care in the world, idle and quiescent. But even so, some people are still not satisfied, and create their own sorrow. Maybe I am being a little harsh, but this is what is known as being too sentimental about yourself! Is it God who makes you feel sorrowful? Is this not a case of bringing suffering upon yourself? Are none of God's graces qualified to be the source of your happiness? Throughout, you have not been mindful of God's will, and you have been negative, sickly, and distressed—why is this so? Is it God's will to make you live in the flesh? You are ignorant of God's will, uneasy within your own heart, you grumble and complain, and spend the whole day moping, and your flesh suffers pain and torment—that is what you deserve! You ask that others praise God amid chastisement, that they emerge from chastisement, and be unconstrained by it—yet you have fallen into it and cannot escape. It takes years to emulate this Dong Cunrui-like “spirit of self-sacrifice.” When you preach words and doctrines, do you not feel ashamed? Do you know yourself? Have you put yourself aside? Do you truly love God? Have you put aside your prospects and fate? No wonder God says that people are the ones who are wondrous and unfathomable. Who would have thought that there were so many “treasures” within man that have yet to be dug out? Today, the sight of it is enough to “open one’s eyes”—people are so “fantastic”! It is as if I am a child who cannot count. Even today I have not figured out how many people truly love God. I can never recall the number—and so, because of My “disloyalty,” when the time comes to give accounts before God, I am always empty-handed, incapable of doing as I would wish, I am always in God’s debt. As a result, when I give account, I am always “reprimanded” by God. I know not why people are so cruel, always making Me suffer because of this. People use this chance to double up with laughter, they are truly not My friends. When I am in trouble, they do not give Me any help, but deliberately make fun of Me—they truly have no conscience!

Chapter 41

How does God work on man? Have you figured this out? Is it clear to you? And how does He work in the church? What are your views on these things? Have you ever considered these questions? What does He wish to accomplish through His work in the church? Are these things all clear to you? If not, then all that you do is futile and hollow! Have these words touched your heart? Merely making active progress without passively retreating—will this meet God’s will? Is blind cooperation enough? What should be done if you are unclear on the visions? Would it do not to seek further? God says, “I once undertook a great endeavor among men, but they did not notice, so I had to use My word to reveal it to them, step by step. Still, man could not understand My words, and he remained ignorant of the purpose of My plan.” What do these words mean? Have you ever considered this purpose? Did I truly make it blithely and aimlessly? If so, what would have been the point? If this purpose is unclear and incomprehensible to you, then how can genuine cooperation be achieved? God says that all humanity’s seeking is upon the boundless seas, amidst doctrine written in empty words. As for your pursuits, even you are unable to explain to what category they belong. What does God want to accomplish in man? You should be clear on all of these things. Is it only to shame the great red dragon in a negative way? Having shamed the great red dragon, would God simply go empty-handed into the mountains and live there in seclusion? Then, what is it God wants? Does He truly want the hearts of men? Or does He want their lives? Or their wealth and possessions? What use are these? They are of no use to God. Has God done so much work on man just to use him as proof of His victory over Satan, in order that He may manifest His “capabilities”? Would God not then seem quite “petty”? Is God that kind of God? One like a child, who drags adults into fights with others? What would the point of that be? Man constantly uses his own notions to measure God. God once said, “There are four seasons in a year, and three months in each season.” Man listened to these words, committed them to memory, and said always that there were three months in a season and four seasons in a year. When God asked, “How many seasons are there in a year? And how many months in a season?” man replied in unison, “Four seasons, three months.” Man always tries to define God by way of rules, and now, having entered the era of “three seasons in a year, four months in a season,” man remains unaware, as if he has gone blind, seeking rules in all things. And today, mankind tries to apply their “rules” to God! They are truly blind! Do they not see there is now no “winter,” only “spring, summer, and fall”? Man is truly stupid! To have come to this pass and still be unaware of how to know God, like a person of the 1920s, who thinks transportation is inconvenient, and people should all walk, or lead a little donkey, or who thinks people should use oil lamps, or who believes that a primitive way of life still prevails. Are all these not notions that exist in the brains of men? Why do they still talk of mercy and lovingkindness today? What is the use of this? It is like the rambling of an old woman about her past—of what use are these words? After all, the present is the present; can time be turned back 20 or 30 years? All people follow the tide; why are they so reluctant to accept this? In the present age of chastisement, what is the use of talking of mercy and lovingkindness? Mercy and lovingkindness—is that all there is to God? Why is it, in this era of “flour and rice,” people continue serving forth “millet husks and wild vegetables”? That which God is unwilling to do, man forces upon Him. If He resists, He is labeled a “counter-revolutionary,” and though it has been said once and again that God is not inherently a merciful or loving God, who listens? Man is too absurd. It is as if the word of God has no effect. Men always view My words in a different light. God has all along been bullied by humanity, as if crimes have groundlessly been imputed to innocent people—so who can be of one mind with God? You are always willing to live in God’s mercy and lovingkindness, so what is there for God to do but endure the insults of man? However, I hope you will thoroughly explore how the Holy Spirit works before arguing with God. Yet I urge you to look carefully into the original meaning of God’s word—do not think yourself clever in believing God’s words are “diluted.” There is no need of that! Who can tell how “diluted” the word of God is? Unless God says so directly or indicates such clearly. Do not think so highly of yourself. If you can see the path of practice from His words, then you will have met His requirements. What else do you wish to see? God said, “I will cease to show any mercy for the feebleness of man.” If you cannot grasp the meaning of even this obvious and simple statement, what would be the point of further study and investigation? Without even the most basic knowledge of mechanics, would you be qualified to build a rocket? Would such a person not be one who makes idle boasts? Man does not have the resources to do the work of God; it is God who exalts him. Simply serving Him without knowing what He loves or what He hates—is this not a recipe for disaster? Men do not know themselves, but think themselves extraordinary. Who do they think they are! They have no idea what is good or what is bad. Think back on the past, and look ahead to the future—how does that sound? After that, come to know yourself.

God has revealed a great deal about man's intentions and goals. He said, "Only then did I see clearly man's intentions and goals. I sighed from within the clouds: Why do men always act for themselves? Are My chastisements not meant to make them perfect? Am I deliberately striking at their positive attitude?" How much have you learned about yourselves from these words? Are man's intentions and goals truly gone? Have you looked into this yourselves? You may as well come before God and try to understand this: What result has been achieved by the work of chastisement God has done in you? Have you summarized it? Perhaps the result is minuscule; otherwise, you would already have spoken of it in grand terms. What does God have you achieve? Of the many words that have been spoken to you, how many have come to fruition, and how many have come to naught? In the eyes of God, only a few of His words have come to fruition; this is because man is ever unable to decipher the original meaning of His words, and what he accepts are but echoes of the words, bouncing off a wall. Is this the way to know God's will? In the near future, God will have more work for man to do; can man accomplish that work with the tiny stature he has now? If not deviating, then erring, or else being arrogant—such, it would seem, is human nature. I find this difficult to understand: Though God has said so much, why does man take none of it to heart? Could God be speaking in jest with man and not seeking any result? Or having man perform a play called "Joy, Anger, Sorrow, and Happiness"? Making man happy for a moment, having him weep the next—and then, when man has gone offstage, he is left to his own devices? What would be the result of this? "Why do the demands I make of man always come to nothing? Could it be that I am asking a dog to climb a tree? That I am making much ado about nothing?" All God's words are directed at man's actual state. It would do no harm to look inside all men, to see who is living within God's word. "Even now, much of the land continues to change. If, someday, the land truly changes into another type, I will cast it aside with a flick of My hand—is this not exactly My work in the current stage?" Indeed, even now God is going about this work; however, what He said about "casting it aside with a flick of My hand" refers to the future, because everything must have a process. God's current work tends toward this—is this clear to you? There are flaws in man's intentions, and unclean spirits have seized this opportunity to enter in. At this time, "the land changes to another type." People will then have undergone a qualitative change, though not a change in their substance, for there will be other things on the improved earth. In other words, the original earth was inferior, but after its improvement, it may be used. However, after it has been used for a certain period, and is no longer being used, it will gradually revert to its old appearance. This is a summary of the next step in God's work. The future work will be more complex, because it will be time for all things to be separated according to their kind. At the meeting place, when things come to an end, there will inevitably be chaos, and man will be without strong convictions. It is just as God said: "Men are all performers who sing along with whatever tune is being played." Men have the ability to sing along with the tune being played, so God exploits this very defect in them to take the next step in His work, thereby enabling all men to remedy this defect. It is because they do not have real stature that men become the grass growing atop a wall. If they did gain stature, they would become towering trees that touch the sky. God intends to use a portion of the work of evil spirits to perfect a portion of humanity, enabling these people to see completely through the devils' iniquities, that all humanity may truly know their "ancestors." Only in this way can humans break completely free, not only forsaking the posterity of the devils, but even the devils' ancestors. This is God's true purpose in utterly defeating the great red dragon, to make it so that all humanity knows the great red dragon's true form, to tear its mask off fully and to look upon its true form. This is what God wants to achieve, it is the final goal of all the work He has done on earth, and it is what He aims to accomplish in all humanity. This is known as mobilizing all things to serve God's purpose.

As to the future work, are you clear on how it will be done? These things must be understood. For example: Why does God say men never attend to what they should be doing? Why does He say there are many people who fail to complete the homework He has assigned them? How can these things be achieved? Have you ever considered these questions? Have these become topics of fellowship for you? In this stage of work, man must be made to understand God's present intentions. Once this has been achieved, then other things can be discussed—is this not a great way to go about things? What God wishes to achieve in man needs to be explained clearly, otherwise all would be in vain, and man would be unable to enter into it, much less achieve it, and all would be empty talk. As to what God has said today—have you found a path to put it into practice? People all have a feeling of trepidation about God's words. They cannot fully comprehend them, yet they also fear offending God. So far, how many of the ways to eat and drink God's words have been found? Most people do not know how to eat and drink God's words; how can this be resolved? Did you find a way to eat and drink within today's words? How are you now trying to cooperate in doing so? And once all of you have eaten and drunk the words, through what means will you discuss your reflections on them? Is this not what man should do? How does one prescribe the right medicine for a given illness? Do you still need God to issue an utterance directly? Is this necessary? How can the aforementioned problems be eradicated completely? This depends on whether you are able to cooperate with the Holy Spirit in your practical actions. With appropriate cooperation, the Holy Spirit will do great work. Without appropriate cooperation, but instead only confusion, the Holy Spirit will not be in a position to unleash His power. “If you know yourself and you know your enemy, then victory will always be yours.” Whoever first spoke these words, they may be applied most appropriately to you. In short, you must know yourselves before you can know your enemies, and only after you have done both will you win every battle. These are all things you should be able to do. No matter what God asks of you, you need only work toward it with all your strength, and I hope you will be able to come before God and give Him your utmost devotion in the end. As long as you can see God’s gratified smile as He sits upon His throne, even if this moment is the appointed time of your death, you should be able to laugh and smile as you close your eyes. You must, during your time on earth, do your final duty for God. In the past, Peter was crucified upside down for the sake of God; but you should satisfy God in the end, and exhaust all your energy for His sake. What can a created being do on behalf of God? You should therefore give yourself up to God, sooner rather than later, for Him to dispose of you as He wishes. As long as it makes God happy and pleased, then let Him do as He will with you. What right do men have to speak words of complaint?

Chapter 42

I do not know whether people have noticed that there has been any change in the utterances of today. Some people might have seen a little, but dare not say so with certainty. Perhaps others have not perceived anything. Why has there been such a great change in God’s utterances between the twelfth and the fifteenth day of the month? Have you pondered this? What is your view? Have you grasped anything from all of God’s utterances? What was the main work done between the second of April and the fifteenth of May? Why are people today clueless and as disoriented as if they had been struck over the head with a club? Today, why are there no columns entitled “Scandals of the People of the Kingdom”? On the second and fourth of April, God did not point out man’s state; likewise, in the several days after today He did not point out man’s state—why is this so? There is surely some unsolved puzzle here—why was there a 180-degree turn? Let us first talk a little about why God spoke in this way. Let us look at God’s first words, in which He wasted no time in saying, “As soon as the new work begins.” This sentence gives you the first inkling that God’s work has entered a new beginning, that He has once more begun new work. This shows that chastisement is drawing to a close; it can be said that the climax of chastisement has already been entered, and so you must make the most of your time to properly experience the work of the era of chastisement, so that you will not fall behind and not be forsaken. This is all the work of man, and it requires that man do his utmost to cooperate. When chastisement is entirely sent away, God begins to embark upon the next part of His work, for God says, “... so I have continued to carry out My work among man.... At this moment, My heart is filled with great delight, for I have gained a portion of people, and so My 'enterprise' is no longer in recession; it no longer consists of empty words." In times past, people saw God's pressing will in His words—there is no falsehood in this—and today God does His work with greater speed. To man, this does not seem to entirely accord with God's requirements—but to God, His work has already finished. Because people's thoughts are too convoluted, their view of things is often overly complicated. People are too demanding of people, but God does not make such high demands of man, and because of this, it may be seen how great the discrepancy between God and man is. People's notions are laid bare in all that God does. It is not that God makes high demands of people and people are incapable of attaining them, but that people make high demands of God and God is unable to achieve them. Because, following treatment, there are after-effects in mankind, who has been corrupted by Satan for several thousand years, people have therefore always made such high demands of God, and are not in the least bit lenient, deeply afraid that God is not pleased. Thus, the fact that people are not up to the task in many things is a way in which they subject themselves to self-chastisement; they bear the consequences of their own actions—this is sheer suffering. Of the hardship endured by people, over 99% is disdained by God. To put it bluntly, no one has truly suffered for God. People all bear the consequences of their own actions—and this step of chastisement, of course, is no exception; it is a bitter cup brewed by man, which he himself lifts to his mouth to drink. Because God has not revealed the real purpose of His chastisement, although there is a portion of people who are cursed, this does not represent chastisement. A portion of people are blessed, but this does not mean that they will be blessed in the future. To man, it seems that God is a God who does not keep His word. Do not worry. These words may be a little excessive, but do not be negative. What I speak does bear some relation to the suffering of man, yet I think you must build a good relationship with God. You should give Him more "gifts"—that will definitely make Him happy. I trust that God loves those who give Him "gifts." What do you say? Are these words correct?

As of now, how much of your prospects have you put aside? God's work will soon finish, so you must have put aside more or less all of your prospects, yes? You may as well examine yourselves: You always love to stand up high, exalting yourselves and parading yourselves—what is this? Today, I still do not know what people's prospects are. If people really live engulfed by the sea of affliction, when they live amid the refinement of hardship or else under the threat of various implements of torture, or when they live at the time of rejection by all people, looking up into the sky and sighing deeply, in their thoughts at such times they may, perhaps, put aside their prospects. This is because people search for an otherworldly utopia amidst hopelessness, and no one in comfortable circumstances has ever abandoned their pursuit of their own beautiful dreams. This might be unrealistic, but I would that this were not in people's hearts. Do you still wish to be raptured while living? Do you still wish to change your form in the flesh? I do not know if you are of the same opinion, but I have always felt that this is unrealistic—such thoughts seem too extravagant. People say things like this: “Put aside your prospects, be more realistic.” You ask that people dispense with thoughts of being blessed—but what about yourself? Do you negate people’s ideas of being blessed while you yourself seek blessings? You do not allow others to receive blessings, all while secretly thinking of them yourself—what does that make you? A fraud! When you act thus, does your conscience not stand accused? In your heart, do you not feel indebted? Are you not a fraudster? You dig out the words in the hearts of others, but say nothing of those in your own—what a worthless piece of trash you are! I wonder what you are thinking in your hearts when you speak—could you not be reproached by the Holy Spirit? Does this not unsettle your dignity? You really do not know what is good for you! You have all always been just like Mr. Nanguo—imposters. No wonder God put quotation marks around “offer themselves up” in “people are all willing to ‘offer themselves up.’” God knows man like the back of His hand, and no matter how artful man’s deception—even if he gives nothing away and his face does not redden nor his heart race—God’s eyes are bright, so man has always had trouble escaping God’s gaze. It is as if God has x-ray vision and can see man’s internal organs, as if He can see through people and determine their blood type without a test. Such is God’s wisdom, and it cannot be imitated by man. As God says, “Why have I done so much work, yet there is no proof of it in people? Have I not committed enough effort?” Man’s cooperation with God is too lacking, and it can be said that there is too much that is negative within man, and rarely do people have any positivity. Only occasionally do they have a little positivity, but it is too tainted. This shows just how much people love God; it is as if in their hearts there is only one part in a hundred million which is love for God, of which 50% is still tainted. This is why God says He gains no proof in man. It is precisely because of man’s disobedience that the tone of God’s utterances is so heartless and unfeeling. Though God does not speak with man of times gone by, people always want to reminisce, in order to show themselves before God, and they always want to talk of times gone by—yet God has never treated man’s yesterday as today; instead, He approaches the people of today in terms of today. This is the attitude of God, and in this, God has said these words clearly, to prevent people saying in the future that God is too unreasonable. For God does not do unconscionable things, but tells people of the true facts, lest people be unable to stand firm—for man, after all, is weak. Having heard these words, how about it: Are you willing to listen and submit, and give no more thought to it?

The above is beside the point; it matters not whether it is talked about or not. I hope you do not take exception, because God comes to do the work of words, and He likes to converse about everything under the sun. But I hope you nonetheless will read them, and that you will not ignore these words. What say you? Would you do that? It was just said that in today’s words God has revealed new information: The method by which God works is about to change. As such, it would be better to focus on this very topical issue.

It can be said that all of today's utterances prophesy future matters; these utterances are how God makes arrangements for the next step of His work. God has almost finished His work in the people of the church, and afterward He shall appear before all people with rage. As God says, "I shall make the people on earth acknowledge My doings, and My deeds shall be proven before the 'judgment seat,' so that they may be acknowledged among people across the earth, who all shall yield." Did you see anything in these words? In this is the summary of the next part of God's work. First, God shall make all the guard dogs who wield political power sincerely convinced and He shall make them step back from the stage of history of their own accord, never again to fight for status, and never again to engage in schemes and intrigue. This work must be carried out through God, by raising up various disasters on earth. But it is not at all the case that God will appear. At this time, the nation of the great red dragon shall still be a land of filth, and therefore God will not appear, but will merely emerge through chastisement. Such is the righteous disposition of God, from which none can escape. During this time, all who inhabit the nation of the great red dragon will suffer calamity, which naturally also includes the kingdom on earth (the church). This is the very time when the facts come forth, and so it is experienced by all people, and none can escape. This has been predestined by God. It is precisely because of this step of work that God says, "Now is the time to carry out grand plans." Because, in the future, there will be no church on earth, and due to the advent of catastrophe, people will only be capable of thinking about what is in front of them, and will neglect everything else, and it will be difficult for them to enjoy God amidst catastrophe. Thus, people are asked to love God with all their heart during this wonderful time, so that they do not miss the chance. When this fact passes, God will have utterly defeated the great red dragon, and thus the work of testimony of the people of God will have come to an end; afterward, God will commence the next step of work, laying waste to the country of the great red dragon, and ultimately nailing people throughout the universe upside down on the cross, after which He shall annihilate all mankind—these are the future steps of God's work. Thus, you should seek to do your best to love God in this peaceful environment. In the future you will have no more opportunities to love God, for people only have the opportunity to love God in the flesh; when they live in another world, no one will talk of loving God. Is this not the responsibility of a created being? And so how should you love God during the days of your lives? Have you ever thought of this? Are you waiting until after you die to love God? Is this not empty talk? Today, why do you not pursue loving God? Can loving God while remaining busy be true love for God? The reason why it is said that this step of God's work shall soon come to an end is because God already has testimony before Satan. Thus, there is no need for man to do anything; man is merely asked to pursue loving God in the years he is alive—this is the key. Because God's requirements are not high, and, furthermore, because there is a burning anxiety in His heart, He has revealed a summary of the next step of work before this step of work has finished, which clearly shows how much time there is; if God were not anxious in His heart, would He speak these words so early? It is because time is short that God works in this way. It is hoped that you can love God with all your heart, with all your mind, and with all your strength, just as you cherish your own life. Is this not a life of the utmost meaning? Where else could you find the meaning of life? Are you not being so blind? Are you willing to love God? Is God worthy of man's love? Are people worthy of man's adoration? So, what should you do? Love God boldly, without reservations, and see what God will do to you. See if He will slay you. In sum, the task of loving God is more important than copying and writing things down for God. You should give first place to what is most important, so that your life may have more value and be full of happiness, and then you should wait for God's "sentence" for you. I wonder if your plan will include loving God. I wish for everyone's plans to become that which is completed by God, and that they all become reality.

Chapters 44 and 45

Since the time when God told man of the "love for God"—the most profound of all lessons—He has focused on speaking of this topic in "the utterances of the seven Spirits," causing all people to try to know the emptiness of human life, and thus digging out the true love within them. How much love for God do those who exist in the present step have? Do you know? There are no limits to the lesson of "loving God." What kind of understanding do all people have about human life? What is their attitude toward loving God? Are they willing or unwilling? Do they follow the great masses, or detest the flesh? These are all things that you should be clear about and understand. Is there really nothing within people? "I want man to love Me truly; today, however, people still drag their feet, unable to give their true love to Me. In their imaginings, they believe that if they give their true love to Me, they will be left with nothing." In these words, just what does "true love" really mean? Why does God still ask for people's true love in this era when "all people love God"? Thus, God's intention is to ask man to write the meaning of true love upon an answer sheet, and so this is precisely the homework that God has laid out for man. As for this step of today, even though God does not make great demands of man, people have yet to attain God's original requirements of man; in other words, they have yet to invest all their strength in loving God. Thus, amidst their unwillingness, God still makes His requirements of people, right up until this work has had an effect and He gains glory in this work. Indeed, the work on earth is concluded by love for God. Thus, only when God concludes His work does He indicate to man the most important work of all. If, at the time when His work ends, He gives man death, what would become of man, what would become of God, and what would become of Satan? Only when the love of man on earth is elicited can it be said that "God has conquered man." If not, people would say that God bullies man, and God would thus be shamed. God would not be so stupid as to bring His work to an end without a whisper. Thus, when the work is soon to finish, there arises a wave of passion for loving God, and loving God becomes a topical issue. Of course, this love of God is not tainted by man; it is an unadulterated love, like a faithful wife's love for her husband, or the love of Peter. God does not want the love of Job and Paul, but the love of Jesus for Jehovah, the love between the Father and the Son: "only thinking of the Father, without consideration of personal loss or gain, loving only the Father, and none other, and asking for nothing else." Is man capable of this?

If we compare you with what Jesus did, He who was not of complete humanity, what do we think? How far have you come in your complete humanity? Are you capable of attaining a tenth of what Jesus did? Are you qualified to go to the cross for God? Can your love for God bring shame upon Satan? And how much of your love for man have you expelled? Has it been replaced with love for God? Do you really endure all for the love of God? Think for a moment about Peter, who lived in times past, and then take a look at yourself, who are of today—there really is a great discrepancy; you are unfit to stand before God. Within you, is there more love for God, or more love for the devil? This should be alternately placed on the left- and right-hand side of the scale, so as to see which one is higher—how much love for God is really in you? Are you fit to die before God? The reason why Jesus was able to stand upon the cross was because His experiences on earth were sufficient to bring shame upon Satan, and only for that reason did God the Father boldly allow Him to complete that stage of work; it was because of the hardship He had suffered and His love for God. But you are not so qualified. Thus, you must continue experiencing, achieving having God in your heart, and nothing else—can you accomplish this? From this, it can be seen how much you hate God, and how much you love God. It is not that God is too demanding toward man, but that man does not work hard. Is this not the reality of the situation? If not, how much that is lovable would you discover in God, and how much that is detestable would you find in yourself? You should give close consideration to these things. It is fair to say that only a few beneath the heavens love God—but can you be a pioneer, breaking the world record and loving God? God asks nothing of man. Can man not give Him some honor in this? Are you incapable of achieving even this? What else is there to say?

Chapter 46

Among all these words, none are more unforgettable than those of today. God's words previously revealed the states of man or the mysteries of heaven, yet this present utterance is unlike those of the past. It does not mock or poke fun, but is something completely unexpected: It is God sitting down and calmly talking with people. What is His intention? What do you see when God says, "Today, I have begun new work above the universes. I have given the people on earth a new beginning, and I have asked them all to move out from My house. And because people always like to indulge themselves, I advise them to be self-aware, and to not always disturb My work”? And what is this “new beginning” that God speaks of? God has advised people to leave before, but God’s intention then was to test their faith. So today, when He speaks with a different tone, is He being genuine or false? Before, people did not know the trials of which God spoke. It was only through the step of work of the service-doers that their eyes saw, and they personally experienced, God’s trials. Thus, from that time onward, thanks to the example of Peter’s hundreds of trials, people often made the mistake of believing that “it was the trial of God.” Furthermore, in God’s words the facts came but rarely. As such, people sunk ever deeper into blind beliefs about God’s trials, and so in all the words spoken by God, they never believed this to be the work of the facts carried out by God; instead, they believed that God, with nothing else to do, was specifically using words to test people. It was amidst such trials, which were hopeless and yet seemed to offer hope, that people followed, and so after God said “all who remain will likely suffer misfortune and little luck,” people still devoted their attention to following, and thus had no intention of leaving. People followed amid such illusions, and not one of them dared be sure that there was no hope—this is part of the proof of God’s victory. God’s viewpoint shows that He maneuvers everything to be in service to Him. People’s illusions encourage them not to leave God, regardless of the time or place, and so during this step God uses people’s imperfect motivations to make them bear the testimony for Him, which is the profound significance of when God says, “I have gained a portion of people.” Satan uses man’s motivations to cause interruptions, whereas God uses man’s motivations to make him serve—this is the true meaning of God’s words that “people imagine that they can worm their way in, but when they hand Me their false entry passes, I cast them into the pit of fire there and then, and seeing their own ‘painstaking efforts’ in flames, they lose hope.” God maneuvers all things to make them serve, and so He does not skirt the various opinions of man, but boldly tells people to leave; this is the wondrousness and wisdom of God’s work—combining honest words and the method into one, leaving people dizzy and disoriented. From this it can be seen that God really is asking people to move out from His home, that this is not some sort of trial, and God takes this opportunity to say, “Yet I also tell people that when they fail to gain blessings, no one may complain about Me.” No one can grasp whether God’s words are genuine or false, yet God uses this opportunity to stabilize people, to strip them of their desire to leave. Thus, if one day they are cursed, they will have been forewarned by God’s words, just as people say that “the words that are unpleasant to hear are the good ones.” Today, people’s love for God is earnest and sincere, and so in words that they couldn’t tell were genuine or false, they were conquered and came to love God, which is why God said “I have already accomplished My great work.” When God says, “I hope they find their own path to survival. I am powerless in this,” this is the reality of God’s utterance of all these words—yet people do not think so; instead, they have always followed without paying the slightest attention to God's words. As such, when God says, "in future, no longer will there be any words between us, no longer will we have anything to talk about, we will not interfere with each other, we will each go our own way," these words are reality, and not in the least bit tainted. Whatever people think, such is the "irrationality" of God. God has already borne the testimony before Satan, and God said that He shall make all people not leave Him, regardless of the time or place—and so this step of work has been completed, and God pays no heed to the complaints of man. Yet God has made this clear from the beginning, and so people are left helpless, forced to swallow their anger and hold their tongues. The battle between God and Satan is entirely based on man. People have no control over themselves; they are well and truly puppets, while God and Satan are the ones who pull the strings from behind the scenes. When God uses people to bear testimony for Him, He does all He can think of, everything possible, to use people to do service for Him, causing people to be manipulated by Satan, and, moreover, directed by God. And when the testimony that God wishes to be borne has finished, He tosses people to one side and leaves them suffering, while acting as if He has nothing to do with them. When He again wishes to use people, He picks them up once more and puts them to use, and people have not the slightest awareness of this. They are merely like an ox or horse used as its master pleases, none of them have any control over themselves. This might sound a little sad, but regardless of whether or not people have any control over themselves, doing service to God is an honor, not something to become upset about. It is as if God ought to act in this way. Is being able to satisfy the Almighty's need not something to be proud of? So, what do you think? Have you ever set your resolution to render service for God? Could it be that you still wish to hold onto the right to search for your own freedom?

Regardless, all that God does is good and worthy of emulation, and man and God are, after all, different. Upon this basis, you should love God with a human heart regardless of whether God has any regard for your love. God's words show that there is also great sadness within God's heart. It is only because of God's words that people are refined. Yet this work did, after all, happen yesterday—so, what exactly will God do next? This remains a secret to this day, and thus people are incapable of understanding or fathoming it, and can but sing in time to God's music. Nonetheless, all that God says is real, and it all comes true—this is without doubt!

PART THREE
THE WORDS OF CHRIST
AS HE WALKED IN THE CHURCHES

(JUNE 1992 TO MARCH 23, 2010)

Introduction

This portion of God's words contains a total of four sections that were all expressed by Christ between June 1992 and March 23, 2010. The majority are based on recordings of Christ's sermons and fellowships as He traveled among the churches. They have not been modified in any way, nor have they been subsequently altered by Christ. The remaining sections were personally written by Christ (when Christ writes, He does so in a single sitting, without stopping to think or carrying out any editing, and His words are entirely the expression of the Holy Spirit—this is beyond all doubt). Rather than separating these two kinds of utterance, we have presented them together, using the original order in which they were expressed; this allows us to see, from the entirety of His utterances, the steps of God's work, and understand how He works during each phase, which is beneficial to people's knowledge of the steps of God's work and the wisdom of God.

The first eight chapters of "The Words of Christ As He Walked in the Churches I"—collectively referred to as "The Path"—are a small portion of the words spoken by Christ as He stood on an equal footing with man. Despite their apparent insipidness, they brim with God's love and concern for mankind. Prior to this, God spoke from the perspective of the third heaven, which opened up a great distance between Him and man, and made people afraid to approach God, much less ask Him to provide for their lives. In "The Path," therefore, God spoke to man as an equal and pointed out the direction of the way, thus restoring man's relationship with God to its original state; people no longer doubted whether God was still employing a method of speaking, and were no longer haunted by the terror of the trial of death. God descended from the third heaven to earth, people came before God's throne from the lake of fire and brimstone, they cast off the specter of "the service-doers," and like newborn calves, they officially accepted the baptism of God's words. Only then was God able to talk intimately with them and do more of the work of providing them with life. The purpose of God humbling Himself as a person was for Him to get closer to people, reducing the distance between them and Him, allowing Him to gain people's recognition and trust, and inspiring in people the conviction to pursue life and follow God. The eight chapters of "The Path" can be summed up as the keys by which God opens the doors to people's hearts, and together they form a sugar-coated pill that He gives to man. Only by God doing this are people able to pay close attention to God's repeated teachings and reprimands. It could be said that it was only after this that God officially began the work of providing life and expressing the truth in this current stage of work, as He continued to speak: "What Viewpoint Believers Ought to Hold" and "On the Steps of God's Work"... Does such a method not show God's wisdom and His earnest intentions? This is the very start of Christ's provision of life, so the truths are a little shallower than subsequent sections. The principle behind this is very simple: God works according to mankind's needs. He does not act or speak blindly; only God fully understands mankind's needs, and no other has greater love and understanding for man.

In utterances one through ten in "Work and Entry," God's words enter a new phase. As a result, these utterances are placed at the beginning. Subsequently, "The Words of Christ As He Walked in the Churches II" came into being. During this phase, God made more detailed demands of His followers, demands that included knowledge about people's lifestyles, what is required of their caliber, and so on. Because these people were determined to follow God, and no longer had any doubts about the identity and essence of God, God also formally began to treat them as members of His own family, fellowshiping the inside truth of God's work from the time of creation until today, revealing the truth behind the Bible, and teaching them the true significance of God's incarnation. God's utterances in this section gave people a better understanding of the essence of God and the essence of His work, and allowed them to appreciate that what they gained from God's salvation surpassed what had been gained by prophets and apostles throughout ages past. From every line of God's words, you can perceive every iota of His wisdom, as well as His scrupulous love and concern for man. In addition to expressing those words, God publicly revealed, one-by-one, the prior notions and fallacies of man and things that people had never before imagined, as well as the path that people were to walk in the future. This, perhaps, is precisely the narrow "love" that man is capable of experiencing! After all, God had given people all they needed, and had given them what they asked for, without holding anything back or asking for anything in return.

Several special chapters in this section address the Bible. The Bible has been a part of human history for several thousand years. People, furthermore, treat it like God, to the extent that in the last days, it has taken the place of God, which disgusts God. Thus, when time permitted, God felt obliged to clarify the inside story and origins of the Bible; were He not to do this, the Bible would continue to hold the place of God in people's hearts, and people would use the words of the Bible to measure and condemn the deeds of God. By explaining the essence, the structuring, and the flaws of the Bible, God was by no means denying the existence of the Bible, nor was He condemning it; rather, He was providing an appropriate, fitting description that restored the original image of the Bible, addressed the misunderstandings that people had toward the Bible, and gave them the correct view of the Bible, so that they no longer worshiped the Bible, and were no longer lost; which is to say, so that they would no longer mistake their blind faith in the Bible as faith in God and the worship of God, afraid even to confront its true background and failings. Once people have an unadulterated understanding of the Bible, they are able to cast it aside without compunction and bravely accept the new words of God. This is God's goal in these several chapters. The truth that God wishes to tell people here is that no theory or fact can take the place of God's work and words of today, and that nothing can stand in God's stead. If people cannot escape the trap of the Bible, they will never be able to come before God. If they wish to come before God, they must first cleanse their hearts of anything that could replace Him; then they will be satisfactory to God. Although God only explains the Bible here, do not forget that there are many other erroneous things that people genuinely worship aside from the Bible; the only things that they do not worship are those that truly come from God. God merely uses the Bible as an example to remind people not to take the wrong path, and not to go to extremes again and fall prey to confusion while they believe in God and accept His words.

The words that God provides to man go from shallow to profound. The topics of His utterances make a continued progression from people's external behavior and actions to their corrupt dispositions, from where God aims the tip of His linguistic spear at that deepest part of people's souls: their substance. During the period that "The Words of Christ As He Walked in the Churches III" were expressed, God's utterances emphasize the essence and identity of man, and what it means to be a real person—these deepest truths and essential questions regarding people's entry into life. Of course, thinking back to the truths that God provides to man in "The Words of Christ As He Walked in the Churches I," the content of "The Words of Christ As He Walked in the Churches III" is, by comparison, incredibly profound. The words in this section touch upon people's future path and how they can be made perfect; they also touch upon mankind's future destination, and how God and man will enter into rest together. (It could be said that, to date, these are the words God has expressed to people regarding their substance, their mission, and their destination that are the easiest to understand.) It is God's hope that the people who read these words are those who have separated themselves from human notions and imaginings, who are capable of a pure understanding of God's every word in the depths of their hearts. Moreover, He hopes that all those who read these words can take His words as the truth, the way, and the life, and that they do not treat God lightly or wheedle Him. If people read these words with an attitude of examining or scrutinizing God, then these utterances would be like a closed book to them. Only those who pursue the truth, who are determined to follow God, and who are without a shred of doubt toward Him are qualified to accept these words.

"The Words of Christ As He Walked in the Churches IV" are another category of divine utterance that follows on from "God's Words to the Entire Universe." This section includes God's exhortations, teachings, and revelations to people in Christian denominations, such as: "By the Time You Behold the Spiritual Body of Jesus, God Will Have Made Heaven and Earth Anew," "Those Who Are Incompatible With Christ Are Surely Opponents of God." It also includes God's most specific requirements for mankind, such as: "Prepare Sufficient Good Deeds for Your Destination," "Three Admonitions," "Transgressions Will Lead Man to Hell." Many aspects are covered, such as revelations and judgments for all kinds of people and words on how to know God. It could be said that this section is the core of God's judgment of mankind. The most unforgettable part of this section of God's utterances is that, when God was about to close the curtains on His work, He exposed what is in the very marrow of people's bones: betrayal. His aim is for people to know the following fact at the very end, and to burn it into the deepest parts of their hearts: It does not matter how long you have been God's follower—your nature is still to betray God. In other words, it is in man's nature to betray God, because people are incapable of attaining absolute maturity in their lives, and there can only be relative changes in their dispositions. Although these two chapters, "Betrayal (1)" and "Betrayal (2)," deliver a blow to people, they are truly God's most faithful and benevolent warnings to people. At the very least, when people are complacent and self-conceited, after reading these two chapters, their own wickedness will be put in check, and they will quiet down. Through these two chapters, God reminds all people that no matter how mature your life is, how deep your experiences, how great your confidence, regardless of where you were born and where you are going, your nature of betraying God is liable to reveal itself at any time and in any place. What God wants to tell each and every person is this: It is the inborn nature of each and every person to betray God. Of course, God's intention in expressing these two chapters is not to find excuses to cast out or condemn mankind, but to make people more aware of man's nature, so that they can live carefully before God at all times to receive His guidance, which will stop them losing God's presence and setting foot onto the path of no return. These two chapters are an alarm bell for all those who follow God. Hopefully, people will understand God's earnest intentions; after all, these words are all indisputable facts—so what need has man to haggle over when and how they were expressed by God? If God kept all of these things to Himself, and waited until when people believed it was suitable for Him to utter them, would it not be too late? When would that most suitable time be?

God employs multiple methods and perspectives in these four sections. For example, sometimes He uses satire, and sometimes He uses the method of direct provision and teaching; sometimes He uses examples, and sometimes He uses harsh rebukes. Overall, there are all kinds of different methods, the goal of which is to cater to people's various states and tastes. The perspective from which He speaks changes with the different methods and content of His utterances. For example, sometimes He says "I" or "Me"; that is, He speaks to people from the perspective of God Himself. Sometimes He speaks from the third person, saying "God" is this or that, and there are other times when He speaks from the perspective of a human being. No matter what perspective He speaks from, His essence does not change, for no matter how He speaks, everything He expresses is the essence of God Himself—it is all the truth, and it is what mankind needs.

THE WORDS OF CHRIST
AS HE WALKED IN THE CHURCHES

(JUNE 1992 TO OCTOBER 1992)

The Path ... (1)

In their lifetime, no one knows what kind of setbacks they are going to encounter, nor what kind of refinement they will be subjected to. For some it is in their work, for some it is in their future prospects, for some it is in the family they were born into, and for some it is in their marriage. But the difference between them and us is that, today we, this group of people, are suffering amidst the word of God. That is, as people who serve God, we have suffered setbacks on the path of believing in Him, which is the path that all believers take, and the road beneath all our feet. It is from this point onward that we officially begin our course of believing in God, officially raise the curtain on human life, and set foot on the right path of life. In other words, this is when we set foot on the right path of God living alongside man, which is the path that normal people take. As someone who stands before God and serves Him—someone who wears the robes of a priest in the temple, and possesses the dignity, authority and majesty of God—I make the following declaration to all people, specifically: The glorious countenance of God is My glory, His management plan is My core. I do not seek to gain a hundredfold in the world to come, but only to do God's will in this world, so that He may enjoy one small fraction of His glory on earth thanks to the meager efforts I put forth in the flesh. This is My only desire. In My opinion, this is My only spiritual sustenance. I believe that these should be the "final words" of someone who lives in the flesh and who is full of emotion. This is the path underneath My feet today. I believe that this outlook of Mine is My final words in the flesh, and I hope that people do not have notions or other thoughts about Me. Although I have given it My all, I have still been unable to satisfy the will of God in heaven. I am immeasurably sad. Why is this the substance of the flesh? Thus, it was only as a result of the things I have done in the past, and the work of conquest that God has carried out in Me, that I gained a deeper understanding of the substance of mankind. Only after that did I set the most basic standard for Myself: to seek only to do God's will, to give it My all, and to have nothing weighing on My conscience. I pay no mind to what others who serve God require for themselves. In short, I have set My heart on doing His will. This is My confession as one of His creations who serves before Him—someone who has been saved and beloved by God, and who has suffered His blows. This is the confession of someone who has been watched over, protected, loved, and greatly used by God. From now on, I will continue down this path until I have completed the important task entrusted to Me by God. But in My opinion, the end of the road is imminent, for His work has been completed, and as of today, people have done all that they are able to do.

Mainland China's entry into this stream of recovery has gradually given rise to local churches centered around the work of the Holy Spirit. God has worked unceasingly in these local churches, for the churches born of this time have become the core of God in the fallen imperial family. God, it goes without saying, was overjoyed to establish the local churches in such a family—His was a happiness that defied description. After establishing local churches in mainland China and spreading this good news to brothers and sisters in other local churches across the world, God was very excited—this was the first step of work that He intended to do in mainland China. It could be said that this was the first act. And is His ability to begin the first step of His work in a citadel of demons such as this—a citadel that is unassailable by any man or thing—not the great power of God? It is clear that for the recovery of this work, countless brothers and sisters have been martyred, dying under the devils' butcher knife. It pains and angers Me to bring this up now, but for the most part, the days of suffering have passed. That I am able to work for God today, and that I have been able to make it to where I am today, is entirely thanks to the mighty power of God. I feel great admiration for those whom God chose for martyrdom; they were able to do God's will and sacrifice themselves for God. To be honest, if it were not for God's grace and mercy, I would have collapsed in the mire long ago. Thanks be to God! I wish to give all the glory to God so that He can be at rest. Some people ask Me: "Because of Your position, You should not die. Why is it that You're happy when God mentions death?" Instead of answering directly, I just give a little smile and say, "This is the path that I must pursue, that I absolutely must follow." People are baffled by My response. They can only look at Me in astonishment, a little doubtful of Me. However, I believe that since this is the path that I have chosen and it is also the determination I have set in front of God, then no matter how great the difficulties are, I must continue striving onward. This, I think, is the promise that should be upheld by those who serve God—and they must not go back on their word, not one bit. This is also a rule, a regulation that was put forth long ago, in the Age of Law, that someone who believes in God should understand. In My experience, though My knowledge of God is not great, and what I have actually experienced is paltry, not even worth mentioning—such that I have no clever insights to speak of—God's words must be upheld, and cannot be defied. In all honesty, My own practical experiences are paltry, but because God bears witness to Me and people always have blind faith in the person that I am, what can I do? Yet I still hope that people rectify their views on loving God. The person that I am counts for nothing; for I, too, pursue the way of faith in God, and the path that I walk is also none other than the path of belief in God. A person may be good, but should not be an object of worship—they can only act as an exemplar to follow. I do not care what others do, but I declare to people that I also give the glory to God; I do not give the glory of the Spirit to the flesh. I hope that everyone can understand My feelings on this. This is not Me shirking My responsibility, it is just the whole story. This should be crystal clear, so it shall not be spoken of again.

Today, I was enlightened before God. God's work on earth is the work of salvation. It is untainted by anything else. Some people may think otherwise, but I have always felt that the Holy Spirit is only doing one stage of work—the work of salvation—and no other work. This should be clear. Only now has the Holy Spirit's work in mainland China become clear. And why would God want to open up all paths and work in a place such as this, where demons run rampant? This shows that above all, God is doing the work of salvation. To be more precise, it is chiefly the work of conquest. The name of Jesus has been called out since the start. (Maybe some have not experienced it, but I say that this was a step of the work of the Holy Spirit.) This was in order to depart from the Jesus of the Age of Grace, so a portion of the people were selected in advance, and then later that selection was narrowed. After that, the name of Witness Lee was called out in mainland China, which was the Holy Spirit's second part of the work of recovery in mainland China. This was the first step of work in which the Holy Spirit began to select people, which was to first round people up and wait for the shepherd to tend to them; the name "Witness Lee" was used to perform that service. God personally did His work upon the witnessing of the name "the Powerful" and before that, it was in a preparatory stage. It therefore does not matter if that was right or wrong, and this is not the main issue within God's plan. After the witnessing of the name "the Powerful," God officially began to personally do His own work and after that, His deeds as God in the flesh officially began. Through the name "the Powerful Lord," He took control of all those who were rebellious and disobedient. They began to take on the likeness of human beings, just as people begin to seem like adults when they turn twenty-three or twenty-four; that is, people had just begun to have the life of a normal human being. Through the trial of the service-doers, God's work naturally transitioned to the phase of performing divine work. It could be said that only this step of work forms the core of so much of His work and that it is the primary step in His work. People know themselves and hate themselves. They have reached a point where they are able to curse themselves, they are happy to give up their own lives, and they have a faint sense of God's loveliness, upon which foundation they come to know the true meaning of human existence—thus achieving God's will. God's work in mainland China is drawing to a close. God has been carrying out His preparations in this land of filth for several years, yet never before have people achieved the point they have reached now, which means that it is only today that God formally begins His work. There is no need to furnish this with any more detail or clarity. It is entirely right to say that this work is done directly through God's divinity, but it is carried out through man. No one can deny this. It certainly is due to God's great power on earth that His work could reach the extent that it currently has in the people of this land of licentiousness. The fruit of this work could be taken anywhere to convince people. No one would dare to lightly pass judgment on this and deny it.

The Path ... (2)

Our brothers and sisters may have some idea of the sequence, the steps, and the methods of God's work in mainland China, but I still think it is worth looking back over these things or giving you a quick summary. I will just use this opportunity to say what is in My heart, and I shall not speak of matters beyond this work. I hope that the brothers and sisters can understand My mood, and I also humbly request that all those who read My words understand and forgive My small stature, the inadequacy of My life experience, and My inability to hold My head high before God. Still, My sense is that these are but objective reasons. In short, no matter what, no person, event, or thing can stop us from fellowshiping before God, and I hope that our brothers and sisters can join Me in working harder before God. I would like to offer up the following prayer: "Oh God! Please have mercy on us so that I and My brothers and sisters may struggle together under the dominion of our common ideals, be faithful to You until death, and never have any regrets!" These words are My resolution before God, but it could also be said that they are My own motto as a person of flesh who is used by God. I have shared these words in fellowship with the brothers and sisters by My side many times, and I have given them to those alongside Me as a message. I do not know what people think of them, but no matter what, I believe that these words not only have an aspect of subjective effort, but moreover, they also contain an aspect of objective theory. Because of this, it is possible that some people have certain opinions, and it would be well for you to take these words as your motto and see how great your drive for loving God becomes. Some people will develop a certain notion when they read these words, and think: "How could such an everyday, normal thing to say give people a great drive to love God until death? And it has nothing to do with the topic we're discussing, 'The Path.'" I acknowledge that these words may not be particularly captivating, but I have always thought that they can lead people onto the right track, and allow them to undergo all kinds of trials along the path of belief in God without losing heart or turning back. This is why I always treat them as My motto. I hope that people, too, will think them over carefully. However, My intention is not to force everyone to accept My own views—this is just a suggestion. No matter what other people think of Me, I think that God understands the inner dynamics in every single one of us. God is constantly working in every single one of us, and His work is tireless. Because we were all born in the country of the great red dragon, He works this way in us. Those who were born in the country of the great red dragon are fortunate to gain this work of the Holy Spirit. As one of them, I have a great sense of the dearness, worthiness of respect, and loveliness of God. This is God caring for us. For such a backward, conservative, feudalistic, superstitious, and depraved empire of the proletariat to be able to gain such work from God shows just how blessed we, this group of people in the final age, are. I believe that all of the brothers and sisters whose spiritual eyes are opened to see this work will weep tears of joy as a result. And at that time, will you not express yourself to God by dancing with joy? Will you not offer up the song in your heart to God? At that time, will you not show your resolve to God and make another plan before Him? I think that all of this is what normal people who believe in God should do. As human beings, I believe that every one of us should have some kind of expression before God. This is what a person who has feelings should do. A look at the caliber of everyone among us, and at where we were born, shows just how much humiliation God endured in order to come among us. We may have some knowledge of God within us, but what we do know—that God is so great, so supreme, and so honorable—is enough to highlight how great His suffering among mankind has been. Yet these words of Mine are still vague, and people can but treat them as letters and doctrine, for the people in our midst are too numb and dull-witted. My only choice, therefore, is to spend more effort explaining this issue to all those brothers and sisters who would accept it, so that our spirits can be moved by the Spirit of God. May God open our spiritual eyes, so that we may see the price God has paid, the efforts He has made, and the energy He has expended for us.

As one of those in mainland China who has accepted the Spirit of God, I have a profound sense of just how lacking our caliber is. (I hope that our brothers and sisters do not feel negative because of this—this is the reality of the situation.) In My practical life I have clearly seen that what we have and are is all so backward. In terms of the major aspects, it is how we conduct ourselves in our lives and our relationship with God, and in terms of the minor aspects, it is our every single idea and thought. These are all things that exist objectively, and they are difficult to conceal with words or fakery. Thus, when I say this, most people nod their heads and acknowledge it, and are convinced of it, unless they lack normal reason: Such people are incapable of accepting these views of Mine. Perhaps I am too impolite, brazenly referring to these people as veritable beasts. That is because in the country of the great red dragon, they are the lowest of the low, like pigs or dogs. No one is more lacking in caliber; they are not worthy of coming before God. Perhaps it is that My words are too “impudent.” In representing the Spirit of God who is working in Me, I curse this kind of beast-like, filthy creature, and I hope that My brothers and sisters are not weakened by this. It is possible that there are no such people among us, but no matter what the truth is, I believe that this is how such people should be dealt with. What do you think?

The empire of the great red dragon has lasted for several thousand years, and it has been depraved throughout—and because it has resisted God for all this time, it has met with the curses and wrath of God, after which has come the chastisement of God. Cursed by God, this country has consistently suffered racial discrimination, and remains in a state of backwardness. The country we were born in teems with all manner of filthy demons that are unbridled in their pursuit of dominance as a result—which means that they besmirch those who are born here. People’s habits, customs, ideas, and concepts are backward and old-fashioned, so they form all sorts of notions about God which they have so far been unable to shake off. In particular, they act one way in front of God, and another way behind His back, mistaking enshrining Satan for serving God, which shows that they are the most backward of all. God has carried out so much work in mainland China and has spoken so many of His words, but people are yet utterly numb and indifferent. They are still doing the work they previously did, and they have absolutely no understanding of God's words. When God proclaimed that there was no future and no hope, a church that was alive with the heat of summer immediately fell into a cold winter. People's true selves were exposed to the light of day and their previous confidence, love, and strength all disappeared without a trace. And today, none of them has recovered their vitality. They say with their words that they love God, and although they do not dare to complain in their hearts, no matter what, they just do not have that love. What is that about? I think that our brothers and sisters will acknowledge this fact. May God enlighten us, so that we can all know His loveliness, love our God in the depths of our hearts, and express the love all of us have for God in our different positions; may God bestow upon us unswerving hearts of sincere love for Him—this is what I hope for. Having said this, I feel a bit of sympathy for My brothers and sisters who were also born in this land of filth, and therefore a hatred for the great red dragon has grown within Me. It hinders our love for God and entices our greediness for our future prospects. It tempts us to be negative, to resist God. It has been the great red dragon that has deceived us, corrupted us, and ravaged us until now, to the point where we are unable to repay God's love with our hearts. We have the drive in our hearts, but in spite of ourselves, we are powerless. All of us are its victims. For this reason, I hate it from My very core, and I cannot wait to destroy it. However, when I think again, this would be to no avail and it would only bring trouble to God, so I come back to these words—I set My heart on doing His will—loving God. This is the path that I am taking—it is the path that I, one of His creations, should walk. It is how I should spend My life. These are words from My heart, and I hope that My brothers and sisters will gain some encouragement after reading these words so that My heart can gain some peace. For My goal is to do God's will and thus live out a luminous and resplendent life of meaning. In this, I will be able to die without regrets, with a heart full of gratification and comfort. Would you like to do that? Are you someone with that kind of resolution?

That God is able to work in the so-called “sick man of East Asia” is His great power. It is His humility and hiddenness. Regardless of His harsh words or chastisement toward us, we should praise Him from the bottom of our hearts for His humility, and love Him until the very end for this. People who have been bound by Satan for several thousand years have continued to live under its influence and have not thrown it off. They have continued to bitterly grope and struggle. In the past they would burn incense, and bow to and enshrine Satan, and they were tightly bound to family and secular entanglements as well as social interactions. They were unable to throw them off. In this kind of dog-eat-dog society, where can anyone find a meaningful life? What people recount is a life of suffering, and fortunately, God has saved these innocent people, placing our lives under His care and protection, so that our lives are joyful and no longer full of worries. We have continued to live under His grace so far. Is this not God's blessing? How can anyone have the nerve to make extravagant demands of God? Has He given us so little? Are you still not satisfied? I think that the time has come for us to repay God's love. We may suffer no small amount of ridicule, slander, and persecution because we follow the path of belief in God, but I believe this is a meaningful thing. It is a thing of glory, not shame, and no matter what, many are the blessings we enjoy. In countless times of disappointment, God's words have brought comfort, and before we know it, sorrow has turned to joy. In countless times of need, God has brought blessings and we have been provided for through His words. In countless times of sickness, God's words have brought life—we have been freed from danger, and have turned from danger to safety. You have already enjoyed so many things such as these without realizing it. Do you remember nothing of this?

The Path ... (3)

In My life, I am always glad to give My mind and body entirely to God. Only then is My conscience without reproach and somewhat at peace. Those who pursue life must first give their whole heart to God; this is a precondition. I would like for My brothers and sisters to pray with Me to God: "Oh God! May Your Spirit in heaven bestow grace upon people on the earth, so that My heart may fully turn to You, so that My Spirit may be moved by You, so that I may see Your loveliness in My heart and My Spirit, and so that those on the earth may be blessed to see Your beauty. God! May Your Spirit once again move our spirits, so that our love may be everlasting and immutable!" In all of us, God tests our hearts first—and once we have poured our hearts into Him, He begins to move our spirits. It is only in our spirits that we can behold God's loveliness, supremacy, and greatness. This is the path of the Holy Spirit in human beings. Do you have this kind of life? Have you experienced the life of the Holy Spirit? Has your spirit been moved by God? Have you seen how the Holy Spirit works in people? Have you given over your whole heart to God? When you have given your whole heart to God, you are able to experience the life of the Holy Spirit directly, and His work will be constantly made manifest to you. At that time, you will become someone who is used by the Holy Spirit. Do you wish to become such a person? I remember how, when I was moved by the Holy Spirit and gave My heart to God for the first time, I fell down before Him and cried out: "Oh God! You have opened My eyes and allowed Me to know Your salvation. I wish to give My heart to You entirely, and I ask only that Your will be done, I wish only that My heart may gain Your approval in Your presence, and I ask only to follow Your will." I will never forget that prayer; I was profoundly moved, and I broke down into tears of anguish before God. That was My first successful prayer in God's presence as someone who had been saved, and it was the first desire of My heart. After that, I was often moved by the Holy Spirit. Have you had this kind of experience? How has the Holy Spirit worked in you? I think that, to a greater or lesser extent, this experience is shared by all who seek to love God—it is just that they forget. If someone says they have not had such an experience, this proves that they have yet to be saved, and that they remain under the domain of Satan. The work of the Holy Spirit that is common to all of us is the path of the Holy Spirit, and it is also the path of those who believe in and seek God. The first step of work that the Holy Spirit performs in people is moving their spirits, after which they begin to love God, and pursue life, and all who walk this path are in the stream of the Holy Spirit. These are not only the dynamics of God's work in mainland China, but the entire universe. He works thus in everyone. If someone has never been moved, this proves that they are outside of the stream of recovery. In My heart, I pray to God without cease, asking that He move all people, so that everyone under the sun may be moved by Him and walk this path. This may be but an insignificant request from Me to God, but I believe that He will do this. I hope that all of My brothers and sisters will pray for this, that God's will may be done, and that His work may conclude soon, so that His Spirit in heaven can be at rest. This is My own little hope.

I believe that since God has been able to launch His work in one citadel of demons, He can surely do so in the countless others throughout the universe. We of the final age are certain to behold the day of God's glory, just as it is said that "the one who follows to the end will be saved." No one can replace God in this stage of His work—only God Himself can do this work, for this stage of work is extraordinary, it is a stage of the work of conquest, and people cannot conquer other people. People are only conquered when God speaks with His own mouth and acts by His own hand. Of all the universe, God uses the country of the great red dragon as a testing ground, after which He shall embark upon this work throughout the universe. Thus will He carry out even greater work throughout the universe, and all the people of the universe will receive God's work of conquest. People of every religion and every denomination must accept this stage of work. This is a path that must be taken—no one can escape it. Are you willing to accept this which is entrusted to you by God? I have always felt that accepting the Holy Spirit's commission is something glorious. The way I see it, this is the greatest commission God gives to mankind. I hope that My brothers and sisters work hard alongside Me and accept this commission from God, so that God may gain glory throughout the universe and in the realm above, and our lives will not be in vain. We should do something for God, or we should swear an oath. If people do not pursue any goal when they believe in God, then their lives are for nothing, and when the time comes for them to die, they will see only the blue sky and dusty earth. Is that a meaningful life? If you are able to fulfill God's requirements while you are living, is this not a beautiful thing? Why do you always bring such trouble upon yourself and why are you always so despondent? Have you gained anything from God, acting like that? And can God gain anything from you? In My oath to God, there was only the promise of My heart; I was not trying to fool Him with words. I would never do such a thing—I wish only to comfort the God that I love with My heart, so that His Spirit in heaven may be brought comfort. The heart may be valuable, but love is more precious. I would give the most precious love in My heart to God so that He may enjoy the most beautiful thing I have, and so that He may be fulfilled by the love I offer up to Him. Are you willing to give your love to God for Him to enjoy? Are you willing to make this the capital of your existence? In My experiences, I have seen that the more love I give to God, the more joy I find in living; furthermore, there is no limit to My strength, and I gladly offer all of My body and mind, and I have the constant feeling that I cannot possibly love God enough. So is your love a negligible love, or is it infinite, immeasurable? If you truly wish to love God, you will always have more love to give back to Him—and if that is the case, what person or thing could possibly stand in the way of your love for God?

God cherishes the love of every man. Toward all who love Him, His blessings are redoubled, for man's love is so hard to come by, and there is so little of it, it is almost imperceptible. Throughout the universe, God has tried asking people to love Him back, but throughout the ages until now, only a few—a handful—have ever given Him true love back. As far as I remember, Peter was one, but he was personally guided by Jesus and it was only at the time of his death that he gave his full love to God, and then his life ended. And so, under these heinous conditions, God narrowed the scope of His work in the universe, and used the country of the great red dragon as a demonstration zone, focusing all of His energy and His efforts in one place, so as to make His work more effective, and of greater benefit to His testimony. It was under these two provisions that God transferred His work of the entire universe to these people in mainland China, who had the lowest caliber of all, and began His loving work of conquest. And after He has made them all love Him, He will carry out the next step of His work, which is God's plan. Thus does His work achieve the greatest effect. The scope of His work has both a core and limitations. It is clear how great a price God has paid and how much effort He has expended when carrying out His work in us, in order for our day to come. This is our blessing. What confounds people's notions, therefore, is that Westerners envy us for having been born in a nice place, but we all see ourselves as lowly and humble. Is this not God lifting us up? The descendants of the great red dragon, who have always been trampled upon, are looked up to by Westerners—this is truly our blessing. When I think of this, I am overcome by the kindness of God, and by His dearness and closeness. This shows that everything God does is incompatible with human notions. Although all of these people are cursed, He is not constrained by the strictures of the law and He has intentionally transferred the center of His work to this piece of earth. This is why I rejoice, why I feel immeasurably happy. As someone who takes a leading role in the work, just like the chief priests among the Israelites, I am able to directly carry out the work of the Spirit and directly serve the Spirit of God; this is My blessing. Who would dare imagine such a thing? But today, this has unexpectedly come upon us. It truly is an enormous joy that merits our celebration. I hope that God continues to bless us, and lift us up, so that those of us living in this dunghill may be made great use of by God, and thus repay His love.

The path I walk now is that of repaying God's love, yet I have a constant feeling that this is not God's will, nor is it the path that I should be walking. To be made great use of by God—this is God's will, and this is the path of the Holy Spirit. Perhaps I am mistaken, but I think this is My path, for long ago I vowed to God that I wished for Him to guide Me, that I might set foot upon the path I ought to walk with all haste, and satisfy God's will as soon as possible. No matter what others think, I believe that following God's will is of the utmost importance. Nothing is more important in My life, and no one can deprive Me of this right. This is My personal view, and perhaps there are some who cannot understand it, but I do not think I have to justify this to anyone. I will take the path I should take—once I recognize the path I should be on I will take it and will not retreat. Thus, I come back to these words: I have set My heart on doing God's will. I am sure that My brothers and sisters will not be critical of Me! Overall, as I personally see it, other people can say what they like, but I feel that following God's will is what matters most, and that nothing should hold Me back in this. Following God's will can never be wrong! And it is not acting in one's own interests! I believe that God has looked inside My heart! So how should you understand this? Are you willing to offer yourself up for God? Are you willing to be used by God? Do you vow to follow the will of God? I hope that My words can be of some assistance to My brothers and sisters. Though there is nothing profound about My insights, I still tell you of them, so that we may share our innermost feelings, without any barriers between us, and so that God will be among us forever. These are words from My heart. Alright! That is all I have to speak of from My heart today. I hope that My brothers and sisters will keep working hard, and I hope that the Spirit of God will always look after us!

The Path ... (4)

That people are able to discover God's loveliness, to seek the way of loving God in today's age, and that they are willing to accept the training of the kingdom of today—all of this is God's grace, and moreover, it is His elevation of mankind. Whenever I think of this, I have a powerful sense of the loveliness of God. God truly loves us; if He did not, who would be able to discover His loveliness? Only thus do I see that all of this work is personally done by God Himself, and that people are guided and directed by God. I give thanks to God for this, and I would like My brothers and sisters to join Me in praising God: "All glory be to You, the supreme God Himself! May Your glory multiply and be revealed in those of us who have been selected and gained by You." God enlightened Me: He showed Me that we had been foreordained many eons ago, and that He wished to gain us in the last days, thus allowing the universe and all things to behold God's glory in its entirety through us. We, then, are the crystallization of six thousand years of God's management plan; we are the models, the specimens of God's work in the entire universe. Only now do I realize just how much God loves us, and that the work He does in us and the things He says are a million times more than in ages past. Not even in Israel or in Peter did God personally do so much work or speak so many words—which shows that we, this group of people, truly are incredibly blessed, incomparably more blessed than the saints of times past. This is why God has always said that the people of the final age are blessed. No matter what others say, I believe that we are most blessed by God. We should accept the blessings bestowed upon us by God; there may be some who complain to God, but I believe that if these blessings come from God, then this proves that we are deserving of them. Even if others complain or are unhappy with us, I still believe that no one else can inherit or remove from us the blessings God has given us. Because God's work is carried out in us and He speaks to us face to face—to us, and no others—God does as He would wish. And if people are not convinced, are they not just causing trouble for themselves? Do they not bring contempt upon themselves by doing that? Why do I say such things? Because I have a deep appreciation of this. Take the work that God does in Me, for example: Only I can undertake this work—could anyone else do it? I have been fortunate enough to receive this commission from God—could anyone else do this on a whim? It is My hope, however, that the brothers and sisters will understand My heart. I am not boasting about My credentials, but explaining an issue. I would that all glory be to God, and that God may look upon the heart of every one of us, so that our hearts may be cleansed before Him. On My heart, I wish to be completely gained by God, to become a pure virgin who is sacrificed upon the altar, and moreover, to have the obedience of a lamb, appearing among all of mankind as a holy spiritual body. This is My promise, the oath I have set forth before God. I wish to fulfill it and repay God's love through this. Are you willing to do this? I believe that this promise of Mine will invigorate more younger brothers and sisters, and that it will bring hope to more young people. To Me it seems that God views young people as especially important. Perhaps it is My own bias, but I always feel that young people have prospects and hope; it seems that God does extra work in young people. They may lack insight and wisdom, and they may be as spirited and skittish as a newborn calf, yet I believe they are not without their merits. You can see the innocence of youth in them and they are quick to accept new things. Although young people do tend toward arrogance, fierceness, and impulsiveness, this does not impact their ability to receive new light, for young people rarely hold on to old, outmoded things. That is why I see limitless promise in young people, and their vitality; it is for this reason that I have a tender feeling for them. I have no dislike for the older brothers and sisters, but neither do they hold any interest for Me—for which I offer them My sincere apologies. Perhaps what I have said is out of line or is inconsiderate, but I hope that all of you can forgive My recklessness, because I am too young to pay much attention to how I speak. But to tell the truth, the older brothers and sisters do, after all, serve a function—they are not completely useless. That is because they are experienced in handling things; they are steady in how they handle things, and they do not make as many mistakes. Are not these their strengths? Let us all say before God: “Oh God! May we all fulfill our own functions in our different positions and may we all do our very best for Your will!” I believe this must be God’s will!

In My experience, many of those who openly oppose this stream—who directly oppose the Spirit of God—are older. These people have very strong religious notions; at every turn, they compare God’s words with things that are obsolete, and try to square the things that were accepted in the past with God’s words. Are they not absurd? Could such people carry out the work entrusted to them by God? Could God use such people in His work? The Holy Spirit has a method for any given day of His work; if people cling to old-fashioned things, there will come a day when they are pushed off the stage of history. With every stage of His work, God uses new people. Do those who try to lecture others with obsolete things not bring destruction upon people? And are they not delaying God’s work? And if that is the case, when will God’s work be completed? There may be people who have some notions about what I have just said. Maybe they are not convinced. But I do not want you to worry: Before long, many things like this will happen, and they can only be explained by the facts. Let us visit some important people, some prestigious pastors or Bible expositors and preach this stream to them. They will not openly resist it at first, that is for certain—but they will take out the Bible to challenge you. They will have you recount the Book of Isaiah and the Book of Daniel, and they will even have you explain the Book of Revelation. And if you cannot speak to it, they will reject you, and call you a false Christ, and say that you are spreading a way of absurdity. After an hour they will make false accusations against you that will leave you breathless. Is this not open resistance? But that is just the beginning. They cannot impede the next step of God’s work, and before long, the Holy Spirit will force them to accept it. This is an inexorable trend; it is something that humans cannot do and something that people cannot even imagine. I believe that God’s work will spread unimpeded throughout the universe. This is God’s will, and no one can stop it. May God enlighten us and allow us to accept more new light, and not interrupt God’s management in this matter. May God have mercy on us so that we are all able to see the arrival of His day of glory. The time when God is able to bask in glory across the entire universe will also be the time when we gain glory alongside Him. It seems that will also be the time that I will part from those who walk with Me. I hope that My brothers and sisters may raise their voices with Mine in a plea to God: May God’s great work be completed soon, so that we may see His day of glory during our lifetime. I still hope to achieve God’s will within My lifetime, and I hope that God may continue to do His work in us, and that there are never any hindrances. This is My eternal aspiration. May God always be among us, and may His love build bridges between us so that the friendship between us becomes more precious. I hope that love creates further understanding between us and that love can bring us into deeper intimacy, remove any distance between us, and that the love between us may become deeper, broader, and sweeter. I believe that this has to be the will of My God. I hope that My brothers and sisters may grow closer to Me, and that we may all treasure the brief days we have together, that they may serve as beautiful memories for us.

There may have been more steps of God's work in mainland China, but they are not complicated. Thinking about it, there is sense to every step of His work; each has been personally carried out by God, and everyone has played a role in this work. Each "scene" is truly laughable, and who would have imagined that these people would act out such a drama, their performances so true to life amidst every trial, all manner of person portrayed so vividly and completely beneath God's pen, each exposing much to the light of day? But by this, I do not mean that God is playing around with people through His work. There would be no sense in that; the work of God has a purpose, and He would never do anything pointless or worthless. Everything He does is done to make people perfect, to gain them. From this I truly see that God's heart is entirely for the good of man. I may have called this a drama, but it can also be said that this drama is taken from real life. It is only that to God—the general director of this drama—people are there to cooperate with Him in completing this work. In another sense, however, God uses this to gain people, to make them love Him more. Is this not God's will? So I hope that no one has any concerns. Are you totally ignorant of God's will? I have said a lot—I hope that the brothers and sisters have understood it all and have not misinterpreted My heart. I have no doubt that you will all be gained by God. Everyone walks a different path. May the one beneath your feet be opened up by God, and may you pray to Him and say: Oh God! I wish for You to gain me, so that my spirit may return to You. Are you ready to seek God's guidance in the depths of your spirit?

The Path ... (5)

In the past, no one knew the Holy Spirit, much less were they aware of the path walked by the Holy Spirit. That is why people have always made fools of themselves before God. It is fair to say that almost everyone who believes in God does not know the Spirit, and that their faith is muddled and confused. Clearly, people do not understand God; and though their mouths may say they believe in Him, in essence, based on their behavior, they believe in themselves, not God. In My own actual experiences, I have seen that God testifies of the incarnate God, and from the outside it appears that people have been compelled to acknowledge the testimony of God, it can only barely be said that they believe that the Spirit of God is completely without error. I say, however, that what people believe in is not this person, much less the Spirit of God, but their own feelings. Are they not just believing in themselves by doing that? What I say is true. I am not labeling people, but there is one thing I have to clarify: For people to have been brought to today, whether they have clarity or are confused, is all down to the Holy Spirit.

It is not something over which humans have any control. This is an example of what I have mentioned before about the Holy Spirit forcing people's belief; this is the way that the Holy Spirit works, and it is the path taken by the Holy Spirit. No matter whom, in essence, people believe in, the Holy Spirit forcefully gives people a type of feeling, making them believe in the God in their hearts. Is that not how you believe? Do you not feel that your belief in God is a strange thing? Do you not think it odd that you are unable to escape this stream? Have you not put any effort into thinking about this? Is this not the greatest of all signs and wonders? Even if you have had the urge to escape many times, there is always a powerful life force that attracts you and makes you reluctant to walk away. And every time you find yourself in such circumstances, you invariably start weeping and sobbing, at a loss as to what to do next. Some of you do try to leave, but when you try to go, it feels like a knife to your heart, it feels as if your soul has been taken from you by some earthly ghost, leaving your heart restless and without peace. After that, you cannot help but brace yourself and return to God. ... Have you not had this experience? I have no doubt that the younger brothers and sisters, who are able to open up their hearts, will say: "Yes! I've experienced this so many times, it makes me ashamed to think of it!" In My own daily life, I am always happy to treat My young brothers and sisters as My intimates, because there is so much innocence in them—they are so pure and lovely. They are like My own companions. That is why I am always looking for the chance to bring all of My intimates together to talk about our ideals and our plans. May God's will be carried out in us so that we are all like flesh and blood, without any barriers or distance between us. May we all pray to God: "Oh God! If it is Your will, we beg that You give us the right environment, so that we may fulfill the wishes in our hearts. May You have mercy on we who are young and lacking in reason, and allow us to exert the strength within our hearts!" I trust that this is God's will, for long ago I prayed to God and said: "Father! On earth, we cry out to You without cease, wishing that Your will may soon be done on earth. I would seek Your will. May You do what You want to do and complete Your commission in Me with all haste. I am even willing for You to open up a new path among us, if it means Your will is accomplished soon! I ask only that Your work may be completed soon, and I trust that no rules can hold it back!" Such is God's work today; do you not see the path that the Holy Spirit walks? Every time I meet older brothers and sisters, I have this indescribable sense of oppression. When I meet them, I see that they reek of society; their religious notions, their experience of handling things, their manner of speaking, the words they use, and so on—they are all exasperating. They are supposedly full of "wisdom." I always keep as far away from them as I can, because for Me personally, I am not equipped with philosophies for living in the world. Every time I meet these people, they leave Me exhausted, My head covered in sweat; sometimes I feel so oppressed I can hardly breathe. So at this perilous moment, God gives Me a great way out. Perhaps that is just My misconception. I only care about what benefits God; doing God's will is what is most important. I stay far away from these people, but if God requires Me to meet them, I still obey. It is not that they are detestable, but that their “wisdom,” notions, and philosophies for living in the world are so abhorrent. I am there to complete God’s commission, not to learn how they do things. I remember how God once said to Me, “On earth, seek only to do Your Father’s will and complete His commission. Nothing else concerns You.” Thinking of this gives Me a little peace. That is because human affairs always feel so complicated to Me; I cannot wrap My head around them, and I never know what to do. So countless times have I been left distraught by this and have hated mankind; why do people have to be so complicated? Why cannot they be simple? Why bother trying to be so clever? When I meet people, for the most part it is based on God’s commission to Me. There may have been a few times when that was not the case, but who knows what is hidden in the depths of My heart?

Many times have I advised the brothers and sisters with Me that they should believe in God with their hearts, that they should not look out for their own interests, but be mindful of God’s will. Many times have I wept in anguish before God: Why are people not mindful of God’s will? Surely God’s work cannot just disappear without a trace for no reason? Nor do I know why—this has almost become a riddle in My mind—why people never recognize the path walked by the Holy Spirit, yet keep holding on to the abnormal relationships they have with others? Seeing people like this nauseates Me. Instead of looking to the path of the Holy Spirit, they focus on the deeds of man. Could God be satisfied by this? I am often saddened by this. It has almost become My burden—and it perturbs the Holy Spirit, too. Do you not feel any reproach in your heart? May God open the eyes of our spirits. Many times have I, who guide people to enter into God’s work, prayed before God: “Oh Father! I would that Your will be the core, I would search for Your will, I would that I am faithful to Your commission, so You may gain this group of people. May You take us to the land of freedom, so that we may touch You with our spirits, and may You awaken the spiritual feelings within our hearts!” I would that God’s will be done, and so I pray without cease for His Spirit to keep enlightening us, that we may walk the path led by the Holy Spirit—for the path that I walk is the path of the Holy Spirit. And who else could walk this path in My stead? This is what makes My burden even heavier. I feel as if I am going to fall, but I have faith that God would never delay His work. Perhaps, we will only part ways once His commission has been completed. So maybe it is because of the effect of God’s Spirit that I have always felt different. It is as if there is work God wants to do, but I still cannot grasp what it is. Yet I trust that no one on earth is better than My intimates, and I trust that they will pray for Me before God, for which I am immeasurably grateful. I wish for the brothers and sisters to say with Me: “Oh God! May Your will be made fully manifest in we, the people of the final age, so that we may be blessed with the life of the spirit, and behold the deeds of the Spirit of God, and look upon His true face!” Once we have reached this step we will truly be living under the guidance of the Spirit, and only then will we be able to look upon God’s true face. Which is to say, people will be able to understand the true meaning of all truths, not understanding or comprehending according to human notions, but according to the enlightenment of the will of God's Spirit. This is entirely the work of God Himself, there is nothing of human ideas in it; it is His plan of work for the deeds He wishes to make plain on earth, and it is the last portion of His work on earth. Do you wish to join in this work? Do you want to be part of it? Do you aspire to be made perfect by the Holy Spirit and share in the life of the spirit?

What is key today is to go deeper from our original foundation. We must go deeper into the truth, the visions, and the life—but first I must remind the brothers and sisters that to enter this step of work, you must discard your previous notions. That is, you must change the way you live, make new plans, turn over a new leaf. If you still cling to what was precious to you in times past, the Holy Spirit will not be able to work in you, and He will barely be able to sustain your life. Those who do not pursue, or enter, or plan will be utterly abandoned by the Holy Spirit—and so they are said to have been forsaken by the age. I hope that all the brothers and sisters are able to understand My heart, and I hope that more “new recruits” will stand up to cooperate with God and complete this work together. I trust that God will bless us. So, too, do I trust that God will give Me many more intimates, so that I may walk to every corner of the earth, and there may be greater love between us. Moreover, I trust that God will extend His kingdom because of our efforts; I would that these efforts of ours reach unprecedented levels, allowing God to gain more young people. I want us to spend more time praying for this, I want us to pray without cease, so that we spend our whole lives before God, and are as close as can be to God. May there never again be anything between us, and may we all swear this oath before God: To work hard together! To be loyal to the very end! To never part, and always be together! I hope that the brothers and sisters all make this promise before God, so that our hearts will never change, and our determination will never waver! For the sake of God's will, I say again: Let us work hard! Let us strive with all our might! God will surely bless us!

The Path ... (6)

It is because of God's work that we have been brought to the present day, and thus are we the survivors in God's management plan. That we remain today is a great elevation from God, for according to God's plan, the country of the great red dragon should be destroyed. But I think that perhaps He has established another plan, or He wishes to carry out another portion of His work, so even today, I cannot explain this clearly—it is like an unsolvable riddle. But overall, this group of ours has been predestined by God, and I continue to believe that God has other work in us. May we all beseech Heaven thus: “May Your will be accomplished, and may You once again appear to us and not conceal Yourself so that we may see Your glory and Your countenance more clearly.” It is My constant feeling that the path God guides us along does not go straight up, but is a winding road full of potholes; God says, furthermore, that the rockier the path is, the more it can reveal our loving hearts. Yet none of us can open up such a path. In My experience, I have walked many rocky, treacherous paths and I have endured great suffering; at times I have even been so utterly grief-stricken that I wanted to cry out, but I have walked this path to this day. I believe that this is the path led by God, so I endure the torment of all the suffering and continue onward. For this is what God has ordained, so who can escape it? I do not ask to receive any blessings; all I ask is that I am able to walk the path I ought to walk according to God’s will. I do not seek to imitate others, walking the path that they walk; all I seek is that I may fulfill My devotion to walk My designated path until the end. I do not ask for the help of others; to be frank, I cannot help anyone else, either. It seems that I am terribly sensitive on this matter. I do not know what other people think. This is because I have always believed that the amount an individual must suffer and the distance they must walk on their path is ordained by God, and that no one can really help anyone else. Some of our zealous brothers and sisters may say that I am without love, but this is just what I believe. People walk their paths relying on God’s guidance, and I trust that most of My brothers and sisters will understand My heart. I also hope that God provides us with much greater enlightenment in this aspect, so that our love may become purer and our friendship more precious. May we not be confused on this topic, but only gain greater clarity, so that interpersonal relationships may be built upon the foundation of God’s leadership.

God has worked in mainland China for a number of years, and He has paid a great price in all people to finally get us to where we are today. I think that in order to guide everyone onto the right path, this work must begin where everyone is weakest; only then can they break through the first hurdle and continue onward. Is that not better? The Chinese nation, corrupted for thousands of years, has survived until today, every manner of “virus” advancing without cease, spreading everywhere like the plague; just looking at people’s relationships is enough to see how many “germs” lurk within people. It is extremely difficult for God to develop His work in such a tightly closed and virus-infected area. People’s personalities, habits, the way they do things, everything they express in their lives and their interpersonal relationships—they are all in tatters, to the point that human knowledge and cultures have all been condemned to death by God. Not to mention the various experiences they learned from their families and society—these have all been convicted in the eyes of God. This is because those who live in this land have consumed too many viruses. It is like business as usual for them, they think nothing of it. Therefore, the more corrupted people are in a place, the more abnormal their interpersonal relationships. People’s relationships are rife with intrigue, they plot against each other and slaughter each other as if in some cannibalistic citadel of demons. In such a terror-filled place, where ghosts run rampant, it is extremely difficult to carry out God’s work. I pray without cease to God when I have to meet people, for I am terrified of meeting them, and deeply afraid that I will offend their “dignity” with My disposition. In My heart, I am ever fearful that these unclean spirits will act recklessly, so I always pray to God to protect Me. Every manner of abnormal relationship is evident among us, and seeing all of this, there is hatred in My heart, for among themselves, people are always engaged in the “business” of man, and never spare any thought for God. I despise their behavior to My very bones. What can be seen in the people in mainland China is nothing but corrupt satanic dispositions, so in God’s work in these people, it is nearly impossible to find anything worthwhile within them; all the work is done by the Holy Spirit, and it is only that the Holy Spirit moves people more, and works in them. It is nearly impossible to utilize those people; that is, the work of the Holy Spirit moving people coupled with people’s cooperation cannot be done. The Holy Spirit just slogs away to move people, but even so, people remain numb and insensate, and have no idea what it is that God is doing. So, God’s work in mainland China is comparable to His work of creating the heavens and earth. He causes all people to be born again, and changes everything about them, for there is nothing worthwhile within them. It is so heartbreaking. I often pray in sorrow for these people: “God, may Your great power be revealed in these people, so that Your Spirit may greatly move them, and so that these numb and dull-witted sufferers may awaken, no longer in lethargic slumber, and see the day of Your glory.” May we all pray before God and say: Oh God! May You once again take mercy on and care for us so that our hearts can fully turn to You, and so that we are able to escape from this filthy land, stand up, and complete what You have entrusted us with. I hope that God may once again move us so that we may gain His enlightenment, and I hope that He may have mercy on us so that our hearts are able to gradually turn to Him and He may gain us. This is the desire we all share.

The path we walk is entirely ordained by God. In short, I believe that I will surely walk this path to the very end, for God always smiles on Me, and it is as if I am ever guided by His hand. Thus is My heart untainted by anything else, and thus am I ever mindful of God’s work. I carry out all that God commissions to Me with all My strength and with devotion, and never do I interfere in tasks not allotted to Me, nor do I involve Myself in who else does it—for I believe that each person must walk their own path, and not intrude on others. That is how I see it. Perhaps this is a product of My own personality, but I hope that My brothers and sisters understand and forgive Me because I never dare to go against the decrees of My Father. I dare not defy the will of Heaven. Have you forgotten that “the will of Heaven cannot be defied”? Some people may think Me self-centered, but I believe that I have come particularly to carry out one part of God’s work of management. I have not come to get involved in interpersonal relationships; I will never learn how to get on well with others. In God’s commission, however, I have the guidance of God, and I have the faith and tenacity to see this work through. Maybe I am being too “self-centered,” but I hope that everyone will take it upon themselves to try to feel God’s just and selfless love, and to try to cooperate with God. Do not wait for the second advent of God's majesty; that is no good for anyone. I always think that what we should consider is this: "We must do everything possible to do what we ought to in order to satisfy God. God's commission of each of us is different; how should we accomplish it?" You must perceive just what the path you walk is—it is imperative that you are clear about this. Since you all wish to satisfy God, why not give yourself over to Him? The first time I prayed to God, I gave My whole heart to Him. The people around Me—parents, sisters, brothers, and colleagues—they were all pushed far to the back of My mind by what I had resolved, it was as if they did not exist to Me at all. For My mind was always on God, or God's words, or His wisdom; these things were always in My heart, and they took the most precious place in My heart. Thus, for people who brim with philosophies for living, I am someone who is cold-blooded and emotionless. Their hearts are pained by how I comport Myself, by how I do things, by My every move. They cast strange glances at Me, as if the person that I am were some unsolvable riddle. In their minds, they are secretly taking the measure of the person that I am, not knowing what I will do next. How could anything they do stand in My way? Maybe they are envious, or appalled, or mocking; regardless, as if with great hunger and thirst I pray before God throughout, as if it were just Me and Him in the same world, and there was no one else. Ever do the forces of the outside world crowd closely around Me—but so, too, does the feeling of being moved by God surge within Me. Caught in this dilemma, I bowed down before God: "Oh God! How could I be indisposed toward Your will? Your eyes look upon Me as honorable, as wrought gold, yet I am unable to escape from the forces of darkness. I would suffer for You My whole life, I would make Your work My life's occupation, and I beg You to give Me a proper place of rest to devote Myself to You. Oh God! I wish to offer Myself up to You. You know well man's weakness, so why do You conceal Yourself from Me?" Right then, it was as if I were a mountain lily, its fragrance stirred by the breeze, unknown to all. Heaven though, wept, and My heart kept crying; it felt like there was even greater pain in My heart. All forces and the besiegement of man—they were like a thunderclap on a clear day. Who could understand My heart? And so I came before God once more, and said, "Oh God! Is there no way to carry out Your work in this land of filth? Why is it that others cannot be mindful of Your heart in a comfortable, supportive environment that is free of persecution? I want to spread My wings, yet why is it so difficult to fly away? Do You not approve?" For days I wept over this, yet I always trusted that God would bring comfort to My sorrowful heart. No one has ever understood My anxiousness. Perhaps it is a direct perception from God—I have always had a fire within Me for His work, and have barely had time to take a breath. To this day, I still pray and say, "Oh God! If it is Your will, may You lead Me to carry out even greater work of Yours so that it may spread throughout the universe, and that it may open up to every nation and denomination, so that a little peace is brought to My heart, and so I may live in a place of rest for You, and I may work for You without interference, and can serve You, with My heart at peace, for My whole life." This is My heart's desire. Maybe the brothers and sisters will say that I am arrogant and conceited; I, too, acknowledge this, for it is fact—young people are nothing if not arrogant. Thus do I tell it how it really is, without contravening the facts. In Me you may see all the personality traits of a young person, but you can also see where I am different from other young people: My calmness and quietude. I am not making a topic out of this; I believe that God knows Me better than I know Myself. These are words from My heart, and I hope that the brothers and sisters will not take offense. May we speak of the words in our hearts, look at what it is that each of us pursues, compare our hearts of love for God, listen to the words we whisper to God, sing out the most beautiful songs in our hearts, and give voice to the pride in our hearts, so that our lives become more beautiful. Forget the past and look toward the future. God will open up a path for us!

The Path ... (7)

In our practical experiences, we see that there are many times when God has personally opened up a path for us, so that the path beneath our feet may be firmer, and more real. For this is the path that God has opened for us since time immemorial, and which has been passed down to our generation after tens of thousands of years. Thus have we taken up the path of our predecessors, who did not walk it to the end. We have been chosen by God to walk its final stage. And so, this path was especially prepared for us by God, and whether we are blessed or afflicted with misfortune, no one else can walk this path. Let Me add My own insight to this: Do not think of trying to flee elsewhere, or of trying to find another path, and do not covet status, or try to set up your own kingdom—these are all fantasies. You may have certain preconceived ideas about My words, in which case I suggest that you stop being so muddle-headed. You are better off giving this more thought; do not try to be clever, and do not confuse good and bad. You will regret it once God's plan is accomplished. What I am saying is, when the kingdom of God comes, the nations of the earth will all be smashed to pieces. At that time you will see that your own plans have also been obliterated, and that those who are chastised will be smashed, and in this, God will make fully manifest His disposition. I think that since these things are so clear to Me, I should tell them to you, so you will not blame Me afterward. That we have been able to walk this path until today was ordained by God, so do not think that you are something special, nor that you are unlucky—none may make assertions regarding God's current work lest you are smashed to pieces. I have been enlightened by God's work: No matter what, God shall make this group of people complete, His work shall never change again, and He shall take this group of people to the path's end, and end His work on earth. We should all understand this. Most people love to "look ahead," and there is no end to their appetites. None of them understand God's urgent will of today, and so they all think of escape. They are like runaway horses that want only to roam the wilderness; few wish to settle down in the good land of Canaan to seek the way of human life. Having entered the land flowing with milk and honey, if people do not enjoy it, what more do they want? Truth be told, beyond the good land of Canaan lies only wilderness. Even when people have entered the place of rest, they are unable to stand by their duty; are they not just harlots? If you lose the opportunity to be made perfect by God here, you will regret it for the rest of your days, your remorse will be infinite. You will be like Moses, who gazed at the land of Canaan but could not enjoy it, his fists clenched, his death full of regret—do you not think this shameful? Do you not think it embarrassing, to be scoffed at by others? Are you willing to be humiliated by others? Do you not wish to do well for yourself? Do you not want to be an honorable and upstanding person who is perfected by God? Do you really aspire to nothing? You are not willing to take the other paths; do you also not wish to take the path that God has ordained for you? Do you dare to go against the will of Heaven? No matter how great your “skill,” can you really offend Heaven? I believe that we are better off trying to know ourselves properly. One word from God can change heaven and earth, so what is a scrawny little person in God’s eyes?

In My own experiences, I have seen that the more you set yourself against God, the more God will show His majestic disposition, and the more severe will be the chastisement that He “serves” to you; the more you obey Him, the more He will love you and protect you. God’s disposition is like an instrument of punishment: If you obey you will be safe and sound; when you do not obey—when you always try to show off, and always play tricks—God’s disposition immediately changes. He is like the sun on a cloudy day, He will hide from you and show you His wrath. So, too, is His disposition like the weather in June, when the skies are clear for miles around and the waves are but a ripple on the water’s surface, until the current suddenly speeds up, and the water turns into a roiling swell. Dare you be so reckless in the face of such a disposition of God? In your experiences, most of you brothers and sisters have seen that when the Holy Spirit works in the light of day, you are full of faith—but then, out of the blue, God’s Spirit suddenly forsakes you, and you are so tormented that you are sleepless at night, casting about for the direction in which His Spirit disappeared. No matter what you do, you cannot find where His Spirit went—but then, out of the blue, He appears to you again, and you are as ecstatic as when Peter suddenly beheld his Lord Jesus once more, so ecstatic you almost cry out. Have you really forgotten this, after experiencing it so many times? The Lord Jesus Christ, who became flesh, who was nailed to the cross, and then was resurrected and ascended into heaven, is always hidden to you for a time, and then He appears to you for a time. He reveals Himself to you because of your righteousness, and He becomes angry and departs from you because of your sins, so why do you not pray to Him more? Did you not know that after the Pentecost, the Lord Jesus Christ has another commission on earth? You know only the fact that the Lord Jesus Christ became flesh, came to the earth, and was nailed to the cross. Never have you realized that the

Jesus you believed in before has long since entrusted His work to someone else, and that it was completed long ago, so the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ has come to the earth again in fleshly form to do another part of His work. I would like to insert something here—despite the fact that you are currently in this stream, I dare say that few among you believe this person to be the One bestowed upon you by the Lord Jesus Christ. You know only to enjoy Him; you do not acknowledge that God’s Spirit has once again come to the earth, and you do not acknowledge that the God of today is the Jesus Christ of thousands of years past. And so I say that all of you are walking with your eyes closed—you just accept wherever you end up—and you are not serious about this at all. Thus do you believe in Jesus in word, but dare to blatantly resist the One to whom God bears witness today. Are you not foolish? The God of today does not care about your mistakes, He does not condemn you. You say that you believe in Jesus, so could your Lord Jesus Christ let you off? Do you think that God is some place for you to let off steam, to lie and to deceive? When your Lord Jesus Christ reveals Himself once more, He will determine whether you are righteous or whether you are evil based on how you behave now. Most people end up with notions about what I refer to as “My brothers and sisters,” and believe that God’s means of working will change. Are such people not courting death? Can God bear witness to Satan as God Himself? In this, are you not condemning God? Do you believe that just anyone can become God Himself? If you truly knew, then you would not have any notions. In the Bible is the following passage: All things are for Him and all things are from Him. He will bring many sons to glory and He is our Captain.... Thus does He have no shame in calling us brothers. You may be able to easily recite these words by heart, but you do not understand what they actually mean. Are you not believing in God with your eyes closed?

I believe that our generation is blessed to be able to take up the path unfinished by those of previous generations, and to behold the reappearance of the God of several thousand years past—a God who is among us, and abounds in all things. You could never have imagined that you would walk this path—is this something you are capable of? This path is led directly by the Holy Spirit, it is led by the sevenfold intensified Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, and it is the path that has been opened up for you by the God of today. Even in your wildest dreams you could not have imagined that the Jesus of several thousand years past would appear once again before you. Do you not feel gratified? Who is able to come face-to-face before God? I often pray for our group to receive greater blessings from God, that we might be favored by God and gained by Him, but there have also been countless times when I have shed bitter tears for us, asking that God enlighten us, so that we may behold greater revelations. When I see people who constantly try to fool God and never aspire to anything, or else who are mindful of the flesh, or strive for interests and reputation to make themselves center stage, how could I not feel great pain in My heart? How can people be so insensate? Has My work really had no effect? If your children were rebellious and unfilial toward you, if they lacked conscience, if they cared only for themselves and were never considerate of your feelings, and they kicked you out of the house after they grew up, how would you feel at that point? Would there not be tears streaming down your face as you remembered the blood, sweat and sacrifice you put into raising them? Thus have I prayed countless times to God and said, “Dear God! Only You know whether I carry a burden for Your work. Where My actions are not in line with Your will, You discipline Me, perfect Me, and make Me aware. My only request of You is that You move these people more, so that You may obtain glory soon and they may be gained by You, so that Your work may achieve Your will, and Your plan may be completed earlier.” God does not want to conquer people through chastisement, He does not want to always lead people by the nose. He wants people to obey His words and work in a disciplined fashion, and through this, satisfy His will. But people have no shame and constantly rebel against Him. I believe that it is best for us to find the simplest way to satisfy Him, that is, to obey all of His arrangements. If you can truly achieve this, you will be perfected. Is this not an easy, joyful thing? Take the path that you should take; pay no mind to what others say, and do not think too much. Are your future and your fate in your own hands? You always try to escape, wishing to take the worldly path—but why can you not get out? Why is it that you waver at a crossroads for many years and then end up choosing this path once again? After wandering for many years, why is it that you have now returned to this house in spite of yourself? Is this up to you? For those of you in this stream, if you do not believe Me then hear this: If you plan to leave, see if God lets you, see how the Holy Spirit moves you—experience it for yourself. To speak frankly, even if you suffer misfortune, you must suffer it in this stream, and if there is suffering, you must suffer here, today; you cannot go elsewhere. Is this clear to you? Where would you go? This is God’s administrative decree. Do you think that God’s selection of this group of people has no meaning? In His work today, God does not grow angry easily—but if people try to disrupt His plan, His face instantly changes, turning from bright to overcast. So, I advise you to settle down and submit to God’s designs, and allow Him to make you complete. Only people who do this are smart.

The Path ... (8)

It has not been just a day or two since God came to the earth to interact with mankind and to live with people. Perhaps, during this time, people achieve a good knowledge of God, and perhaps they gain more than a few insights into serving God, and they become seasoned in their belief in God. Whatever the case, people more or less understand God’s disposition, and they express their own dispositions in myriad ways, too. The way I see it, people’s various manifestations are sufficient for God to use as specimens, and their mental activities enough for Him to use as reference. This could be an aspect of the cooperation between man and God, one of which man is unaware, making this performance directed by God very vivid and lifelike. I am saying these things to My brothers and sisters as the general director of this drama—every single one of us can speak to our thoughts and feelings after acting this out, and chat about how each of us experiences our lives within this drama. We may as well have an entirely new kind of symposium to open up our hearts and talk about our performing arts, and see how God guides each individual so that in the next rendition we are able to express a higher level of our art and each play out our own role to the greatest extent possible, and not disappoint God. I hope that My brothers and sisters will take this seriously. No one should treat it lightly, for playing a part well is not something that can be achieved in one or two days; it requires that we experience life and go deeper into our real lives over the long term, and have practical experience of various types of life. Only then can we go up on stage. I am full of hope for My brothers and sisters. I trust that you will not become disheartened or discouraged, that no matter what God does, you will be like a pot of fire: never tepid, and persisting until the very end, until God's work is fully revealed, until the drama that God directs comes to its final conclusion. I ask nothing else of you, I hope only that you will endure, that you will not be impatient for results, that you cooperate with Me so that the work that I should do is done well, and that no one causes interruptions or disturbances. When this part of the work is completed, God will reveal everything to you. After My work has been completed, I will present your credit before God to give account to Him. Is that not better? Helping each other to achieve our own aims—is this not a perfect solution for everyone? Now is a difficult time, one that requires you to pay a price. Because I am the director now, I hope that none of you are vexed by this. Such is the work that I am doing. Perhaps, one day, I will switch to a more appropriate “work unit” and no longer make things difficult for you. I will show you whatever you want to see and grant you whatever you wish to hear. But not now. The work of today is this work, and I cannot give you free rein and allow you to do whatever you want. That would make My work difficult; to be honest, it would not bear any fruit, and it would be of no benefit to you. So today, you must suffer “injustice.” When the day comes, and this stage of My work is completed, I will be free, I will not bear such a heavy burden, and I will accede to whatever you ask from Me; as long as it is beneficial for your lives, I will fulfill what you ask. Today, I have taken on a heavy responsibility. I cannot go against the commands of God the Father, and I cannot disrupt the plans for My work. I cannot manage My personal affairs through My business affairs—and I hope you can all understand and forgive Me, for all I do is according to the wishes of God the Father; I do whatever He has Me do, no matter what He wants, and I would not provoke His anger or His wrath. I do only what I should. So, on behalf of God the Father, I advise you to endure a little while longer. No one need worry. After I have completed what I need to do, you can do whatever you want and see whatever you like—but I must complete the work that I need to do.

The utmost faith and love are required from us in this stage of work. We may stumble from the slightest carelessness, for this stage of work is different from all the previous ones: What God is perfecting is mankind's faith, which is both invisible and intangible. What God does is convert words to faith, to love, and to life. People must reach a point where they have endured hundreds of refinements and possess faith greater than Job's. They must endure incredible suffering and all manner of torture without ever leaving God. When they are obedient unto death, and have great faith in God, then this stage of God's work is complete. This is the work that I have taken on, so I hope that My brothers and sisters are able to understand My predicament, and ask nothing else of Me. This is God the Father's requirement of Me, and I cannot escape from this reality; I must do the work that I should do. I hope only that you do not employ forced arguments and perverted logic, that you are more insightful, and do not view matters too simply. Your thinking is too childish, too naive. God's work is not as simple as you might imagine, He does not just do whatever He wants to; if He did, His plan would be ruined. Would you not say so? I am doing the work of God. I am not just doing odd jobs for people, doing whatever I feel like doing and personally arranging whether or not I do something. Things are not that simple today. I have been sent by the Father to act as the director—do you think that I arranged and chose this Myself? The ideas of man are often inclined to interrupt God's work, which is why, after I work for a period of time, there are many requests from people that I am not able to fulfill, and people change their minds about Me. You should all be clear about these ideas of yours; I am not going to bring them up individually, I can only explain the work I do. My feelings are not hurt by this at all. Once you have understood that, you can view it however you like. I will not raise any objections, because this is how God works; I am not obliged to explain it all. I have just come to perform the work of words, to work and to allow this drama to play out through the direction of words. I need speak of nothing else, nor could I do anything else. I have explained everything I have to say, I care not what you think, and it does not matter to Me. But I would still like to remind you that God's work is not as simple as you imagine it to be. The less in line it is with people's notions, the deeper its significance; and the more in line it is with people's notions, the less valuable it is, the more it lacks real significance. Consider these words carefully—this is all I will say about that. You yourselves can analyze the rest on your own. I will not explain it.

People imagine that God does things in a certain way, but over this last year or so, has what we have seen and experienced of God's work really been in line with human notions? From the creation of the world until now, not a single person has been able to grasp the stages or the rules of God's work. If they could, why is it that those religious leaders do not understand that this is how God works today? Why is it that so few people understand the reality of today? From this we can see that no one understands God's work. People must only act according to the guidance of His Spirit; they must not just rigidly apply rules to His work. If you take the image and the work of Jesus and compare it with God's current work, it is just like the Jews trying to square Jesus with Jehovah. Do you not lose out by doing this? Even Jesus did not know what God's work in the last days would be; all He knew was that what He needed to complete was the work of being crucified. So how could others have known? How could they have known what work God was going to do in the future? How could God disclose His plan to human beings, who have been possessed by Satan? Is that not foolish? God asks that you know and understand His will. He does not ask that you consider His future work. We need only concern ourselves with the faith in God, act per His guidance, be pragmatic in our handling of real difficulties, and not make things difficult for God or cause trouble for Him. We should do what we ought to do; as long as we can be within God's present work, then that is enough! Such is the path that I guide you on. If we concentrate only on continuing onward, God will not mistreat a single one of us. Over this last year of your extraordinary experiences, you have gained a great many things; I trust that you will not take it so hard. The path that I am leading you on is My work and My mission, and it was ordained by God long ago, such that we were predestined to come this far, until today. That we have been able to do this is our great blessing, and although it has not been a smooth path, our friendship is everlasting, and it will be passed down through the ages. Whether cheers and laughter or sadness and tears, let it all become a beautiful memory! You may be aware that the days of My work are numbered. I have many work projects, and I cannot accompany you often. I hope you can understand Me—because our original friendship has not changed. Maybe one day I will appear before you once again, and I hope that you do not make things difficult for Me. After all, I am different from you. I travel all around for My work, and I do not live My life just idling in hotels. Regardless of how you are, I just do what I should do. I hope that the things we shared in the past may become the flower of our friendship.

It can be said that this path was opened up by Me, and whether bitter or sweet, I have led the way. That we have made it to today is all down to the grace of God. There may be some who thank Me, and there may be some who complain about Me—but none of that matters. All I want to see is that what should be achieved in this group of people has been achieved. This is something that should be celebrated. So, I do not bear a grudge against those who complain against Me; all I want is to complete My work as quickly as possible so that God's heart may be at rest soon. At that time, I will not bear any heavy burden, and there will be no worries in God's heart. Are you willing to improve your cooperation? Is it not better to aim to do God's work well? Over this period, it is fair to say that we have endured innumerable hardships and experienced every manner of joy and sorrow. Overall, the performance of each of you has basically made the grade. Perhaps, in the future, there will be better work that is required of you, but do not linger on thoughts of Me; just do what you should do. What I need to do is almost there; I hope you will remain loyal at all times, and that you will not be nostalgic about My work. You should know that I have come only to complete one stage of work, and certainly not to do all of God's work. You must be clear about this, and not have other ideas about it. God's work requires many more means to be completed; you cannot always rely on Me. Maybe you have already realized that I have only come to do one portion of work, one that does not represent Jehovah or Jesus; God's work is divided into many stages, so you must not be too rigid. While I am working you must listen to Me. In each age, God's work changes; it is not all cut from the same mold, and it is not the same old song each time. And in each stage His work befits the age, and changes because the age is not the same. And so, since you have been born in this age, you must eat and drink the words of God, and read these words. A day may come when My work changes, in which case you must continue onward as you ought to; God's work cannot be wrong. Pay no heed to how the outside world changes; God cannot be wrong, and His work cannot be wrong. It is just that sometimes His old work passes away and His new work begins. That does not mean, however, that because the new work has come, the old work is wrong. That is a fallacy! God's work cannot be said to be right or wrong, it can only be said to be earlier or later. This is the guide for people's belief in God and it must not be treated lightly.

What Viewpoint Believers Ought to Hold

What is it that man has gained since he first began believing in God? What have you come to know about God? How much have you changed because of your belief in God? Today, you all know that man's belief in God is not solely for the salvation of the soul and the well-being of the flesh, nor is it to enrich his life through loving God, and so on. As it stands, if you love God for the sake of the well-being of the flesh or momentary pleasure, then even if, in the end, your love for God reaches its peak and you ask for nothing more, this love that you seek is still an adulterated love and not pleasing to God. Those who use love for God to enrich their dull existence and fill a void in their hearts are the kind of people who are greedy for a life of ease, not those who truly seek to love God. Love of this kind is forced, it is the pursuit of mental gratification, and God has no need of it. What kind of love, then, is yours? For what do you love God? How much true love for God is there within you right now? The love of the great majority of you is of the aforementioned kind. Such love can only maintain the status quo; it cannot achieve immutability, nor can it take root in man. This kind of love is only like a flower that blooms and withers without bearing fruit. In other words, after you have loved God once in such a way, if there is no one to lead you on the path ahead, then you will collapse. If you can only love God in the time of loving God but afterward your life disposition remains unchanged, then you will remain unable to escape from the shroud of the influence of darkness, you will remain unable to break free from Satan's bonds and its trickery. No one such as this can be fully gained by God; in the end, their spirit, soul, and body will still belong to Satan. There can be no doubt about this. All those who cannot be fully gained by God will return to their original place, that is, back to Satan, and they will go down to the lake of fire and brimstone to accept the next step of punishment from God. Those gained by God are those who forsake Satan and escape from its domain. They are officially numbered among the people of the kingdom. This is how the people of the kingdom come to be. Are you willing to become this kind of person? Are you willing to be gained by God? Are you willing to escape from the domain of Satan and return to God? Do you now belong to Satan or are you numbered among the people of the kingdom? These things should already be clear, and require no further explanation.

In the past, many sought with wild ambition and notions, they sought as a result of their own hopes. Let us put aside such issues for the moment; what is of key importance now is to find a way of practice that will enable each of you to maintain a normal condition before God and gradually break free of the shackles of Satan's influence, so that you may be gained by God, and live out on earth what God asks of you. Only in this way can you fulfill the intentions of God. Many believe in God, yet know neither what it is that God wants nor what it is that Satan wants. They believe in a muddle-headed way, simply going with the flow, and so have never had a normal Christian life; what is more, they have never had normal personal relationships, much less a normal relationship with God. From this it can be seen that the difficulties and shortcomings of man, and other factors that can thwart the will of God, are many. This is sufficient to prove that man has not yet got onto the right track of belief in God, nor has he entered into the real experience of human life. So what does it mean to get on the right track of belief in God? To get on the right track means that you can quiet your heart before God at all times and enjoy normal communion with God, gradually coming to know what is lacking in man and slowly gaining a deeper knowledge of God. Through this, your spirit gains new insight and new enlightenment every day; your longing grows, you seek to enter into the truth, and every day there is new light and new understanding. Through this path, you gradually break free of the influence of Satan and grow in your life. Such people have entered the right track. Evaluate your own actual experiences and examine the path you have pursued in your faith: When you hold those up against that described above, do you find you are on the right track? In what matters have you broken free from the shackles of Satan and from the influence of Satan? If you have yet to get on the right track, then your ties with Satan have not been severed. This being the case, will your seeking to love God lead you to a love that is authentic, single-minded, and pure? You say that your love for God is unwavering and heartfelt, yet you have not broken free of the shackles of Satan. Are you not trying to make a fool of God? If you wish to attain a state in which your love for God is without adulteration, and you wish to be fully gained by God and numbered among the people of the kingdom, then you must first set yourself on the right track of belief in God.

On the Steps of God's Work

From the outside, it appears that the steps of God's current work have already ended, and man has already experienced the judgment, chastisement, smiting, and refinement of God's words, and undergone such steps as the trial of the service-doers, the refinement of the time of chastisement, the trial of death, the trial of the foils, and the time of loving God. Yet despite suffering great hardship during each step, people remain ignorant of God's will. Consider the trial of the service-doers, for example: They are still unclear about what they gained, what they came to know, and the effect that God wished to achieve. Looking at the speed of God's work, man appears utterly incapable of keeping up with today's speed. It can be seen that God first reveals these steps of His work to man, and that instead of necessarily achieving a level that is imaginable to man in any of the steps, He is casting light on an issue. For God to perfect someone so that they can truly be gained by Him, He must carry out all of the steps above. The goal of doing this work is to show what steps God must carry out to perfect a group of people. Thus, looking from the outside, the steps of God's work have been completed—but in essence, He has only just officially begun perfecting mankind. People should be clear about this: It is the steps of His work that have been completed, but the work itself has not come to an end. Yet in their notions, people believe that the steps of God's work have all been revealed to man, and so there can be no doubt that God's work has ended. This way of seeing things is totally wrong. God's work runs contrary to the notions of man and strikes back at such notions in every regard; the steps of God's work, especially, are at odds with the notions of man. All of this demonstrates the wisdom of God. It can be seen that man's notions cause disruption at every turn, and God strikes back at everything man imagines, which becomes evident during actual experiences. Everyone thinks that God works too quickly, and that God's work comes to an end before they know it, before they have gained any understanding and while they still remain in a state of confusion. That is how it is with every step of His work. Most people believe that God is toying with people—but that is not the intention of His work. His method of working is one of rumination: first like quickly glancing at flowers while galloping along on horseback, then going into the details, and after that fully refining these details—which catches people by surprise. People try to fool God, thinking that if they can just get by until they reach a certain point, God will be satisfied. In reality, how could God possibly be satisfied by man's attempts at getting by? To achieve the optimal effect, God works by taking people by surprise, by striking while they are unaware; this gives them a greater knowledge of His wisdom, and a greater understanding of His righteousness, majesty, and unoffendable disposition.

Today, God has officially begun the perfection of man. To be made perfect, people must undergo the revelation, judgment, and chastisement of His words, they must experience the trials and refinement of His words (such as the trial of the service-doers), and they must be able to withstand the trial of death. What this means is that amidst the judgment, chastisement, and trials of God, those who truly abide by God's will are able to praise God from deep within their hearts, and to utterly obey God and forsake themselves, thus loving God with a heart that is sincere, undivided, and pure; such is a perfect person, and it is precisely the work that God intends to do, and the work that He shall accomplish. People should not jump to conclusions about the method by which God works. They should only pursue entry into life. This is fundamental. Do not constantly scrutinize the method of God's work; this will only hinder your future prospects. How much have you seen of the method by which God works? How obedient have you been? How much have you gained from each method of His work? Are you willing to be made perfect by God? Do you wish to become perfect? These are all things you should clearly understand and enter into.

Corrupt Man Is Incapable of Representing God

Man has ever lived beneath the shroud of the influence of darkness, held in bondage to the influence of Satan, unable to escape, and his disposition, having been processed by Satan, becomes increasingly corrupt. It can be said that man has always lived amid his corrupt satanic disposition and is incapable of truly loving God. This being so, if man wishes to love God, he must be stripped of his self-righteousness, self-importance, arrogance, conceit, and the like—everything that is of Satan's disposition. If not, his love is an impure love, a satanic love, and one which absolutely cannot receive the approval of God. Without being directly perfected, dealt with, broken, pruned, disciplined, chastened, and refined by the Holy Spirit, no one is able truly to love God. If you say that a part of your disposition represents God and therefore you are able truly to love God, then you are someone whose words are arrogant, and you are preposterous. Such people are the archangel! The inborn nature of man is incapable of directly representing God; he must shed his innate nature through the perfection of God and only then—only by caring for God's will, fulfilling God's intentions, and furthermore undergoing the work of the Holy Spirit—can what he lives out be approved of by God. No one who lives in the flesh can represent God directly, unless he be a man used by the Holy Spirit. However, even for a person like this, it cannot be said that his disposition and what he lives out entirely represent God; it can only be said that what he lives out is directed by the Holy Spirit. The disposition of such a man cannot represent God.

Though the disposition of man is ordained by God—this is unquestionable and can be considered a positive thing—it has been processed by Satan, and so the whole of man's disposition is Satan's disposition. Some people say that God's disposition is to be straightforward in doing things, and that this is also manifested in them, that their character is also like this, and so they say that their disposition represents God. What kind of people are these? Is the corrupt satanic disposition able to represent God? Whosoever declares that their disposition is representative of God blasphemes God and insults the Holy Spirit! The method by which the Holy Spirit works shows that God's work on earth is solely the work of conquest. As such, the many corrupt satanic dispositions of man have yet to be cleansed, what he lives out is still the image of Satan, it is what man believes to be good, and it represents the deeds of man's flesh; more precisely, it represents Satan, and absolutely cannot represent God. Even if someone already loves God to the extent that they are able to enjoy a life of heaven on earth, are able to make such statements as: "Oh God! I cannot love You enough," and have reached the highest realm, still it cannot be said that they live out God or represent God, for the essence of man is unlike that of God, and man can never live out God, much less become God. What the Holy Spirit has directed man to live out is only in accordance with what God asks of man.

All of the actions and deeds of Satan are manifested in man. Today, all of the actions and deeds of man are an expression of Satan and hence cannot represent God. Man is the embodiment of Satan, and the disposition of man is unable to represent the disposition of God. Some people are of good character; God may do some work through such people's character, and the work they do is directed by the Holy Spirit. Yet their disposition is unable to represent God. The work God does upon them is nothing more than working with and expanding on what already exists within. Be it prophets in ages past or those used by God, no one can directly represent Him. People come to love God only under the duress of circumstances, and not a single one strives to cooperate of their own volition. What are positive things? All that directly comes from God is positive; the disposition of man, however, has been processed by Satan, and cannot represent God. Only the love, the will to suffer, the righteousness, submission, and humbleness and hiddenness of the incarnate God directly represent God. This is because when He came, He came without a sinful nature and came directly from God, without having been processed by Satan. Jesus is only in the likeness of sinful flesh and does not represent sin; therefore, His actions, deeds, and words, up to the time prior to His accomplishment of the work through crucifixion (including the moment of His crucifixion), are all directly representative of God. The example of Jesus is sufficient to prove that anyone with a sinful nature cannot represent God, and that the sin of man represents Satan. Which is to say, sin does not represent God, and God is sinless. Even the work done in man by the Holy Spirit can only be considered to have been directed by the Holy Spirit, and cannot be said to be done by man on behalf of God. But, as far as man is concerned, neither his sin nor his disposition represents God. By looking at the work the Holy Spirit has done on man from the past to the present day, one sees that man has that which he lives out all because the Holy Spirit has done work upon him. Very few are able to live out the truth after being dealt with and disciplined by the Holy Spirit. Which is to say, only the work of the Holy Spirit is present; cooperation on the part of man is absent. Do you see this clearly now? This being so, how will you do your utmost to cooperate with Him and fulfill your duty when the Holy Spirit works?

Religious Service Must Be Purged

Since the beginning of His work throughout the universe, God has predestined many people to serve Him, including those from every walk of life. His purpose is to satisfy His will and bring His work on earth to smooth completion; this is God's aim in choosing people to serve Him. Every person who serves God must understand His will. This work of His makes God's wisdom and omnipotence, and the principles of His work on earth, more evident to people. God has actually come to earth to do His work, to engage with people, so that they may know His deeds more clearly. Today you, this group of people, are fortunate to serve the practical God. This is an incalculable blessing for you—truly, you are raised up by God. In selecting a person to serve Him, God always has His own principles. Serving God is by no means, as people imagine, that it is simply a matter of enthusiasm. Today, you see that all who serve before God do so because they have the guidance of God and the work of the Holy Spirit, and because they are people who pursue the truth. These are the minimum conditions for all those who serve God.

Serving God is no simple task. Those whose corrupt disposition remains unchanged can never serve God. If your disposition has not been judged and chastised by God's words, then your disposition still represents Satan, which proves that you serve God out of your own good intentions, that your service is based on your satanic nature. You serve God with your natural character, and according to your personal preferences. What's more, you always think that the things you are willing to do are what are delightful to God, and that the things you do not wish to do are what are hateful to God; you work entirely according to your own preferences. Can this be called serving God? Ultimately, there will not be the slightest change in your life disposition; instead, your service will make you even more stubborn, thus deeply ingraining your corrupt disposition, and as such, there will be formed within you rules about service to God that are primarily based on your own character, and experiences derived from your service according to your own disposition. These are the experiences and lessons of man. It is man's philosophy of living in the world. People like this can be classed as Pharisees and religious officials. If they never wake up and repent, then they will surely turn into the false Christs and the antichrists who deceive people in the last days. The false Christs and the antichrists that were spoken of will arise from among such people. If those who serve God follow their own character and act according to their own will, they run the risk of being cast out at any time. Those who apply their many years of experience acquired to serving God in order to win the hearts of others, to lecture them and control them, and to stand on high—and who never repent, never confess their sins, never renounce the benefits of position—these people shall fall before God. They are of the same kind as Paul, presuming upon their seniority and flaunting their qualifications. God will not bring people like this to perfection. Such service interferes with the work of God. People always cling to the old. They cling to the notions of the past, to everything from times gone by. This is a great obstacle to their service. If you cannot throw them off, these things will throttle your whole life. God will not commend you, not in the slightest, not even if you break your legs running or your back with labor, not even if you are martyred in your service of God. Quite the contrary: He will say that you are an evildoer.

Starting from today, God will formally perfect those who have no religious notions, who are willing to set aside their old selves, and who obey God in a simple-hearted way. He shall perfect those who long for the words of God. These people should stand up and serve God. In God there is endless abundance and boundless wisdom. His amazing work and precious words await enjoyment by even greater numbers of people. As it stands, those with religious notions, those who assume seniority, and those who cannot put themselves aside find it hard to accept these new things. The Holy Spirit has no opportunity to perfect these people. If a person has not resolved to obey, and does not thirst for the words of God, then they have no means of accepting these new things; they will simply become more and more rebellious, more and more crafty, and will thus end up on the wrong track. In doing His work now, God will raise up more people who truly love Him and can accept the new light, and He will completely cut down the religious officials who presume upon their seniority; He does not want a single one of those who stubbornly resist change. Do you want to be one of these people? Do you perform your service according to your own preferences or what God requires? This is something you must know for yourself. Are you a religious official, or are you a newborn babe made perfect by God? How much of your service is commended by the Holy Spirit? How much of it will God not even bother to remember? How great a change in your life has there been as a result of all your years of service? Are you clear about all this? If you are truly of faith, you will cast aside your old religious notions from before, and will serve God better in a new way. It is not too late to stand up now. Old religious notions can forfeit a person's entire life. The experience a person acquires can cause them to stray from God and do things their own way. If you do not put such things aside, they will become stumbling blocks to the growth of your life. God always perfects those who serve Him, and does not cast them out lightly. If you truly accept the judgment and chastisement of God's words, if you can put aside your old religious practices and rules, and cease to use old religious notions as the measure of God's words of today, only then will there be a future for you. But if you cling to old things, if you still treasure them, then there is no way you can be saved. God takes no notice of such people. If you really wish to be made perfect, then you must resolve to completely relinquish everything from before. Even if what was done before was right, even if it was God's work, you must still be able to put it aside and stop clinging to it. Even if it was clearly the work of the Holy Spirit, done directly by the Holy Spirit, today you must put it aside. You must not hold onto it. This is what God requires. Everything must be renewed. In God's work and God's words, He makes no reference to the old things that went before, He does not dig into the old almanac; God is a God who is always new and never old, and does not cling even to His own words from the past—which shows that God does not follow any rules. So if you, as a human being, always cling to the things of the past, if you refuse to let them go, and rigidly apply them in a formulaic manner, while God no longer works using the means that He did before, then are your words and actions not disruptive? Have you not become an enemy of God? Are you willing to let your entire life go to wrack and ruin over these old things? These old things will make you into someone who obstructs God's work—is that the kind of person you want to be? If you truly do not want that, then quickly stop what you are doing and turn around; start all over again. God will not remember your past service.

In Your Faith in God You Should Obey God

Why do you believe in God? Most people are confounded by this question. They always have two entirely different viewpoints about the practical God and the God in heaven, which shows that they believe in God not in order to obey Him, but to receive certain benefits, or to escape the suffering that disaster brings; only then are they somewhat obedient. Their obedience is conditional; it is for the sake of their own personal prospects, and forced upon them. So, just why do you believe in God? If it is solely for the sake of your prospects and your fate, then it would be better if you did not believe at all. Belief such as this is self-deception, self-reassurance, and self-admiration. If your faith is not built upon the foundation of obedience to God, then you will ultimately be punished for opposing Him. All those who do not seek obedience to God in their faith oppose Him. God asks that people seek the truth, that they thirst for His words, eat and drink His words, and put them into practice, so that they may achieve obedience to God. If these are your true intentions, then God will surely raise you up, and will surely be gracious toward you. This is undoubtable and unchangeable. If your intention is not to obey God, and you have other aims, then all that you say and do—your prayers before God, and even your every action—will be in opposition to Him. You may be soft-spoken and mild-mannered, your every action and expression may look proper, and you may appear to be one who obeys, but when it comes to your intentions and your views about faith in God, everything you do is in opposition to God; everything you do is evil. People who appear as obedient as sheep, but whose hearts harbor evil intentions, are wolves in sheep's clothing. They directly offend God, and God will not spare a single one of them. The Holy Spirit will reveal each and every one of them and show everybody that all those who are hypocrites will, with certainty, be detested and rejected by the Holy Spirit. Worry not: God will reckon with and dispose of every last one of them in turn.

If you are unable to accept the new light from God, and cannot understand all that God does today and you do not seek it, or else you doubt it, pass judgment on it, or scrutinize and analyze it, then you have no mind to obey God. If, when the light of the here and now appears, you still treasure the light of yesterday and oppose God's new work, then you are nothing more than an absurd one—you are one of those who deliberately oppose God. The key to obeying God is appreciating the new light, and being able to accept it and put it into practice. This alone is true obedience. Those who lack the will to yearn for God are incapable of intentionally submitting to Him, and can only oppose God as a result of their satisfaction with the status quo. That man cannot obey God is because he is possessed by what came before. The things that came before have given people all manner of notions and imaginings about God, and these have become the image of God in their minds. Thus, what they believe in are their own notions, and the standards of their own imagination. If you measure the God who does actual work today against the God of your own imagination, then your faith comes from Satan, and is tainted by your own preferences—God does not want this kind of faith. Regardless of how lofty their credentials, and regardless of their dedication—even if they have devoted a lifetime of efforts to His work, and have martyred themselves—God does not approve of anyone with faith such as this. He merely bestows upon them a little grace and allows them to enjoy it for a time. People such as this are incapable of putting the truth into practice. The Holy Spirit does not work within them, and God will cast out each of them in turn. Young and old alike, those who do not obey God in their faith and have the wrong intentions are those who oppose and interrupt, and such people will unquestionably be cast out by God. Those who are without the slightest obedience to God, who merely acknowledge His name, and have some sense of God's kindness and loveliness, yet do not keep pace with the steps of the Holy Spirit, and do not obey the present work and words of the Holy Spirit—such people live amid the grace of God, and will not be gained or made perfect by Him. God makes people perfect through their obedience, through their eating, drinking, and enjoying of God's words, and through the suffering and refinement in their lives. Only through faith such as this can people's dispositions change, and only then can they possess the true knowledge of God. Not being satisfied with living amid God's grace, actively yearning and searching for the truth, and seeking to be gained by God—this is what it means to consciously obey God and this is precisely the kind of faith that He wants. People who do nothing more than enjoy God's grace cannot be made perfect or changed; and their obedience, piety, love, and patience are all superficial. Those who only enjoy God's grace cannot truly know God, and even when they do know God, their knowledge is superficial, and they say things like "God loves man," or "God is compassionate toward man." This does not represent the life of man, and does not show that people truly know God. If, when God's words refine them, or when His trials come upon them, people are unable to obey God—if, instead, they become doubtful, and fall down—then they are not in the least bit obedient. Within them, there are many rules and restrictions about faith in God, old experiences that are the result of many years of faith, or various rules based upon the Bible. Could people such as this obey God? These people are full of human things—how could they obey God? Their “obedience” is according to personal preference—would God want obedience like this? This is not obedience to God, but adherence to rules; it is the satisfaction and appeasement of themselves. If you say that this is obedience to God, do you not blaspheme against Him? You are an Egyptian Pharaoh. You commit evil, and you expressly engage in the work of opposing God—is this how God wants you to serve? You’d best hasten to repent, and try to gain some self-awareness. Failing that, you would be better off going home; that would do you more good than your professed service to God. You would not interrupt and disturb; you would know your place, and live well—would that not be better? And you would not be punished for opposing God!

It Is Very Important to Establish a Normal Relationship With God

When people believe in, love, and satisfy God, they touch the Spirit of God with their hearts and thereby obtain His satisfaction, they use their hearts to engage with God’s words, and are thus moved by His Spirit. If you wish to live a normal spiritual life and establish a normal relationship with God, then you must first give your heart to Him. Only after you have quieted your heart before Him and poured your whole heart into Him will you be able to gradually develop a normal spiritual life. If in people’s belief in God, they do not give their hearts to Him, if their hearts are not with Him, and they do not treat His burden as their own, then all that they do is an act of cheating God, an act typical of religious people, and it will not receive God’s praise. God cannot gain anything from this kind of person, they can only serve as a foil to His work. These people are like decorations in the house of God—they are placeholders and they are trash, and God does not make use of them. Not only is there no chance of the Holy Spirit working in them, there is no value in perfecting them. This type of person is a veritable walking corpse. No part of them can be used by the Holy Spirit—they have been thoroughly dominated and deeply corrupted by Satan. God will cast these people out. When the Holy Spirit makes use of people today, He not only employs the desirable parts of them to get things done—He also perfects and changes the parts of them that are undesirable. If you are able to pour your heart into God and quiet it before Him, then you will have the opportunity and the qualifications to be used by the Holy Spirit, and to receive His enlightenment and illumination. Even more than that, you will have the opportunity for the Holy Spirit to remedy your shortcomings. When you give your heart to God, on the positive side, you will be able to gain deeper entry and attain a higher plane of insight.

On the negative side, you will have greater knowledge of your deficiencies and shortcomings, and you will yearn more and seek more to satisfy God's will. Furthermore, you will not be passive, you will be able to actively enter in. This shows that you are a correct person. Assuming that your heart is able to remain quiet before God, then whether or not you receive praise from the Holy Spirit, and whether or not you please God, hinges crucially upon whether you can actively enter in. When the Holy Spirit enlightens people and makes use of them, He never makes them negative, He always makes them progress actively. And when He does this, people still have their weaknesses, but they do not live by them. They do not put off their life progress, and they keep seeking to satisfy God's will. This is a standard. If you can attain this, it proves that you have obtained the presence of the Holy Spirit. If a person is always negative, and if, even after receiving enlightenment and coming to know themselves, they remain negative and passive, and they are unable to stand up and work with God, then they have only received the grace of God, and the Holy Spirit is not with them. Their negativity means that their heart is not turned toward God, and that their spirit has not been moved by God's Spirit. This should be understood by all.

Through experience, it can be seen that quieting one's heart before God is of the utmost importance. It relates to issues with people's spiritual lives and life progress. Your pursuit of the truth and dispositional change will only bear fruit if your heart is quiet before God. That is because you have come before Him bearing a burden, because you always feel that you are lacking in so many ways, that there are many truths that you need to know, that there is a great deal of reality that you need to experience, and that you should show consideration for God's will. These things are always on your mind, it feels as if they are pressing down upon you with a force that leaves you unable to breathe, and thus you feel heavy of heart (though you are not in a negative state). Only such a person is qualified to accept the enlightenment of God's words and to be moved by the Spirit of God. It is because of their burden, because they are heavy of heart, and, it can be said, because of the price they have paid and the suffering they have endured before God, that they receive His enlightenment and illumination. For God does not give anyone special treatment. He is always fair in His treatment of people, but He also does not give to people arbitrarily or unconditionally. This is one aspect of His righteous disposition. In real life, most people have not yet attained this realm. At the very least, their hearts have yet to completely turn toward God, so there still has not been any great change in their life disposition. This is because they only live in God's grace and they have yet to gain the work of the Holy Spirit. The criteria that people must meet in order to be made use of by God are as follows: Their hearts must be turned toward God, they must carry the burden of His words, they must have hearts of yearning, and they must be resolved to seek the truth. Only these people can obtain the work of the Holy Spirit and frequently gain His enlightenment and illumination. The people that God makes use of appear outwardly to lack reason and normal relationships with others, but they speak carefully, with propriety, and they are always able to keep a quiet heart before God. This is exactly the kind of person who is worthy of being used by the Holy Spirit. These people “without reason” who God speaks of seem to lack normal relationships with others, and they do not care about outward love or outward practices, but when they fellowship on spiritual matters, they are able to open their hearts and selflessly provide others with the illumination and enlightenment they have acquired from their actual experiences before God. That is how they express their love for God and satisfy His will. When others slander and ridicule them, they avoid being influenced by outside people, matters, or things, and remain quiet before God. It seems as though they have their own unique insights. Regardless of what other people do, their hearts never leave God. When other people are talking and laughing, their hearts remain before God, they contemplate His word, or silently pray to the God in their hearts, seeking His intentions. These people do not attach importance to maintaining normal interpersonal relationships, and they seem to have no philosophy for living. They appear lively, lovable, and innocent, but they also possess a certain calmness. This is the likeness of the kind of person that God makes use of. Things like philosophies for living or “normal reason” simply do not work in this type of person. They have poured their whole hearts into God’s word, and they seem to only have God in their hearts. This is the kind of person “without reason” that God refers to, and it is precisely this kind of person that is used by God. The mark of a person who God makes use of is: No matter when or where, their heart is always before God, and no matter how dissolute others may be, or how much other people indulge in lust and in the flesh, the heart of this person never leaves God, and they do not follow the crowd. Only this type of person is suited for God’s use, and only this type of person is perfected by the Holy Spirit. If you are unable to attain this, then you are not qualified to be gained by God, or to be perfected by the Holy Spirit.

If you want to establish a normal relationship with God, your heart must be turned toward Him; with this as a foundation, you will then have normal relationships with other people too. If you do not have a normal relationship with God, then no matter what you do to maintain your relationships with other people, no matter how hard you work or how much energy you put in, it will all belong to a human philosophy for living. You will be protecting your position among people and attaining their praise through human perspectives and human philosophies, rather than establishing normal interpersonal relationships according to the word of God. If you do not focus on your relationships with people, and maintain a normal relationship with God instead, if you are willing to give your heart to God and learn to obey Him, then your interpersonal relationships will naturally become normal. These relationships will then not be built upon the flesh, but upon the foundation of God’s love. You will have almost no fleshly interactions with other people, but on a spiritual level, there will be fellowship and mutual love, comfort, and provision between you. All of this is done upon the foundation of a desire to satisfy God—these relationships are not maintained through human philosophies for living, they are formed naturally when one carries a burden for God. They do not require any artificial, human effort from you, you need only to practice according to the principles of God's words. Are you willing to consider the will of God? Are you willing to be a person who is "without reason" before Him? Are you willing to completely give your heart to God and to disregard your position among other people? Of all the people you interact with, whom do you have the best relationships with? With whom do you have the worst relationships? Are your relationships with people normal? Do you treat all people equally? Are your relationships with others maintained according to your philosophy for living, or are they built upon the foundation of God's love? When people do not give their hearts to God, their spirits become sluggish, numb, and unconscious. Such people will never understand God's words, they will never have a normal relationship with God, and they will never achieve a change in their disposition. Changing one's disposition is the process of giving one's heart completely to God, and of receiving enlightenment and illumination from His words. God's work allows people to actively enter in, and it enables them to cast off the negative parts of themselves after gaining knowledge of them. When you have given your heart to God, you will be able to sense every time that your spirit is slightly moved, and know every part of God's enlightenment and illumination. If you persevere, you will gradually enter onto the path of being perfected by the Holy Spirit. The quieter your heart is before God, the more sensitive and delicate your spirit will be, the more it will be able to perceive how the Holy Spirit moves it, and the more normal your relationship with God will become. Normal interpersonal relationships are established upon the foundation of turning one's heart toward God, not through human effort. If God is absent from a person's heart, then their relationships with other people are merely relationships of the flesh. They are not normal, they are lustful indulgences, and they are hated and loathed by God. If you say that your spirit has been moved, but you are only willing to fellowship with people whom you like and respect, and you are biased against and refuse to speak with people whom you dislike when they come to seek from you, this is even more proof that you are ruled by emotion and that you do not have a normal relationship with God at all. It shows that you are attempting to deceive God and cover up your own ugliness. You may be able to share some of your knowledge, but if your intents are wrong, then everything you do is only good by human standards, and God will not praise you. Your actions will be driven by your flesh, not by God's burden. You are only fit for God's use if you are able to quiet your heart before Him and have normal interactions with all those who love Him. If you can do that, then no matter how you interact with others, you will not be acting out a philosophy for living, you will be considering God's burden and living before Him. How many people like this are there amongst you? Are your relationships with others really normal? On what foundation are they built? How many philosophies for living are there within you? Have you cast them off? If your heart cannot turn completely toward God, then you are not of God—you have come from Satan, you will ultimately return to Satan, and you do not deserve to be one of God's people. You must examine these things carefully.

A Normal Spiritual Life Leads People Onto the Right Track

You have walked only a very small portion of the path of a believer in God, and you have yet to enter onto the right track, so you are still far from meeting God's standard. Right now, your stature is not adequate to meet His demands. Due to your caliber and your corrupt nature, you always treat God's work carelessly; you do not treat it seriously. This is your gravest shortcoming. There is certainly none who can ascertain the path the Holy Spirit walks; most of you do not understand it and cannot see it clearly. Moreover, most of you pay no mind to this matter, much less do you take it to heart. If you continue in this way, living in ignorance of the work of the Holy Spirit, then the path you take as a believer in God will be futile. This is because you do not do everything in your power to seek to meet God's will and because you do not cooperate well with God. It is not that God has not worked on you, or that the Holy Spirit has not moved you. It is that you are so careless that you do not take the work of the Holy Spirit seriously. You must turn reverse this situation immediately and walk the path on which the Holy Spirit leads people. This is the main topic for today. "The path on which the Holy Spirit leads" refers to gaining enlightenment in spirit; having knowledge of God's word; gaining clarity on the path ahead; being able to enter step by step into the truth; and coming to a greater knowledge of God. The path on which the Holy Spirit leads people is primarily a path toward a clearer understanding of God's word, free of deviations and misconceptions, and those who walk it walk straight along it. In order to achieve this you will need to work in harmony with God, find a correct path to practice, and walk the path led by the Holy Spirit. This involves cooperation on man's part: that is, what you must do to meet God's requirements of you, and how you must behave to enter onto the right track of belief in God.

Stepping onto the path led by the Holy Spirit may seem complicated, but you will find it much simpler when the path of practice is clear to you. The truth is that people are capable of all that God demands of them—it is not as if He is trying to teach pigs to fly. In all situations, God seeks to resolve people's problems and settle their concerns. All of you must understand this; do not misunderstand God. People are led according to God's word along the path the Holy Spirit walks. As mentioned before, you must give your heart to God. This is a prerequisite for walking the path on which the Holy Spirit leads. You must do this in order to enter onto the right track. How does a person consciously do the work of giving their heart to God? In your daily lives, when you experience God's work and pray to Him, you do it carelessly—you pray to God while you work. Can this be called giving your heart to God? You are thinking about household matters or affairs of the flesh; you are always of two minds. Can this be considered quieting your heart in the presence of God? This is because your heart is always fixated on external affairs, and is not able to return before God. If you would have your heart truly at peace before God, then you must do the work of conscious cooperation. This is to say that every one of you must have a time for your devotions, a time when you put aside people, events, and things; settle your heart and quiet yourself before God. Everyone must keep individual devotional notes, recording their knowledge of God's word and how their spirit is moved, regardless of whether they are profound or superficial; everyone must consciously quiet their heart before God. If you can dedicate one or two hours each day to true spiritual life, then your life that day will feel enriched and your heart will be bright and clear. If you live this kind of spiritual life every day, then your heart will be able to return more into God's possession, your spirit will become stronger and stronger, your condition will constantly improve, you will become more capable of walking the path on which the Holy Spirit leads, and God will bestow increased blessings upon you. The purpose of your spiritual life is consciously to gain the presence of the Holy Spirit. It is not to observe rules or conduct religious rituals, but truly to act in concert with God, truly to discipline your body—this is what man should do, so you should do this with the utmost effort. The better your cooperation and the more effort you commit, the more your heart will be able to return to God and the better you will be able to quiet your heart before Him. At a certain point, God will gain your heart completely. No one will be able to sway or capture your heart, and you will belong completely to God. If you walk this path, then God's word will reveal itself to you at all times and enlighten you about everything that you do not understand—this can all be achieved through your cooperation. This is why God always says, "All who act in concert with Me, I will reward twice over." You must see this path clearly. If you wish to walk the right path, then you must do all that you can to satisfy God. You must do all that you can to attain a spiritual life. At the start, you may not achieve great results in this pursuit, but you must not allow yourself to regress or wallow in negativity—you must keep working hard! The more you live a spiritual life, the more your heart will be occupied by the words of God, always concerned with these matters, always bearing this burden. After that, reveal your innermost truth to God through your spiritual life; tell Him what you are willing to do, what you are thinking about, your understanding and view of His word. Do not hold back anything, not even a little bit! Practice speaking the words within your heart and revealing your true feelings to God; if it is in your heart, then by all means, say it. The more you speak in this way, the more you will feel God's loveliness, and God will tug more strongly on your heart. When this happens, you will feel that God is dearer to you than anyone else. You will never leave God's side, no matter what. If you practice this kind of spiritual devotional on a daily basis and do not put it out of your mind, but treat it as a matter of great importance in your life, then God's word will occupy your heart. This is what it means to be touched by the Holy Spirit. It will be as if your heart has always been possessed by God, as if that which you love is always in your heart. No one can take that away from you. When this happens, God will truly live inside you and have a place within your heart.

Promises to Those Who Have Been Perfected

What is the path through which God perfects man? What aspects does it include? Are you willing to be perfected by God? Are you willing to accept His judgment and chastisement? What do you know of these questions? If you have no knowledge to speak of, then this is proof that you still do not know God's work, that you have not been enlightened by the Holy Spirit at all. It is impossible for such people to be perfected. They are only given a small amount of grace to enjoy briefly, and it will not last long. People cannot be perfected by God if they only enjoy His grace. Some are satisfied when their flesh has peace and enjoyment, when their life is easy and without adversity or misfortune, when their whole family lives in harmony, without contention or dispute—and they may even believe this to be the blessing of God. In truth, it is merely God's grace. You must not be satisfied with merely enjoying the grace of God. Such thinking is so vulgar. Even if you read the words of God every day, and pray every day, and your spirit feels great enjoyment and is especially at peace, if you ultimately have nothing to say of your knowledge of God and His work, and have experienced nothing, and no matter how much of God's word you have eaten and drunk, if all you feel is spiritual peace and enjoyment, and that the word of God is sweet beyond compare, as though you cannot enjoy it enough, but you have no practical experience whatsoever of the words of God and are utterly devoid of the reality of His words, then what can you gain from such faith in God? If you cannot live out the essence of God's words, then your eating and drinking of these words and your prayers are nothing but religious belief. Such people cannot be perfected by God and cannot be gained by Him. People who are gained by God are those who pursue the truth. What God gains is not the flesh of man, not the things which belong to him, but the part within him that belongs to God. Thus, when God perfects people, He does not perfect their flesh, but their hearts, allowing their hearts to be gained by God; which is to say, God perfecting man is, in essence, God perfecting the heart of man so that this heart may turn to God and so that it may love Him.

The flesh of man is mortal. It serves no purpose for God to gain the flesh of man, for the flesh of man is something that inevitably decays and cannot receive His inheritance or blessings. If the flesh of man were gained, and only the flesh of man were in this stream, then though man would nominally be in the stream, his heart would belong to Satan. That being the case, not only would people be unable to become the manifestation of God, but they would also become His burden, and God's choosing of people would thus become meaningless. Those that God intends to perfect will all receive His blessings and His inheritance. That is, they take in what God has and is so that it becomes what they have within; they have all the words of God wrought into them; whatever God is, you are able to take it all in exactly as is, and thereby live out the truth. This is the kind of person who is perfected by God and who is gained by God. Only someone such as this is eligible to receive the blessings bestowed by God:

1. Gaining the whole of God's love.
2. Acting in accordance with the will of God in all things.
3. Gaining the guidance of God, living in the light of God, and gaining God's enlightenment.
4. Living out on earth the image that God loves; loving God truly as Peter did, crucified for God and worthy to die in recompense for God's love; having the same glory as Peter.
5. Being beloved, respected, and admired by everyone on earth.
6. Overcoming every aspect of the bondage of death and Hades, giving no opportunity for Satan to do its work, being possessed by God, living within a fresh and lively spirit, and not growing weary.
7. Having an ineffable sense of elation and excitement at all times throughout life, as if one has beheld the arrival of the day of God's glory.
8. Winning glory together with God and having a countenance that resembles God's beloved saints.
9. Becoming that which God loves on earth, that is, a beloved son of God.
10. Changing form and ascending with God to the third heaven and transcending the flesh.

Only people who can inherit the blessings of God are perfected and gained by God. Have you gained anything at present? To what extent has God perfected you? God does not perfect man at random; His perfecting man is conditional, and has clear, visible results. It is not, as man imagines, that as long as he has faith in God, he can be perfected and gained by God, and he can receive on earth the blessings and inheritance of God. Such things are exceedingly difficult—to say nothing of the changing of people's form. At present, what you should chiefly seek is to be perfected by God in all things, and to be perfected by God through all people, matters, and things with which you are faced, so that more of what God is will be wrought into you. You must first receive the inheritance of God on earth; only then will you become eligible to inherit more, and greater, blessings from God. These are all things that you should seek, and which you should understand before all else. The more you seek to be perfected by God in all things, the more you will be able to see the hand of God in all things, as a result of which you will, through different perspectives and in different matters, actively seek to enter into the being of God's word and enter into the reality of His word. You cannot be content with such passive states as merely not committing sins, or having no notions, no philosophy for living, and no human will. God perfects man in a multitude of ways; in all matters lies the possibility of being perfected, and He can perfect you not only in positive terms but also in negative terms, to make what you gain more abundant. Every single day there are opportunities to be perfected and occasions to be gained by God. After experiencing thus for a time, you will be greatly changed, and will naturally understand many things of which you were previously ignorant. There will be no need for instruction from others; unbeknownst to you, God will enlighten you, so that you will receive enlightenment in all things and enter into all your experiences in detail. God will surely guide you so that you veer not to left or right, and you will thus set foot upon path to being perfected by Him.

Being perfected by God cannot be limited to perfection by eating and drinking God's word. Such experiencing would be too one-sided, it would include too little, and could only restrict people to a very small scope. This being so, people would lack much of the spiritual nourishment they require. If you wish to be perfected by God, you must learn how to experience in all matters, and be able to gain enlightenment in everything that happens to you. Whether it be good or bad, it should bring you benefit, and should not make you negative. Regardless, you should be able to consider things while standing on the side of God, and not analyze or study them from the perspective of man (this would be a deviation in your experience). If you experience thus, then your heart will be filled with the burdens of your life; you will live constantly in the light of God's countenance, not readily deviating in your practice. Such people have a bright future ahead of them. There are so many opportunities to be perfected by God. It all rests on whether you are someone who truly loves God and whether you possess the resolve to be perfected by God, to be gained by God, and to receive His blessings and inheritance. Mere resolve is not enough; you must have much knowledge, else you will always be deviating in your practice. God is willing to perfect each and every one of you. As it stands now, although most people have already accepted the work of God for a very long time, they have limited themselves to merely basking in the grace of God, and are only willing to allow God to give them a little comfort of the flesh, yet are unwilling to receive more, and higher, revelations. This shows that the heart of man is still always on the outside. Even though the work of man, his service, and his heart of love for God have fewer impurities, as far as his inner substance and his backward thinking are concerned, man still constantly seeks the peace and enjoyment of the flesh, and cares nothing for what the conditions for and purposes of God perfecting man may be. And so, the lives of most people are still vulgar and decadent. Their lives have not changed in the slightest; they simply do not regard faith in God as a matter of importance, it is as if they just have faith for the sake of others, going through the motions and getting by any old how, adrift in a purposeless existence. Few are those who are able to seek to enter into the word of God in all things, gaining more and richer things, becoming people of greater wealth in the house of God today, and receiving more of God's blessings. If you seek to be perfected by God in all things, and are able to receive what God has promised on earth, if you seek to be enlightened by God in all things and do not let the years slip idly by, this is the ideal path to enter actively. Only thus will you become worthy and eligible to be perfected by God. Are you truly one who seeks to be perfected by God? Are you truly one who is earnest in all things? Do you have the same spirit of love for God as Peter did? Do you have the will to love God as Jesus did? You have had faith in Jesus for many years; have you seen how Jesus loved God? Is it truly Jesus that you believe in? You believe in the practical God of today; have you seen how the practical God in the flesh loves the God in heaven? You have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; that is because Jesus' crucifixion for the sake of redeeming mankind and the miracles He performed are generally accepted facts. Yet the faith of man comes not from knowledge and true understanding of Jesus Christ. You believe only in the name of Jesus, but you do not believe in His Spirit, because you do not pay any heed to how Jesus loved God. Your faith in God is far too naive. Despite believing in Jesus for many years, you do not know how to love God. Does this not make you the world's greatest fool? This is proof that for years, you have been eating the food of the Lord Jesus Christ in vain. Not only do I dislike such people, I trust that the Lord Jesus Christ—whom you venerate—would also dislike them. How can such people be perfected? Are you not crimson with embarrassment? Do you not feel ashamed? Do you still have the gall to face your Lord Jesus Christ? Do you all understand the meaning of what I have said?

The Wicked Will Surely Be Punished

Look into yourselves to see whether you practice righteousness in all that you do, and whether all of your actions are being observed by God: This is the principle by which those who believe in God conduct their affairs. You will be called righteous because you are able to satisfy God, and because you accept God's care and protection. In God's eyes, all those who accept God's care, protection, and perfection, and who are gained by Him, are righteous, and He regards them all as precious. The more you accept the current words of God, the more you will be able to receive and understand God's will, and the more you will therefore be able to live out God's words and satisfy His requirements. This is God's commission for you, and it is what all of you should be able to achieve. If you use your own notions to measure and delimit God, as if God were an unchanging statue of clay, and if you completely delimit God within the parameters of the Bible and contain Him within a limited scope of work, then this proves that you have condemned God. Because the Jews in the age of the Old Testament took God to be an idol of fixed form that they held in their hearts, as if God could only be called the Messiah, and only He who was called the Messiah could be God, and because humanity served and worshiped God as if He were a (lifeless) clay statue, they nailed the Jesus of that time to the cross, sentencing Him to death—the guiltless Jesus was thus condemned to death. God was innocent of any offense, yet man refused to spare Him, and insisted on sentencing Him to death, and so Jesus was crucified. Man always believes that God is unchanging, and defines Him on the basis of one single book, the Bible, as though man has a perfect understanding of God's management, as though man holds all that God does in the palm of his hand. People are absurd in the extreme, arrogant in the extreme, and they all have a flair for hyperbole. No matter how great your knowledge of God, I still say that you do not know God, that you are someone who opposes God the most, and that you have condemned God, because you are utterly incapable of obeying the work of God and walking the path of being made perfect by God. Why is God never satisfied with the actions of man? Because man does not know God, because he has too many notions, and because his knowledge of God in no way agrees with reality, but instead monotonously repeats the same theme without variation and uses the same approach for every situation. And so, having come to earth today, God is once more nailed to the cross by man. Cruel mankind! The connivance and intrigue, the snatching and grabbing one from another, the scramble for fame and fortune, the mutual slaughter—when will it ever end? Despite the hundreds of thousands of words God has spoken, no one has come to their senses. People act for the sake of their families, sons and daughters, for their careers, future prospects, position, vainglory, and money, for the sake of food, clothing, and the flesh. But is there anyone whose actions are truly for the sake of God? Even among those who act for the sake of God, there are but few who know God. How many people do not act out of their own interests? How many do not oppress or ostracize others in order to protect their own position? And so, God has been forcibly sentenced to death innumerable times, and countless barbaric judges have condemned God and once more nailed Him to the cross. How many can be called righteous because they truly act for the sake of God?

Is it so easy to be perfected before God as a saint or a righteous person? It is a true statement that “there are no righteous upon this earth, the righteous are not in this world.” When you come before God, consider what you are wearing, consider your every word and action, your every thought and idea, and even the dreams that you dream every day—they are all for your own sake. Is this not the true state of affairs? “Righteousness” does not mean giving alms to others, it does not mean loving your neighbor as yourself, and it does not mean refraining from quarrels and disputes or robbing and stealing. Righteousness means taking God’s commission as your duty and obeying God’s orchestrations and arrangements as your heaven-sent vocation, regardless of time or place, just like all that was done by the Lord Jesus. This is the righteousness of which God has spoken. That Lot could be called righteous is because he saved the two angels sent by God without considering his own gain and loss; it can only be said that what he did at that time may be called righteous, but he cannot be called a righteous man. It was only because Lot had seen God that he gave his two daughters in exchange for the angels, but not all of his behavior in the past stood for righteousness. And so I say “there are no righteous upon this earth.” Even among those who are in the stream of recovery, no one can be called righteous. No matter how good your actions, no matter how you appear to glorify the name of God, neither hitting and cursing others, nor robbing and plundering from others, you still cannot be called righteous, for this is what a normal person is capable of having. What is key right now is that you do not know God. It can only be said that at present you have a little bit of normal humanity, but no elements of the righteousness spoken of by God, and so nothing that you do is capable of proving that you know God.

Before, when God was in heaven, man acted in a way that was deceitful toward God. Today, God has been among man—no one knows how many years it has been—yet in doing things man is still going through the motions and trying to fool Him. Is not man much too backward in his thinking? It was the same with Judas: Before Jesus came, Judas would tell lies to deceive his brothers and sisters, and even after Jesus came, he still did not change; he did not know Jesus in the least, and in the end he betrayed Jesus. Was this not because he did not know God? If, today, you still do not know God, then it is possible that you may become another Judas, and following upon this, the tragedy of Jesus' crucifixion in the Age of Grace two thousand years ago would be played out again. Do you not believe this? It is a fact! At present, the majority of people are in a similar situation—I may be saying this a little too soon—and such people are all playing the role of Judas. I am not speaking nonsense, but on the basis of fact—and you cannot but be convinced. Although many people make a pretense of humility, in their hearts there is nothing but a pool of dead water, a ditch of stinking water. Right now there are too many like this in the church, and you think I am completely unaware of this. Today, My Spirit decides for Me, and bears testimony for Me. Do you think I know nothing? Do you think I understand nothing of the devious thoughts within your hearts, the things you keep within your hearts? Is it so easy to get the better of God? Do you think you can treat Him in whatever way you like? In the past, I was worried lest you become constrained, so I kept on giving you freedom, but humanity was unable to tell that I was being good to them, and when I gave an inch they took a yard. Ask around among yourselves: I have almost never dealt with anyone, and have almost never lightly reprimanded anyone—yet I am very clear about the motivations and notions of man. Do you think God Himself, to whom God bears testimony, is a fool? In that case, I say you are too blind! I will not expose you, but let us see just how corrupt you can become. Let us see whether your clever little stratagems can save you, or whether trying your best to love God can save you. Today, I will not condemn you; let us wait until the time of God to see how He takes retribution upon you. I have no time for idle chitchat with you now, and I am unwilling to delay My greater work solely on your account. A maggot like you is not worthy of the time it would take God to deal with you—so let us see just how dissolute you can get. People like this do not pursue knowledge of God in the least, nor do they have the least bit of love for Him, and still they wish for God to call them righteous—is this not a joke? Because a small number of people are actually honest, I will focus only on continuing to provide life to man. I will only get done what I should get done today, but in the future I will bring retribution upon each person according to what they have done. I have said all that there is to say, for this is precisely the work I do. I do only what I should do, and not what I should not. Nevertheless, I hope that you spend more time in reflection: Exactly how much of your knowledge of God is true? Are you someone who has once more nailed God to the cross? My final words are these: Woe be unto those who crucify God.

How to Enter Into a Normal State

The more people accept the words of God, the more enlightened they are, and the more they hunger and thirst in their pursuit of knowing God. Only those who accept the words of God are capable of having richer and more profound experiences, and they are the only ones whose lives can continue to grow like sesame flowers. All who pursue life should treat this as their full-time job; they should feel that “without God, I cannot live; without God, I can accomplish nothing; without God, everything is empty.” So, too, should they have the resolution that “without the presence of the Holy Spirit, I will do nothing, and if reading the words of God has no effect then I am indifferent to doing anything.” Do not indulge yourselves. Life experiences come from the enlightenment and guidance of God, and they are the crystallization of your subjective efforts. What you should demand of yourselves is this: “When it comes to life experience, I cannot give myself a free pass.”

Sometimes, when in abnormal conditions, you lose the presence of God, and become unable to feel God when you pray. It is normal to feel afraid at such times. You should immediately start searching. If you do not, God will be apart from you, and you will be without the presence of the Holy Spirit—and, moreover, the work of the Holy Spirit—for a day, two days, even a month or two months. In these situations, you become so incredibly numb and are once more taken captive by Satan, to the point where you are capable of committing all manner of act. You covet wealth, deceive your brothers and sisters, watch movies and videos, play mahjong, and even smoke and drink without discipline. Your heart has strayed far from God, you have secretly gone your own way, and you have arbitrarily passed judgment on God’s work. In some cases, people sink so low that they feel no shame or embarrassment in committing sins of a sexual nature. This kind of person has been forsaken by the Holy Spirit; in fact, the work of the Holy Spirit has long been absent in such a person. One can only see them sink ever deeper into corruption as the hands of evil stretch out ever further. In the end, they deny the existence of this way, and are taken captive by Satan as they sin. If you discover that you only have the presence of the Holy Spirit, yet lack the work of the Holy Spirit, it is already a dangerous situation to be in. When you cannot even feel the presence of the Holy Spirit, then you are on the verge of death. If you do not repent, then you will have completely returned to Satan, and you shall be among those who are cast out. So, when you discover that you are in a state where there is only the presence of the Holy Spirit (you do not sin, you hold yourself in check, and you do nothing in blatant resistance to God) but you lack the work of the Holy Spirit (you do not feel moved when you pray, you gain no obvious enlightenment or illumination when you eat and drink the words of God, you are indifferent about eating and drinking the words of God, there is never any growth in your life, and you have long been bereft of great illumination)—at such times, you must be more cautious. You must not indulge yourself, you must not give free rein to your own character any further. The presence of the Holy Spirit may disappear at any time. This is why such a situation is so dangerous. If you find yourself in this kind of state, try to turn things around as soon as you can. First, you should say a prayer of repentance and ask that God extend His mercy upon you once more. Pray more earnestly and, quiet your heart to eat and drink more of God's words. With this foundation, you must spend more time in prayer; redouble your efforts in singing, praying, eating and drinking God's words, and performing your duty. When you are at your weakest, your heart is most easily possessed by Satan. When that happens, your heart is taken from God and returned to Satan, whereupon you are without the presence of the Holy Spirit. At such times, it is doubly difficult to regain the work of the Holy Spirit. It is better to seek the work of the Holy Spirit while He is still with you, which will allow God to bestow more of His enlightenment upon you and not cause Him to abandon you. Praying, singing hymns, serving your function, and eating and drinking the words of God—all of this is done so that Satan has no opportunity to do its work, and so that the Holy Spirit may work within you. If you do not regain the work of the Holy Spirit in this way, if you simply wait, then regaining the work of the Holy Spirit will not be easy when you have lost the presence of the Holy Spirit, unless the Holy Spirit has particularly moved you, or especially illuminated and enlightened you. Even so, it does not just take a day or two for your state to recover; sometimes even six months may pass without any recovery. This is all because people are too easy on themselves, are incapable of experiencing things in a normal way and are thus abandoned by the Holy Spirit. Even if you do regain the work of the Holy Spirit, the present work of God still might not be very clear to you, for you have fallen far behind in your life experience, as if you were left ten thousand miles behind. Is this not a terrible thing? I tell such people, however, that it is not too late to repent now, but that there is one condition: You must work harder, and not indulge in laziness. If other people pray five times in one day, you must pray ten times; if other people eat and drink the words of God for two hours a day, you must do so for four or six hours; and if other people listen to hymns for two hours, you must listen for half a day at the very least. Be often at peace before God and think of God's love, until you are moved, your heart returns to God, and you no longer dare stray away from God—only then will your practice bear fruit; only then will you be able to recover your previous, normal state.

Some people put a lot of enthusiasm into their pursuit and yet fail to enter onto the right track. This is because they are too careless and pay no attention to spiritual things. They have no idea how to experience God's words, and do not know what the work and presence of the Holy Spirit are. Such people are enthusiastic but foolish; they do not pursue life. That is because you lack the slightest bit of knowledge of the Spirit, you know nothing of development in the Holy Spirit's ongoing work, and you are ignorant of the state within your own spirit. Is the faith of such people not a foolish kind of faith? The pursuit of such people ultimately yields nothing. The key to achieving growth in life in one's faith in God is knowing what work God does in your experience, beholding the loveliness of God, and understanding the will of God, such that you defer to all of God's arrangements, have God's words wrought into you so that they become your life, and thereby satisfy God. If your faith is a foolish faith, if you pay no heed to spiritual matters and to changes in your life disposition, if you exert no effort toward the truth, will you be able to grasp God's will? If you do not understand what God asks, then you will be incapable of experiencing, and will thus have no path to practice. What you must pay attention to as you experience God's words is the effect they produce in you, so that you may come to know God from His words. If you only know to read God's words, but do not know how to experience them, does this not show that you are ignorant of spiritual matters? Right now, most people are incapable of experiencing God's words, and thus they do not know the work of God. Is this not a failing in their practice? If they carry on like this, at what point will they be capable of experiencing things in their rich fullness and achieving growth in their lives? Does this not amount merely to empty talk? There are many among you who focus on theory, who know nothing of spiritual matters, and yet still wish to be put to great use by God and to be blessed by God. This is totally unrealistic! Thus, you must put an end to this failing, so that you may all enter onto the right track in your spiritual lives, have real experiences, and truly enter into the reality of God's words.

How to Serve in Harmony With God's Will

When one believes in God, how, exactly, should one serve Him? What conditions should be fulfilled and what truths should be understood by those who serve God? And where might you be deviating in your service? You should know the answers to all these things. These issues touch upon how you believe in God, and how you walk onto the path led by the Holy Spirit and submit to God's orchestrations in all things, thus allowing you to understand every step of God's work in you. When you reach that point, you will appreciate what faith in God is, how to properly believe in God, and what you should do to act in harmony with God's will. This will make you completely and utterly obedient to God's work; you will have no complaints and you will not judge, or analyze, much less research God's work. As such, you will all be capable of obeying God till death, allowing God to steer you and slaughter you like a sheep, so that you can all become the Peters of the 1990s, and can love God to the utmost even upon the cross, without the slightest complaint. Only then will you be able to live as Peters of the 1990s.

Everyone who has resolved to can serve God—but it must be that only those who give every care to God’s will and understand God’s will are qualified and entitled to serve God. I have discovered this among you: Many people believe that as long as they fervently spread the gospel for God, go on the road for God, expend themselves and give things up for God, and so on, then this is serving God. Even more religious people believe that serving God means running around with a Bible in their hands, spreading the gospel of the kingdom of heaven and saving people by making them repent and confess. There are also many religious officials who think that serving God consists of preaching in chapels after pursuing advanced studies and training in the seminary, and teaching people through readings of Bible scriptures. Moreover, there are people in impoverished regions who believe that serving God means healing the sick and casting out demons among their brothers and sisters or praying for them, or serving them. Amongst you, there are many who believe that serving God means eating and drinking the words of God, praying to God every day, as well as visiting and doing work in churches everywhere. There are other brothers and sisters who believe that serving God means never getting married or raising a family and dedicating their entire being to God. Yet few people know what it actually means to serve God. Although there are as many people who serve God as there are stars in the sky, the number of those who can serve directly, and who are able to serve in accordance with God’s will, is paltry—piffingly small. Why do I say this? I say this because you do not understand the essence of the phrase “service to God,” and you understand so little of how to serve in accordance with God’s will. There is an urgent need for people to understand exactly what sort of service to God can be in harmony with His will.

If you wish to serve in accordance with God’s will, you must first understand what kind of people are pleasing to God, what kind of people are loathed by God, what kind of people are made perfect by God, and what kind of people are qualified to serve God. At the very least, you should be equipped with this knowledge. Moreover, you should know the aims of God’s work, and the work that God shall do in the here and now. After understanding this, and through the guidance of God’s words, you should first have entry, and first receive God’s commission. Once you have had actual experience of God’s words, and when you truly know God’s work, you will be qualified to serve God. And it is when you serve Him that God opens your spiritual eyes and allows you to have a greater understanding of His work and to see it more clearly. When you enter this reality, your experiences will be more profound and real, and all those of you who have had such experiences will be able to walk among the churches and offer provision to your brothers and sisters, so that you can each draw on each other’s strengths to make up for your own deficiencies, and gain richer knowledge in your spirits. Only after achieving this effect will you be able to serve in accordance with God’s will and be made perfect by God in the course of your service.

Those who serve God should be God’s intimates, they should be pleasing to God, and capable of the utmost loyalty to God. Whether you act in private or in public, you are able to gain the joy of God before God, you are able to stand firm before God, and regardless of how other people treat you, you always walk the path you should walk, and give every care to God's burden. Only people like this are intimates of God. That God's intimates are able to serve Him directly is because they have been given God's great commission and God's burden, they are able to make God's heart their own, and take God's burden as their own, and they give no consideration to their future prospects: Even when they have no prospects, and they stand to gain nothing, they will always believe in God with a loving heart. And so, this kind of person is God's intimate. God's intimates are also His confidants; only God's confidants could share His restlessness, and His thoughts, and although their flesh is painful and weak, they are able to endure pain and forsake that which they love to satisfy God. God gives more burdens to such people, and that which God desires to do is borne out in such people's testimony. Thus, these people are pleasing to God, they are servants of God who are after His own heart, and only people such as this can rule together with God. When you have truly become God's intimate is precisely when you will rule together with God.

Jesus was able to complete God's commission—the work of all mankind's redemption—because He gave every care to God's will, without making any plans or arrangements for Himself. So, too, was He the intimate of God—God Himself—which is something you all understand very well. (Actually, He was the God Himself who was testified to by God. I mention this here to use the fact of Jesus to illustrate the issue.) He was able to place God's management plan at the very center, and always prayed to the heavenly Father and sought the will of the heavenly Father. He prayed and said: "God the Father! Accomplish that which is Your will, and act not according to My desires but according to Your plan. Man may be weak, but why should You care for him? How could man be worthy of Your concern, man who is like an ant in Your hand? In My heart, I wish only to accomplish Your will, and I would that You can do what You would do in Me according to Your own desires." On the road to Jerusalem, Jesus was in agony, as if a knife were being twisted in His heart, yet He had not the slightest intention of going back on His word; always there was a powerful force compelling Him onward to where He would be crucified. Ultimately, He was nailed to the cross and became the likeness of sinful flesh, completing the work of the redemption of mankind. He broke free of the shackles of death and Hades. Before Him, mortality, hell, and Hades lost their power, and were vanquished by Him. He lived for thirty-three years, throughout which He always did His utmost to meet God's will according to God's work at the time, never considering His own personal gain or loss, and always thinking of the will of God the Father. Thus, after He was baptized, God said: "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Because of His service before God that was in harmony with God's will, God placed the heavy burden of redeeming all mankind upon His shoulders and made Him accomplish it, and He was qualified and entitled to complete this important task. Throughout His life, He endured immeasurable suffering for God, and He was tempted by Satan countless times, but He was never disheartened. God gave Him such an enormous task because He trusted Him, and loved Him, and thus God personally said: “This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.” At that time, only Jesus could accomplish this commission, and this was one practical aspect of God’s completion of His work of redeeming all mankind in the Age of Grace.

If, like Jesus, you are able to give every care to God’s burden, and turn your back on your flesh, God will entrust His important tasks to you, so that you will meet the conditions required to serve God. Only under such circumstances will you venture to say that you are doing God’s will and completing His commission, and only then will you venture to say you are truly serving God. Compared to Jesus’ example, do you venture to say you are God’s intimate? Do you venture to say that you are doing God’s will? Do you venture to say that you are truly serving God? Today, you do not understand how to serve God, do you venture to say you are God’s intimate? If you say that you serve God, do you not blaspheme against Him? Think about it: Are you serving God, or yourself? You serve Satan, yet you stubbornly say you are serving God—in this, do you not blaspheme against God? Many people behind My back covet the benefits of status, they gorge themselves on food, they love to sleep and give every care to the flesh, always afraid that there is no way out for the flesh. They do not perform their proper function in the church, but freeload off the church, or else they admonish their brothers and sisters with My words, lording themselves over others from positions of authority. These people keep saying they are doing God’s will and always say they are God’s intimates—is this not absurd? If you have the right intentions, but are unable to serve in accordance with God’s will, then you are being foolish; but if your intentions are not right, and you still say you serve God, then you are someone who opposes God, and you ought to be punished by God! I have no sympathy for such people! In the house of God, they freeload, always coveting the comforts of the flesh, and give no consideration to the interests of God. They always seek what is good for them, and they pay no heed to God’s will. They do not accept the scrutiny of God’s Spirit in anything they do. They are always maneuvering and deceiving their brothers and sisters, and being two-faced, like a fox in a vineyard, always stealing grapes and trampling over the vineyard. Could such people be God’s intimates? Are you fit to receive God’s blessings? You take no burden for your life and the church, are you fit to receive God’s commission? Who would dare trust someone like you? When you serve like this, could God entrust you with a greater task? Would this not cause delays to the work?

I say this so that you might know what conditions must be fulfilled in order to serve in harmony with God’s will. If you do not give your heart to God, if you do not give every care to God’s will like Jesus, then you cannot be trusted by God, and will end up being judged by God. Perhaps today, in your service to God, you always harbor the intention of deceiving God and always deal with Him in a perfunctory manner. In short, regardless of anything else, if you cheat God, ruthless judgment will come upon you. You should take advantage of having just entered onto the right track of serving God to first give your heart to God, without divided loyalties. Regardless of whether you are before God, or before other people, your heart should always be turned toward God, and you should be resolved to love God like Jesus did. In this way, God will make you perfect, so that you become a servant of God who is after His heart. If you truly wish to be made perfect by God, and for your service to be in harmony with His will, then you should change your previous views about faith in God, and change the old way you used to serve God, so that more of you is made perfect by God. In this way, God will not abandon you, and, like Peter, you will be at the vanguard of those who love God. If you remain unrepentant, then you will meet the same end as Judas. This should be understood by all who believe in God.

How to Know Reality

God is a practical God: All of His work is practical, all of the words He speaks are practical, and all of the truths He expresses are practical. Everything that is not His words is vacuous, non-existent, and unsound. Today, the Holy Spirit is to guide people into the words of God. If people are to pursue entry into reality, then they must seek reality, and know reality, after which they must experience reality, and live out reality. The more that people know reality, the more they are able to discern whether the words of others are real; the more people know reality, the fewer notions they have; the more people experience reality, the more they know the deeds of the God of reality, and the easier it is for them to break free from their corrupt, satanic dispositions; the more reality people have, the more they know God and the more they detest the flesh and love the truth; and the more reality people have, the closer they come to the standards of God's requirements. People who are gained by God are those who are possessed of reality, who know reality, and who have come to know God's real deeds through experiencing reality. The more you cooperate with God in a practical way and discipline your body, the more you will acquire the work of the Holy Spirit, the more you will gain reality, and the more you will be enlightened by God, and thus the greater your knowledge of God's real deeds will become. If you are able to live in the present light of the Holy Spirit, then the present path to practice will become clearer to you, and you will be more able to separate yourself from the religious notions and old practices of the past. Today reality is the focus: The more reality people have, the clearer their knowledge of the truth, and the greater their understanding of God's will. Reality can overcome all letters and doctrines, it can overcome all theory and expertise, and the more reality people focus on, the more they truly love God, and hunger and thirst for His words. If you always focus on reality, then your philosophy for living, religious notions, and natural character will naturally be expunged following the work of God. Those who do not pursue reality, and have no knowledge of reality, are likely to pursue that which is supernatural, and they will be easily tricked. The Holy Spirit has no means of working in such people, and so they feel vacant, and that their lives have no meaning.

The Holy Spirit can only work in you when you actually train, actually search, actually pray, and are willing to suffer for the sake of searching the truth. Those who do not seek the truth have nothing but letters and doctrines, and empty theory, and those who are without the truth naturally have many notions about God. People such as this long only for God to turn their fleshly body into a spiritual body so that they might ascend to the third heaven. How foolish these people are! All who say such things have no knowledge of God, or of reality; people such as this cannot possibly cooperate with God, and can only wait passively. If people are to understand the truth, and to clearly see the truth, and if, furthermore, they are to enter the truth and put it into practice, then they must actually train, actually search, and actually hunger and thirst. When you hunger and thirst, and when you actually cooperate with God, God's Spirit will surely touch you and work within you, which will bring you more enlightenment, and give you more knowledge of reality, and be of greater help to your life.

If people are to know God, they must first know that God is a practical God, and they must know God's words, God's practical appearance in the flesh, and God's practical work. Only after knowing that all of God's work is practical will you be able to actually cooperate with God, and only through this path will you be able to achieve growth in your life. All those who have no knowledge of reality have no means of experiencing God's words, are ensnared in their notions, live in their imagination, and thus they have no knowledge of God's words. The greater your knowledge of reality, the closer you are to God, and the more intimate you are with Him; the more you seek vagueness, abstraction and doctrine, the further you will stray from God, and so the more you will feel that experiencing God's words is strenuous and difficult, and that you are incapable of entry. If you wish to enter the reality of God's words, and onto the right track of your spiritual life, you must first know reality and separate yourself from vague and supernatural things, which is to say that first you must understand how the Holy Spirit actually enlightens and guides you from within. In this way, if you can truly grasp the Holy Spirit's real work within man, then you will have entered onto the right track of being made perfect by God.

Today, everything starts from reality. God's work is the most real, and can be touched by people; it is what people can experience, and achieve. In people there is much that is vague and supernatural, which stops them from knowing God's present work. Thus, in their experiences they always deviate, and always feel that things are difficult, and this is all caused by their notions. People are unable to grasp the principles of the Holy Spirit's work, they do not know reality, and so they are always negative in their path to entry. They look at God's requirements from afar, unable to achieve them; they merely see that God's words really are good, but cannot find the path to entry. The Holy Spirit works by this principle: Through people's cooperation, through them actively praying, searching and coming closer to God, results can be achieved and they can be enlightened and illuminated by the Holy Spirit. It is not the case that the Holy Spirit acts unilaterally, or that man acts unilaterally. Both are indispensable, and the more that people cooperate, and the more they pursue the attainment of the standards of God's requirements, the greater the work of the Holy Spirit. Only people's real cooperation, added to the work of the Holy Spirit, can produce real experiences and the essential knowledge of God's words. Gradually, through experiencing in this way, a perfect person is ultimately produced. God does not do supernatural things; in people's notions, God is almighty, and everything is done by God—with the result that people wait passively, do not read the words of God or pray, and merely await the touch of the Holy Spirit. Those with a correct understanding, however, believe this: God's actions can only go as far as my cooperation, and the effect that God's work has in me depends on how I cooperate. When God speaks, I should do all I can to seek and strive toward God's words; this is what I should achieve.

In the examples of Peter and Paul you can clearly see that it was Peter who paid the most attention to reality. From what Peter went through, it can be seen that his experiences are a summary of the lessons of those who had failed in the past, and that he absorbed the strengths of the saints of the past. From this it can be seen just how real Peter's experiences were, that people are able to reach out and touch these experiences, and to attain them. Paul, however, was different: All that he spoke of was vague and invisible, things like going to the third heaven, the ascension to the throne, and the crown of righteousness. He focused on that which was external: on status and lecturing people, on showing off his seniority, being touched by the Holy Spirit, and so on. Nothing he pursued was real, and much of it was fantasy, and thus it can be seen that all that is supernatural, such as how much the Holy Spirit touches people, the great joy that people enjoy, going to the third heaven, or the extent to which they enjoy their regular training, the extent to which they enjoy reading God's words—none of this is real. All of the Holy Spirit's work is normal, and real. When you read God's words and pray, inside you are bright and steadfast, the external world cannot interfere with you; inside, you are willing to love God, are willing to engage with positive things, and you detest the evil world. This is living within God. It is not, as people say, experiencing great enjoyment—such talk is not practical. Today, everything should begin from reality. Everything God does is real, and in your experiences you should pay attention to really knowing God, and to searching for the footprints of God's work and the means by which the Holy Spirit touches and enlightens people. If you eat and drink the words of God, and pray, and cooperate in a way that is more real, assimilating what was good from times gone by, and rejecting what was bad like Peter, if you listen with your ears and observe with your eyes, and often pray and ponder in your heart, and do all you can to cooperate with God's work, then God will surely guide you.

Regarding a Normal Spiritual Life

Faith in God necessitates a normal spiritual life, which is the foundation for experiencing God's words and entering into reality. Does all your current practice of prayers, of drawing near to God, of hymn-singing, praise, meditation, and pondering the words of God amount to a "normal spiritual life"? None of you seems to know. A normal spiritual life is not limited to such practices as praying, singing hymns, participating in church life, and eating and drinking of God's words. Rather, it involves living a new and vibrant spiritual life. What matters is not how you practice, but what fruit your practice bears. Most people believe that a normal spiritual life necessarily involves praying, singing hymns, eating and drinking the words of God or pondering His words, regardless of whether such practices actually have any effect or lead to true understanding. These people focus on following superficial procedures without any thought to their results; they are people who live in religious rituals, not people who live within the church, and much less are they people of the kingdom. Their prayers, hymn singing, and eating and drinking of God's words are all just rule-following, done out of compulsion and to keep up with trends, not out of willingness nor from the heart. However much these people pray or sing, their efforts will bear no fruit, for what they practice is just the rules and rituals of religion; they are not actually practicing God's words. They focus only on making a fuss over how they practice, and they treat God's words as rules to follow. Such people are not putting God's words into practice; they are just gratifying the flesh, and performing for other people to see. These religious rules and rituals are all human in origin; they do not come from God. God does not follow rules, nor is He subject to any law. Rather, He does new things every day, accomplishing practical work. Like people in the Three-Self Church, who limit themselves to practices such as attending morning services every day, offering evening prayers and prayers of gratitude before meals, and giving thanks in all things—however much they do and for however long they do it, they will not have the work of the Holy Spirit. When people live amidst rules and have their hearts fixed on methods of practice, the Holy Spirit cannot work, because their hearts are occupied by rules and human notions. Thus, God is unable to intervene and work on them, and they can only continue living under the control of laws. Such people are forever incapable of receiving God's praise.

A normal spiritual life is a life lived before God. When praying, one can quiet one's heart before God, and through prayer, one can seek the Holy Spirit's enlightenment, know God's words, and understand God's will. By eating and drinking of His words, people can gain a clearer and more thorough understanding of God's current work. They can also gain a new path of practice, and will not cling to the old; what they practice will all be to achieve growth in life. As for prayer, it is not about speaking a few nice-sounding words or breaking down in tears before God to show how indebted you are; rather, its purpose is to train oneself in the use of the spirit, allowing one to quiet one's heart before

God, to train oneself to seek out guidance from God's words in all matters, so that one's heart can be drawn to a fresh new light each day, and so that one will not be passive or lazy and may set foot upon the right track of putting God's words into practice. Most people nowadays focus on methods of practice, yet they do not do so in order to pursue the truth and achieve life growth. This is where they have gone astray. There are also some who are capable of receiving new light, but their methods of practice do not change. They bring their old religious notions with them as they look to receive God's words of today, so what they receive is still doctrine colored by religious notions; they are not receiving today's light simply. As a result, their practices are tainted; they are the same old practices in new packaging. However well they might practice, they are hypocrites. God leads people in doing new things every day, demanding that each day they gain new insight and understanding, and requiring that they not be old-fashioned and repetitive. If you have believed in God for many years, yet your methods of practice have not changed at all, and if you are still zealous and busy about external matters, yet do not have a quiet heart to bring before God to enjoy His words, then you will obtain nothing. When it comes to accepting God's new work, if you do not plan differently, do not go about your practice in a new way, and do not pursue any new understanding, but instead cling to the old and receive only some limited new light, without changing the way you practice, then such people as you are in this stream in name only; in actuality, they are religious Pharisees outside the stream of the Holy Spirit.

To live a normal spiritual life, one must be able to receive new light daily and pursue a true understanding of God's words. One must see the truth clearly, find a path of practice in all matters, discover new questions through reading God's words each day, and realize one's own inadequacies so that one may have a longing and seeking heart that moves one's entire being, and so that one may be quiet before God at all times, deeply afraid of falling behind. A person with such a longing, seeking heart, who is willing to continually attain entry, is on the right track of spiritual life. Those who are moved by the Holy Spirit, who desire to do better, who are willing to pursue being perfected by God, who long for a deeper understanding of God's words, who do not pursue the supernatural but rather pay a real price, who truly care for God's will, who actually attain entry so that their experiences are more genuine and real, who do not pursue empty words and doctrines or pursue to feel the supernatural, who do not worship any great personality—these are the ones who have entered into a normal spiritual life. Everything they do is intended to achieve further growth in life and to make them fresh and lively in spirit, and they are always able to attain entry actively. Without realizing it, they come to understand the truth and enter into reality. Those with normal spiritual lives find the liberation and freedom of spirit each day, and they can practice the words of God in a free way to His satisfaction. For these people, praying is not a formality or a procedure; each day, they are able to keep pace with the new light. For example, people train themselves to quiet their hearts before God, and their hearts can truly be quiet before

God, and they can be disturbed by no one. No person, event, or thing can constrain their normal spiritual lives. Such training is intended to yield results; it is not intended to make people follow rules. This practice is not about rule-following, but is instead about promoting growth in people's life. If you see this practice only as rules to follow, your life will never change. You may be engaged in the same practice as others, but while they are ultimately able to keep pace with the work of the Holy Spirit, you are cast out from the stream of the Holy Spirit. Are you not deceiving yourself? The purpose of these words is to allow people to quiet their hearts before God, to turn their hearts to God, so that God's work in them may be without hindrance and may bear fruit. Only then can people be in accord with God's will.

Discussing Church Life and Real Life

People feel that they are only able to transform within the church life. If they are not within the church life, then they feel unable to transform, as though transformation cannot be achieved in real life. Can you see the problem in this? I have discussed bringing God into real life before; for those who believe in God, this is the path to enter into the reality of God's words. In fact, church life is only a limited way of perfecting people. The primary environment for perfecting people is still real life. This is the actual practice and actual training that I talked about, which allow people to achieve a life of normal humanity and to live out the likeness of a true person during daily life. On one hand, one must study in order to elevate one's own level of education, understand God's words, and achieve the ability to receive. On the other hand, one must be equipped with the basic knowledge required to live as a human being in order to achieve the insight and reason of normal humanity, because people are almost entirely lacking in these areas. Furthermore, one must also come to savor God's words through church life, and gradually come to have a clear understanding of the truth.

Why is it said that in believing in God, one must bring God into real life? It's not just church life that transforms people; more importantly, people should enter into reality in real life. You used to always talk about your spiritual state and spiritual matters while neglecting to practice many things in real life, and neglecting your entry into them. You wrote every day, you listened every day, and you read every day. You even prayed while you were cooking: "Oh, God! May You become my life within me. However today goes, please bless me and enlighten me. Whatever You enlighten me about today, please allow me to understand it in this moment, so that Your words may act as my life." You also prayed while you were eating dinner: "Oh, God! You have bestowed us with this meal. May You bless us. Amen! May we live by You. May You be with us. Amen!" After you finished your dinner and were washing the dishes, you started rambling: "Oh, God, I am this bowl. We have been corrupted by Satan and are just like bowls that have been used and must be cleansed with water. You are the water, and Your words are the living water that provides for my life.” Before you knew it, it was time for bed, and you started rambling again: “Oh God! You have blessed me and guided me through the day. I am truly grateful to You. ...” This was how you spent your day, and then you entered into your slumber. Most people live like this every day, and even now they neglect actual entry, focusing only on paying lip service in their prayers. This is their previous life—their old life. And most are like this; they lack any actual training, and they undergo very few real transformations. They only pay lip service in their prayers, drawing closer to God in their words alone, but lacking depth in their understanding. Let us take the simplest example—tidying your home. You see that your home is messy, so you sit there and pray: “Oh, God! Look at the corruption that Satan has wrought on me. I am just as dirty as this home. Oh, God! I truly praise and thank You. Without Your salvation and enlightenment, I would not have realized this fact.” You just sit there and ramble on, praying for a long time, and afterward you act as if nothing has happened, as though you were a rambling old woman. You pass your spiritual life this way without any true entry into reality at all, with too many superficial practices! Entering into actual training involves people’s real lives and their practical difficulties—this is the only way they change. Without real life, people cannot be transformed. What is the use of paying lip service in prayer? Without understanding human nature, everything is a waste of time, and without a path for practice, everything is a waste of effort! Normal prayer can help people maintain their normal state within, but they cannot be thoroughly transformed by it. Knowing human self-righteousness, arrogance, conceit, hubris, and knowing the corrupt dispositions of man—knowledge of these things does not come through prayer—they are discovered by savoring God’s words, and they are known through enlightenment by the Holy Spirit in real life. People nowadays can all speak quite well, and they have listened to the loftiest preaching—loftier than any others through the ages—yet very little of it is actually implemented in their real lives. That is to say, there is no God in their real lives; they do not possess the life of a new person after transformation. They do not live out the truth in real life, nor do they bring God into real life. They live like the children of hell. Is this not a glaring deviation?

In order to restore the likeness of a normal person, that is, to achieve normal humanity, people cannot merely please God with their words. They only harm themselves in doing so, and it does not benefit their entry or transformation. Therefore, to attain transformation, people must practice little by little. They must enter slowly, seek and explore bit by bit, enter in from the positive, and live a practical life of truth; a life of a saint. Thereafter, real things, real events, and real environments allow people to have practical training. People are not required to pay any lip service; instead, they are to train in real environments. People first come to realize that they are of poor caliber, and then they eat and drink of God’s words normally, and enter into and practice normally as well; only in this way can they obtain reality, and this is how entry may occur even more rapidly. In order to transform people, there must be some practicality; they must practice with real things, real events, and real environments. Can one achieve true training by relying on church life alone? Could people enter into reality this way? No! If people are unable to enter into real life, then they are unable to transform their old lifestyle and ways of doing things. This is not entirely due to people's laziness and high level of dependency, but rather it is because people simply do not have the capacity for living, and, moreover, they have no understanding of God's standard of the likeness of a normal person. In the past, people were always talking, speaking, communicating—and they even became "orators"—yet none of them sought transformation in their life disposition; instead, they blindly sought profound theories. Thus, people of today must change this religious style of belief in God in their lives. They must enter into practice by focusing on one event, one thing, one person. They must do it with focus—only then can they attain results. People's transformation begins with a change in their essence. The work must be aimed at people's essence, their life, and at their laziness, dependency, and slavishness—only in this way can they be transformed.

Even though church life can produce results in some areas, the key is still that real life can transform people. One's old nature cannot be transformed without real life. Let us take, for example, the work of Jesus during the Age of Grace. When Jesus abolished the previous laws and established the commandments of the new age, He spoke using actual examples from real life. As Jesus was leading His disciples through the wheat field on a Sabbath, His disciples became hungry and plucked ears of grain to eat. The Pharisees saw this and said that they were not observing the Sabbath. They also said that people were not allowed to save the calves that had fallen into a pit on the Sabbath, saying that no work might be performed during the Sabbath. Jesus cited these incidents to gradually promulgate the commandments of the new age. At the time, He used many practical matters to help people understand and transform. This is the principle by which the Holy Spirit performs His work, and it is the only way that can transform people. Without practical matters, people can only gain a theoretical and intellectual understanding—this is not an effective way to transform. So how does one acquire wisdom and insight through training? Can people acquire wisdom and insight simply from listening, reading, and advancing their knowledge? How could this be so? People must understand and experience in real life! Therefore, one must train, and one must not depart from real life. People must pay attention to different aspects and have entry in various aspects: level of education, expressiveness, the ability to see things, discernment, the ability to understand God's words, the common sense and rules of humanity, and other things relating to humanity that people must be equipped with. After understanding has been attained, people must focus on entry, and only then can transformation be attained. If someone has attained understanding, yet they neglect practice, how can transformation occur? Presently, people understand much, but they do not live out reality; thus, they possess little essential understanding of God's words.

You have only been marginally enlightened; you have received a little illumination from the Holy Spirit, yet you have no entry into real life—or you might not even care about entry—thus your transformation is lessened. After such a long time, people understand a lot. They are able to talk a lot about their knowledge of theories, but their external disposition remains the same, and their original caliber remains as it was, not advancing in the slightest. If this is the case, when will you finally enter in?

Church life is only a kind of life where people gather to savor the words of God, and it makes up only a small sliver of one's life. If people's real life could also be like their church life—including a normal spiritual life, normally savoring God's words, praying and being close to God normally, living a real life where everything is carried out in accordance with God's will, living a real life where everything is carried out in accordance with the truth, living a real life of practicing prayer and practicing being quiet before God, of practicing the singing of hymns and dancing—then this is the only kind of life that would bring them into a life of God's words. Most people only focus on the several hours of their church life without “caring for” their life outside those hours, as though it were of no concern to them. There are also many people who only enter into the life of the saints when eating and drinking God's words, singing hymns, or praying, and then they revert to their old selves outside those times. Living like this cannot transform people, much less make them know God. In believing in God, if people desire transformation of their disposition, then they must not detach themselves from real life. In real life, you must know yourself, forsake yourself, practice the truth, as well as learn the principles, common sense, and rules of self-conduct in all things before you are able to achieve gradual transformation. If you only focus on the theoretical knowledge and only live among religious ceremonies without going deep into reality, without entering into real life, then you will never enter into reality, you will never know yourself, the truth, or God, and you will forever be blind and ignorant. God's work of saving people is not to allow them to live normal human lives after a short period of time, nor is it to transform their erroneous notions and doctrines. Rather, His purpose is to change people's old dispositions, to change the entirety of their old way of life, and to change all of their outdated ways of thinking and mental outlook. Focusing only on church life will not change people's old life habits or change the old ways in which they have lived for a long time. No matter what, people must not become detached from real life. God asks that people live out normal humanity in real life, not just in church life; that they live out the truth in real life, not just in church life; and that they fulfill their functions in real life, not just in church life. To enter into reality, one must turn everything toward real life. If, in believing in God, people cannot come to know themselves through entry into real life, and if they cannot live out normal humanity in real life, then they will become failures. Those who disobey God are all people who cannot enter into real life. They are all people who speak of humanity, but live out the nature of demons. They are all people who speak of the truth, but live out doctrines instead. Those who cannot live out the truth in real life are those who believe in God, but are detested and rejected by Him. You have to practice your entry in real life, know your own deficiencies, disobedience, and ignorance, and know your abnormal humanity and weaknesses. That way, your knowledge will be integrated into your actual condition and difficulties. Only this kind of knowledge is real and can allow you to truly grasp your own condition and achieve dispositional transformation.

Now that the perfecting of people has formally begun, you must enter into real life. Therefore, to achieve transformation, you must start from entry into real life, and transform little by little. If you avoid normal human life and only talk about spiritual matters, then things become dry and flat; they become unrealistic, and then how could people transform? Now you are told to enter into real life to practice, in order to establish a foundation for entering into true experience. This is one aspect of what people must do. The work of the Holy Spirit is mainly to guide, while the rest depends on people's practice and entry. Everyone may attain entry into real life through different paths, such that they can bring God into real life, and live out a real normal humanity. This is the only kind of life with meaning!

On Everyone Performing Their Function

In the current stream, all those who truly love God have the opportunity to be perfected by Him. Whether they are young or old, as long as they keep an obedience to God in their hearts and revere Him, they can be perfected by Him. God perfects people according to their different functions. So long as you exert all of your strength, and submit to the work of God, you can be perfected by Him. At present, none of you is perfect. Sometimes you are capable of performing one type of function, and other times you can perform two. Just as long as you do your utmost to expend yourself for God, you will ultimately be perfected by Him.

Young people have few philosophies for living, and they lack wisdom and insight. God is here to perfect man's wisdom and insight. His word makes up for their deficiencies. However, the dispositions of young people are unstable, and must be transformed by God. Young people have fewer religious notions and fewer philosophies for living; they think about everything in simple terms, and their reflections are not complex. This is the part of their humanity that has not yet taken shape, and it is a commendable part; however, young people are ignorant and lack wisdom. This is something that needs to be perfected by God. Being perfected by God will enable you to develop discernment. You will be able to understand many spiritual things clearly, and gradually turn into someone who is fit for God to use. Older brothers and sisters also have their functions to perform, and they are not abandoned by God. Older brothers and sisters, too, have both desirable and undesirable aspects. They have more philosophies for living and more religious notions. In their actions, they adhere to many rigid conventions, being fond of regulations which they apply mechanically and without flexibility. This is an undesirable aspect. However, these older brothers and sisters remain calm and steadfast no matter what comes up; their dispositions are stable, and they do not have tempestuous moods. They may be slower at accepting things, yet this is not a major fault. As long as you can submit; as long as you can accept the current words of God and not scrutinize God's words; as long as you are concerned only with submission and following, and do not ever pass judgment on the words of God or harbor other ill thoughts about them; as long as you accept His words and put them into practice—then, having met these conditions, you can be perfected.

Whether you are a younger or an older brother or sister, you know the function you ought to perform. Those in their youth are not arrogant; those who are older are not passive, nor do they regress. Moreover, they are able to use each other's strengths to make up for their weaknesses, and they can serve one another without any prejudice. A bridge of friendship is built between younger and older brothers and sisters, and because of God's love, you are able to better understand one another. Younger brothers and sisters do not look down on older brothers and sisters, and the older brothers and sisters are not self-righteous: Is this not a harmonious partnership? If you all have such resolve, then the will of God will certainly be accomplished in your generation.

In the future, whether you are blessed or cursed will be decided based upon your actions and behavior today. If you are to be perfected by God, it must be right now, in this era; there will not be another opportunity in the future. God truly wants to perfect you now, and this is not a manner of speaking. In the future, regardless of what trials befall you, what events take place, or what disasters you encounter, God wishes to perfect you; this is a definite and indisputable fact. Where can this be seen? It can be seen in the fact that the word of God, through the ages and generations, has never attained such a great height as it has today. It has entered the highest realm, and the work of the Holy Spirit on all of humanity today is without precedent. Hardly anyone from generations past had such an experience; even in the age of Jesus, the revelations of today did not exist. The words spoken to you, what you understand, and your experience have all reached a new peak. In the midst of trials and chastisements, you people do not leave, and this is sufficient proof that the work of God has attained an unprecedented splendor. This is not something that man is able to do, nor is it something that man maintains; rather, it is the work of God Himself. Thus, from many of the realities of the work of God, it can be seen that God wishes to perfect man, and He is certainly able to complete you. If you have this insight, and make this new discovery, then you will not wait for the second coming of Jesus; instead, you will allow God to make you complete in the present age. Therefore, you should each do your utmost, sparing no effort, so that you may be perfected by God.

Now, you must pay no mind to negative things. First, put aside and disregard anything that makes you feel negative. When you are handling affairs, do so with a heart that searches and feels its way forward, a heart that submits to God. Whenever you discover a weakness within you but do not let it control you, and despite it, perform the functions that you ought to, you have made a positive step forward. For example, you older brothers and sisters have religious notions, yet you are able to pray, submit, eat and drink of the word of God, and sing hymns.... This is to say, you should devote yourselves with all the strength you can muster to whatever you are able to do, whatever functions you are able to perform. Do not wait passively. Being able to satisfy God in your performance of your duty is the first step. Then, once you are able to understand the truth and attain entry into the reality of God's words, you will have been perfected by Him.

Concerning God's Use of Man

No one is capable of living independently except for those who are given special direction and guidance by the Holy Spirit, for they require the ministry and shepherding of those who are used by God. Thus, in each age God raises up different people who rush busily about shepherding the churches for the sake of His work. Which is to say, God's work must be done through those whom He looks favorably upon and approves of; the Holy Spirit must use the part within them that is worthy of use in order for the Holy Spirit to work, and they are made fit for use by God through being made perfect by the Holy Spirit. Because man's ability to understand is too lacking, he must be shepherded by those who are used by God; it was the same with God's use of Moses, in whom He found much that was suitable for use at the time, and which He used to do God's work during that stage. In this stage, God uses a man whilst also taking advantage of the part of him that can be used by the Holy Spirit in order to work, and the Holy Spirit both directs him and simultaneously makes perfect the remaining, unusable part.

The work carried out by the one who is used by God is in order to cooperate with the work of Christ or the Holy Spirit. This man is raised up among man by God, he is there to lead all of God's chosen ones, and he is also raised up by God in order to do the work of human cooperation. With someone such as this, who is able to do the work of human cooperation, more of God's requirements toward man and the work that the Holy Spirit must do among man can be achieved through him. Another way of putting it is like this: God's aim in using this man is so that all those who follow God can better understand God's will, and can attain more of God's requirements. Because people are incapable of directly understanding God's words or God's will, God has raised someone up who is used to carry out such work. This person who is used by God can also be described as a medium through which God guides people, as the "translator" who communicates between God and man. Thus, such a man is unlike any of those who work in God's household or who are His apostles. Like them, he can be said to be someone who serves God, yet in the essence of his work and the background of his use by God he differs greatly from the other workers and apostles. In terms of the essence of his work and the background of his use, the man who is used by God is raised up by Him, he is prepared by God for God's work, and he cooperates in the work of God Himself. No person could ever do his work in his stead—this is human cooperation that is indispensable alongside the divine work. The work carried out by other workers or apostles, meanwhile, is but the conveyance and implementation of the many aspects of the arrangements for the churches during each period, or else the work of some simple provision of life in order to maintain the church life. These workers and apostles are not appointed by God, much less can they be called those who are used by the Holy Spirit. They are selected from among the churches and, after they have been trained and cultivated for a period of time, those who are fit are kept on, while those who are unfit are sent back to where they came from. Because these people are selected from among the churches, some show their true colors after becoming leaders, and some even do many bad things and end up being cast out. The man who is used by God, on the other hand, is someone who has been prepared by God, and who possesses a certain caliber, and has humanity. He has been prepared and made perfect in advance by the Holy Spirit, and is completely led by the Holy Spirit, and, particularly when it comes to his work, he is directed and commanded by the Holy Spirit—as a result of this there is no deviation on the path of leading God's chosen ones, for God surely takes responsibility for His own work, and God does His own work at all times.

Once You Understand the Truth, You Should Put It Into Practice

God's work and word are meant to cause a change in your disposition; His goal is not merely to make you understand or know His work and word. That is not enough. You are a person who has the ability to comprehend, so you should have no difficulty in understanding the word of God, because most of God's word is written in human language, and He speaks very plainly. For instance, you are perfectly capable of learning what it is that God wants you to understand and practice; this is something that a normal person who has the faculty of comprehension should be able to do. In particular, the words that God is saying in the present stage are especially clear and transparent, and God is pointing out many things that people have not considered, as well as all manner of human states. His words are all-encompassing, and as clear as the light of a full moon. So now, people understand many issues, but there is still something missing—people putting His word into practice. People must experience all aspects of the truth in detail, and explore and seek it out in greater detail, rather than simply waiting to absorb whatever is made available to them; otherwise they become little more than parasites. They know God's word, yet do not put it into practice. This kind of person does not love the truth and will ultimately be cast out. To be like a Peter of the 1990s, this means that each one of you should practice the word of God, have true entry in your experiences and gain even more and even greater enlightenment in your cooperation with God, which will be of ever increasing assistance to your own life. If you have read a lot of God's word but only understand the meaning of the text and lack direct knowledge of God's word through your practical experiences, then you will not know God's word. As far as you are concerned, God's word is not life, but just lifeless letters. And if you only live in observance of lifeless letters, then you cannot grasp the essence of God's word, nor will you understand His will. Only when you experience His word in your actual experiences will the spiritual meaning of God's word open itself to you, and it is only through experience that you can grasp the spiritual meaning of many truths and unlock the mysteries of God's word. If you do not put it into practice, then no matter how clear His word, all that you have grasped are empty letters and doctrines, which have become religious regulations to you. Is this not what the Pharisees did? If you practice and experience God's word, it becomes practical to you; if you do not seek to practice it, then God's word to you is little more than the legend of the third heaven. In fact, the process of believing in God is the process of you experiencing His word as well as being gained by Him, or to put it more clearly, to believe in God is to have the knowledge and understanding of His word and to experience and live out His word; such is the reality behind your belief in God. If you believe in God and hope for eternal life without seeking to practice the word of God and enter into the reality of the truth, then you are foolish. This would be like going to a feast and only looking at the food and learning the delicious things by heart without actually tasting any of it, it would be like not eating or drinking anything there. Would such a person not be a fool?

The truth that man needs to possess is found in the word of God, and it is a truth that is the most beneficial and helpful to mankind. It is the tonic and sustenance that your body needs, something that helps man restore his normal humanity. It is a truth that man should be equipped with. The more you practice God's word, the more quickly your life will blossom, and the clearer the truth will become. As you grow in stature, you will see things of the spiritual world more clearly, and the more strength you will have to triumph over Satan. Much of the truth that you do not understand will be made clear when you practice the word of God. Most people are satisfied to merely understand the text of God's word and focus on equipping themselves with doctrines rather than on deepening their experience in practice, but is that not the way of the Pharisees? So how can the phrase, "The word of God is life" be real for them? A person's life cannot grow simply by reading God's word, but only when the word of God is put into practice. If it is your belief that to understand God's word is all that is needed to have life and stature, then your understanding is warped. Truly understanding God's word occurs when you practice the truth, and you must understand that "only by practicing the truth can it ever be understood." Today, after reading the word of God, you can merely say that you know

God's word, but you cannot say that you understand it. Some say that the only way to practice the truth is to understand it first, but this is only partially correct, and is certainly not entirely accurate. Before you have knowledge of a truth, you have not experienced that truth. Feeling that you understand something you hear in a sermon is not truly understanding—this is just taking possession of the literal words of the truth, and it is not the same as understanding the true meaning therein. Just having a superficial knowledge of the truth does not mean that you actually understand it or have knowledge about it; the true meaning of the truth comes from having experienced it. Therefore, only when you experience the truth can you understand it, and only then can you grasp the hidden parts of it. Deepening your experience is the only way to grasp the connotations, and to understand the essence of the truth. Therefore, you can go everywhere with the truth, but if there is no truth in you, then do not think of trying to convince even your family members, much less religious people. Without the truth you are like fluttering snowflakes, but with the truth you can be happy and free, and none can attack you. No matter how strong a theory is, it cannot overcome the truth. With the truth, the world itself can be swayed and mountains and seas moved, whereas a lack of the truth can lead to strong city walls being reduced to rubble by maggots. This is an obvious fact.

At the current stage, it is of vital importance to first know the truth, and then put it into practice and equip yourself further with the true meaning of the truth. You should seek to attain this. Rather than merely seeking to make others follow your words, you should cause them to follow your practice. Only in this way can you find something meaningful. No matter what befalls you, no matter whom you come across, as long as you have the truth, you will be able to stand firm. The word of God is that which brings life to man, not death. If, after reading the word of God, you do not come alive, but you are still dead, then there is something wrong with you. If after some time you have read much of God's word and have heard many practical sermons, but you are still in a condition of death, then this is proof that you are not one who values the truth, nor are you a person who pursues the truth. If you truly sought to gain God, you would not focus on equipping yourselves with doctrines and using lofty doctrines to teach others, but would instead focus on experiencing God's word and putting the truth into practice. Is this not what you should now be seeking to enter into?

There is limited time for God to do His work in man, so what outcome can there be if you do not cooperate with Him? Why is it that God always wants you to practice His word once you understand it? It is because God has revealed His words to you, and your next step is to actually practice them. As you practice these words, God will carry out the work of enlightenment and guidance. That is how it is to be done. The word of God allows man to blossom in life and possesses no elements which could cause man to deviate or become passive. You say you have read God's word and practiced it, but you still have not received any work from the Holy Spirit. Your words could fool only a child. Other people may not know if your intentions are right, but do you think it possible that God would not know? How is it that others practice the word of God and receive the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit, yet you practice His word and do not receive the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit? Does God have emotions? If your intentions are truly right and you are cooperative, then God's Spirit will be with you. Some people always want to plant their own flag, but why does God not let them rise up and lead the church? Some people merely fulfill their function and perform their duties, and before they know it, they have gained God's approval. How can that be? God examines the innermost heart of man, and people who pursue the truth must do so with right intentions. People who do not have right intentions cannot stand firm. At its core, your goal is to let God's word take effect within you. In other words, it is to have a true understanding of God's word in your practice of it. Perhaps your ability to comprehend God's word is poor, but when you practice the word of God, He can remedy this flaw, so not only must you know many truths, but you must also practice them. This is the greatest focus that cannot be ignored. Jesus endured many humiliations and much suffering in His thirty-three and a half years. He suffered so greatly simply because He practiced the truth, did the will of God in all things, and only cared for God's will. This was suffering that He would not have undergone had He known the truth without practicing it. If Jesus had followed the teachings of the Jews and followed the Pharisees, then He would not have suffered. You can learn from Jesus' deeds that the effectiveness of God's work on man comes from man's cooperation, and this is something you must recognize. Would Jesus have suffered as He did on the cross if He had not practiced the truth? Could He have prayed such a sorrowful prayer if He had not acted in accordance with God's will? Therefore, you should suffer for the sake of practicing the truth; this is the kind of suffering a person should undergo.

A Person Who Attains Salvation Is One Who Is Willing to Practice the Truth

The necessity of having a proper church life is often mentioned in sermons. So why is it that the life of the church has not yet improved, and is still just the same old thing? Why is there not a completely new and different way of life? Could it be normal for a person of the nineties to live like an emperor of a bygone era? Though what people now eat and drink are delicacies rarely tasted in previous eras, there have been no major turnarounds in the church life. It has been like putting old wine into new bottles. What then is the use of God saying so much? The churches in most places have not changed at all. I have seen it with My own eyes, and it is clear in My heart; even though I have not experienced the life of the church for Myself, I know the conditions of church gatherings like the back of My hand. They have not made much progress. It goes back to that saying—it is like putting old wine into new bottles. Nothing has changed! When someone is shepherding them, they burn like fire, but when no one is there to support them, they are like a block of ice. Not many can talk of practical things, and very rarely can anyone take the helm. Although the sermons are lofty, seldom has anyone achieved any entry. Few people cherish the word of God. They become tearful when they take up God's word, cheerful when they set it aside, and insipid and lacking in luster when they depart from it. Speaking frankly, you simply do not cherish the word of God, and you never see the words from His own mouth today as a treasure. You just become anxious when reading His word, and feel strenuous when memorizing it, and when it comes to putting God's word into practice, it is like trying to crank the handle of a well pump by pulling on it with a hair from a horse's tail—no matter how hard you try, you simply cannot crank up enough energy. You are always energized when reading God's word, yet forgetful when practicing it. In fact, these words need not be spoken so painstakingly and repeated so patiently; but the fact that people just listen without putting God's word into practice has become an obstacle for His work. I cannot not bring it up, I cannot not talk about it. I am compelled to do so; it is not that I enjoy exposing the weaknesses of others. You think that your practice is more or less adequate—that when revelations are at a peak, your entry is also at its peak? Is it so simple? You never examine the foundation upon which your experiences are ultimately built! As of this moment, your gatherings absolutely cannot be called a proper church life, nor do they constitute a proper spiritual life in the least. It is just the gathering of a bunch of people who enjoy chatting and singing. Strictly speaking, there is not much reality in it. To further clarify, if you do not practice the truth, where is the reality? Is it not boasting to say that you have reality? Those who always perform work are arrogant and conceited, while those who always obey keep quiet and keep their heads down, without any opportunity for training. People who do the work do nothing but talk, going on and on with their high-sounding speeches, and the followers only listen. There is no transformation to speak of; these are all just ways of the past! Today, your being able to submit and not daring to interfere or to act however you please is due to the arrival of the administrative decrees of God; it is not change you have undergone through experiences. The fact that you no longer dare to do some things that violate the administrative decrees today is because God's work of words has had a clear effect and has conquered people. Let Me ask someone: How much of your accomplishment today was earned with the sweat of your own hard work? How much of it was told to you directly by God? How would you answer? Would you be dumbfounded and speechless? Why is it that others are able to speak out about many of their actual experiences to provide you with sustenance, while you simply enjoy the meals that others have cooked? Do you not feel ashamed? You may carry out a fact-finding examination, examining those who are comparatively good: How much truth do you understand? How much do you ultimately put into practice? Whom do you love more, God or yourself? Do you give more often, or receive more often? On how many occasions when your intent was wrong have you forsaken your old self and satisfied the will of God? Just these few questions will baffle many people. For most people, even if they realize that their intent is wrong, they still knowingly do wrong, and they are nowhere near forsaking their own flesh. Most people allow sin to run rampant within them, allowing sin to direct their every action. They are unable to overcome their sins, and they continue to live in sin. Having arrived at this current stage, who does not know how many evil deeds they have done? If you say you do not know, then you are lying through your teeth. To speak frankly, it is all an unwillingness to forsake your old self. What is the use of saying so many repentant “words from the heart” that are worthless? Does this help you grow in your life? It can be said that to know yourself is your full-time work. I perfect people through their submission and their practice of God’s words. If you only wear God’s word as you would wear your clothes, just to look smart and snazzy, are you not deceiving yourself and others? If all you have is talk and you never put it into practice, what will you attain?

Many people can talk a bit about practice and they can talk about their personal impressions, but the majority of it is the illumination gained from the words of others. It does not at all include anything from their own personal practices, nor does it include what they see from their experiences. I have dissected this issue earlier; do not think that I know nothing. You are merely a paper tiger, yet you speak of conquering Satan, of bearing victorious testimonies, and of living out God’s image? This is all nonsense! Do you think that all the words spoken by God today are for you to admire? Your mouth speaks of forsaking your old self and putting truth into practice, yet your hands are carrying out other deeds and your heart is plotting other schemes—what kind of a person are you? Why are your heart and your hands not one and the same? So much preaching has become empty words; is this not heart-breaking? If you are unable to put God’s word into practice, it proves that you have not yet entered into the way that the Holy Spirit works, you have not yet had the work of the Holy Spirit in you, and you have not yet had His guidance. If you say that you are only able to understand the word of God but are unable to put it into practice, then you are a person who does not love the truth. God does not come to save this kind of person. Jesus suffered enormous agony when He was crucified in order to save the sinners, to save the poor, and to save all those humble people. His crucifixion served as a sin offering. If you cannot practice God’s word, then you should leave as soon as you can; do not linger in God’s house as a freeloader. Many people even find it difficult to stop themselves from doing things that clearly resist God. Are they not asking for death? How can they speak of entering God’s kingdom? Would they have the audacity to see God’s face? Eating food that God provides you with, doing crooked things that oppose God, being malicious, insidious, and scheming, even while God allows you to enjoy the blessings He has bestowed upon you—do you not feel them burning your hands when you receive them? Do you not feel your face turning red? Having done something in opposition to God, having carried out schemes to “go rogue,” do you not feel frightened? If you feel nothing, how can you speak of any future? There was already no future for you long ago, so what greater expectations can you still have? If you say something shameless yet feel no reproach, and your heart has no awareness, then does it not mean that you have already been abandoned by God? Speaking and acting indulgently and unrestrainedly has become your nature; how can you ever be perfected by God like this? Would you be able to walk the world over? Who would be convinced by you? Those who know your true nature would keep their distance. Is this not God's punishment? All in all, if there is only talk and no practice, there is no growth. Though the Holy Spirit may be working on you while you speak, if you do not practice, the Holy Spirit shall stop working. If you continue to go on like this, how can there be any talk of the future or giving your entire being to God's work? You can only speak of offering your entire being, yet you have not given your true love to God. All He receives from you is verbal devotion; He is not given your intention to practice the truth. Could this be your actual stature? If you were to continue on like this, when would you be perfected by God? Do you not feel anxious over your dark and gloomy future? Do you not feel that God has lost hope in you? Do you not know that God desires to perfect more and newer people? Could old things hold their own? You are not paying attention to God's words today: Are you waiting for tomorrow?

What an Adequate Shepherd Should Be Equipped With

You need to have an understanding of the many states that people will be in when the Holy Spirit performs work on them. In particular, those who coordinate in service to God must have an even stronger grasp of these states. If you only talk about a lot of experiences or ways of attaining entry, it shows that your experience is overly one-sided. Without knowing your true state and grasping the principles of the truth, it is not possible to achieve a change in disposition. Without knowing the principles of the Holy Spirit's work or understanding the fruit it bears, it will be difficult for you to discern the work of evil spirits. You must expose the work of evil spirits, as well as the notions of man, and penetrate straight to the heart of the issue; you must also point out many deviations in people's practice and problems they might have in their faith in God, so that they may recognize them. At the very least, you must not make them feel negative or passive. However, you must understand the difficulties that objectively exist for most people, you must not be unreasonable or "try to teach a pig to sing"; that is foolish behavior. To resolve the many difficulties people experience, you must first comprehend the dynamics of the work of the Holy Spirit; you must understand how the Holy Spirit performs work on different people, you must have an understanding of the difficulties people face and of their shortcomings, and you must see through to the key issues of the problem and get to its source, without deviating or making any errors. Only this kind of person is qualified to coordinate in service to God.

Whether or not you are able to grasp the key issues and see many things clearly depends on your individual experiences. The manner in which you experience is also the manner in which you lead others. If you understand letters and doctrines, then you will lead others to understand letters and doctrines. The way that you experience the reality of God's words is the way in which you will lead others to attain entry to the reality of God's utterances. If you are able to understand many truths and clearly gain insight into many things from God's words, then you are capable of leading others to understand many truths, too, and those whom you lead will gain a clear understanding of the visions. If you focus on grasping supernatural feelings, then those whom you lead will do the same. If you neglect practice, instead placing emphasis on discussion, then those whom you lead will also focus on discussion, without practicing at all or attaining any transformation in their dispositions; they will only be enthusiastic superficially, without having put any truths into practice. All people supply others with what they themselves possess. The type of person someone is determines the path onto which they guide others, as well as the type of people that they lead. To be truly fit for God's use, you not only must have an aspiration, but you also need a great deal of enlightenment from God, guidance from His words, the experience of being dealt with by Him, and the refinement of His words. With this as a foundation, in ordinary times, you should pay attention to your observations, thoughts, ponderances, and conclusions, and engage in absorption or elimination accordingly. These are all paths for your entry to reality, and each one of them is indispensable. This is how God works. If you enter into this method by which God works, you can have opportunities every day to be perfected by Him. And at any time, regardless of whether your environment is harsh or favorable, whether you are being tested or tempted, whether you are working or not, and whether you are living life as an individual or as part of a collective, you will always find opportunities to be perfected by God, without ever missing a single one of them. You will be able to discover them all—and in this way, you will have found the secret to experiencing God's words.

On Experience

Throughout Peter's experiences, he encountered hundreds of trials. Though the people of today are aware of the term "trial," they are confused as to its true meaning and circumstances. God tempers people's determination, refines their confidence, and perfects every part of them, and this is primarily achieved through trials, which are also the hidden work of the Holy Spirit. It seems as though God has forsaken people, and so if they are not careful, they will view these trials as the temptations of Satan. In fact, many trials can be considered temptations, and this is the principle and the rule by which God works. If people truly live in God's presence, they will regard such things as trials from God, and will not let them slip away. If someone says that because God is with them, Satan will surely not approach them, this is not entirely correct; if that were the case, how can it be explained that Jesus faced temptations after He had fasted in the wilderness for forty days? So if people truly rectify their views on belief in God, they will see many things much more clearly, and their understanding will not be skewed and fallacious. If someone is truly resolved to be made perfect by God, they must approach all the matters that face them from many different angles, neither swaying to the left nor to the right. If you have no knowledge of God's work, you will not know how to cooperate with God. If you do not know the principles of God's work, and are unaware of how Satan works in man, you will have no path to practice. Zealous pursuit alone will not allow you to achieve the results demanded by God. Such a means of experiencing is akin to that of Lawrence: making no distinctions whatsoever and only focusing on experience, utterly unaware of what Satan's work is, of what the work of the Holy Spirit is, of what state man is in without the presence of God, and what kind of people God wants to perfect. What principles should be adopted when dealing with different types of people, how to grasp God's will in the present, how to know God's disposition, and at which people, circumstances, and age God's mercy, majesty, and righteousness are directed—he has no discernment in any of these. If people do not have multiple visions as a foundation for their experiences, then life is out of the question, and experience even more so; they can foolishly continue submitting to and enduring everything. Such people are very difficult to make perfect. It can be said that if you have nothing of the visions spoken of above, this is ample proof that you are a cretin, you are like a pillar of salt always standing in Israel. Such people are useless, good for nothing! Some people only ever submit blindly, they always know themselves and always use their own ways of conducting themselves when dealing with new matters, or they use “wisdom” to deal with trivial matters unworthy of mention. Such people are devoid of discernment, and it is as if their nature is to resign themselves to being picked on, and they are always the same; they never change. People like this are fools who lack even the slightest discernment. They never try to take measures appropriate to the circumstances or to different people. Such people do not have experience. I have seen some people who are so bound up in their knowledge of themselves that when confronted with people possessed by the work of evil spirits, they lower their heads and confess their sins, not daring to stand up and condemn them. And when faced with the obvious work of the Holy Spirit, they do not dare to obey. They believe that evil spirits are also in the hands of God, and have not the slightest courage to stand up and resist them. Such people bring shame to God, and are utterly incapable of bearing a heavy burden for Him. Such fools do not make distinctions of any kind. Such a means of experiencing, therefore, should be purged, for it is untenable in the eyes of God.

God indeed does a lot of work in people, sometimes trying them, sometimes creating environments to temper them, and sometimes speaking words to guide them and amend their shortcomings. Sometimes the Holy Spirit leads people to environments prepared by God for them to unknowingly discover many things that they lack. Through what people say and do, and the way that people treat others and deal with things, without their knowing it, the Holy Spirit enlightens them of many things that they did not previously understand, allowing them to see many things and people more clearly, allowing them to see into much of which they were previously unaware. When you engage with the world, you gradually start to discern the things of the world, and before you meet your end, you might conclude: "It is truly hard to be a person." If you spend some time experiencing before God, and come to understand God's work and His disposition, you will unconsciously gain much insight, and your stature will gradually grow. You will understand many spiritual things better, and you will be clearer about God's work in particular. You will accept God's words, God's work, God's every action, God's disposition, and what God is and has as your own life. If all you do is wander in the world, your wings will grow ever harder, and your resistance against God will become ever greater; how then can God use you? Because there is too much of "in my opinion" in you, God does not use you. The more you are in the presence of God, the more experiences you will have. If you still live in the world like a beast—your mouth professing belief in God but your heart somewhere else—and if you still study the worldly philosophies for living, then will all your previous labors not have been for nothing? Therefore, the more that people are in the presence of God, the easier they are to be perfected by God. This is the path by which the Holy Spirit does His work. If you do not understand this, it will be impossible for you to enter onto the right track, and being perfected by God will be out of the question. You will not be able to have a normal spiritual life; it will be as if you are handicapped, and you will have only your own hard work and none of God's work. Is this not a mistake in your experiencing? You do not necessarily have to pray to be in the presence of God; sometimes it is in your contemplating God or pondering His work, sometimes in your dealing with some matter, and sometimes through your being revealed in an event, that you come into God's presence. Most people say, "Am I not in the presence of God, since I often pray?" Many people pray endlessly "in the presence of God." Though prayers may be always on their lips, they do not really live in God's presence. This is the only means by which such people can maintain their conditions in the presence of God; they are utterly incapable of using their hearts to engage with God at all times, and nor are they able to come before God by means of experiencing, whether through pondering, silent contemplation, or using their minds to engage with the God within their hearts, by being mindful of God's burden. They just offer prayers to God in heaven with their mouths. Most people's hearts are bereft of God, and God is only there when they draw close to Him; most of the time, God is not there at all. Is this not the manifestation of not having God in one's heart? If they really had God in their hearts, could they do the things that robbers and beasts do? If a person really reveres God, they will bring their true heart into contact with God, and their thoughts and ideas will always be occupied by God's words. They will not make mistakes in either speech or action, and will not do anything that obviously opposes God. Such is the standard for being a believer.

The Commandments of the New Age

In experiencing God's work, you must read God's words carefully and equip yourselves with the truth. But regarding what you want to do or how you want to do it, there is no need for your earnest prayer or supplication, and indeed these things are useless. Yet at present, the problems currently facing you are that you do not know how to experience God's work, and that there is much passivity in you. You know many doctrines, but you do not have much reality. Is this not a sign of erroneousness? Much erroneousness is visible in you, this group. Today, you are incapable of achieving such trials as "service-doers," and you are incapable of imagining or achieving other trials and refinement related to the words of God. You must adhere to the many things you should put into practice. This is to say that people must adhere to the many duties that they should perform. This is what people should adhere to, and this is what they must carry out. Let the Holy Spirit do what must be done by the Holy Spirit; man can play no part in it. Man should adhere to what ought to be done by man, which bears no relation to the Holy Spirit. It is nothing but that which ought to be done by man, and should be adhered to as commandment, just like adherence to the law in the Old Testament. Although now is not the Age of Law, there are still many words that should be adhered to which are of the same kind as words spoken in the Age of Law. These words are not carried out merely by relying on the touch of the Holy Spirit, but rather, they are something that man should adhere to. For example:

You shall not pass judgment on the work of the practical God.

You shall not oppose the man who is testified to by God.

Before God, you shall keep your place and shall not be dissolute.

You should be moderate in speech, and your words and actions must follow the arrangements of the man testified to by God.

You should revere the testimony of God. You shall not ignore the work of God and the words from His mouth.

You shall not imitate the tone and aims of God's utterances.

Externally, you shall not do anything that manifestly opposes the man who is testified to by God.

These are what each person should adhere to. In each age, God specifies many rules that are akin to the laws and are to be adhered to by man. Through this, He constrains man's disposition and detects his sincerity. Consider the words "Honor your father and your mother" of the Old Testament age, for example. These words do not apply today; at the time, they merely constrained some of man's external disposition, were used to demonstrate the sincerity of man's belief in God, and were a mark of those who believed in God. Although now is the Age of Kingdom, there are still many rules that man must adhere to. The rules of the past do not apply, and today there are many more fitting practices for man to carry out, and which are necessary. They do not involve the work of the Holy Spirit and must be done by man.

In the Age of Grace, many of the practices of the Age of Law were discarded because these laws were not particularly effective for the work at that time. After they were discarded, many practices were set out that were suitable for the age, and which have become the many rules of today. When the God of today came, these rules were dispensed with and it was no longer required that they be adhered to, and many practices were set out that are suitable for the work of today. Today, these practices are not rules, but are instead intended to achieve effects; they are suitable for today—tomorrow, perhaps they will become rules. In sum, you should adhere to that which is fruitful for the work of today. Pay no heed to tomorrow: What is done today is for the sake of today. Maybe when tomorrow comes, there will be better practices which you will be required to carry out—but do not pay too much attention to that. Rather, adhere to that which should be adhered to today so as to avoid opposing God. Today, nothing is more crucial for man to adhere to than the following:

You must not try to wheedle the God that stands before your eyes, or conceal anything from Him.

You shall not utter filthiness or arrogant talk in front of the God before you.

You shall not deceive the God before your eyes by honeyed words and fair speeches in order to gain His trust.

You shall not act irreverently before God. You shall obey all that is spoken from the mouth of God, and shall not resist, oppose, or dispute His words.

You shall not interpret as you see fit the words spoken from the mouth of God. You should guard your tongue to avoid it causing you to fall prey to the deceitful schemes of the wicked.

You should guard your footsteps to avoid transgressing the boundaries set out for you by God. If you transgress, this will cause you to stand in the position of God and speak words which are conceited and pompous, and thus you will become loathed by God.

You shall not carelessly spread the words spoken from the mouth of God, lest others mock you and the devils make a fool of you.

You shall obey all of the work of the God of today. Even if you do not understand it, you shall not pass judgment on it; all you can do is seek and fellowship.

No person shall transgress God's original place. You can do nothing more than serve the God of today from the position of man. You cannot teach the God of today from the position of man—to do so is misguided.

No one may stand in the place of the man testified to by God; in your words, actions, and innermost thoughts, you stand in the position of man. This is to be abided by, it is the responsibility of man, and no one may alter it; attempting to would violate the administrative decrees. This should be remembered by all.

The long time that God has spent speaking and uttering has caused man to consider reading and memorizing the words of God to be his primary task. No one pays attention to practice, and even that which you ought to abide by you do not. This has brought many difficulties and problems to your service. If, prior to practicing the words of God, you have not adhered to that which you should adhere to, then you are one of those who are detested and rejected by God. In adhering to these practices, you should be earnest and sincere. You should not treat them like shackles, but adhere to them as commandments. Today, you ought not to concern yourself with what effects are to be achieved; in short, this is how the Holy Spirit works, and whoever commits an offense must be punished. The Holy Spirit is without emotion, and heedless of your present understanding. If you offend God today, then He will punish you. If you offend Him within the scope of His jurisdiction, then He will not spare you. He does not care how serious you are in your adherence to the words of Jesus. If you violate God's commandments of today, He will punish you, and condemn you to death. How could it be acceptable for you not to adhere to them? You must adhere, even if it means suffering a little pain! No matter what religion, sector, nation, or denomination it is, in the future they must all adhere to these practices. None are exempt, and none will be spared! For they are what the Holy Spirit will do today, and no one may violate them. Although they are no great thing, they must be done by every person and they are the commandments set for man by Jesus, who was resurrected and who ascended to heaven. Does "The Path ... (7)" not say that Jesus' definition of whether you are righteous or sinful is according to your attitude toward God today? No one may overlook this point. In the Age of Law, generation after generation of the Pharisees believed in God, but with the arrival of the Age of Grace they did not know Jesus, and opposed Him. So it was that all they did came to nothing and was in vain, and God did not accept their deeds. If you can see through to this, then you will not easily sin. Many people, perhaps, have measured themselves against God. How does it taste to oppose God? Is it bitter or sweet? You should understand this; do not pretend that you do not know. In their hearts, perhaps, some people remain unconvinced. Yet I advise you to try it and see—see what it tastes like. This will prevent many people from always being suspicious about it. Many people read the words of God yet secretly oppose Him in their hearts. After opposing Him like this, do you not feel like a knife has been twisted in your heart? If it is not family disharmony, it is physical discomfort, or the afflictions of sons and daughters. Although your flesh is spared death, the hand of God will never leave you. Do you think it could be that simple? In particular, it is even more necessary for the many who are near to God to focus on this. As time passes, you will forget it, and, without realizing it, you will be plunged into temptation and become heedless of everything, and this will be the start of your sinning. Does this seem trivial to you? If you can do this well, then you have the chance to be made perfect—to come before God and receive His guidance from His own mouth. If you are careless, then there will be trouble for you—you will be defiant of God, your words and actions will be dissolute, and sooner or later you will be carried away by great gales and mighty waves. Every one of you should take note of these commandments. If you violate them, then although the man who is testified to by God may not condemn you, the Spirit of God will have unfinished business with you, and He will not spare you. Can you bear the consequences of your offense? Thus, no matter what God says, you must put His words into practice, and must adhere to them by any means you can. This is no simple matter!

The Millennial Kingdom Has Arrived

Have you seen what work God will accomplish in this group of people? God once said, even in the Millennial Kingdom people must still follow His utterances onward, and in the future God's utterances will yet directly guide man's life in the good land of Canaan. When Moses was in the wilderness, God instructed and spoke to him directly. From heaven God sent food, water and manna for the people to enjoy, and today it is still thus: God has personally sent down things to eat and drink for people to enjoy, and He has personally sent curses to chastise people. And so, every step of His work is personally carried out by God. Today, people seek the occurrence of facts, they seek signs and wonders, and it is possible that all such people will be cast away, for the work of God is becoming increasingly practical. No one knows that God has descended from heaven, they are also unaware that God has sent down food and tonics from heaven—yet God actually exists, and the rousing scenes of the Millennial Kingdom that people imagine are also the personal utterances of God. This is fact, and only this is called reigning with God on earth. Reigning with God on earth refers to the flesh. That which is not of the flesh does not exist on earth, and thus all those who focus on going to the third heaven do so in vain. One day, when the entire universe returns to God, the center of His work throughout the cosmos will follow His utterances; elsewhere, some people will use the telephone, some will take a plane, some will take a boat across the sea, and some will use lasers to receive the utterances of God. Everyone will be adoring, and yearful, they will all come close to God, and congregate toward God, and will all worship God—and all of this will be the deeds of God. Remember this! God will certainly never start again elsewhere. God will accomplish this fact: He will make all people throughout the universe come before Him and worship the God on earth, and His work in other places will cease, and people will be forced to seek the true way. It will be like Joseph: Everyone came to him for food, and bowed down to him, for he had things to eat. In order to avoid famine, people will be forced to seek the true way. The entire religious community will suffer severe famine, and only the God of today is the wellspring of living water, possessed of the ever-flowing wellspring provided for the enjoyment of man, and people will come and depend on Him. That will be the time when the deeds of God are revealed and when God gains glory; all people throughout the universe will worship this unremarkable "human being." Will this not be the day of God's glory? One day, old pastors will send telegrams seeking the water from the wellspring of living water. They will be elderly, yet still they will come to worship this person, whom they despised. They will acknowledge Him with their mouths and will trust Him with their hearts—is this not a sign and a wonder? When the whole kingdom rejoices will be the day of God's glory, and whoever comes to you and receives God's good news will be blessed by God, and the countries and people who do so will be blessed and cared for by God. The future direction will be thus: Those who gain the utterances from God's mouth will have a path to walk on earth, and be they businessmen or scientists, or educators or industrialists, those who are without God's words will have a hard time taking even a single step, and will be forced to seek the true way. This is what is meant by, "With the truth you will walk the entire world; without the truth, you will get nowhere." The facts are thus: God will use the Way (which means all of His words) to command the whole universe and govern and conquer mankind. People are always hoping for a great shift in the means by which God works. To speak plainly, it is through words that God controls people, and you must do what He says whether you wish to or not; this is an objective fact, and must be obeyed by all, and so, too, is it inexorable, and known to all.

The Holy Spirit gives people a feeling. After reading the words of God, in their hearts people feel steadfast and at peace, while those who do not obtain God's words feel empty. Such is the power of God's words. People have to read them, and after reading them they are nourished, and they cannot do without them. It is like when people take opium: It gives them strength, and without it they feel its powerful draw, and have no strength. Such is the tendency among people today. Reading God's words gives people strength. If they do not read them, they feel listless, but after reading them, they immediately rise from their "sickbeds." This is God's word wielding power on earth and God ruling on earth. Some people want to leave, or have grown weary of God's work. Regardless, they cannot separate themselves from God's words; no matter how weak they are, still they must live by God's words, and no matter how rebellious they are, still they do not dare to leave God's words. When God's words truly show their might is when God rules and wields power; this is how God works. This, after all, is the means by which God works, and none may leave it. God's words will spread among countless homes, they will become known to all, and only then will His work spread throughout the universe. Which is to say, if God's work is to spread throughout the entire universe, then His words must be spread. On the day of God's glory, God's words will show their power and authority. Every one of His words from time immemorial until today will be accomplished and will come to pass. In this way, glory will be to God on earth—which is to say, His words will reign on earth. All who are wicked will be chastised by the words spoken from the mouth of God, all who are righteous will be blessed by the words spoken from His mouth, and all will be established and made complete by the words spoken from His mouth. Nor will He manifest any signs or wonders; all will be accomplished by His words, and His words will produce facts. Everyone on earth will celebrate God's words, whether they be adults or children, male, female, old or young, all people will submit beneath the words of God. God's words appear in the flesh, allowing people to see them on earth, vivid and lifelike. This is what it means for the Word to become flesh. God has come to earth primarily to accomplish the fact of "the Word become flesh," which is to say, He has come so that His words may be issued from the flesh (not like the time of Moses in the Old Testament, when God's voice issued directly from the sky). After that, all of His words will be fulfilled during the Age of Millennial Kingdom, they will become facts visible before man's eyes, and people will behold them using their own eyes without the slightest disparity. This is the supreme meaning of God's incarnation. Which is to say, the work of the Spirit is accomplished through the flesh, and through words. This is the true meaning of "the Word become flesh" and "the Word's appearance in the flesh." Only God can speak the will of the Spirit, and only God in the flesh can speak on behalf of the Spirit; the words of God are made plain in God incarnate, and everyone else is guided by them. No one is exempt, they all exist within this scope. Only from these utterances can people become aware; those who do not gain in this way are daydreaming if they think they can gain the utterances from heaven. Such is the authority demonstrated in God's incarnate flesh, causing all to believe in it with total conviction. Even the most venerable experts and religious pastors cannot speak these words. They must all submit beneath them, and none will be able to make another start. God will use words to conquer the universe. He will do this not by His incarnate flesh, but through using the utterances from the mouth of God become flesh to conquer all people in the entire universe; only this is the Word become flesh, and only this is the appearance of the Word in the flesh. Perhaps, to humans, it appears as if God has not done much work—but God has but to utter His words, and they will be thoroughly convinced and awed. Without facts, people shout and scream; with the words of God, they fall silent. God will surely accomplish this fact, for this is God's long-established plan: accomplishing the fact of the Word's arrival on earth. Actually, there is no need for Me to explain—the arrival of the Millennial Kingdom on earth is the arrival of God's words on earth. New Jerusalem's descent from heaven is the arrival of God's words to live among man, to accompany man's every action and all his innermost thoughts. This is also a fact that God will accomplish; this is the beauty of the Millennial Kingdom. This is the plan set by God: His words will appear on earth for a thousand years, and they will manifest all of His deeds, and complete all of His work on earth, after which this stage of mankind shall come to an end.

How Is Your Relationship With God?

In believing in God, you must at least resolve the issue of having a normal relationship with God. If you do not have a normal relationship with God, then the meaning of your belief in God is lost. The establishment of a normal relationship with God is entirely achievable with a heart that is quiet in God's presence. Having a normal relationship with God means being able not to doubt and not to deny any of His work and being able to submit to His work. It means having correct intentions in God's presence, not making plans for yourself, and considering the interests of God's family first in all things; it means accepting God's scrutiny and obeying God's arrangements. You must be able to quiet your heart in God's presence in all that you do. Even if you do not understand God's will, you must still fulfill your duties and responsibilities to the best of your ability. Once God's will has been revealed to you, act on it, and it will not be too late. When your relationship with God has become normal, then you will also have normal relationships with people. To build a normal relationship with God, all must be built on the foundation of God's words, you must be able to perform your duty according to God's words and what God asks, you must set your views straight, and must seek the truth in all things. You must practice the truth when you understand it, and regardless of what happens to you, you must pray to God and seek with a heart of obedience to God. Practicing thus, you will be able to maintain a normal relationship with God. At the same time as performing your duty properly, you must also ensure that you do nothing that does not benefit the life entry of God's chosen ones, and say nothing that is unhelpful to the brothers and sisters. At the very least, you must do nothing that goes against your conscience and must absolutely not do anything shameful. That which rebels against or resists God, in particular, you absolutely must not do, and you must not do anything that disturbs the work or life of the church. Be just and honorable in everything you do and ensure that your every action is presentable before God. Although the flesh may sometimes be weak, you must be able to put the interests of God's family first, without greed for personal profit, without doing anything selfish or despicable, often reflecting on yourself. In this way, you will be able to often live before God, and your relationship with God will become completely normal.

In everything you do, you must examine whether your intentions are correct. If you are able to act according to the requirements of God, then your relationship with God is normal. This is the minimum standard. Look into your intentions, and if you find that incorrect intentions have arisen, be able to turn your back on them and act according to the words of God; thus will you become someone who is right before God, which in turn demonstrates that your relationship with God is normal, and that all that you do is for God's sake, not your own. In all you do and all you say, be able to set your heart right and be righteous in your actions, and do not be led by your emotions, nor act according to your own will. These are principles by which believers in God must conduct themselves. Small things can reveal a person's intentions and stature, and so, for someone to enter onto the path of being made perfect by God, they must first rectify their intentions and their relationship with God. Only when your relationship with God is normal can you be made perfect by Him; only then can God's dealing, pruning, discipline, and refinement achieve their intended effect in you. That is to say, if human beings are able to keep God in their hearts and do not pursue personal gain or give thought to their own prospects (in a fleshly sense), but instead bear the burden of entering life, do their best to pursue the truth, and submit to God's work—if you can do this, then the goals you pursue will be correct, and your relationship with God will become normal. Making right one's relationship with God can be called the first step of entry into one's spiritual journey. Although man's fate is in God's hands and is predestined by God, and cannot be changed by man, whether you can be made perfect by God or be gained by Him depends on whether your relationship with God is normal. There may be parts of you that are weak or disobedient—but as long as your views and your intentions are correct, and as long as your relationship with God is right and normal, then you are qualified to be made perfect by God. If you do not have the right relationship with God, and act for the sake of the flesh or your family, then regardless of how hard you work, it will be for nothing. If your relationship with God is normal, then everything else will fall into place. God looks at nothing else, but only at whether your views in your belief in God are correct: whom you believe in, for whose sake you believe, and why you believe. If you are able to see these things clearly and practice with your views well disposed, then you will make progress in your life, and you will also be guaranteed entry onto the right track. If your relationship with God is not normal, and the views of your belief in God are deviant, then all else is in vain, and no matter how hard you believe, you will receive nothing. Only after your relationship with God becomes normal will you win praise from Him when you forsake the flesh, pray, suffer, endure, submit, help your brothers and sisters, expend more of yourself for God, and so on. Whether what you do has value and significance depends on whether your intentions are right and your views correct. Nowadays, many people believe in God as if they were tilting their heads to look at a clock—their perspectives are skewed, and they must be righted with a breakthrough. If this problem is resolved, everything will be fine; if not, everything will come to nothing. Some people behave well in My presence, but behind My back, all they do is resist Me. This is a manifestation of crookedness and deceitfulness, and this type of person is a servant of Satan; they are the typical embodiment of Satan, come to test God. You are only a correct person if you are able to submit to My work and My words. As long as you are able to eat and drink the words of God; as long as everything you do is presentable before God and you behave justly and honorably in all that you do; as long as you do not do shameful things, or things that would harm the lives of others; and as long as you live in the light and do not allow yourself to be exploited by Satan, then your relationship with God is in proper order.

Believing in God requires you to put your intentions and views in proper order; you must have a correct understanding of, and a correct way of treating, the words of God and God's work, all the environments that God arranges, the man for whom God testifies, and the practical God. You must not practice according to your own ideas or devise your own petty schemes. Whatever you do, you must be able to seek the truth and, in your position as a created being, submit to all of God's work. If you wish to pursue being perfected by God and enter upon the right track of life, then your heart must always live in God's presence. Do not be dissolute, do not follow Satan, do not allow Satan any opportunities to carry out its work, and do not let Satan make use of you. You must give yourself to God completely and let God rule over you.

Are you willing to be Satan's servant? Are you willing to be exploited by Satan? Do you believe in God and pursue Him so that you may be perfected by Him, or so that you may become a foil for God's work? Would you prefer a meaningful life in which you are obtained by God, or a worthless and empty life? Would you prefer to be used by God, or exploited by Satan? Would you prefer to let God's words and truth fill you, or let sin and Satan fill you? Consider these things carefully. In your daily life, you must understand which words you say and which things you do might cause abnormality in your relationship with God, and then rectify yourself to enter into the correct manner. At all times, examine your words, your actions, your each and every move, and all your thoughts and ideas. Gain a proper understanding of your real state and enter into the manner of the Holy Spirit's work. This is the only way to have a normal relationship with God. By assessing whether your relationship with God is normal, you will be able to correct your intentions, understand the nature and essence of man, and truly understand yourself, and, in doing so, you will be able to enter into real experiences, forsake yourself in a real way, and submit with intention. As you experience these matters concerning whether or not your relationship with God is normal, you will find opportunities to be perfected by God and become able to grasp many states of the Holy Spirit's work. You will also be able to see through many of Satan's tricks and penetrate its conspiracies. Only this path leads to being perfected by God. You put right your relationship with God, that you may submit to His arrangements in their entirety, and that you may enter even more deeply into real experience and receive even more of the Holy Spirit's work. When you practice having a normal relationship with God, in most cases, success will be achieved by forsaking the flesh and through real cooperation with God. You should understand that "without a cooperative heart, it is difficult to receive the work of God; if the flesh does not suffer, there will be no blessings from God; if the spirit does not struggle, Satan will not be put to shame." If you practice these principles and understand them thoroughly, the views of your belief in God will be put right. In your current practice, you must discard the mindset of "seeking bread to satisfy hunger"; you must discard the mindset of "everything is done by the Holy Spirit, and people are unable to intervene." Everyone who says so thinks, "People can do whatever they want, and when the time comes, the Holy Spirit will do His work. People have no need to restrain the flesh or cooperate; all that matters is that they be moved by the Holy Spirit.” These opinions are all absurd. Under such circumstances, the Holy Spirit is unable to work. It is this kind of viewpoint that greatly hinders the work of the Holy Spirit. Often, the work of the Holy Spirit is attained through human cooperation. Those who do not cooperate and are not resolved, yet wish to achieve a change in their disposition and receive the work of the Holy Spirit and enlightenment and illumination from God, have extravagant thoughts indeed. This is called “indulging one’s self and pardoning Satan.” Such people do not have a normal relationship with God. You should find many revelations and manifestations of satanic disposition within yourself and find any practices you have that run contrary to what God now requires. Will you now be able to forsake Satan? You should attain a normal relationship with God, act in accordance with God’s intentions, and become a new person with a new life. Do not dwell on past transgressions; do not be unduly remorseful; be able to stand up and cooperate with God, and fulfill the duties that are yours to fulfill. In this way, your relationship with God will become normal.

If after reading this, you merely claim to accept these words, yet your heart remains unmoved, and you do not seek to make your relationship with God normal, it proves you do not attach importance to your relationship with God. It proves that your views have not yet been put right, that your intentions are not yet set on being gained by God and bringing glory to Him, but are set instead on allowing Satan’s conspiracies to prevail and achieving your own goals. Such people harbor wrong intentions and incorrect views. No matter what God says or how He says it, such people remain completely indifferent and are not in the least transformed. Their hearts feel no fear and they are unashamed. Such a person is a spiritless dolt. Read God’s every utterance and put them into practice as soon as you understand them. Perhaps there were occasions when your flesh was weak, or you were rebellious, or you resisted; regardless of how you behaved in the past, it is of little consequence, and it cannot hinder your life from maturing today. So long as you can have a normal relationship with God today, there is hope. If there is change in you every time you read God’s words, and others can tell your life has changed for the better, it shows that your relationship with God is now normal, that it has been put right. God does not treat people according to their transgressions. Once you have understood and become aware, as long as you can cease to rebel or resist, then God will still have mercy on you. When you have the understanding and the resolve to pursue being perfected by God, then your state in God’s presence will become normal. No matter what you are doing, consider the following when you are doing it: What will God think if I do this? Will it benefit my brothers and sisters? Will it be beneficial to the work in God’s house? Whether in prayer, fellowship, speech, work, or in contact with others, examine your intentions, and check if your relationship with God is normal. If you cannot discern your own intentions and thoughts, this means you lack discrimination, which proves that you understand too little of the truth. If you are able to understand clearly everything God does, and can perceive things through the lens of His words, standing on His side, then your views will have become correct. Therefore, establishing a good relationship with God is of the utmost importance to anyone who believes in God; everyone should regard it as a task of paramount importance and the biggest event in their life. Everything you do is measured by whether you have a normal relationship with God. If your relationship with God is normal and your intentions are correct, then act. To maintain a normal relationship with God, you must not be afraid of suffering losses to your personal interests; you cannot allow Satan to prevail, you cannot allow Satan to gain a purchase on you, and you cannot allow Satan to make you a laughing stock. Having such intentions is a sign that your relationship with God is normal—not for the sake of the flesh, but rather for peace of spirit, for gaining the work of the Holy Spirit, and for satisfying the will of God. To enter the right state, you must establish a good relationship with God and put right the views of your belief in God. This is so that God may gain you, and so that He may manifest the fruits of His words in you and enlighten and illuminate you even further. In this way, you will have entered into the right manner. Continue eating and drinking God’s words of today, enter into the Holy Spirit’s current manner of working, act according to God’s demands of today, do not observe old-fashioned methods of practice, do not cling to old ways of doing things, and enter into today’s manner of working as soon as possible. Thus, your relationship with God will become completely normal and you will have embarked on the right track of belief in God.

Focus More on Reality

Every person has the possibility of being perfected by God, so everyone should understand what sort of service to God is best in line with His intentions. Most people do not know what it means to believe in God, nor do they understand why they should believe in Him—which is to say, most have no comprehension of God’s work or the purpose of His management plan. Today, the majority of people still think believing in God is about going to heaven and having their souls saved. They are clueless as to the exact significance of believing in God and, moreover, do not have any understanding whatsoever of the most important work in God’s management plan. For various reasons of their own, people simply do not take any interest in God’s work, nor do they give any thought to His intentions or to His management plan. As an individual in this stream, each person should know what the purpose of God’s entire management plan is, the facts that He has long since accomplished, why He has chosen this group of people, what the purpose and meaning of His choosing them is, and what He wishes to achieve in this group. For God to have been able to raise up such a group of unremarkable people in the country of the great red dragon, and to have continued to work until now, trying and perfecting them in all sorts of ways, speaking countless words, performing much work, and dispatching so many serving objects—for God alone to have accomplished such great work shows just how significant His work is. At the moment, you are incapable of fully appreciating this. As such, you must not view the work that God has done in you as trivial; it is no small matter. Even what God has revealed to you today is enough for you to try to fathom and know. Only if you truly and thoroughly understand it can your experiences go deeper and your life grow. Today, people understand and do far too little; they are incapable of completely fulfilling God’s intentions. This is man’s shortcoming and their failure to fulfill their duty, and thus they are incapable of achieving the desired result. The Holy Spirit has no means of working in many people because they have such a shallow understanding of God’s work, and are unwilling to treat the work of the house of God as something valuable when they do it. They invariably go through the motions just to get by, or else follow the majority, or just work for show. Today, each person in this stream should recall whether, in their actions and deeds, they have done everything they can, and whether they have given every ounce of effort. People have totally failed to perform their duty, not because the Holy Spirit does not do His work, but because people do not do theirs, making it impossible for the Holy Spirit to do His work. God has no more words to say, but people have not kept up at all, they have fallen too far behind, they are unable to stay close with every step, and are unable to closely follow the Lamb’s footsteps. What they should abide by, they have not abided by; what they should have practiced, they have not practiced; what they should have prayed for, they have not prayed for; what they should have set aside, they have not set aside. They have not done any of these things. Therefore, this talk of attending the banquet is empty; it is without any real meaning, and is all in their imagination. It can be said that, viewed from today, people have not discharged their duty at all. Everything has depended on God’s doing and saying things Himself. Man’s function has been far too small; people are useless trash who are incapable of cooperating with God. God has spoken hundreds upon thousands of words, yet people have not put any of them into practice—whether it be forsaking the flesh, discarding notions, practicing obedience to God in all things while developing discernment and gaining insight, not giving people a place in their hearts, eliminating the idols in their hearts, rebelling against their wrong intentions, not acting out of emotion, doing things fairly and without bias, giving greater thought to God’s interests and their influence on others when they speak, doing more things that benefit God’s work, keeping in mind benefiting God’s house in all that they do, not letting their emotions rule their behavior, discarding what pleases their own flesh, eliminating selfish old notions, and so on. They do actually understand some of all these requirements that God makes of man, but they are simply not willing to put them into practice. What else can God do, and how else can He move them? How can sons of rebellion in the eyes of God still have the nerve to pick up His words and admire them? How do they have the nerve to eat God’s food? Where is people’s conscience? They have not even fulfilled the bare minimum of the duties they ought to have fulfilled, to say nothing of doing their utmost. They are living in a pipe dream, are they not? There can be no talk of reality without practice. This is a fact that is as plain as day!

You ought to be learning lessons that are more realistic. There is no need for that high-sounding, empty talk that people admire. When it comes to talking about knowledge, each person's is higher than the one before, but they still have no path to practice. How many people have understood the principles of practice? How many have learned actual lessons? Who can fellowship about reality? Being able to speak of knowledge of God's words does not mean you possess genuine stature; it only shows that you were born smart, that you're gifted. If you cannot point out the path then the result will be nothing, and you will be useless trash! Aren't you pretending if you cannot say anything about an actual path to practice? Aren't you faking it if you cannot offer your own actual experiences to others, thereby giving them lessons they can learn from or a path they can follow? Aren't you a phony? What value do you have? Such a person could only play the part of "inventor of the theory of socialism," not "contributor to bringing about socialism." To be without reality is to have no truth. To be without reality is to be a good-for-nothing. To be without reality is to be a walking corpse. To be without reality is to be a "Marxist-Leninist thinker," with no reference value. I urge each of you to shut up about theory and talk about something real, something genuine and substantial; study some "modern art," say something realistic, contribute something actual, and have some spirit of dedication. Face reality when you speak; do not indulge in unrealistic and exaggerated talk to make people feel happy or sit up and take notice of you. Where is the value in that? What point is there in getting people to treat you warmly? Be a bit "artistic" in your speech, be a bit more fair in your conduct, be a bit more reasonable in how you handle things, be a bit more practical in what you say, think of bringing benefit to God's house with your every action, listen to your conscience when you become emotional, do not repay kindness with hate or be ungrateful to kindness, and do not be a hypocrite, lest you become a bad influence. When you eat and drink God's words, link them more closely to reality, and when you fellowship, speak more about realistic things. Do not be condescending; this will not satisfy God. In your interactions with others, be a bit more tolerant, a bit more yielding, a bit more magnanimous, and learn from the "spirit of the prime minister."<sup>a</sup> When you have bad thoughts, practice forsaking the flesh more. When you are working, speak more of realistic paths, and do not get too lofty, or else what you say will be unattainable for people. Less enjoyment, more contribution—show your selfless spirit of dedication. Be more considerate of God's intentions, listen to your conscience more, be more mindful, and do not forget how God speaks patiently and earnestly to you every day. Read the "old almanac" more often. Pray more and fellowship more frequently. Stop being so muddled; show some sense and gain some insight.

When your sinful hand reaches out, pull it back; do not let it reach so far. There is no use, and what you get from God will be nothing but curses, so be careful. Let your heart take pity on others, and do not always strike out with weapons in hand. Fellowship more about knowledge of the truth and talk more about life, maintaining a spirit of helping others. Do more and say less. Put more into practice and less into research and analysis. Let yourselves be moved more by the Holy Spirit, and give God more opportunities to perfect you. Eliminate more human elements; you still possess too many human ways of doing things, and your superficial manner of doing things and behavior is still repugnant to others: Eliminate more of these. Your psychological state is still too detestable; spend more time amending it. You still give people too much status; give more status to God, and do not be so unreasonable. The “temple” has always belonged to God, and should not be taken over by people. In short, focus more on righteousness and less on emotions. It is best to eliminate the flesh. Talk more about reality and less about knowledge; what is best is to shut up and say nothing. Speak more of the path of practice, and make less worthless boasts. It is best to start practicing right now.

God’s requirements of people are not all that high. As long as people practice diligently and earnestly, they would receive a “pass grade.” Truth be told, achieving the understanding, knowledge, and comprehension of the truth is more complex than practicing the truth. First practice as much as you understand and practice what you have comprehended. In this way, you will be able to gradually achieve the true knowledge and comprehension of the truth. These are the steps and the means by which the Holy Spirit works. If you do not practice obedience in this way, you will not achieve anything. If you always act of your own volition, and do not practice obedience, will the Holy Spirit work within you? Does the Holy Spirit work as you wish? Or does He work according to what you lack, and on the basis of God’s words? If this is not clear to you, you won’t be able to enter the reality of the truth. Why is it that most people have spent much effort reading God’s words, but merely have knowledge and cannot say anything about a real path afterward? Do you think that possessing knowledge amounts to possessing the truth? Is that not a confused point of view? You are able to speak as many pieces of knowledge as there are grains of sand on a beach, yet none of it contains any real path. Are you not trying to fool people by doing this? Are you not making an empty show, with no substance to back it up? All such behavior is harmful to people! The higher the theory and the more it is devoid of reality, the more it is incapable of taking people into reality. The higher the theory, the more it makes you defy and oppose God. Do not cosset spiritual theory—it has no use! Some people have been talking about spiritual theory for decades, and they have become giants of spiritualism, but ultimately, they still fail to enter the reality of the truth. Because they have not practiced or experienced the words of God, they have no principles or path for practice. People like this are themselves without the reality of the truth, so how can they bring other people onto the right track of faith in God? They can only lead people astray. Is this not harming others and themselves? At the very least, you must be able to solve real problems that are right in front of you. That is to say, you must be able to practice and experience the words of God, and to put the truth into practice. Only this is obedience to God. Only when you have entered into life are you qualified to work for God, and only when you expend for God sincerely can you be approved of by God. Don't always make grand statements and talk of bombastic theory; this is not real. Pontificating on spiritual theory to make people admire you is not testifying to God, but rather flaunting yourself. It is of absolutely no benefit to people and does not edify them, and can easily lead to them worshiping spiritual theory and not focusing on practicing the truth—and is this not leading people astray? Carrying on like this will give rise to numerous empty theories and rules that will constrain and entrap people; it's truly mortifying. So say more that is real, talk more about problems that actually exist, spend more time searching for the truth to solve real problems; this is what's most important. Don't delay in learning to practice the truth: This is the path of entry into reality. Do not take other people's experience and knowledge as your own private property and hold them up for others to admire. You must have your own entry into life. Only by practicing the truth and obeying God will you have life entry. This should be what every person practices and focuses on.
